I. Its Bearing upon Clerical Orders.—The Pentateuch forbade the exercise of the priest's office to any of the Aaronites who should have a "blemish," a term extending even to the case of a "flat nose" (Lev. xxi, 17-23); while injuries to the organs of generation excluded even from the congregation (Deut. xxiii, 1). The prophets announce a mitigation of this severity (Isa. lvi, 3-5), and its stringency finds no place in the teaching of our Saviour (Matt. xix, 12), nor does any trace of it remain in the rules as to the selection of bishops and deacons in the pastoral epistles (1 Tim. iii; Tit. i). Nevertheless, the Jewish rule seems to have crept back into the discipline of the Christian Church—witness the story of the monk Ammonius having avoided promotion to the episcopate by cutting off his right ear. One of the so-called apostolical canons, which provides that one-eyed or lame men who may be worthy of the episcopate may become bishops, "since not the bodily defect, but the defilement of the soul, pollutes" the man, leaves at least open the question whether such defects were a bar to the first reception of clerical orders. No general rule as to mutilation is to be found in the records of any of the early General Councils, but only in those of the non-oecumenical ones of the West, or in the letters, etc., of the popes, always of suspicious authority. The rule of the Church as to mutilations and bodily defects may be taken to be generally as follows: such mutilations, etc., were a bar to ordination, especially if self-inflicted; but, supervening involuntarily after ordination, they were not a bar to the fulfilment of clerical duties or to promotion in the hierarchy. There is, however, one particular form of mutilation—that of the generative organs—which occurs with peculiar prominence in early Church history, and is dealt with by special enactments. The most notorious instance of self-mutilation in Church history is that of Origen, who was, nevertheless, ordained by the bishops of Caesarea and Jerusalem; but he was condemned and sentenced to be deprived of his orders for self-mutilation by the Council of Alexandria, A.D. 230. According to the apostolical canons, while a man made a eunuch against his will was not excluded from admission to the clergy, yet self-mutilation was assimilated to suicide, and the culprit could not be admitted, or was to be

"altogether condemned" if the act was committed after admission. A layman mutilating himself was to be excluded for three years from communion. The Nicene Council (A.D. 325) enacted that, if any one had been emasculated by a medical man in illness, by barbarians, or by his master, he might enter or remain in the clergy; but, if any have mutilated himself, he is, if a cleric already, to cease from clerical functions, and if not already ordained not to be presented for ordination. See EUNUCH.

II. As a Crime.—An alleged decretal of pope Eutychianus (275-276), to be found in Gratian, enacts that persons guilty of cutting off limbs were to be separated from the Church until they had made friendly composition before the bishop and the other citizens; refusing to do so after two or three warnings, they were to be treated as heathen men and publicans. The eleventh Council of Toledo, can. 6, enacts that clerics shall not inflict or order the mutilation of a limb on any persons whomsoever, under penalty of losing the honor of their order and being subject to perpetual imprisonment with hard labor. The excerpt from the fathers and the canons attributed to Gregory III bears that, for the wilful maiming another of a limb, the penance is to be three years, or, more humanely, one year. The Capitulary of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 789, and the Council of Frankfurt, 794, forbid abbots for any cause to blind or mutilate their monks. See DISCIPLINE, ECCLESIASTICAL.

III. As a Punishment.—Mutilation was no unfrequent punishment under the Christian emperors of the West: Constantine punished slaves escaping to the barbarians with the loss of a foot. The cutting-off of the hand was enacted against exactors of tribute who should fail to make proper entries of the quantities of lands, and against those who should copy the works of the heretic Severus. It is, nevertheless, remarkable that the 134th Novel finally restricted all penal mutilation to the cutting-off of one hand only. In the barbaric codes mutilation is a frequent punishment. The Salic law often enacts castration of the slave, but only as an alternative for composition (for thefts above forty denarii in value; for adultery with the slave-woman who dies from the effects of it). See ADULTERY; CORPORAL INFLECTIONS.

Even in the legislation of the Church itself mutilation as a punishment occurs; but only in its rudest outlying branches, or as an offence to be repressed. Thus, to quote instances of the former case, in the collection of Irish canons, supposed to belong to the end of the 7th century, Patrick is represented as assigning the cutting-off of a hand or foot as one of several alternative punishments for the stealing of money either in a church or a city within which sleep martyrs and bodies of saints. Another fragment from an Irish synod enacts the loss of a hand as an alternative punishment for shedding the blood of a bishop, where it does not reach the ground and no salve is needed, or the blood of a priest when it does reach the ground and salve is required. Instances of the latter case have been already given in the enactments against abbots maiming their monks, which was, no doubt, done at least under pretext of enforcing discipline. In the Excerptions ascribed to Egbert, archbishop of York (but of at least two centuries later date), we find a canon that a man stealing money from the church-box shall have his hand cut off or be put into prison. See CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

Boece (Boyce, Boys, etc.), Hector, an eminent Scottish clergyman and historian, was born at Dundee about 1465. He received his early education in his native place, and completed his course of study at the University of Paris, where he took the degree of B.D. He became professor of philosophy in the College of Montaigu, but was called back to Scotland to become principal of the newly founded Kings College at Aberdeen, about 1500. It was a part of his duties in this office to read the divinity lectures. He was at the same time a canon of Aberdeen and rector of Tyrie in the same county. He died at Aberdeen, aged about seventy. His principal works are the lives of the bishops of Aberdeen and a Latin history of Scotland, entitled respectively Vitæ Episcoporum Murthlacensium et Aberdonensium (Paris, 1522), and Scotorum Historia ab illius Gentis Origine (1526). See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed), s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. "Boethius."

Boëce, Vulfin, bishop of Poitiers about 830, during the reign of Louis the Debonair, wrote a Vie de Saint Julien, abbot of Maire-l'Evescant, who lived in the 16th century; Mabillon published it in the Acta Sanctorum Ord. Sanct. Ben. p. 307. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boedromia, in Greek worship, was a festival celebrated yearly in memory of the assistance which Ion, or, according to others, his father Apollo, gave to the Athenians against Eleusis. It fell in the month Boedromion, which began in the middle of August.

Boehm, Henry, a noted Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., June 8, 1775. In 1798 he united with the Church, in 1800 received license to preach, and entered the Philadelphia Conference. After the General Conference of 1808, for five years he was bishop Asbury's travelling companion and assistant. He next served as presiding elder on Schuylkill, Chesapeake, and Delaware districts, and then again entered upon the pastorate, wherein he labored faithfully until his superannuation on account of the infirmities of age. On the division of the Philadelphia Conference he became a member of the New Jersey portion, and on its division identified himself with the Newark portion. On June 8, 1875, by direction of the Annual Conference, his centennial anniversary was celebrated in Trinity Church, Jersey City. He died Dec. 29 of that year. Mr. Boehm was remarkable for his gentleness of spirit and uniform courtesy. He had a vigorous, well-balanced mind, and showed no signs of speedy departure until his last sickness. He preached fluently both in German and English. His Autobiography was edited by Dr. J. B. Wakely (N. Y. 1875, 8vo). See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 43; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Boehm, John Philip, a German Reformed minister, came to America from the Palatinate early in 1726. He had been a school-master in Germany, and was licensed by the Reformed (Dutch) ministers of New York city in 1729, by direction of the Classis of Amsterdam, Holland. Soon after his arrival in America, his ministry began at Whitpain, near Philadelphia. The erection of "Boehm's Church" occurred while he was there, and he served as its pastor until near the time of his death, May 1, 1749. "He was a man of strong will-power and decided character and doctrines." He held different doctrinal views from those of most of the members of his Church, and consequently had to resign some time before his death. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, i, 275; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 185.

Boehme, ANTON WILHELM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany and England, was born at Oestorf, in the County of Pyrmont, June 1, 1673. He studied at Halle, and went in 1701 to England, at the request of several German families residing there, who intrusted to him the education of their children. In 1705 he was appointed court-preacher to the prince George of Denmark; a position which he retained under queen Anne and George I. He died May 27, 1722. He wrote, Discourses and Tracts for Promoting the Common Interest of True Christianity:—The Duty of Reformation:—The Doctrine of Godly Sorrow:—Plain Directions for Reading the Holy Bible:—The First Principles of Practical Christianity. He also translated into English Arnd's True Christianity. His writings were published at Altona in 1731, with Rambach's preface, containing also a biography of Boehme. (B. P.)

Boehringer, EMMANUEL C., a German Reformed minister, was born in Buergach, Germany, May 29, 1823. He emigrated to the United States in 1858; studied privately, and was ordained by the Classis of Philadelphia in 1859, and sent as missionary to Norfolk, Va. He returned to Philadelphia in 1863, and established the "Orphans' Home of the Shepherd of Lambs." He died Oct. 25, 1864, only four weeks after burying his wife, leaving six children as inmates of the Home which he had founded. He was a good man, and died universally esteemed. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 433-438. (D. Y. H.)

Boelen, HERMANUS LANCELOT, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was pastor at Jamaica, Newtown, Oyster Bay, and Success, L. I., from 1766 to 1772, and from 1772 to 1780 at Oyster Bay and Newtown. In the time of the Revolutionary war in America, he was in sympathy with the English, and his prayers for the king greatly exasperated the Whigs, who were opposed to the English; so great was this exasperation that he left America in 1780 and returned to Holland. His language is said to have been "too pure and high-flown for the people." He had a stentorian voice, though small of stature. Dr. Livingston desired and earnestly exhorted him to attend the meeting for union held in 1771, but he did not attend. The time of Boelen's death is unknown. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 187.

Boelwerk, in Norse mythology, is a name which Odin gave himself, when he entered the service of Bangi as a servant, in order to gain admission to the cave in which the beautiful Gunlöde, a giant-maiden, guarded the poetic nectar. Boelwerk came to her in the form of a snake, and changed himself into a beautiful youth, won her love, and remained three nights with her, for which she allowed him take three draughts of the nectar. He thus emptied all the vessels which contained the costly liquid, and fled.

Boer, in Norse mythology, was the son of Bure; his wife was a Jute-woman, Bestla, the daughter of Baulthorn; she presented him with three sons—Odin, Will, and We. By these the giant Ymer was slain, whose blood drowned the earth, and from whose body a new world was formed. The bones became mountains and rocks, the blood water, and the skull the arched heaven.

Boëthius (Buite, Boëtius, Beode, or Boich), a Scotch saint commemorated Dec. 7, was the son of Bronach of Mainister-Buith, of the race of Comla. He died upon the day on which St. Columba was born, whose birth he is said to have foretold, and who afterwards came to the monastery and disinterred his remains. The Four Masters give the obit of Buit Mac-Bronaigh, bishop of Mainister, at A.D. 521, which is generally accepted as the true date. A poor copy of St. Buite's Life, in Latin, is preserved in the British Museum.

Boethius, Hector. See BOECE, HECTOR.

Boëthius, Heinrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died May 5, 1622, is the author of, De Religione Vera, Falsa, Pagana, Muhamedana, Judaica, Pontificia:—De Resurrectione, utrum ea Virtute Meritorum et Resurrectionis Christi, utrum ex Causa quadam Alia Futura:—Dissertatio de Persona Christi:—Homilia Septem de Nativitate Christi super Vaticinium Jesuæ cap. ix. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Boëthius, Jacob, a Swedish theologian and scholar, was born at Kila-Sockn in 1647. He was successively professor of theology at Upsal, and pastor of Mora in Dalecarlia. He wrote a memorial against the unlimited power which Charles XI had introduced. He was arrested and condemned to perpetual imprisonment in the fortress of Noteborg. The Russians rescued him in 1702, but he was again imprisoned until 1710. He died at Vesteras in 1718. He wrote, De Orthographia Linguae Succanae Tractatus:—Murensius Bilinguis:—Epitome Logicae Auriculi:—some dissertations. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boëtius, Saint, was a disciple of St. Fursey, and probably one of the three companions of St. Foillan (the brother of St. Fursey) who were killed with him, and buried with him in the Church of the Canons of St. Gertrude, in Belgium. See BOËTHIUS, Saint.

Boettcher. See BÜTTCHER.

Boetticher, FREDERICK WILLIAM, a German Reformed minister, was educated and ordained in his native country, Prussia. He is first met with in America at the Synod of Ohio, in 1835. While there he was admitted as advisory member of this body. He visited congregations in Ohio; served two in Belmont and Captains Creek during the years 1835 and 1836; after which nothing more is known of him. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iii, 487.

Boeye, ANDRÉ DE, a learned Flemish Jesuit, who was born in 1571 at Furnes, and died Jan. 24, 1650, at Antwerp, is the author of Vitæ Sanctorum Conjugatorum, qui in Matrimonio Virtutibus Illustres Vixerunt:—Gloria Magnorum Patriarcharum, Joachimi et Annae:—Vitæ Sanctorum et Aliorum Illustrum Hominum Veteris Testamenti ab Adamo et Eva usque ad Joachinum et Annam. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, *Nouv. Boeyermaus, THEODORE. See BOYERMAUS.

Bog (Slavic for god) is the etymon of the large number of names of deities joined to this syllable, as Czernebog, Ipabog, etc. Bog-Triglaw seems to have been pre-eminently worshipped as supreme god by the Slavonic nations. However, as there has been found not the least trace of a representation of this god among the monuments of the Wendian, and especially none among those of the Obotritian, heathens which were found in the early part of the 17th century near Prilwiz, in Mecklenburg-Strelitz, on the site of the ancient famous Rethra, the capital of the Obotrites, it is thought that Bog-Triglaw was an unknown god, and, as his worship did not promise immediate temporal blessings, he was worshipped very meagrely.

Boga. See BOGHA.

Bogan, ZACHARY, a learned Puritan writer, was born at Little Hempston, in Devonshire, in 1625. He was educated at St. Alban's Hall and at Corpus-Christi College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. He died from the effects of too close mental application, Sept. 1, 1659. He wrote, Additions to Rous's Archæologiae Atticæ (5th ed. Oxford, 1658):—View of Scriptural Threats and Punishments (1653):—Meditations of the Mirth of a Christian Life (eod.):—Help to Prayer (1650):—Homerus ἱεραὶς ὕμναις; sive Comparatio Homerum cum Scripturibus Sacris quoad Normam Loquendi (1658):—and other works.

Bogardines. See FRANCISCANS.

Bogardus, Cornelius (1), a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born Sept. 25, 1780. He studied theology under Dr. Livingston, and was licensed by the Classis of New York in 1808. He was pastor at Schenectady from 1808 to 1812, where he died, Dec. 13, 1812. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 187; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 187.

Bogardus, Cornelius (2), a clergyman of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Fishkill, N. Y., in 1785. He graduated from Union College in 1816, and from the seminary at New Brunswick in 1818, and engaged at once in the work of domestic missions in Madison and Warren counties, N. Y. He afterwards settled in small churches in Albany and Schoharie counties—Beaver Dam, 1821 to 1825; Wynantskill, 1826 to 1832; Boght, 1834 to 1838; Gilboa and Conesville, 1838 to 1842. Subsequently he taught school. He was a man of vigorous mind, and a writer of considerable power—especially in theological controversy. His work on Baptism, now out of print, is a good specimen of critical and logical ability. He was a plain, earnest, devout man, lacking in cultivation and refinement of manner, but well suited to the people among whom he ministered. He died in 1854. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, p. 187. (W. J. R. T.)

Bogardus, Everardus, the second minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church in New York, Jonas Michaelius being the first. Mr. Bogardus arrived at New Amsterdam in 1633, with governor Van Twiller, and with Adam Roeland, Sr., the first teacher, and founder of the School of the Collegiate Church. Upon the reception of their minister, the people, who had hitherto worshipped in a loft over a horse-mill, erected a church edifice near the East River, in what is now Broad Street. Mr. Bogardus soon became involved in unfortunate conflicts with individuals and with governor Van Twiller, whom he severely reprimanded from the pulpit as "a child of the devil." He came also into collision with governor Kieft, who caused charges against him to be preferred before the Classis of Amsterdam. The governor, who had been superseded by Peter Stuyvesant, and the dominie sailed for Holland in the same vessel, Aug. 16, 1647, to account for their conduct; but the vessel was wrecked in Bristol Channel, off the coast of Wales, and both of them were lost. See De Witt, Historical Discourse, Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 187. (W. J. R. T.)

Bogardus, Nanning, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was pastor of the Church at Helderberg, Albany County, N. Y., from 1830 to 1833, and at Fort Plain from 1834 to 1835. Next he was stated supply at Plattekill. From 1838 to 1842 he was pastor at Woodstock, Ulster County; Sharon, Schoharie County, from 1846 to 1849; Westerlo, Albany County, from 1849 to 1850; Gallupville, Schoharie County, from 1852 to 1856; stated supply at Canastota, Madison County, from 1858 to 1859; and stated supply at Spraker's Basin from 1861 to 1866. He died in 1868. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 188.

Bogardus, William R., a prominent minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated at Union College in 1813 and at the New Brunswick Theological Seminary in 1816. He was settled in Ulster County, N. Y., from 1817 to 1831, and at New Paltz and New Hurley, and at Acquackanonk, N. J. (now Passaic), from 1831 to 1856. He retired from active life in 1856, and died in perfect peace in 1862. He was a fearless, sound, and eloquent preacher, a successful pastor, and a man thoroughly fitted for his work. Hundreds of souls were converted under his ministry. He was the pioneer of the temperance reform in Ulster County. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 189; Christian Intelligencer, 1862. (W. J. R. T.)

Bogart, David Schuyler, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in New York city in 1770. He graduated at Columbia College in 1790, studied theology under Dr. J. H. Livingston, and was licensed by the Synod in 1792. He was missionary "along the Hudson and to the North as far as St. Croix" in 1792, and was assistant at Albany from 1792 to 1796. He then served the Presbyterian Church at Southampton, L. I., from 1796 to 1806. His next charge in the Reformed Church was at Bloomingdale during 1806 and 1807, when he returned to Southampton and remained there until 1813. In that year he again left Southampton and was pastor in the Reformed Church at Success and Oyster Bay until 1826. He died in 1839. As a student he was zealous and indefatigable. In many departments of science and literature he extended his researches, and in all he sought truth rather than mere knowledge. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 189.

Bogdo Lama, in Mongolian religion, is the personification of the eternally lasting incarnation of the god Xaka, or Fo. He was one thousand years old before our time of reckoning, born of a pure maiden, spread a purified doctrine, and was translated alive into heaven; but his spirit rested upon an innocent boy, who now represents him. See LAMA.

Bögehold, Philip Wilhelm Moritz, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 24, 1815, at Mulheim, on the Rhine. He studied at Bonn and Berlin, and in 1839 was appointed rector of the Latin school at Dierdorf and second preacher there. The many duties connected with his twofold position obliged him to retire to Oberdreis, a quiet place where he could recruit his broken health. In 1845 he went to Altwied, and here it was that he commenced his inner-missionary work among the poor and destitute, for which he became afterwards so well known. In 1848 he was called as pastor of the prison at Düsseldorf, and in 1857 he accepted the same appointment at Moabit, near Berlin. In 1863 he received the pastorate of St. Elisabeth at Berlin, and in the capital of the German empire he founded those Christian institutions for both young and old, which have endeared his name to the whole Christian community. He died Oct. 16, 1873. See Erinnerungen an Ph. W. M. Bögehold, etc. (1873). (B. P.)

Boger, George, a German Reformed minister, was born in North Carolina, Dec. 15, 1782. In early life he was admitted to the Church, and in 1798 was ordained and received as a member of the Synod of Carlisle, Pa. During the year 1818 he preached at Rowan and Cabarras, in North Carolina. While in that state, a period of twenty years, he preached 308 funeral sermons, baptized 1919 children, confirmed 607 persons, and solemnized 301 marriages. After living many years in retirement, he died June 19, 1865. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 41.

Boggs, John M., a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Pennsylvania. He graduated at Franklin College in 1840, and spent over one year in Princeton Seminary. He was pastor at Millersburg and Clark, O.; at Paxton, Pa.; and at Independence, Ia., where he died, Sept. 1, 1872, aged fifty-three years. See Princeton Sem. Gen. Catalogue; Presbyterian, Sept. 21, 1872.

Boggs, William, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Belmont County, O., May 17, 1811. He was converted when about twenty-one, was educated at Norwalk Seminary, and in 1841 entered the North Ohio Conference. In 1864 his health gave way, and compelled him to become a superannuate, which relation he held until his death, June 7, 1869. Mr. Boggs was upright, straightforward, and guileless, as a man; plain, logical, and scriptural, as a preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 284.

Bogha (or Boga), a virgin of Leitir, in Dalaradia, commemorated as a saint on Jan. 22. In Dr. Todd's note, Mart. Doneg. p. 24, he says that Ængus, in the Felire, mentions "the decease of the daughters of Comhgall." Among the saints descended from the family of Maccarthens and the race of Eochaidh are given Sts. Boga, Colma, and Lassara, virgins, with their genealogy, etc., Jan. 22. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, App. iii, 741; Reeves, Eccles. Antiq. p. 237.

Bogle, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Capheaton, Northumberland, Feb. 28, 1757. He was converted at fifteen, and died in Liverpool, Oct. 4, 1837. His piety was genuine and his ministrations successful. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1838.

Bogos Version of the Scriptures. Bogos is a language or dialect spoken by a tribe numbering about 20,000 souls, and dwelling at the northern apex of the table-land of Abyssinia. One third of the tribe are Roman Catholics, and the remainder are Mohammedans and Abyssinian Christians, but without churches or priests, and in neglect of all religion. The British and Foreign Bible Society undertook, in 1880, to print a small tentative edition of the Gospel of St. Mark for that tribe. The translation was made by professor Rheinisch, an Egyptologist, from Dr. Krapf's Amharic Bible, by the assistance of Stefanos, a youth who was educated at Gondar, in Abyssinia. The translation is in the Abyssinian character. (B. P.)

Bogri is the name of a sect of the Albigenses who appeared in the neighborhood of Cambray about the year 1225. Many of them were burned. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Boga are favorite saints among the Russians. A figure of some patron saint, stamped in copper, is carried about in the pocket, or fixed in some small chapel in the house. The household bog is usually painted on wood; and in the houses of men of wealth and rank it is surrounded with precious stones, and tapers are burned before it. Among all classes they are held in the highest veneration. The most popular of the patron saints are St. Nicholas. St. John the Baptist, St. Sergius, and St. Alexander Newski.

Bogue, Horatius Publius, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Winchester, Conn., Dec. 22, 1796. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1820, and studied at Andover Seminary in 1823. He settled successively at Butternuts, 1823 to 1829; Norwich, 1829 to 1833; Vernon village, 1833 to 1840; and Seneca Falls and as stated supply in Preble, 1862 to 1864; East Hamburg, N. Y., 1864 to 1866. On the failure of his health he gave up regular ministerial labor, and for several years filled agencies for the Colonization and Jews' societies, making his headquarters in Syracuse. He finally laid aside all regular labor and removed to Buffalo, occasionally preaching, as his health allowed. He died there Jan. 23, 1873. His convictions were positive; his sermons commanded attention. See Presbyterianism in Central N. Y. p. 465; Triennial Cat. of Andover Theol. Seminary, 1870, p. 56.

Bogue, Publius Virgilius, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Farmington, Conn., March 30, 1764. He graduated from Yale College in 1787, and studied theology with his brother at Granville, Mass. He began his ministry at Winchester, Conn., and, after several prosperous years, he accepted a call to Hanover, now Kirkland; then, after a number of years, took charge of the Church in Vernon Centre. He next resided in Vermont a short time to recruit his health, and resumed his pastoral service at Georgia, in that state, and continued for twelve or fourteen years. He was then called to Sauquoit, Central N. Y.; after a successful period here, being disabled by the infirmities of age, he removed to Clinton, where he died, Aug. 22, 1836. See Presbyterianism in Central N. Y. p. 464.

Boguphal, a Polish prelate and historian, who died in 1253, as bishop of Posen, left a Chronicon Polonie (printed in Sommertag's Scriptores Rerum Silesie [Leipsic, 1739], and separately [Varsovia, 1752]), which gives a history of Poland down to 1253; and was continued by Godislas Backso down to 1271. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bohan, Stone of. Mr. Clermont Ganneau thinks he discovered this ancient landmark in the present Hajar el-Ashab (stone of the finger) of the Bedawin, not far from the place where the Wady Daber enters into the narrow plain which separates it from the Dead Sea" (Quarterly Statement of the "Pal. Explor. Fund." April, 1871, p. 105). Subsequently he describes it (ibid. April, 1874, p. 80 sq.) as "the most northerly of four or five great blocks of rocks, probably fallen from the summit or flank of the mountain;" "very nearly cubical in form, and measuring two metres and a half in height," and "cloven in the middle." Dr. Tristram, however, thinks this conjecture, "though ingenious, yet hardly satisfactory" (Bible Places, p. 94).

Bohemond, MARC, one of the leaders of the Crusades, was born about 1056. He was the eldest son of Robert Guiscard, a Norman, who had obtained by conquest the dukedom of Apulia and Calabria. From 1081 to 1085 he served under his father in a war against the Byzantine emperor Alexius Comnenus. At the death of his father, in 1085, he became involved in a war with his younger brother over the division of his dominions, but he was speedily diverted from this strife by the Crusades. Accompanied by his cousin Tancred, he led an army of 10,000 cavalry and 20,000 infantry, with which he would have besieged Constantinople had he been able to persuade Godfrey of Bouillon to join him. In 1098 he besieged and took Antioch, of which he assumed the principality. In 1101 he was defeated and taken prisoner by the Turks. After a captivity of two years he was released, and he returned to Europe to raise troops. He levied an army in France, with which he renewed the war with Alexius, but was unsuccessful, and was obliged to conclude a peace in 1108. He died at Canossa, in Apulia, in 1111. See Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, lviii, lx; Michaud, Histoire des Croisades.

Bohle, SAMUEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Greiffenberg, in Pomerania, May 26, 1611. He studied at different universities, and died as professor of theology at Rostock, May 10, 1639. He published, Tabula Gram. Hebr. (Rostock, 1638; Leipsic, 1637).—Grammatica Ebraea (ibid., 1636).—Scrutinium S.S. ex Accentibus (ibid. eod.).—Vera Divisio Decalogi ex Infulabilis Principio Accent. (ibid., 1637).—*Disput. Bohme, CHARLES LEWIS, a German Reformed minister, arrived in the United States in February, 1771. He was located in the congregation at Lancaster, Pa., on trial; and being successful he was retained until July, 1775, when he went to Hanover. There he remained until 1781, and then accepted a call from Baltimore. While there he became physically unable to perform his duties as a minister, and was compelled to resign. He was poor, and dependent on his friends and church-members for aid. The Church and the fathers in Holland contributed much to his relief. When he died is unknown. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 391.

Böhmer, Just Henning, a celebrated jurist of Germany, was born Jan. 29, 1674, at Hanover. After having occupied the highest positions in the University of Halle, he died Aug. 23, 1749. He wrote, Dissertat. Juris Ecclesiastici Antiqui, ad Plinium Sec. et Tertullianum, Gentianus Origines Præcipuar. Materiæ. Juris Ecclesiastici Demonstrantes (Leipsic, 1711).—Entwicke- lung des Kirchenstaats der ersten 3 Jahrhunderte (Halle, 1738).—*Institut. He edited Corpus Jur. Can. Gregor. XIII Auctorit. post Emendationem. Absolutum Editum, Recensuit (ibid. 1747, 2 vols.; new edition by E. L. Richter, Leipsic, 1834-38). He is also the author of a few hymns, two of which have been translated into English—viz. O auferstund'nen Siegesfürst (Lyra Germanica, ii, 68: "O risen Lord! O conquering King!") and Brich durch, mein angefocht'nes Herz (ibid. p. 192: "Courage, my sorely tempted heart!"). Böhmer, Wilhelm, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Burg, near Magdeburg, March 5, 1800. In 1824 he commenced lecturing at Berlin; was in 1825 professor at Greifswalde, in 1828 at Halle, and in 1829 again in Greifswalde. In 1832 he was called to Breslau, and died Nov. 25, 1864. He published, Isagoge in Epistolam ad Colossenses (Berlin, 1829).—Die christlich-kirchliche Alterthumswissenschaft (Breslau, 1830, 2 vols.).—Hermogenes Africanus (Stralsund, 1832).—Symbolæ Biblicæ ad Dogmaticen Christianam (Vatislav, 1833).—Theologische Auslegung des Sendschreibens an die Colosser (ibid. 1835).—Die christliche Dogmatik oder Glaubenslehre (ibid. 1840, 2 vols.).—Die theologische Ethik, christlichen Lebens (ibid. 1847).—System des christlichen Lebens (ibid. 1858).—Die Lehrunterschiede der katholischen und evangelischen Kirchen. Böhringer, Georg Friedrich, a German Protestant theologian, who died at Basle, Switzerland, in 1879, is best known as the author of the history of the Church in biographies. In 1833 he had to leave Germany on account of his liberal political and religious views. He went to Switzerland, and was in 1842 elected pastor at Glattfelden in Zurich. After 1853 he entirely devoted himself to historical studies, and when he had lost his sight his wife and son assisted him in his labors. The work which he left comprises twenty-four volumes, viz.:

Vol. i, Ignatius, Polykarpus, Perpetua; ii, Irenæus; iii, Tertullianus; iv, Cyprianus; v, Origenes und Klemens; vi, Athanarius und Arius; vii, Basilius; viii, Gregor von Nyssa, Gregor von Nazianz; ix, Chrysostomus und Olympian; x, Ambrosius; xi, Augustinus; xii, Leo, Gregor der Grosse; xiii, Kolumban und St. Gall, Bonifazius und Ansgar; xiv, Anselm von Canterbury, Bernhard von Clairvaux, Arnold von Brescia; xv, Peter Abilard; xvi, Heloise, Innozenz III, Franziskus von Assisi, Rita-beth von Thüringen; xvii, Johannes Tauler; xviii, Heinrich Suso, Johannes Ruusbroek, Gerhard Groot; xix, Florentinus Radewynzoon, Thomas von Kempen; xx, Johannes von Wicliffe; xxi, Konrad Waldhauser, Milie von Krenauer, Matthias von Janow; xxii, Johann Huss; xxiii, Hieronymus von Prag, Das Concil von Konstanz; xxiv, Hieronymus Savonarola.

Boias are medical priests among the native Indians of the Caribbee Islands. They are also conjurors, each of whom has a particular genius, which he invokes. In order to become a Boia the candidate must abstain from certain kinds of meats from his infancy, and, while under instruction, live in a little hut where he is visited by no one except his instructor, subsisting on bread and water alone. He is purified by making incisions in his skin and administering tobacco juice freely. His body is afterwards rubbed over with gum or oil and then covered with feathers. When a Boia is summoned in case of sickness he immediately orders the fire extinguished; he then goes into a corner, where the patient is carried to him. After various incantations, of which tobacco-smoking is the principal ceremony, he applies his mouth to the diseased part, pretending to suck away the disease. If the patient fails to get relief, he then turns priest and administers consolation to the afflicted, endeavoring to reconcile him to impending death.

Boice, Ira Condict, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in Somerset County, N. J. In 1823 he graduated from Dickinson College, and in 1826 from New Brunswick Seminary. He was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick in 1826. He was pastor at Salem and Union from 1826 to 1829; at Bergen Neck from 1829 to 1844; at Claverack from 1844 to 1859; and at North Hempstead from 1859 to 1870. He died in 1872. He was an honest, straightforward, earnest man, without guile or hypocrisy. His preaching was, in a sense, the reflection of his personal character. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, 3d ed. p. 190.

Boich. See BOËTHIUS.

Boies, Charles Alfred, a Congregational minister, was born in Boston, in June, 1838. For a year after the close of his college course at Yale (1860), he was an instructor in Florida. In the fall of 1861 he entered the seminary at Princeton, where he remained through the winter and then went to Keene, N. H. He at once began to preach in the neighboring town of Roxbury, taking also an active part in the Sunday-schools of that neighborhood. In Sept. 1862, he entered the seminary at Andover, and remained there till January, when his health gave way. He died at Keene, May 14, 1863. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1863.

Boies, Harper, a Congregational minister, was born at Blandford, Mass., April 21, 1797. He was a graduate of Williams College and of Auburn Theological Seminary. His ministerial career began in Tolland, Mass., where he labored for nearly one year; removing to Harpersfield, N. Y., he was installed pastor of the Church there in the summer of 1830. In Feb. 1835, he left Harpersfield for Dalton, Mass., where he preached about three years. Compelled to relinquish the ministry by failing health, he commenced teaching in Granville, but in 1850 he returned to Harpersfield, by the invitation of the Church, where he remained until the close of his life, March 7, 1867. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 214.

Boileau, Charles, a French abbot and priest, was born at Beauvais, and died in 1704. He wrote, Des Pensées Choies, sur Différens Sujets de Morale (Paris, 1707).—Homélies et Sermons sur les Évangiles du Carême (ibid. 1712, 2 vols.).—Panegyriques des Saints (1718). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boileau, Jacques, a French Roman Catholic theologian, was born in Paris, March 16, 1635. In 1662 he took his degree as doctor of theology, was in 1671 dean and grand-vicar at Sens, in 1694 canon at Sainte-Chapelle and dean of the Sorbonne, and died Aug. 1, 1716. He published, De Tactibus Impudicis (Paris, 1695).—Historia Flagellantium (ibid. 1700).—De Re Vestiana Hominis Sacri (Amsterdam, 1704), and other treatises. See Du Pin, Bibl. Lit. i, 456, 457, 603, 612, 648, 918; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Boileau, Jean Jacques, a French theologian and biographer, was born near Agen in 1649. He was canon of the collegiate Church of St. Honoré at Paris, where he died, March 10, 1735. His principal works are, Lettres sur Différens Sujets de Morale et de Piété (Paris, 1737).—Vie de Madame de Liancourt (ibid. 1698, 1779). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boinest, T. S., a Lutheran minister, was pastor of the Bethlehem Church, Pamaris, S. C. He died Sept.

3, 1871, aged forty-three years. See Lutheran Observer, Sept. 22, 1871.

Bois, JOHN, D.D., an English prelate, was descended from an ancient family in Kent. He was educated fellow of Clare Hall, Cambridge; was preferred dean of Canterbury; became famous for his postils in defence of the Anglican liturgy, and died about 1625. His life was pious, though "a great prelate in the Church did bear him no great good-will for mutual animosities between them, while gremials in the university; the reason perchance he got no higher preferment." See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 155.

Boise, JOHN, a divine of the first part of the 17th century, was born at Elmeseth, Suffolk, being the son of the minister of that place. He was educated at Hadley School and St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was chosen fellow. Here he read in bed a Greek lecture to such young scholars as preferred antelucana studia before their own ease. He was one of the translators of the Bible appointed by king James, and wrote learned notes, etc., for Sir Henry Savill's edition of Chrysostom. He became parson of Boxworth, Cambridgeshire, and prebendary of Ely. He died "about the beginning of our warlike disturbances." See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 187.

Boisgelin, JEAN DE Dieu Raymond de Cucé, d. a French prelate and theologian, was born at Rennes, Feb. 27, 1732. Destined from infancy for the ecclesiastical profession, he was appointed successively grand-vicar of Poitiers, bishop of Lavaur, and archbishop of Aix. While president of the States, a canal was built, which bore his name; he also founded an institution for the education of poor girls, and several other useful establishments. In 1789-97 he was sent as deputy of the clergy of Aix to the States-General, where he jealously fought against the union of the three orders, and voted for the abolition of the feudal privileges, and for the annual assessment of the tax. He was elected president of the assembly Nov. 28, 1790, where he combated the motion which gave to the assembly the power to dispose of all the goods of the Church. He proposed the convocation of a general council, and published a writing entitled, Exposition des Principes des Evêques de l'Assemblée. After the session of the constituent assembly, a constitutional archbishop having been appointed to Aix, M. de Boisgelin retired to England, and did not return to France until after the signature of the Concordat. In 1802 he was appointed archbishop of Tours, and a little later was made cardinal. In 1765 he pronounced the funeral oration of the Dauphin, son of Louis XV; in 1766 that of Stanislas, king of Poland; in 1769 that of the Dauphin, and the discourse at the coronation of Louis XVI at Rheims. In 1776 he became member of the French Academy, in place of the abbot of Voisenon. He died at Angervilliers, Aug. 22, 1804. He wrote, among other works, Art de Juger par l'Analyse des Idées (Paris, 1789):—Discours sur le Rétablissement de la Religion:—Iliades d'Ovide, translated into French verse without the name of the author (ibid. 1786):—Le Psalmiste, traduction des Psaumes en vers, précédée d'un Discours sur la Poésie Sacrée des Hébreux (Lond. 1799). This work was published in order to supply the wants of some families of French emigrants. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boisil, præpositus (or prior) of the monastery of Mailros, under abbot Eata, is described by Bede (Hist. Eccl. iv, 27) as a man of great virtues and of a prophetic spirit; several instances of his power of predicting events are given, which Bede seems to have learned from Herefrith and Sigfrid. Whatever may be the truth of these stories, it seems certain that it was through Boisil that Cuthbert obtained admission at Mailros and the tonsure. Another of his favorite pupils was the famous Egbert. Boisil probably died about 664. He was not only a scholar, but an indefatigable preacher in the villages of the north. Relics of him are preserved at Durham, and his memory is observed on Sept. 9. See Mabillon, Acta Sanctorum, O. S. B. Saec. ii, p. 850.

Boislève, PIERRE, a French theologian, was born at Saumur, Sept. 12, 1745. He received the degree of doctor of law after having embraced the ecclesiastical profession; and, invested with the vicariate of St. Michael of Angers, he showed a remarkable talent in examining the proceedings which the presiding of that city forwarded to him. He was afterwards appointed canon of the collegiate Church of St. Martin, and vice-promoter of the diocese. During the Revolution he refused to take the required oath, left Angers, and went to Passy to dwell in a house furnished by his old school-fellow, M. de Maille, bishop of St. Papoul. After the conclusion of the Concordat, he was appointed honorary canon of Notre Dame. Boislève pronounced the sentence of divorce between Napoleon and Josephine, Jan. 16, 1810. He became afterwards titular canon, vicar-general, and director of the monks of the Hôtel-Dieu and the nuns of the Congregation. He died at Paris, Dec. 3, 1880. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boismont, NICHOLAS THYREL DE, a French preacher, was born in a village of Normandy about 1715. Devoted to pleasure, he neglected his studies until sent to Paris, where he acquired a high reputation for his sermons, his knowledge of character, etc. He succeeded Boyer, bishop of Mirepoix, as a member of the French Academy in 1755. His literary success was great, and a discourse delivered by him on charity caused £150,000 to be collected for that object. He was highly eulogized for his talents. He died at Paris, Dec. 20, 1786. He wrote, Lettres Secrètes sur l'Etat Actuel de la Religion et du Clergé de France (1781-83), and other works, some of which were not published until after his death. Among them was De la Nécessité d'Orner les Vérités Evangeliques. His sermons and discourses were published under the title Oraisons Funèbres, Panégyriques et Sermons (Paris, 1805). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 187. (B. P.)

Boisot, CHARLES, a Flemish theologian, a native of Brussels, was at first canon regular of Groenendaal, and afterwards abbot of Sonnebeck, in the territory of Ypres. He died Aug. 27, 1636. He wrote Ordinationes et Statuta ad Regulam S. Augustini (Cologne, 1628). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boissard, GEORGE DAVID FRÉDÉRIC, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Montbelliard, Aug. 16, 1783. His first instructor was his father, a Lutheran minister, and he completed his studies at the Central School of Strasbourg, where he distinguished himself in mathematics. By the study of theology, he prepared himself for the evangelical ministry, to which he was consecrated Oct. 11, 1803. He was appointed in 1804 pastor of the Lutheran Church of Lille, which he had charge of organizing, and from which he passed, in 1807, to the Church of his communion recently established at Nancy. Two years later he was called to Paris, where he entered upon the duties in the Temple on the Rue de Billettes. His labors were universally esteemed, and he showed remarkable zeal in directing the religious instruction of the colleges of Louis the Great, Henry IV, and St. Louis. He was member of the Society of Evangelical Missions, of the Biblical Society, of the Protestant Society of Forethought and Mutual Relief, of the Society of Christian Morality, and of the Society of Encouragement of Elementary Instruction among the Protestants of France. He died at Paris, Sept. 16, 1836. He wrote a number of books, among which we mention, Catéchisme à l'Usage de l'Enfance Evangelique (Lille):—Discours Prononcé dans le Temple Chrétien de la Confession d'Augsburg (Paris, 1811):—Histoire de la Bible (ibid. 1813):—Célébration de la Troisième Fête Séculaire de la Réformation (ibid. 1817):

—Recueil de Cantiques à l'Usage des Chrétiens Évangéliques, etc. (ibid. 1819). In collaboration with other pastors he published Principes de la Religion Chrétienne, etc. (ibid. 1826).—Instructions Chrétiennes à l'Usage de la Jeunesse, etc. (ibid. 1832). He also wrote a great number of funeral discourses for the obsequies of various persons; among others, J.-M. Soehne (1815); count Rapp, peer of France (1821); Dr. Würtz (1823); Clementine Cuvier, daughter of the celebrated naturalist.

Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.

Boissière, JOSEPH DE LA FONTAINE DE LA, a French priest of the Oratory, who died at Paris in 1732, aged eighty-four years, left six vols. of Sermons (Paris, 1730, 1731), which are highly esteemed.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Boisville, JEAN FRANÇOIS MARTIN DE, a French theologian, was born at Rouen, Jan. 12, 1755. He entered upon the ecclesiastical profession, as his parents had designed. He took his degrees at the Sorbonne, and was appointed canon of the Cathedral of Rouen. Returning to his native city after the Revolution, he was chosen by the archbishop for one of the grand vicars.
He left this position in 1801, and retired to Havre, where he devoted himself to study, to religious duties, and cares which taxed the feebleness of his health. In 1822 he was made bishop of Dijon, which position he filled worthily until his death, May 27, 1829. He wrote a translation in verse of L'Imitation de Jésus Christ (Paris, 1818). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Gènerale, s. v.

Boivin, JEAN GABRIEL, a French Franciscan, who was born at Vire, in Normandy, and died in 1681, left a course of philosophy and another of theology, each in four vols.; the latter is called Theologia Scoti et Sub-tilitas ejus ab Obscuritate Liberata et Vindicata. Five editions were printed between 1664 and 1682.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bokum, HERMANN, a German Reformed minister, was born at Königsberg, Prussia, Jan. 2, 1807. He received an excellent classical education, and came to America in 1826. After a few years, he became professor of the German and French languages in the University of Philadelphia. He was licensed to preach in 1842, and was ordained pastor of Columbia and Marietta, Lancaster Co., in 1843. After two years he removed to Cincinnati, O., where he was engaged in teaching, and in 1854 pursued similar labors in Knoxville, Tenn. At the breaking-out of the Rebellion his property was confiscated by the Confederacy, and he came North. He was engaged by the Federal government in various capacities, chiefly as chaplain in the army, and labored efficiently in the hospital at Turner's Lane, Philadelphia. He received, at the close of the war, the appointment of commissioner of immigration in Tennessee, and returned to Knoxville. The office being discontinued in 1869, he removed to Atlanta, Ga., and became pastor of a German congregation. In 1873 he returned to Philadelphia, where he engaged in general missionary work, devoting a portion of his time to teaching and literary work, until his death in Germantown, Aug.
5, 1878. He was a sincere and devoted Christian, and a man of fine literary attainments. He was author of a German and English Grammar, and translated McIlvaine's Evidences of Christianity into German, besides writing extensively for several religious papers. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church,
v. 314.

Bol (or Boll), HANS, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Mechlin, Dec. 16, 1534, and studied under an obscure artist for some time; then visited Germany, where he copied the works of some of the most eminent masters. He died in Amsterdam, Nov. 29, 1593.
The following are his principal works: The Reconciliation of Jacob and Esau; The First Interview between the Servant of Abraham and Rebecca. See Spooner, Biog.

rale*, s. v.

Bolam, JOHN, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Gateshead, Dec. 13, 1802. At an early age he attended Wesley's Orphan-house School at Newcastle.
He was converted in 1819, was sent to his first circuit in 1824, and four years afterwards was appointed to the Shetland Islands, where he endured much privation. In many subsequent spheres his labors were greatly blessed.
He retired after forty-two years' service, and died at Workop, Nottinghamshire, June 5, 1872. Bolam was a man of varied ability, of uniform piety, and abiding friendship. Strength and acuteness marked his efforts, and his power of analysis and skill in composition were considerable. Of popery he was an uncompromising enemy, and in his later years his pen was often employed in exposing and denouncing its errors. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1872, p. 29.

Boland, ELIJAH N., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Muscogee County, Ga. He embraced religion about the close of the Mexican war, and in 1855 united with the Georgia Conference. Mr. Boland's education was limited, but by studious habits he became very efficient. He worked hard all the day, studied nights, and preached Sundays. He enlisted in the forty-sixth regiment Georgia Volunteers, with the expectation of being made chaplain, in which he was disappointed. He died in one of the hospitals, September, 1863. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1863, p. 454.

Bolcan (or Olcan) is the name of two Irish saints.
1. Bishop of Derkan or Airthir-muge, lived about A.D. 440, in the north of Ulster. He was found, when an infant, beside his dead mother, by Darius, a chief of Carsedna; and was baptized by St. Patrick, who later put him over the Church of Rath-mugia (or Airthir-mugia).
St. Patrick afterwards sent him to Gaul, from which he returned (date uncertain), and was in all probability a bishop in A.D. 480. Ussher gives the date of his consecration as bishop of Derkan (or Clonderkan), in Dal-riada, as 474. A story is told of his having been induced by menaces to baptize Saran, a chief in Dalriada; and of St. Patrick's foretelling that for his indiscretion his church would be thrice destroyed. Reeves notes that the Church of Armoy (Airthir-muge) has had its property gradually merged in the episcopal property of Connor, so that three fourths of the parish have been from time immemorial the property of that see. His day in the calendar is Feb. 20.

2. In speaking of St. Bolcan, Colgan (Acta Sanctorum,
p. 377, n.) says there is another saint in Ireland called Bolcan, who is venerated in the church of Kill-chule, County Roscommon; and that he is always enumerated by Tirechan and Aengus among the presbyters and abbots who were disciples of St. Patrick, being commemorated July 4. Alb. Butler (vii, 61) says that his relics remain at Kilmore, where his monastery stood. Lanigan (Eccles. Hist. Ir. i. 256, 344) calls him Olcan of Kilmoyle.

Bold, JOHN, an English clergyman, was born in Leicestershire in 1679, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. Having entered into holy orders, he took the curacy of Stony Staunton, Leicestershire, where he labored for about fifty years. He died in 1757. His publications include, The Sin and Danger of Neglecting the Public Service of the Church (1745).—Religion the most Delightful Employment.—The Duty of Worthy Communicating. See Allibone, *Dict. of Brit. and Amer.
Authors*, s. v.

Boldetti, MARCO ANTONIO, an Italian antiquarian, was born at Rome, Nov. 19, 1663. He was writer of the Hebrew language at the Library of the Vatican, and on Saturday he assisted at the Jewish service at the Church. For more than thirty years he was inspector of the cemeteries of Rome. He refused the episcopal honor which pope Clement XI offered him. He died

Dec. 4, 1749, leaving Osservazioni sopra i Cimiteri de' Santi Martiri ed Antichi Christiani di Roma (Rome, 1720). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boldich, ERNST CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Sonderburg, Nov. 9, 1647. He studied at different universities, and became in 1687 pastor at Cronenburg, where he died in 1706. He wrote, Diss. de Pontifice Ebræorum Maximo:—Christliche Entdeckung der Calvinischen Betrieglichkeit, etc. See Seelen, Athenæ Lubecenses; Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Boldoni, OTTAVIO, a learned Italian theologian, was born in 1600. He belonged to the order of Barnabites, and became bishop of Teramo in 1661. He died in 1680, leaving, Theatrum Temporaneum, etc. (Milan, 1636):—Dies Attici (ibid. 1639):—Epigraphica (Perugia, 1660; Rome, 1670). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boldrini (or Boldini), NICOLÒ (called Vicentino), an Italian wood-engraver, was born at Vicenza about the year 1510, and executed a number of pictures after Titian. The following is a list of his principal religious works: The Wise Men's Offering; St. Jerome Praying; St. Catherine; St. Sebastian and Four other Saints.

Bolduc, JACQUES, a French theologian, was born at Paris about 1580. He was a Capuchin monk, and his oratorical talent acquired for him some reputation. His theological works were sought for on account of their singularity, and for the paradoxes which they contained. He wrote, Commentarium in Epistolam S. Jude (Paris, 1620):—Commentaria in Librum Job (ibid. 1619, 1631, 1638):—De Ecclesia post Legem (ibid. 1630):—De Ecclesia ante Legem (Lyons, 1626):—De Orgio Christiano libri tres, in quibus Declarantur Antiquissima Sacro-sanctæ Eucharistiæ Typica Mysteriorum (ibid. 1640). These ancient mysteries consisted, according to the author, in the institution of the sacrament of the eucharist by Adam, who cultivated wheat, and by Noah, who made wine. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bolgeni, GIOVANNI VINCENTE, an Italian theologian, was born at Bergamo, Jan. 22, 1733. He entered the Jesuit order, and became professor of philosophy and theology at Macerata. At the suppression of this society, he was called to Rome by pope Pius VI, who appointed him his theological penitentiary. Bolgeni published a great number of works, in which he strongly sustained the principles professed by the Jesuits. In a pamphlet which he published in 1794, he went so far as to give the name of Jacobins to all the Jansenists or constitutionalists. Five years later, he wrote in favor of the oath which the Roman republic required of the institutors and public functionaries, but was obliged to retract before the sacred college assembled at Venice to elect a pope. He died at Rome, May 3, 1811. His principal works are, Esume della Vera Idea della Santa Sede (Macerata, 1785):—Il Critico Corretto, ossia Ricerche Critiche (ibid. 1786):—Economia della Fede Cristiana (Brescia, 1790). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bollivar, GREGORIO DE, a Spanish missionary and publicist, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He belonged to the order of Saint Francis of the Observants. For twenty-five years he preached the Gospel to the people of Mexico, of Peru, and of several other parts of America, where European civilization had not penetrated. He was also, it is said, versed in medical science. He wrote Memorial de Arbitrios para la Reparacion de España (Madrid, 1626):—also an account of his travels, which has not been published. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boll, Friedrich Christian, a German Protestant minister, who was born in 1777, and died Feb. 12, 1818, as pastor of St. Mary at Neubrandenburg, is the author of, Von dem Verfall und der Wiederherstellung der Religiosität (Neustrelitz, 1809):—Predigten über Luther's Leben und Wirken (Rostock, 1818). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 46, 209. (B. P.)

Boll, Hans. See BOL.

Bollandus (or De Bollandt), SEBASTIAN, a Dutch theologian, a native of Maestricht, entered the house of the Recollects, and taught philosophy and theology. He died at Antwerp, Oct. 13, 1645. He is known as the editor of the following works: Historica, Theologica et Moralis Terræ Sanctæ Elucidatio, Auctore Francisco Quaresmio (Antwerp, 1639):—Sermones auri Fratri Petri ad Boies, in Dominicis et Festa per Annum (ibid. 1643). The monk, Pierre aux Boeufs, who is mentioned in this work, was doctor and professor of theology. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bolles, Augustus, a Baptist minister, was born at Ashford, Conn., Dec. 28, 1776. He began to preach in 1810, and was ordained pastor of the Church at Tolland in May, 1814, where he remained until 1818, when he became pastor of the Church at Bloomfield, continuing in office until 1825. That year he took up his residence at Hartford, and supplied, for a number of years, churches without pastors. For nearly four years he had charge of the Christian Secretary. After an absence of two years in Indiana, where he organized a Church at La Porte, he returned to Connecticut, and began, in 1839, to preach for the Church at Colchester, and supplied them for several years. He died in that place some time after 1859. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 478; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 110. (J. C. S.)

Bolles, David, a Baptist minister, was born at New London, Conn., Jan. 14, 1743. He was ordained an evangelist in October, 1797; served as pastor of the First Baptist Church at Hartford in 1801, and died Feb. 14, 1807. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 474.

Bolles, David C., a Baptist minister, was born in Connecticut, Feb. 2, 1798, and graduated from the Newton Theological Institution in 1832. He was ordained soon after, and for a time was pastor of the Church at Southbridge, Mass. Subsequently he removed to Ohio, in which state he was pastor successively of churches in Granville, Athens, and Jackson. He died in the last place, April 2, 1840. See Newton General Catalogue, p. 10. (J. C. S.)

Bolles, John, a layman prominent among the early Baptists of this country, was born at New London, Conn., in August, 1677. His mother and only brother and sister were murdered by a young lad named John Stoddard, leaving him the only surviving child of his father, Thomas Bolles. When he had reached the age of thirty he became dissatisfied with the religious tenets of the "standing order," and joined the Seventh-day Baptist Society, being immersed by John Rogers the elder. Well educated, familiar with the Bible, independent in fortune, earnest in his convictions, and of a proselyting spirit, bold, and fond of discussion, Mr. Bolles engaged very actively in polemical controversy, and wrote and published many books and pamphlets, some of which, yet extant, prove him to have been fluent with the pen and adroit in argument. A man of so much decision and earnest conviction on the subject of Church and State was sure to meet with persecution. For going, with several others of like faith, from Groton and New London to attend Baptist worship at Lebanon, he was arrested, imprisoned, then heavily fined—the sentence being that if fine and costs were not paid he should be flogged on the bare back for non-payment of fine, and then lie in jail until payment of costs. He received fifteen stripes, and his companions ten each. The knowledge of this outrage was spread far and wide, and, especially in Rhode Island, the land of religious freedom, awakened the greatest indignation.

It has been well said by Hon. John A. Bolles, a descendant of John Bolles: "There seems to be a sort of poetical justice in the fact that justice Backus's [the trial justice in the case of John Bolles] grandson, a child of eighteen months at the date of this flogging, became himself a Baptist preacher and the historian of the Baptists." Mr. Bolles died at New London, Jan. 7, 1797. Among the productions of his pen were, A Message to the General Court at Boston (May, 1754):—True Liberty of Conscience, etc.:—A Reply to Jacob Johnson's Answer to my Booke, etc.:—A Brief Account of Persecutions in Boston and Connecticut Governments (1758):—Objections to the Confession of Faith of the "Standing Order". Another of the books of Mr. Bolles is called Good News from a Far Country, designed to prove Roger Williams's doctrine that the civil government "has no authority from God to judge in cases of conscience." See Bolles Genealogy, p. 8-11. (J. C. S.)

Bolles, Lucius, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Ashford, Conn., Sept. 25, 1779, and was licensed to preach in 1803. He graduated from Brown University in 1801, having been converted at college. He was first pastor at Salem, Mass., which Church he served twenty-two years. He was elected corresponding secretary of foreign missions in 1826. In 1841, Dr. Bolles made a missionary tour beyond the Alleghany Mountains. He died, full of faith and hope, Jan. 5, 1844. He published a number of sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 474.

Bolles, Lucius Stillman, a Baptist minister, son of the preceding, was born at Salem, Mass., July 16, 1808, and graduated from Brown University in 1828. It was his purpose to enter the medical profession, and with this end in view he studied at the medical school of Harvard College, and received the degree of M.D. in 1831. Subsequently he spent two years at the Newton Theological Institution, 1831-33, and was ordained at Lynn, Nov. 20, 1833. Here he remained until his death, which occurred July 24, 1837. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 476; Bolles Genealogy, p. 29; Newton General Catalogue, p. 12. (J. C. S.)

Bolles, Matthew, a Baptist minister, son of David, was born at Ashford, Conn., April 21, 1769. He began to preach at Lyme in 1812. He was also pastor at Fairfield, at Milford, N. H., and at Marblehead and West Bridgewater, Mass. He died Sept. 26, 1838. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 478; Bolles Genealogy, p. 26.

Bologna, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Bononiense), was held in 1317 by Raynaldus, archbishop of Ravenna, and eight of his suffragans. Twenty-four articles were published. In them allusion is made to the licentious life of the clergy, which rendered them an object of contempt to the people, and gave them a handle for usurping the property and rights of the Church. In canon 4 it was forbidden to the clergy to carry arms, and to enter any place of bad fame; it also minutely described the fashion and quality of their dress. In canon 12 it was forbidden to say any other mass during mass at the high-altar (cum missa celebratur in nota). See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1655.

Bologna, MICHELE DA (surnamed Syngrianus or Agnianus), an Italian monk of the Carmelite order, died at Bologna in 1400. He wrote, Commentaries on the Sentences of Peter Lombard (Milan, 1410; Venice, 1623):—Commentary on the Psalms, more frequently published under the title Incongniti in Psalmos (Alcala, 1524; Lyons, eod. 1528). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bologni, MARIANO, an Italian poet and theologian, originally from Palermo, was doctor of theology and canonical law, and became canon and vicar-general of Monreale. He died Oct. 29, 1659. He wrote, Canzoni Siciliane, in the Muse Siciliane, vol. ii:—Canzoni Sacre Siciliane, ibid. vol. iv. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bolognini, Giacomo, a reputable Italian historical painter, nephew of Giovanni Battista, was born at Bologna in 1664, and studied under his uncle. He died in 1784. He executed some pictures for the churches at Bologna, among which are St. Francis receiving the Stigmata, in San Sebastiano e Rocco, and the Dead Christ with the Virgin and Mary Magdalen, in the Church of the Purita. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bolognini, Giovanni Battista, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Bologna in 1612, and studied under Guido. He died in 1689. He executed several pictures for the churches at Bologna, among which are the Virgin and Infant, with Magdalen and Saints, in Santa Maria Nuova; the Dead Christ, with the Virgin, St. John, and others, in the Church of the Servi; and the Conception, in Santa Lucia. The following are some of his principal prints: The Murder of the Innocents; Peter made Head of the Church; and the Crucifixion. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bolognini, Luigi, an Italian doctor of laws, was born at Bologna in 1447. Pope Julius II sent him as his legate into France, and he died after his return, at Bologna, July 19, 1508. He wrote many works on the civil and canon law, which were printed in his lifetime, and he was zealous in correcting the text of the Pandects; but his work entitled Emendationes Juris Civilis was not printed until 1516, after his death. Besides other works, he is said to have written a Historia Summorum Pontificum, which, if it exist, has never been printed. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v., Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bolster, CYRUS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1818. He experienced religion in 1838, graduated at Wesleyan University in 1845, and joined the New York Conference. In 1849 he was transferred to the Troy Conference, and being too feeble for pastoral work he was appointed to Lansingburg Academy, where he continued to teach until 1851, when he went to New Orleans for the improvement of his health, and there died, Feb. 17, 1853. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1853, p. 205.

Bolswert (or Bolwerd), Boetius Adam, an eminent Dutch engraver, was born at Bolswert about 1580, and died in 1634. The following are some of his principal plates: Jesuit Kneeling before a Crucifix; The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Repose in Egypt; Twenty-four of the Hermits of the Desert; The Judgment of Solomon; The Resurrection of Lazarus. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bolswert (or Bolwerd), Scheltius, a celebrated Dutch engraver, the younger brother of Boetius Adam, was born at Bolswert, in Friesland, about 1586. He especially distinguished himself by his admirable prints after some of the best works of Rubens and Vandyck. One of his most beautiful engravings is a grand composition after Vandyck, representing the Crucifixion, with a figure presenting the sponge to Christ, on the other side the Virgin and St. John are standing, and Mary Magdalene kneeling and embracing the cross. The following are only a few of his principal plates: The Infant Jesus and St. John Playing with a Lamb; The Virgin Mary, with her Hands folded on her Breast; Jesuit Christ Triumphant over Death; The Death of a Saint and that of a Sinner. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bolton, James, an English divine, was born near Weymouth in 1824. He accompanied his parents to America when twelve years of age, there received the earlier part of his education, and returning, graduated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and was ordained to the curacy of Saffron-Walden in 1849. Two years later he removed to the curacy of St. Michael's, Pimlico, and soon afterwards was appointed to the incumbency of St. Paul's Episcopal Chapel, Kilburn. He died April 8, 1863. Mr. Bolton was a devout, able, and promising young minister. See Christian Observer, Oct. 1863, p. 771.

Bolton, Robert (1), an English clergyman, was born in 1697, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. He became dean of Carlisle in 1735, and died in 1763. He wrote, The Employment of Time (1750):—The Ghost of Ernest (1757):—Letters and Tracts on the Choice of Company, etc. (1761):—and some other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bolton, Robert (2), a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New York, first appears in the active ministry in 1870, as missionary of St. John's Church, Lewisborough, N. Y., of which parish he subsequently became the rector. He died in October, 1877, aged sixty-four years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Bolton, Samuel, an English Puritan divine, was born in 1606, and educated at Cambridge. He became master of Christ College, Cambridge, in 1645, and vice-chancellor of the university in 1651. He died in October, 1654. He was the author of, True Bounds of Christian Freedom (1643):—A Guard of the Tree of Life (1647):—The Arrangement of Error (1646):—and other works. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bolton, Utdred, an English Benedictine writer of the first part of the 14th century, was a native of Wales probably, or of that part of England beyond the Severn. He travelled to Durham, became a Benedictine there, and was ingratiated with the abbot, "the promptness and pleasantness of his parts commending all things he did or said;" went to Oxford, where he brightened his learning, and entered into the Wycliffite controversies. Bolton sided with neither party, or consented to both, as his conscience directed. William Jordan, a Dominican and a northerner, now attacked Bolton both in writing and preaching. Bolton, in his turn, came out more openly for Wycliffe, especially in his book Pro Veris Monachis, showing what sanctity and industry became them. Jordan now became enraged, and tried (it seems in vain) to get Bolton excommunicated as a heretic. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 501.

Bolton, William (1), an English clergyman, was installed a prebendary of Lincoln, Nov. 8, 1477; of London, April 3, 1481; and became prebendary of Hereford, where he died in 1528. See Le Neve, Fasti.

Bolton, William (2), an English Baptist minister, was born in Norfolk in 1776, and became a Christian in early life. While serving his apprenticeship he entered upon the work of preparation to preach the Gospel. In 1800 he was appointed as a home missionary in a village not far from Colchester. Despite the popular prejudice and bigotry, Mr. Bolton persevered with his work in a Christian spirit, and at length had his reward. A piece of land was purchased, a neat place of worship was erected, and a Church established. Of this Church he was chosen the pastor, and remained in office till 1840, when, feeling the infirmities of age, he resigned, although he continued to reside near his beloved people for several years, and took the most friendly interest in their prosperity. Later in life he removed to London, where he died, Jan. 27, 1854. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1854, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Boltraffo, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, an Italian painter, was born at Milan in 1467, and studied under Leonardo da Vinci. He died in 1516. His works are rare, though a few still exist in Milan. Lanzi commends one in the Misericordia at Bologna, representing the Virgin between John the Baptist and St. Bastiano, with the figure of Girolamo da Cesio kneeling at the foot of the throne. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bolzano, BERNHARD, a Roman Catholic theologian and philosopher of Germany, was born at Prague, Oct. 5, 1781. In 1805 he took orders, and was appointed professor of the philosophy of religion in the High-school of Prague. His lectures, in which he endeavored so to present the system of Catholic theology as to show its complete harmony with reason, were received with eager interest by the younger generation of thinkers. His views met with great opposition, but he was defended by the archbishop Salm-Salm, and thus retained his chair until 1820, when he was compelled to resign it. Several doctrines extracted from his works were condemned at Rome, and he was suspended from his priestly functions. He devoted himself to literary work from that time until his death, at Prague, Dec. 18, 1848. His principal works are, Lehrbuch der Religionswissenschaft (Sulzbach, 1834, 4 vols.):—Wissenschaftslehre (ibid. 1837, 4 vols.):—Athanasia, oder Gründe für die Unsterblichkeit der Seele (2d ed. Sulzbach, 1838):—Was ist Philosophie? (Vienna, 1849):—Kurzfassetes Lehrbuch der Katholisch-christl. Religion (Bautzen, eod.). See Lebensbeschreibung des Dr. Bolzano (autobiography, Sulzbach, 1836); Weisshaupt, Skizzen aus dem Leben Dr. Bolzano's (Leipzig, 1850); Hoffmann, Bruchstücke zu einer künftigen Lebensbeschreibung des Dr. Bolzano (Vienna, 1850); Erdmann, *Grundriss der Gesch. d. Bolzias, JOHN MARTIN, a Lutheran minister, was born Dec. 15, 1703. He is first brought to our notice as deputy superintendent of the Orphan House in Halle. He arrived in Charleston, S. C., from Dover, England, with the first company of Salzburgers who came to America, in March, 1734. They settled in Savannah, and Mr. Bolzias was their pastor, also agent for the trustees of the colony, and a missionary under the English Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge, while he retained a relation also to the Lutheran Church in Germany. He sustained the pastoral relation to the Church in Savannah thirty-two years, when he died, Nov. 19, 1765. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 1; Evangelical Review, ix, 1.

Bombast, Count, a French fanatic, who lived in the former half of the 17th century, wrote several pre-tentious works on future and political events, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bomberg, DANIEL, a famous Dutch printer of Hebreu, was a native of Antwerp, and settled at Venice, where he established a Hebrew printing-office. He died in 1530. Bomberg published the editio princeps of the entire Babylonian Talmud (1520-23, 12 vols. fol.), the editio princeps of the Jerusalem Talmud (1522-23), the editio princeps of R. Nathan's Hebrew Concordance (1523); but what interests us most is the fact that the famous Rabbinic Bible, edited by Jacob ben-Chajim, was also published by him (1524-25). See RABBINIC BIBLES. (B. P.)

Bombino, PIETRO PAOLO, an Italian orator, theologian and historian, of Cosenza, in Calabria, was at first a Jesuit, and afterwards of the order of the Somarcho. He was born about 1575, and died in 1648, leaving, among other things, a Life of Ignatius Loyola and an abridgment of the History of Spain (1634). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bombur, in Norse mythology, was one of those dwarfs whose numerous progeny, made of earth, live in the ground.

Bomhard, GEORG CHRISTIAN AUGUST, a Lutheran minister of Germany, who died at Augsburg, July 23, 1869, is the author of, Predigten zur Feier des Jubelfestes der Augsburg. Confession (Augsburg, 1831):—Predigten an Sonn-, Fest- und Feiertagen (ibid. 1845-51; 2d ed. Leipsic, 1873):—Hundert Fragen zum Confirmanden Unterricht (5th ed. Fürth, 1853):—Beicht- und Casualreden (Augsburg, 1854). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 170. (B. P.)

Bommel, JOHANNES, a Flemish theologian of the Dominican order, a native of Bommel, in Brabant, died in December, 1477. His principal works are, Commentaires sur les Proverbes, l'Écclésiaste, et l'Apocalypse:—Traité du Sacrement de l'Eucharistie:—De Virtutibus Theologicis contra Monachos Proprietarios:—Placulus Religiosis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bompiano, IGNAZIO, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Ancona in 1612, and died as teacher of the Hebrew language at Rome, Jan. 1, 1675. He wrote, Historia Pontificatus Gregorii XIII.:—Historia Christianarum Rerum ab Ortu Christi. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. 688; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bon (or Bono), ANDREA, an Italian theologian, general of the lay monks of St. Ambrose of Milan, was born in 1575 at Verdetto Minore, in the territory of Bergamo, and died in 1618. He wrote, Breve trattato delle Indulgenze (Milan, 1610):—Esposizione al giovane Cristiano, per fuggire la Strada del Mondo (ibid. 1616). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bona Dea (good goddess), in Roman mythology, was a goddess of a mysterious nature, appearing to have a great resemblance to Ceres, and also is held one with Maja (the earth), Semele, Medea, Hecate, and Proserpina, but really was said to have been named Faunus. The solicitations of her father she withstood, and was therefore whipped with the twig of a myrtle tree. He had intercourse with her, however, after converting himself into a snake. Therefore no myrtle-tree twigs were allowed to be brought into her temple, and no man was permitted to enter it, the great festival on the first of May being celebrated by women only. The offense of Publius Clodius is familiar, who dressed himself in female apparel and went to this festival to join Pompeia, the wife of Julius Cæsar, with whom he had an intimate relation.

Bonacina, Giovanni Battista, a Milanese engraver, was born about 1620. The following are his principal plates: Guido Visconti; The Alliance of Jacob and Laban; St. Martha Kneeling before the Virgin and Infant Jesus; The Holy Family, with St. Catherine and St. John.

Bonacina, Martino, an Italian theologian and canonist, a native of Milan, died in 1631. He wrote, Theologia Moralis (Lyons, 1645):—De Legitima Electione Summi Pontificis:—De Beneficiis:—De Contractibus et Restitutione:—De Incarnatione Christi:—De Simonia:—Tractatus tres de Legibus, Peccatis et Præceptis Decalogi. All these works united were published at Lyons in 1678, and Venice in 1754. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonacursius (or Bonacursus), who lived in the 12th century, was, at one period of his life, a teacher of the sect of the Cathari, at Milan. He was converted, after which he wrote a treatise against his former errors, Vita Hæreticorum, hoc est, Descriptio Hæresium quas Cathari Profitentur, et Earum Confutatio; given by D'Achery in his Spicilegium, i, 208. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, 237.

Bonade, FRANÇOIS, a French theologian, a native of Saintes, lived at Saint John of Angely, in the early half of the 16th century. He wrote, Comment. in Canticum Canticorum, in Threnos Jeremie, in Epistolas Pauli:—De Triumphali Resurrectione Christi:—Le Psautier en Vers Élégiques. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonaëth, NIKOLAAS, a Flemish theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Brussels in 1563, and died at Valladolid, in Spain, March 9, 1610. His principal work is, Mare non Liberum, sive Demonstratio Juris Lusitanici ad Oceanum et commercium Indicum. This unpublished work is directed against the Mare Liberum of Grotius. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonagrata HANSENSIS, a German theologian of the Capuchin order, was born in Alsatia, and died at Friburg in Brigau, March 3, 1672. His principal works are, Elucidatio Quarundam Questionum, etc. (Cologne, 1669):—Libri duo Quæstionum, etc. (ibid. 1670):—De Matrimonii Hæreticorum (ibid. 1669). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonal, FRANÇOIS DE, a French prelate, was born May 9, 1734, at the chateau of Bonal, in the diocese of Agen. He became successively canon and grand-vicar of Chalons-upon-the-Saône, director-general of the Carmelites, and in 1776 was appointed bishop of Clermont. In 1789 he opposed the license of the press, showing the evil consequences to France. He was elected to the states-general by the clergy of the bailiwick of Clermont, where he distinguished himself by his attachment to the true principles of religion, and his firmness in maintaining them. Obligated to leave his country, he went to Flanders and to Holland. Arrested at Texel by the French, tried at Breda, and condemned to deportation, he went to Altona, and to various parts of Germany. He died at Munich, Sept. 5, 1800, leaving Testament Spirituel. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonald, François de, a French ascetic theologian, was a native of Mende, and a Jesuit. He died at Moulins, March 9, 1614, leaving, L'Étoile Mystique (Lyons, 1606, 12mo), which Dom Antoine Duchesne translated into Latin (Cologne, 1611):—La Divine Économie de l'Église, etc. (Lyons, 1612; and in Latin, by Milon, at Cologne):—Pratique Chrétienne (Pont à Mousson, 1622):—Le Miroir de la Sagesse Divine. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bonald, Louis Jacques Maurice de, a distinguished French prelate, was born at Milhau (Aveyron), Oct. 30, 1787, being the son of the viscount of Bonald. Having completed his classical studies, he entered the Seminary of Saint Sulpice, where he was noted for his ardent piety. Mgr. de Pressigny, archbishop of Besançon, made him his secretary when he went to Rome to conclude the concordat, according to the direction of Louis XVIII. In 1817 he became grand-vicar and archdeacon. He distinguished himself by his preaching in the Cathedral of Chartres during the Lenten season of 1822. For sixteen years he was bishop of Puy, and passed from this office to that of archbishop of Lyons, and in 1841 was made cardinal. He published an article in 1844 against the Manuel de Droit Ecclésiastique of M. Dupin, condemning it as containing doctrines destructive of the liberties of the Church. This created a great deal of discussion. M. Emanuel Arago, commissioner extraordinary in the department of the Rhone, succeeded in driving a great number of monks from their retreats, and this under a form of government established with Liberty as its motto. In a controversy occasioned by the publication of a book by the abbot Gaume, upon the necessity of reforming the classical studies, the archbishop of Lyons showed himself favorable to the proposed innovations of this ecclesiastic. Bonald died Feb. 25, 1870. He wrote a rejoinder to Renan's Vie de Jésus. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonanni, FILIPPO, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Rome, Jan. 11, 1638. He joined his order in 1654; was in 1676 custos of the archives, and in 1695 rector of the Maronite college. In 1698 he was appointed custos of the Museum Kircherianum, and died March 30, 1725. He wrote, La Gerarchia Ecclesiastica. (Rome, 1720):—Ordinum Religiosorum in Eccl. Militanti Catalogus (ibid. 1706, 1714; Germ. transl. Nuremberg, 1724):—Ordinum Equestrium et Militarium Catalogus (ibid. 1711). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 613, 699, 728; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bonar, WILLIAM, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Coshocton County, O., Nov. 4, 1814, and removed with his parents to Illinois in 1842. He was converted in 1850, united with a Methodist Church in Buras, Ill., and was a licensed preacher for a short time in that denomination, but afterwards joined a Free-will Baptist Church. The Walnut Creek Quarterly Meeting licensed him Dec. 24, 1852, and one year later he was ordained. He labored chiefly as an evangelist, and for the most of the time within the quarterly meeting from which he had received his license and ordination. His last charge was with the Mineral and Boyd churches. He died at Kewanee, Aug. 11, 1875. See Morning Star, Sept. 15, 1875. (J. C. S.)

Bonardi, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French theologian, was born at Aix near the close of the 17th century. He was doctor at the Sorbonne, and librarian of the cardinal De Noailles. He died at Paris in 1756, leaving in manuscript, Histoire des Écrivains de la Faculté de Théologie de Paris:—Bibliothèque des Écrivains de Provence:—Dictionnaire des Écrivains Anonymes et Pseudonymes. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonasoni, GIULIO, a Bolognese painter and very eminent engraver, was born about 1498, and studied painting under Lorenzo Sabbatini, and engraving under Marc' Antonio. He executed a number of pictures for the churches of Bologna, among which is a fine painting representing the Souls in Purgatory, in San Stefano. He died about 1570. The following is a list of some of his best works: The Creation of Eve; Adam and Eve; Adam Tilling the Earth and Eve Spinning; The Cup Found in Benjamin's Sack; The Miracle of the Manna, and Moses Striking the Rock. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonaventura's (Saint) HYMNS. His best known is his Recordare Sanctæ Crucis (q. v.), and Quam Despectus, quam Dejectus (q. v.). Besides he wrote, In Passione Domini (an English translation of which is found in the People's Hymnal, No. 97: "In the Lord's atoning grief;"):—Ave Virgo Gratiosa:—Imperatrix Clementia:—Tu qui Velatus Facie:—Quantum Hæmum Caritas tibi Præstavit. We have not been able to find an English translation of any of these four hymns. (B. P.)

Bonaventure OF AREZZO, an Italian theologian of the Capuchin order, died at Warsaw, Aug. 26, 1708. He wrote Riforma del Religioso, ossia Trattato per tutti gli Stati de' Religiosi che Desiderano d'Arrivare all' Altezza della Perfezione (Lucca, 1704). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonaventure OF LANGRES, a French theologian of the Capuchin order, lived near the middle of the 17th century. He wrote Bonaventura Bonaventuræ, scilicet Bonaventura et Thomas, sive Summa Theologica ex Omnibus fere S. Bonav. et Thomæ Placitis Continuata (Lyons, 1655). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonaventure OF PADUA, of the order of hermits of St. Augustine, and doctor of Paris, was made general of his order in 1377. In the following year he was created cardinal-priest of Santa Cecilia. He was assassinated at Rome by Francesco Carrara, the lord of Padua. the year of his death is, however, variously stated as 1385, 1388, 1389, 1396, and 1398. The Speculum B. Virginis Mariæ (Augsburg, 1476) is attributed to him, as are a Commentary on the Sentences, some Meditations on the Life of Christ, etc. See Dupin, ii, 533.

Bonavera, DOMENICO MARIA, a Bolognese engraver, was born about 1650, and studied under his uncle, Domenico Maria Canuti. The following are some of his etchings: St. Anne Teaching the Virgin Mary to Read; St. Theresa with the Infant Jesus; St. John Preaching, Lot and his Daughters, and The Baptism of our Saviour by St. John, one of his best.

Bonay, FRANCISCO, a Spanish landscape painter, was born at Valencia in the year 1655. He executed a landscape in the sacristy of the Carmelites at Valencia, which is his chief work. He died in the year 1730.

Bonconti, GIOVANNI PAOLO, a Bolognese artist, studied under Annibale Caracci, and afterwards went to Rome. He was employed by pope Sixtus V to conduct some works in the Vatican, and had executed some designs, conceived in the best style of art, when he died, very young.

Bond, ALVAN, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Sutton, Mass., April 27, 1793, and graduated from Brown University in 1815. His first settlement was at Sturbridge, where he remained ten years, and then accepted a professorship in the Bangor Theological Seminary, Me. In 1835 he returned to the active duties of the ministry, and became pastor of the Church at Norwich, Conn., where he continued twenty-eight years, resigning in 1864. He died July 19, 1882. Dr. Bond was a man of high scholarly and biblical attainments, and was the author of a History of the Bible. See Providence Journal, July 21, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Bond, AMMI, a Universalist minister, was born in New Hampshire about 1808. He spent his early life in Vermont, joined the Methodists at the age of sixteen, some years later embraced Universalism, and in 1832 was fellowshiped by the Green Mountain Association. The next year he was ordained, and subsequently labored at Carroll (N. Y.), Saybrook (O.), Adrian (Mich.), Monroe (O.), Beaver and Pittsburgh (Pa.), and finally, in 1843, retired to Conneaut, Pa., where he continued to reside until his decease, Jan. 8, 1866. Mr. Bond had a strong logical mind and more than ordinary pulpit ability. See Universalist Register, 1867, p. 71.

Bond, Burnet W., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, joined the Church in early life, and entered the Tennessee Conference in 1857. He served in the Confederate army as private in 1861, and died in the battle of Fort Donelson, Feb. 13, 1862. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1862, p. 373.

Bond, DANIEL, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Adams, N. Y., Sept. 1, 1826. He graduated from Hamilton College in 1848, began his theological course at Auburn Theological Seminary, and spent two years there; then went to Union Theological Seminary for one year, and graduated in 1851, remaining a resident licentiate for one year. He was ordained a minister of the Presbyterian Church at Peekskill, N. Y., in 1852; and died there, Aug. 20 of the same year. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theological Seminary, p. 61.

Bond, FRANKLIN F., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Georgia in 1828. He joined the Church in 1853, was licensed to preach in 1854, and in 1856 entered the Little Rock Conference, in which he labored until his death, Aug. 12, 1866. His life was laborious, highly acceptable, and his death triumphant. He was a noble, generous-hearted, cheerful, happy man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 86.

Bond, GRANVILLE, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Nelson County, Ky., Jan. 14, 1805. In 1827 he moved to Illinois, and on his conversion, which occurred in 1828, under the labors of Peter Cartwright, immediately engaged in the spread of religion. He was licensed to preach in 1834, and for twenty years did noble work as a local preacher—preaching ten or fifteen miles from home at night, returning at a late hour, and toiling all next day on his farm. In 1854 he entered the Illinois Conference, served one year as agent of the Illinois Female College and one year as agent of Quincy College, and then entered the pastorate. In 1868 he became superannuated, and so continued till his sudden decease, May 31, 1877. Mr. Bond was energetic, faithful, tender-hearted, and devout. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 159.

Bond, Jefferson, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in New Hanover County, N. C., April 8, 1801. He was converted in 1828, licensed to exhort in 1831, to preach in 1833, and in 1838 entered the Alabama Conference. He had no settled home, and was poorly educated, yet by diligence he became quite well-read. After spending several years as a superannuate, he died in December, 1862. Mr. Bond was modest, pure-minded, and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1863, p. 461.

Bond, John (1), LL.D., an English Puritan divine and professor of law, was a native of Dorchester, and was educated at Catherine Hall, Cambridge. He was preacher to the Long Parliament and minister of the Savoy. He became master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1646, and vice-chancellor of the university in 1658. He was also some time professor of law at Gresham College. He died in 1676. Anthony Wood characterizes him as "an impudent, canting, and blasphemous person, who, by his doctrine, did lead the people to rebellion, advanced the cause of Satan much; and, in fine, by his, and the endeavors of his brethren, brought all things to ruin, merely to advance their unsatiable and ambitious desires." This opinion was doubtless actuated by prejudice and political hatred. He published, A Door of Hope (Lond. 1641):—Holy and Loyal Activity (eod.):—and some single Sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bond, John (2), D.D., an English divine, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. Subsequently he was curate of Hanwell Paddock, a magistrate for Middlesex, and chaplain to the duke of Cambridge. He died June 17, 1825. Dr. Bond published, The Semmacerib of Modern Times; or, Buonaparte an Instrument in the Hands of Providence (1807, 8vo):—and preached the Anniversary Sermon of the Royal Humane Society (1815). See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1825, p. 263.

Bond, John (3), a Baptist minister, was born in Anson County, N. C., Feb. 23, 1787. He removed, when a child, with his father's family to Union District, S. C., and in 1806 to Wilson County, Tenn. He was converted in 1802. In 1820 he was ordained, and became pastor of the Union Church, and continued to hold the office thirty-nine years, for which service he received eleven dollars, the result of a donation party. For a term of years he was also pastor of Smith's Fork Church. For many years he was the moderator of the Concord Association, and took rank with the best ministers of his denomination in Tennessee. He died March 2, 1871. See Borum, Sketches of Tennessee Ministers, p. 92-95. (J. C. S.)

Bond, John (4), an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1799, and was converted at the age of seventeen. He entered the ministry in 1823. His last circuit was Midsummer Norton, where he died Nov. 30, 1840. His discourses were evangelical and practical, and evinced extensive reading and patient study. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1841.

Bond, Joseph, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Stokes County, N. C., July 9, 1814. Having experienced religion and received license to exhort, he removed to Missouri, and in 1844 was licensed to preach, and admitted into the St. Louis Conference. Between 1863 and 1865, on account of the ravages of the war, he sustained a superannuated relation. He was then transferred to the East Texas Conference, wherein he labored with fidelity and usefulness until Dec. 27, 1867, when he suddenly died in the midst of his labors. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1868, p. 283.

Bond, Phineas, a Baptist minister, was born at Watertown, Mass., Aug. 20, 1797. He pursued his studies under Rev. Charles Train of Framingham, and for one year was a member of Waterville College. He was ordained at Cherryfield, Me., May 25, 1825. His pastorates, after leaving this place, were in Eastport, Warren, and Fayette, Me., and in Brewster, Mass. From this last place he removed to Rumney, N. H., and then to Cornish. About 1860 he removed again to Maine, spending the last years of his life in Jay, where he died July 8, 1878. His ministerial life was a sort of pioneer work. (J. C. S.)

Bond, Richard, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Baltimore County, Md., Oct. 18, 1800. He experienced religion in 1818, and in 1824 joined the Baltimore Conference. In 1841 he was transferred to the Missouri Conference, and preached faithfully until 1845, when he was appointed agent of the American Bible Society for the state of Missouri, in which office he continued until his death, March 7, 1853. Mr. Bond was an excellent man and a good preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 440.

Bondet, DANIEL, a minister of the French Reformed Church, was pastor at Boston and Worcester, Mass., from 1686 to 1695. He was then missionary to the Indians at New Oxford from 1699 to 1695, and afterwards became pastor of the Church at New Rochelle, Westchester Co., N. Y., from 1697 to 1704, at which time he visited England and received episcopal ordination. Upon returning from England, he seceded with a portion of his congregation, and formed an Episcopal Church, or Congregation, and thus remained from 1709 to 1722, when he died. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 190.

Bondi, Andrea and Filippo, two brothers, Italian painters, who were born at Forli, studied under Carlo Cignani, and flourished in the latter part of the 17th century. They did some work for the churches and convents at Forli. The Crucifixion, in the Church of San Filippo, is considered one of their best works.

Bondi, Jonas, a Jewish theologian, was born in Dresden in 1804. He received a thorough religious and scientific education, fitting him for any rabbinical position. In his native city he was engaged in commercial pursuits, but ever continued his Talmudic researches, and kept up his acquaintance with general science. In 1856 he arrived in New York, and was elected rabbi-preacher of the congregation Anshe Chesed, worshipping in Norfolk Street. At the expiration of his term, he engaged in literary pursuits, contributing to the Occident of Philadelphia, of which he subsequently became associate editor. Shortly before his death, he assumed control of the Jewish Record, and changed its name to the Hebrew Leader, which he edited to the day of his death, March 11, 1874. (B. P.)

Bondington, WILLIAM DE, a Scottish bishop, was born of an ancient family in the shire of Berwick, and was rector of Edlestone, a prebendary of Glasgow, one of the clerici cancellarii, and afterwards archdeacon of St. Andrews, in Lothian, and a privy-councillor to king Alexander II, who advanced him in 1231 to the chancellor's office. He was elected bishop of Glasgow in 1232, and in 1233 was consecrated to that see in the cathedral church by Andrew, bishop of Argyll. Bondington was witness to a charter by king Alexander II, at Aberdeen, Oct. 9, in the eighteenth year of his reign. He was contemporary with Allan, bishop of Argyll, and finished the cathedral of Glasgow out of his own liberality. In the last year of his life he introduced into his diocese the use of the liturgical form of the Church of Sarum, or Salisbury, in England. He died Nov. 10, 1257. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 238.

Bonechi, MATTEO, an Italian painter, flourished in the early part of the 18th century, and studied under Sagrestani. He is said to have finished the excellent frescos in the castello, begun by Gabbiani. He also executed a picture of the Holy Family, which was very fine. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonelli, Benedetto, an Italian theologian and preacher of the Franciscan order, was born at Cavalese, near Trent, Dec. 26, 1704, and died near the close of the 18th century. His principal works are, Viro Esemplare di vera Penitenza Esposta (Trent, 1729):—Epitome, qua Theoria Praxique Exhibetur Sanioris Morum Doctrina (ibid. 1737):—Vindiciæ Romani Martyrologii XIII Augusti Sancti Cassiani Foro-corneliensis Martyris (Verona, 1751). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonelli, Luigi, an Italian theologian and philosopher, was born in Rome in 1797, and died in the same city, Oct. 23, 1840. He wrote, a Historical Examination of the Principal Systems of Philosophy (Rome, 1829):—Examination of Deism (ibid. 1830):—Institutiones Logicæ et Metaphysicæ (ibid. 1833):—History of German Philosophy from Leibnitz to Hegel (ibid. 1837). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonerba, Raffaele, an Italian theologian of the Augustinian order, was born about 1600 at San Filippo di Argino, in Sicily, and died April 5, 1681. He wrote, Totius Philosophiæ Naturalis Disputationes per Quatuor Tractatus Distributæ (Palermo, 1671):—Vitridarium in Plures Partes Conditum (ibid. 1671, 1674):—Sacri Problemæ sopra gli Evangelii di Quaresima Resoluti (pt. i, ibid. 1661, 1667; pt. ii, ibid. 1667). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonesi, Giovanni Girolamo, a Bolognese painter, was born in 1653, and studied under Gio. Viani. He painted pictures for the churches and public edifices of Bologna. His best works are St. Francis of Sales Kneeling before the Virgin, in San Marino; St. Thomas of Villanova giving Alms to the Poor, in San Biagio; and The Virgin and Infant, with Mary Magdalene and St. Ugo, at the Certosa. He died in 1725. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bonet (or Bont), Saint. See BONITUS, Saint.

Bonet, Nicholas (surnamed the Profitable Doctor), was, according to different writers, a Spaniard, a Sicilian, or a Frenchman. He was a monk of the order of St. Francis, legate of the holy see in Tartary, bishop of Malta in 1342, and died in 1360. He wrote, Postilla in Genesim (Venice, 1505):—Comment. super Quatuor Libros Sententiarum Petri Lombardi:—Interpretationes in Præcipuos Libros Aristotelis, etc. Bonet made much stir in the world by advancing in one of his works the preposterous notion that the words of our blessed Saviour on the cross to his mother, "Woman, behold thy son!" had the effect of producing an actual transubstantiation; so that from that moment St. John became really the son of the blessed Virgin. Inconceivable as it may appear, this doctrine found many followers, and was the origin of a long dispute. See Biog. Universelle, v. 99; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonet, Paul, a French theologian of the order of Carmelites, lived at the commencement of the 15th century. His principal work is, Vitridarium Mundi, sive de Ortu, Frugibus et Floribus Carmelitarum, libri iii. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonfanti, Antonio (called Il Torricella), an Italian painter who flourished in the first part of the 17th century, was a native of Ferrara, and probably a pupil of Guido. There are two large Scripture pictures by him in the Church of San Francesco at Ferrara.

Bonfiglio, Benedetto, an Italian painter, was born at Perugia in 1420, and is described as one of the best artists of his time. In the Church of San Domenico, at Perugia, is a picture by this artist of the Adoration of the Magi; also a fine picture of the Annunciation. He was living in 1496. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bonfioli, Antonio, an Italian theologian, a native of Bologna, was appointed bishop of Carinola in 1622. He died Nov. 1, 1624, leaving De Vera Sacerdotis Perfectione (Bologna, 1609). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonfrère, Jacques, a Flemish scholar, was born in 1573 at Tinant. He became a Jesuit in 1592; was professor of philosophy, theology, and Hebrew at Douay; and died May 9, 1643, at Tournay. He wrote, Pentateuchus Moysis Commentario Illustr. (Antwerp, 1625):—Josue, Judices et Ruth Commentario Illustrati, Accessit his Onomasticon Scripturæ Sacræ (Paris, 1631):—Commentarius in Libr. Regum et Paralipom. (1643). He also wrote notes to the Onomasticon Urbium et Locorum S. Scripturæ seu Liber de Locis Hebr. Græce Primum ab Eusebio, deinde Latine Scriptus ab Hieronymo; which was published at Amsterdam in 1707. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 149, 197, 202, 204; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 126; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bongeor, Agnes, an English martyr, was one of ten who suffered martyrdom at Colchester, for her faithful adherence to the cause of Christ. She was burned at the stake in 1557. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 420.

Bongiovanni (or Bonjohannes), Antonio, a learned Italian writer, was born at Perrarolo, near Verona, about 1712. He studied at Padua. Together with Antonio Maria Zanetti, he catalogued the Greek, Latin, and Italian MSS. in the library of St. Mark at Venice (Venice, 1740, fol.). He also translated from the Greek into Latin the works of the monk Leontius, of Jerusalem, entitled Quædam ad Historiam Ecclesiast. Spectantia. The time of his death is unknown. See Biog. Universelle, v, 104; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bongomili. See BOGOMILES.

Bonham, Robert, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was probably a native of Virginia. He began to travel in the ministry in 1794, and closed his life in June, 1800. Mr. Bonham was a young man of upright walk, gracious heart, energy and devotedness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1800, p. 91.

Bonhomo, Giacomo Francesco, a Sardinian prelate, was born at Vercelli near the close of the 15th century. He was the friend of St. Carlo Borromeo, who sent him in 1569 to obtain of the pope a confirmation of the Council of Milan. He became bishop in his native country in 1522. Gregory XIII appointed him as his nuncio to Switzerland and Cologne. He was the first permanent nuncio in Germany, and he there published the decrees of the Council of Trent. He died in 1587, leaving Reformationis Ecclesiasticæ Decreta Generalia (1585); a work often eulogized by pope Benedict XIV. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonichon, François, a French priest of the Oratory, curate of St. Michael, at Angers, died in 1662, leaving Pompa Episcopalis (Angers, 1650, fol.); a rare work, relating to the ceremonies anciently observed at the entry of bishops into their dioceses:—L'Autorité Episcopale Défendue contre les Nouvelles Entreprises de Quelques Religieux Médiants (ibid. 1658, 4to). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Boniface, a noted English prelate, was the son of Thomas, count of Savoy, and uncle to Eleanor, consort of Henry III of England. To this fortunate circumstance Boniface was indebted for his advancement, at an early age, to the primacy of All England. While he was yet a sub-deacon, he was, through the influence of Gregory IX, elected to the see of Bellay, though still a youth. The fact that he was so youthful caused some disturbance. In 1242 he visited England before his consecration, that, as soon as he had been invested with the temporalities, he might regulate his worldly affairs. The see was involved in an immense debt. He immediately enforced a rigid economy in every department in order to bring about a reform. He abolished sinecures, and dismissed all the officers of the archbishop's court and household who did not earn their living by their work. He stood in the relation of abbot to the convent of Christ Church, and here he interfered in everything. In short, the poverty of the see was the wealth of Boniface. In addition to his anger with the court, for the manner in which the property of the archbishopric was dealt with during the sequestration, he was too proud and independent to succumb to the king. He took part, therefore, with the suffragans against king Henry, when the attempt was made to force Robert Passelew into the see of Chichester in 1244. Boniface insisted upon the right of the metropolitan to demand a contribution from the whole province, to liquidate the debt upon the metropolitan Church. Of what became of the surplus above the sum required, the king and the pope might possibly know. In 1247 he went to Lyons, and the military duties and political intrigues of the archbishop of Canterbury prevented his return to England for four years. People became indignant to learn that the income of Canterbury should be expended abroad. Accordingly, four years after his consecration, he revisited England, and on All-saints-day, 1249, he was enthroned at Canterbury with great pomp and ceremony, notwithstanding his wickedness. Queen Eleanor accompanied the king on this occasion to Canterbury, and was the guest of her uncle. Boniface had endeavored, when yet on the Continent, to compel his clergy to pay procurations and visitation dues, although no visitation had been held by him in person. This unheard-of exaction his suffragans resisted. He continued these unjust requirements until the people became so disgusted and aggravated that a mob went in force and rushed upon the archbishop, and dragged and dashed him from one side of the street to the other, regardless of his cries for assistance. They threatened to tear him limb from limb, but Boniface had entered his barge, and had gone up the river to Lambeth. Here he was safe from all but the maledictions which were shouted at him from beneath the walls. The people called for vengeance upon one who, instead of watching for souls, was a robber of churches. It was added, as a consummation of his criminality, that he was even a married man. When the mob dispersed, he had an interview with the king, and obtained his permission to leave England. Retiring to France, he entered Lyons not now in military array, but in all the pomp and magnificence which he thought to be seemly in the patriarch of the West. He established his court and spent his money freely. He exhibited letters in his favor from the king of England, and these, accompanied with the usual substantial recommendations, conciliated the curia Romana. He admitted that he had been hasty; in short, the conduct of Boniface was wise, judicious, and conciliatory. In 1252 Boniface returned to England with good intentions, but the public could only judge of him by his past conduct, and his reception was anything but encouraging. It is sad to add that scarcely any one believed him to be sincere. He was still in England in 1260, and also in 1262. Feb. 15 of the last year mentioned he officiated at Southwark, in the consecration of Henry Wingham to the see of London. Before May, 1263, he had left the country. He returned some years after, but only to continue his troubles. He died at his castle of St. Helen's, June 18, 1270. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, iii, 228 sq.

Boniface, Saint, OF LAUSANNE, was a Flemish ecclesiastic of the 18th century, the son of a goldsmith at Cantersteen. He was trained in the Cistercian monastery of Chambre, near Brussels; he afterwards studied, and in 1258 became lecturer on, theology in the University of Paris. After a while his pupils fell off, and he went to Cologne, where he taught with success two years. He was then appointed bishop of Lausanne, where he labored to enforce a reformation on the clergy, who resisted, and some, enraged, armed themselves and entered the church where he was celebrating mass, with intent to kill him; but a Franciscan friar, seeing his peril, ran through the streets of Lausanne calling for help, and the people, crowding into the cathedral, rescued him. Boniface, in despair, resigned his charge, and returned to Chambre, where he died in 1265, and was buried in the choir. A small chapel has recently been erected at Chambre by a Recollet father, Francis Vancutzen, to his honor. His festival is solemnized in Brabant in virtue of a bull of Clement XI in 1702. On June 25, 1600, his relics were exhumed by Robert Van Ostebaere, abbot of Cambron. This reliquary was translated to the Church of Notre Dame de la Chapelle, Brussels, in 1796, whence a portion was transported, May 9, 1852, to the Church of Ixelles, of which St. Boniface is patron. He is commemorated by Molanus in his additions to the martyrology of Usuardus, and is not extensively known. His life was written by an anonymous monk of the Cistercian order, probably very little posterior to the death of St. Boniface. See Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 343 (sub Feb. 19, Boniface's festival).

Bonifacio OF VERONA, an Italian painter, flourished in the finest æra of Venetian art, and was born in 1491. He was the scholar of the elder Palma, and studied the works of Titian. There are some very large works by him in the State Palace at Venice. There are also a number of his works in the churches: Christ Surrounded by his Apostles; Michael Driving the Evil Spirits from Heaven; The Baptism of Christ; The Sacrifice of Abraham. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonifacio (or Bonifazio), FRANCESCO, a reputable Italian historical painter of Viterbo, was born in 1637, and studied under P. da Cortona. He painted several pictures for the public edifices of that city, among which is The Adulteress before Christ, in the Palazzo Braschi. See Spooner, Biographical History of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Bonifacius is the name of several Christian saints and martyrs, besides those specially enumerated at length: (1) Deacon, martyr in Africa under Hunneric; commemorated Aug. 17 (Mart. Rom. Vet.). (2) "Natale Bonifacii episcopi," Sept. 4 (Mart. Bedæ). (3) Confessor in Africa; commemorated Dec. 8 (Mart. Hieron.); Dec. 6 (Mart. Adonis).

Bonifacius, Saint and Martyr, was the steward of a certain rich and beautiful woman of Rome, named Aglaë, with whom he for many years carried on a criminal commerce, at the same time indulging in drunkenness and other vices. Aglaë at length, touched with remorse, requested him to repair to the East, where many martyrs about that time had yielded their lives for the sake of Jesus Christ, and bring back with him some of the relics of these holy men, that she might build over them an oratory and honor them. This was about the year 307 or 309 (290, according to Ruinart), when the Western Church enjoyed peace; but in the East the persecution begun by Diocletian, and carried on by Galerius Maximianus and Maximinus Daia, was raging. Arrived at Tarsus, in Cilicia, Bonifacius went to the place of torture, where more than twenty martyrs were undergoing torment. He approached and embraced them, and implored them to pray for him. Simplicius, the judge, enraged at this, and at his boldly declaring himself to be a believer, instantly ordered that sharp-pointed reeds should be thrust under his nails and melted lead poured into his mouth. The next day, after having been thrown into a caldron of boiling pitch, he was beheaded. His body was purchased by his companions and carried back to Rome, where a chapel was built by the penitent Aglaï over his remains, near which she was buried. Butler says their bodies were found in 1603. His life is given in the Acta Sanctorum (May, iii, 281-283). In the Greek Church he is commemorated Dec. 19 (Cal. Byzant.). He was formerly commemorated in the Roman Church on June 5, the supposed day of his burial at Rome (Mart. Rom. Vel.); but in more recent martyrologies this Bonifacius is commemorated on May 14; the supposed day of his death. See Butler, May 14; Baillet, May 14, Ruinart, Acta Sanctorum, p. 284.

Bonifacius MOGUNTINENSIS. See BONIFACE OF MENTZ.

Bonifacius QUERETINIUS (called also Albanus Kir-tinus) has his history inextricably entangled with fable. According to the legend, he was the pope of that name, of Jewish stock, descended from a sister of St. Peter and St. Andrew, and born at Bethsaida. He was ordained priest by John, patriarch of Jerusalem, in his thirty-sixth year, and four years after went to Rome, where he occupied the chair more than seven years. With a large retinue he entered Pictland, and founded churches at Invergowie and Restnoth, Forfarshire. He baptized king Nectan and court, and, after evangelizing and building churches among the South Picts, retired to Ross-shire, and built a church at Rosemarkie, dedicating it to St. Peter. Here he died at the age of eighty and upwards. A closer determination appears to be beyond our reach than to say that he was an Italian who, in the beginning of the 7th century, came to Scotland to induce the Scottish Church to conform with Roman customs. For list of authorities see Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Bonifacius (Saint), OF ROSS, Scotland. See BONIFACIUS QUERETINIUS.

Bonifas (Lacondamine), Ernest, a French Protestant theologian, was born Oct. 21, 1826. Having prepared himself for the ministry in his native country, he spent two years in Germany, and after his return was ordained, in 1854, at Nérac, and took charge of the parish at Salies-du-Béarn. In 1856 he was elected to the Hebrew professorship at Montauban, made vacant by the death of his father, and in his inaugural address combated rationalistic criticism and exclusive dogmatism. He died Dec. 19, 1859. Besides his Discours d'Installation, he published a volume of Homélies et Sermons. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bonifas, François, a French theologian, brother of Ernest, was born at Grenoble, Oct. 19, 1837. Being very gifted, he obtained, at the age of twenty-nine, the degree of doctor of liberal arts and theology. In 1866 he was appointed to the chair of Church history at Montauban, made vacant by the retirement of the dean of the faculty, M. Montet. He died Dec. 15, 1878, having published, Étude sur la Théodicée de Leibnitz:—Doctrine de la Rédemption dans Schleiermacher:—Essai sur l'Unité de l'Enseignement Apostolique:—Histoire des Protestants de France depuis 1861. A Histoire des Dogmes was published after his death from his notes and those of one of his pupils, by M. Bois, and also Récueil de Mélanges Littéraires et Théologiques, by M. D. Benoit. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bonisolì (or Bonizoli), AGOSTINO, an Italian painter, was born at Cremona in 1633, and studied under Battista Tortirolì, and afterwards for some time under M. A. Bonisolì. His works were principally easel pictures of sacred subjects. The only large picture by him is the Dispute between St. Antonio and the Tyrant Ezzelino, in the Conventuali at Cremona. He died in 1700. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonitus (or Bonus), Saint (commonly St. Bonet), was born in France about 624. He became referendary or chancellor to Sigebertus III, king of Austrasia. Theodorich III in 680 made him governor of Marseilles, and nine years afterwards, on the death of his brother, St. Avitus, bishop of Clermont, he was elevated to that see. After ten years, scruples having insinuated themselves into his mind whether or not his election had been perfectly canonical, he resigned his see, and, after living for four years a penitential life in the abbey of Manlieu, died at Lyons, Jan. 15, 710, being eighty-six years of age. See Butler, Jan. 15; Baillet, Jan. 15; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonitz, KARL FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 2, 1775, at Zwönitz, and died as doctor of theology and superintendent at Langensalza, Aug. 13, 1835. He wrote, Num Ratio Humana Suavi et Indole Morali ad Deum Credendum Recte Cogi Dicitur (Leipsic, 1797):—Plurimum de Loco Pauli Gal. iii 20 Sententia Examinata (ibid. 1800):—Spicilegium Observ. ad Gal. iii 20 (ibid. 1802). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 262, 414; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 170. (B. P.)

Bonivard (or Bonnivard), FRANÇOIS DE, a Swiss ecclesiastic and politician, was born about 1493 at Seyssel-on-the-Rhone. He belonged to a family which enjoyed many privileges under the government of Savoy. He was educated at Turin, and became prior of St. Victor, just outside the walls of Geneva, in 1510. But duke Charles of Savoy succeeded in depriving Bonivard of all his paternal possessions, with the exception of the priory of St. Victor; the consequence was that Bonivard sided with the Geneva patriots, who at that time defended their rights and liberties against the encroachments of the house of Savoy. Bonivard thought it advisable to leave Geneva in 1519, at the approach of the duke. On the way, two men of Savoy offered themselves to Bonivard as companions, and succeeded in persuading Bonivard to give up his priory, and finally delivered him into the hands of the duke, who imprisoned him for twenty months. In 1527 he again took possession of his priory, and participated in the strife against the duke. He was taken prisoner by the duke in 1530, and was retained in prison at the famous Castle of Chillon until 1536, when the castle was taken and Bonivard set free. On his return to Geneva, now fully emancipated, he was made a member of the Council of Two Hundred, and endowed with a pension. He died at Geneva in 1570. Bonivard was a voluminous writer. His writings are given by Senebier, Histoire Littéraire de Genève, i, 137-139. Of those published we mention, La Chronique de Genève (Geneva, 1831, 4 vols.):—Advis et Devis de la Source de l'Idolâtrie et Tyrannie Papale (Chaparon and Revillad, ibid. 1856):—Advis et Devis des Langues, written in 1563 (ibid. and Paris, 1849). See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Herzog, Real-Encyklop. s. v.; Encyclop. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bonizon, bishop of Sutri and Placenza, who died July 14, 1089, was the author of several theological works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonjour, the brothers, founders of a new sect of flagellants, lived in the latter half of the 18th century. These two brothers, originating from Pont d'Ain, in Bresse, entered upon the ecclesiastical profession. The elder was first made rector at Forez, and brought upon himself the animadversion of his parishioners and the remonstrance of his bishop for preaching a heterodox doctrine. This was in 1775, and he changed his parish for that of Fareins, where his brother was made vicar. Eight years after, the rector publicly acknowledged himself unworthy of his position, resigned, and became master of a school. For certain acts deemed unlawful, and which could not be countenanced by the authorities, the elder brother was sent into exile and the other confined at the convent of Toulav. After the revolution of 1789, the rector Bonjour returned, and, in the absence of the proper rector, stirred up a great enthusiasm by his preaching, and raised a great tumult. At the epoch of the consulate the two brothers were banished to Lausanne, where they died. The sect which they had established did not survive them. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonjour (or Bonjours), GUILLAUME, a French Augustinian monk, was born at Toulouse in 1641. He was called to Rome in 1695 by cardinal Nari, and honored with the esteem of pope Clement XI, who confided to him several important functions, especially the commission for reforming the Gregorian Calendar. He was deeply versed in the Oriental languages, and particularly in the Coptic. He died in China in 1714, where his zeal for the propagation of the Christian religion had led him. He wrote, Dissertatio de Nomine Patriarchæ Josephi a Pharaone Imposito (Rome, 1696):—Ezerctatio in Monumenta Coptica sen Egyptiaca Bibliothecæ Vaticanæ (ibid. 1699):—Selectæ in Sac. Script. Dissertationes, apud Montem-Faliscum (1705):—Calendarium Romanum Chronologorum Causa Constructum (ibid. 1701):—De Computo Ecclesiastico, apud Montem-Faliscum (1702):—Explication de la Légende d'une Pierre Gravée Égyptienne (inserted in the Fragments of the Gospel of St. John, p. 391–392, published by P. Georgi):—Observations sur un Miroir Chinois trouve en Sibirie (published with the letters of Cuper, De Epochis Ægypticis, a dissertation mentioned by Grævius). Among the MSS. left by Bonjour we notice a Coptic Grammar and Lexicon. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnaire, LOUIS DE, a French theologian, was born at Ramerup-sur-Aube about 1680, and died in Paris, June 28, 1752. He was priest of the Oratorio, and published, Parallèle de la Morale des Jésuites et de celle des Pâiens (Troyes, 1726); the publication of this book brought the printer Lefebvre to the Bastille:—Examen Critique Physique et Théologique des Convulsions (1733):—in collaboration with P. Jarl, La Religion Chrétienne Méditée dans le Vêritable Esprit de ses Muzimes (1745, 1763):—a translation of the Imitation de Jésus Christ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnal, FRANÇOIS DE, a French prelate, was born in 1734 at the chateau of Bonnal, in Agénois. He embraced the ecclesiastical profession, and in 1758 assisted as deputy of the second order at the general assembly of the clergy. He was appointed in 1758 bishop of Clermont, and elected in 1789 deputy of the bailiwick of that city to the states-general. As president of the ecclesiastical committee, he protested against the suppression of the regular clergy, and later he demanded, against the voice of the majority, that the Catholic religion should be proclaimed the national religion. On Jan. 1 he, with Boisgelin, demanded the convocation of a Gallican council. After having been one of the signers of the protestation of Sept. 12, 1791, he distinguished himself among his opponents by the zeal with which he encouraged the resistance of the clergy. For this he was obliged to retire to Holland. He was there taken by the victorious armies in 1795, arrested, and transported to Altona. He died at Munich in 1800. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnar, JAMES, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Maryland, was born in England. He graduated from Oxford University, came to America, and engaged in teaching for several years in Philadelphia. In 1857 he resided in New York city, whence he removed the following year to Ashtabula, O., as rector of St. Peter's Church, where he remained until 1872, when he became rector of All-Hallow's Parish, Anne Arundel County, Md., where he remained until the close of his life. He died in July, 1880. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1881, p. 172.

Bonnard, JEAN LOUIS, a French priest, missionary, and martyr, was born at St. Christopher, in Jarret, March 1, 1824. At the age of ten years his calling to the priestly office was decided on, and he was sent to a large seminary at Lyons, from there to that of foreign missions at Paris, where he accomplished his course in theology. Having been ordained priest he embarked for the Western missions of Ton-King, and arrived at Paques in 1850, at the time when cholera was committing such fearful ravages. He devoted himself diligently to the study of the Annamite language, and in 1851 was charged with the two parishes of Ki-Bong and Ki-Tring. He went to Boixayen, was arrested, thrown into prison, and sentenced to death, which sentence was executed, April 30, 1852, in China. It was ordered that his body should be thrown into the sea, at a spot unknown to Christians; but one followed and saw where it was deposited, and it was recovered and conveyed to the Foreign Mission College, where it was disposed of with due honor. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnart, ROBERT and NICOLAS, two brothers, Parisian engravers, were born about 1646, and studied under F. Vandermeulen. The following is one of their religious prints: The Virgin with the Infant Jesus and St. John, half-length figures. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnaud, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born in America in 1740. He was taken to France, completed his studies at the college of Flèche, and entered the Jesuit order. He was not ordained priest until after the suppression of this order. From 1777 to 1787 he published several works. A discourse, Sur le Projet d'Accorder l'État Civil aux Protestants, which he published, gained for him the protection of M. de Marbeuf, who procured for him the priories of Sermaise and of Harnicourt. He was also appointed grand-vicar of Lyons. He appears to have been the author of most of the bills and writings published by his archbishop, which appealed to Paris to follow his counsels. The energy of the works of Bonnaud drew upon him the animosity of the revolutionists, who imprisoned him at the convent of Cannes, where he was massacred, Sept. 2, 1792. He wrote, Le Tartuffe Epistolaire Démasqué, under the pseudonym of Kokerbourn (Liege, 1777):—Discours à Lire au Conseil en Présence du Roi, 1787 (1791):—Le Vrai Système de la Constitution du Clergé (eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnechose, François Paul Emile de, a French historian, was born Aug. 18, 1801, at Leyer-dorp, in Holland, and died Feb. 15, 1875, at Paris. For some time he served in the French army, and in 1829 he was appointed librarian of the palace at St. Cloud. In 1833 he published his Éloge de Bailly, for which he received the prize of the French Academy. In 1836 he published, in 2 vols., Christophe Sanval, ou la Société sous la Restauration, which was but the beginning of other historical works, that made his name known throughout France. His Histoire de France (2 vols.) went through fourteen editions during the lifetime of its author, and his Histoire d'Angleterre received the prize of the Academy. But his main work was Les Réformateurs avant la Réforme (2 vols. 1845), which is highly praised. See Waddington, in the Bulletin du Protestantisme Français, xxiv, 144; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bonnechose, Henri Marie Gaston de, a French prelate, was born in Paris, May 30, 1800. Being appointed general advocate at the royal court of Besançon, he became intimate with Rohan, archbishop of that city, and about 1830 he went to Strasburg in order to consult Bautain concerning his vocation. Having decided this question, he entered the order, and was shortly after appointed professor of sacred eloquence at the house of advanced studies founded by Rohan at Besançon. He espoused the philosophical opinions of Batain, concerning which both were obliged to retract. Afterwards he was placed at the head of the community of St. Louis des Français at Rome, and next succeeded to the episcopal see of Carcassonne by the royal ordinance of Nov. 18, 1847. Then passing to the presidency of the republic at Narbonne in Oct. 1852, Mgr. de Bonnechose delivered a discourse in the Church of St. Just. He was translated to the see of Evreux in 1854, made archbishop of Rouen in 1858, and cardinal in 1863. He has been an ardent supporter of the pope's temporal power, and of the independence of the Church. His fame is extensive as a pulpit orator. He was one of the favorite pupils of M. Batain, and wrote an introduction to the Philosophie du Christianisme, a work which in epistolary form contained responses to various philosophical and religious questions. The date of his death we have been unable to ascertain. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnefoi, Benoît, a French Jesuit, born in Auvergne in 1599, wrote, Historia Vitæ et Oppugnatae Hæresis in Galliâ (Toulouse, 2 vols. 4to):—Serius seu Historia Episcoporum Magalonsium (ibid. 1652 and 1663, fol.):—Epitome Rerum Gestarum in Inferiore Occidentia pro Religione ab 1610 ad 1657 (Montpellier, 1657, 8vo), etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnefons, Amable, a French theologian, was born at Riom, in Auvergne, in 1600. He entered the Jesuit order at the age of eighteen, and having taught classics for four years, he consecrated the remainder of his life to the instruction of domestics and indigent youth. He died at Paris, March 19, 1653. He wrote a great number of spiritual works, of which the principal ones are, Le Chrétien Charitable (Paris, 1637, 1639):—Abrégé de la Doctrine Chrétienne, etc. (ibid. 1640, 1653):—Le Dévot Pavoisien (2d ed. ibid. 1643):—Les Douze Portes de la Bienheureuse Éternité (ibid. 1644, 1646). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnefons, Élie Benoît, a learned French Benedictine of the Congregation of Saint-Maur, was born at Mauriac in 1622, and died at St. Vaudrille in 1702, leaving a few historical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnefoy, François Lambert de, a French theologian, was born in the diocese of Vaison in 1740, and died Jan. 14, 1830, leaving several sermons and practical religious works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnell, John M., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was a native of Bucks County, Pa. He was reared principally in the city of Philadelphia; graduated from Jefferson College at the age of eighteen, and moved to Georgia, where, in connection with the South Georgia Conference, he continued to labor as preacher of the Gospel, and teacher, principally of young ladies, until his death, Sept. 30, 1871. Mr. Bonnell possessed a finely cultured intellect, a versatile talent, and a pure, gentle spirit. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1871, p. 553.

Bonnell, William Wilson, a German Reformed minister, was called to the ministry in 1842, by the German Reformed Church at Chambersburg, Pa., where he labored until 1844. He resigned this charge and joined the Presbyterian Church, in which he was brought up. He died in 1850. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 483.

Bonner, a German Reformed minister, prosecuted his studies under the auspices of Principal Stoy of Holland. He was aided by the Holland fund; but the sum was not sufficient to allow him to finish his work. He was recommended to the English dispensers of their bounty, so that he might be able to attain "his desired goal." These facts we learn from a letter written to Holland in the year 1757. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 383.

Bonner, Richard, a minister in connection with the British Conference, was a native of Flintshire, Wales. He was converted under the powerful preaching of the early Welsh missionaries of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and entered the ministry in 1813. He sought rest in 1854, and settled at Carnarvon, where the remainder of his life was spent, and where he died, July 28, 1867, in the eightieth year of his age. Mr. Bonner's mental powers were good, his taste correct, his temperament vivacious, his voice agreeable, and he was one of the most attractive and efficient of the Welsh ministers. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 31.

Bonnet, Antoine, a French theologian, was born at Limoges, Nov. 7, 1634. He entered the Jesuit order, and, notwithstanding his frequent voyages and his important occupation, he published a number of works. He died at Lunel, in Languedoc, May 22, 1700. Some of his works are as follows: Pax Ludovici XIV (Toulouse, 1660):—Du Culte Religieux (ibid. 1688):—the same work translated into Latin by the author (ibid. 1691). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnet, Gasp., a celebrated Dutch theologian, was born in 1723, and died at Utrecht, Feb. 3, 1805. He replied to Voltaire's Traité sur la Tolérance, and wrote a commentary on Ecclesiastes, and another on the Epistle to the Hebrews. He also published four collections of sermons.

Bonnet, Honoré. See BONNOR.

Bonnet, Simon, a French theologian, was born at Puy-en-Velay. He became, in 1671, a Benedictine of the Congregation of Saint-Maur, and died at Rouen, in 1705, at the age of fifty-three years. He taught philosophy and theology for eleven years, and finally became prior of St. Germer de Flée, where he conceived, in 1696, the project of a work to be called Biblia Mazima Patrum, a compendium of all the best things that the fathers have written on Holy Scripture. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonneval, Ruffo de, a French theologian, brother of Sixte Louis Constant, succeeded M. de Beauvais in the episcopal see of Senez, and, like his brother, showed himself very hostile to the principles of the revolution. He left France and sojourned for a long time at Viterbo, when the pope bestowed on him a pension. At the period of the first Concordat he resigned the bishopric of Senez, refused the archbishopric of Arles, returned to France in 1814, and died in 1830. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonney, Samuel W., a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Canaan, Conn., March 8, 1815. He was educated at the University of New York city, and studied theology in Lane Seminary, Ohio. He was ordained by the Cincinnati Presbytery April 6, 1836. On leaving the seminary he was sent as a missionary to China, where he labored earnestly till his death, in Canton, July 27, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 211.

Bonnivard. See BONIVARD.

Bonnor (or Bonnet), Honoré, a French theologian, lived in the 14th century. He composed, by the order of king Charles V, and for the instruction of the Dauphin, a book entitled, L'Arbre des Batailles (Lyons, 1481; Paris, 1493). This work, of which five manuscripts are found at the Imperial Library, treats of the evils of the Church, duels, the destruction of the four great monarchies, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonnsall, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at Launceston, Cornwall, Sept. 20, 1788, of Episcopalian parents. He joined the Independent Church, received his ministerial education at the Western Academy, and in 1813 was ordained over the Church at St. Columb, Cornwall. In 1818 he removed to Ottery St. Mary, Devon, where he labored until his resignation in 1859, when he retired to Bridgewater, where he died, Oct. 12, 1866. Mr. Bonnussall's endowments were of a solid order. His preaching was varied in its character. He was a thorough workman. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1867, p. 271.

Bonnus, HERMANN, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1504 at Quackenbrück, in the principality of Osnabrück. He studied at first in Münster, under the cathedral provost, Rudolph von Lange. From 1521 to 1525 he attended the lectures of Luther and Melancthon, and in 1525 he accepted a position at Griefswalde, where he labored for the propagation of the pure Gospel. In 1530 he accepted a call to Lübeck as rector of the newly founded school of St. Mary, and in 1531 he was appointed superintendent there. Amid many difficulties he succeeded in introducing a fixed evangelical order for the city of Lübeck, and his catechism, which was first published in 1539, was often republished. In 1543 he was called to his native country to labor in behalf of the Reformation. Having completed his work there, he returned towards the end of the same year to Lübeck. In 1545 he published the Lübeck hymn-book, entitled Enchiridion geistlike lede unde Psalmen uppet nye gebetert von M. Luther. He died Feb. 12, 1548. His motto was, "Spes mea unica Christus." After his death were published, Enarrationes Succinctæ et Eruditæ Locorum Insignium Præsertim Paulinæ et Aliorum Apostolorum Epistolis Sumptorum (Basle, 1571):—Institutiones de Modo et Ratione Orandi (ibid. 1574). Bono, GIAMBATTISTA AGOSTINO, an Italian theologian and jurist, was born at Verzuolo, near Saluces, in 1738. He pursued his studies at Turin, where he obtained in 1767 the chair of canonical institution, and in 1768 that of canonical law. From this time he became known by different works in which he defined the boundary between the temporal and spiritual power. In 1792 Savoy and the county of Nice having been occupied by the French army, the abbot Bono and some other professors declared themselves favorable to the revolution. The University of Turin was closed, and Bono was obliged to resign himself to a life of retirement. He took advantage of this opportunity to write the preface of the edition of a work by Leibnitz, published at Geneva in 1797. After the occupation of Piedmont by the French in 1798 he was made president of the provisory government. He died March, 1799. He wrote, De Potestate Ecclesiæ tum Principes seu de Jurisdictione (about 1767):—De Potestate Principis circa Matrimonium (1788):—De Criminibus Ecclesiasticis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonoc, a Scotch saint. In the Register of the Great Seal, b. 36, No. 72 (MS. General Register House, Edinburgh), there is a confirmation by king James VI of Scotland of a charter granted "per dominum Thomam Wemis capellani capellanie Sancti Bonach situate et fundate intra villam de Lucheria." In the original charter the saint is called Bonoc, "capellanus capelle Sancti Bonoci," and is probably St. Bonifandus, the bishop who accompanied St. Boniface to Pictland. His relics were at Leuchars, Fifeshire.

Bonomi, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, an Italian prelate, was born at Cremona, Oct. 6, 1536. He studied at Bologna and Pavia, and afterwards went to Rome, where he was patronized by cardinal Carlo Borromeo, who resigned the abbey of Nonantula in his favor. Bonomi was appointed bishop of Vercelli in 1572, and was consecrated at Milan by Borromeo. Popes Gregory XIII and Sixtus V employed him as legate, and in 1581 he was sent to Germany to settle the affair of the archbishopric of Cologne. He deposed the archbishop elector, Gerard Truchses, of Waldpurg, and installed in his place Ernest, bishop of Liege. He was afterwards legate in Flanders, and died at Liege, Feb. 26, 1587. Cardinal Borromeo had bequeathed his MSS. to Bonomi, who wrote the life of his patron, Vita et Obitus Caroli Borromei (Cologne, 1587). He also composed a poem on the same subject, Borromæidos libri iv (Milan, 1589); another on the great victory gained by Don Juan of Austria over the Turkish fleet off Lepanto in 1571, Eucharistion ob Victoriam ad Echinadas Partam (Milan, 1589). Other of his poems are among the Carmina Illustrum Poetarum Italorum. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bonone, Bartolomeo, an Italian painter, was born at Pavia, where he flourished in the first part of the 16th century. In the Church of San Francesco, at Pavia, is an altar piece of the titular saint, dated 1507.

Bonone, Carlo, a distinguished Italian painter, was born at Ferrara in 1569, and studied under G. Mazzuoli. He afterwards spent some time at Bologna, after which he went to Rome, and then to Venice. He died in 1631. His smaller works exhibit so much of the style of Caracci, that he was styled the Caracci of Ferrara. His best work is the Fest of Herod, in the Church of St. Benedetto, and next in value is his Miracle at Cana, in the refectory of the Certosini at Ferrara. Many other works of this painter are to be found in the public edifices of Ferrara.

Bonone, Lionello, an Italian painter, the nephew and scholar of Carlo, flourished about the year 1649. His best works are the Visitation, and the Holy Family in the chapel of the hospital of St. Maria Novella.

Bonôsa, Saint, sister of Zosima, martyr in Porto under Severus, is commemorated July 15 in the Roman martyrologies.

Bonosians were a Christian sect which arose towards the end of the 4th century, under the leadership of Bonosus (q. v.), bishop of Sardica.

Bonôsus, Saint and Martyr, of Antioch, was an officer of "the Herculan band," in the time of Julian the Apostate. This emperor had removed from the imperial standard (labarum) the cross and sacred name, which Constantine had ordered to be borne. Bonosus and Maximilian persisted in retaining these standards, and were beaten with loaded clubs, and thrown into boiling pitch; after which they were beheaded, with some other martyrs, among whom are named Jovianus and Herculanus, about the end of December, 362. Their festival is, however, kept on Aug. 21. The Acts of these saints, given by Ruinart, are probably authentic, although not original. See Butler, Aug. 21; Baillet, Aug. 21; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonsi, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian theologian, was born at Florence in 1554. He received the degree of doctor of law at Padua. He was made bishop of Beziers by the king of France, Henry IV, and took possession of his diocese in 1598. Having concluded the marriage of this king with Marie de Medicis, niece of grand-duke Ferdinand, he obtained the position of grand-almoner of France. Pope Paul V, at the solicitation of Henry IV, gave to him in 1611 the cardinal's hat. He died at Rome July 4, 1621. A small number of letters written by him are published in vol. i of the Bibliotheca Pontificia. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bont, Saint. See BONITUS.

Bontecou, JAMES CLARK, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New Haven, Conn. He experienced conversion at the age of fifteen, and in 1827 entered the New York Conference. Subsequently he became a member of the New England Conference, and in 1840 received a transfer to the Ohio Conference. He served the Church with great faithfulness, and spent his last eight years as a superannuate. He died Oct. 14, 1875. Mr. Bontecou was enterprising, frugal, and benevolent; buoyant, and uniformly pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 102.

Bontemps, LÉGER, a French theologian who lived in the early half of the 16th century, wrote, De la Vérité de la Foy Chrétienne (Rouen):—Consolation des Affligés (Paris, 1545):—Le Miroir de Parfaite Beauté, etc. (ibid. 1557):—Les Principes et Premiers Éléments de la Foy Chrétienne (Lyons, 1558):—La Règle des Chrétiens (Paris, 1568). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonucci, ANTONIO MARIA, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Arezzo, and died at Rome, March 29, 1729, having written, besides several lives of saints, and devotional works, a treatise entitled Ephemerides Eucharisticæ (Rome, 1700, 1713, 1715, 1729, 4 vols.). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bonus, Saint. See BONITUS.

Bonus Deus (the beneficent god), an appellation given to Priapus and also to Jupiter.

Bonus Eventus (good luck), in Roman mythology, was a country deity, who had a temple in the ninth region of Rome, and was honored as an increase of the fruits and herds. He appears as a youthful hero, on a winged dragon-wagon; in his right hand a shell of sacrifice, in his left ears of corn, sometimes with a capricorn and altar.

Bonvicino, ALESSANDRO (also called Moretto), an Italian painter, was born at Brescia in 1514, and studied under Titian. At the age of sixteen, he painted a picture of St. Niccolo in the Church of the Madonna de Miracoli. There are two pictures by him of St. Lucia and St. Caterina, in the Chiesa di S. Clemente at Brescia; also the principal altar-piece, representing the Virgin and Infant in the Clouds, with Saints below. He died in 1564.

Bonwicke, AMBROSE, an English nonjuring clergyman, was born at Mickleham, Surrey, April 29, 1652, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School and at St. John's College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1673. He was ordained deacon May 21, 1676, and priest June 6, 1680. He became master of Merchant Taylors' School in 1686, but was ejected for refusing to take the oath of allegiance in 1691. He was afterwards master of a celebrated school at Headley, near Leatherhead in Surrey. He wrote a Life of his son, Ambrose Bonwicke, and Pattern for Young Students in the University (published by Bowyer in 1729). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Book of Cries is the church book used for entries of banns, proclamations, and the like.

Booker, Luke, an English clergyman, was born in 1762. He became rector of Tedstone-de-la-Mere in 1806, and of Dudley in 1812, and died in 1836. He published, Lectures on the Lord's Prayer:—Sermons on Various Subjects (Dudley, 1793):—Historical Account of Dudley Castle. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Booker, Simon L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Stevensburg, Frederick County, Va. He experienced religion in 1817, and in 1821 was received into the Kentucky Conference. In 1825 he was transferred to the Baltimore Conference, wherein he labored with zeal and fidelity until his death in August, 1829. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1830, p. 76.

Booker, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born in 1822. He joined the Church at Henley, labored first as an evangelist, and in 1849 was ordained pastor at Barrington, Cambridgeshire. In 1863 he emigrated to New Zealand, and labored successfully a few years at Newton; then removed to Maungaturoto, Kaipara, where he died, March 7, 1872. Mr. Booker's unaffected piety, gentleness of manner, prudence, and peculiar fitness for his great work, won for him a high place in the affection of all who knew him. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 318.

Books. As these in ancient times were always in MS. form, the treatment of this subject necessarily resolves itself into a consideration of writing. We give the following particulars in addition to those under that head. This is an art by which facts or ideas are communicated from one person to another by means of graphic signs, such as symbols or letters.

I. Origin of Writing.—It has been a generally received and popular opinion that writing was first used and imparted to mankind when God wrote the Ten Commandments on the tables of stone; but the silence of Scripture upon the subject would rather suggest that so necessary an art had been known long before that time, or otherwise the sacred historian would probably have added this extraordinary and divine revelation to the other parts of his information respecting the transactions on Mount Sinai.

It is a remarkable fact, however, that although, with respect to other arts, as, for instance, those of music and metal-working, the Hebrews have assigned the honor of their discovery to the heroes of a remote antiquity, there is no trace or tradition whatever of the origin of letters, a discovery many times more remarkable and important than either of these. Throughout the book of Genesis there is not a single allusion, direct or indirect, either to the practice or to the existence of writing. The word כָּתַב, katháb, "to write," does not once occur; none of its derivatives are used; and סֵפֶר, sépher, "a book," is found only in a single passage (Gen. v, 1), and there not in a connection which involves the supposition that the art of writing was known at the time to which it refers. The signet of Judah (xxxviii, 18, 25) which had probably some device engraved upon it, and Pharaoh's ring (xli, 42) with which Joseph was invested, have been appealed to as indicating a knowledge quite consistent with the existence of writing. But as there is nothing to show that the devices upon these rings, supposing them to exist, were written characters, or in fact anything more than emblematical figures, they cannot be considered as throwing much light upon the question. That the Egyptians in the time of Joseph were acquainted with writing of a certain kind there is other evidence to prove, but there is nothing to show that up to this period the knowledge extended to the Hebrew family. At the same time there is no evidence against it. The instance brought forward by Hengstenberg to prove that "signets commonly bore alphabetic writings," is by no means so decisive as he would have it appear. It is Exod. xxxix, 30: "And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing of the engravings of a signet, 'Holiness to the Lord.'" That is, this inscription was engraved upon the plate as the device is engraved upon a signet, in intaglio; and the expression has reference to the manner of engraving, and not to the figures engraved, and therefore cannot be appealed to as proving the existence of alphabetic characters upon Judah's signet or Pharaoh's ring. Writing is first distinctly mentioned in xvii, 14, and the connection clearly implies that it was not then employed for the first time, but was so familiar as to be used for historic records. Moses is commanded to preserve the memory of Amalek's onslaught in the desert by committing it to writing. "And Jehovah said unto Moses, Write this for a memorial in the book (not 'a book,' as in the A. V.), and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua." It is clear that some special book is here referred to, perhaps, as Aben-Ezra suggests, the book of the wars of Jehovah, or the book of Jashar, or one of the many documents of the ancient Hebrews which have long since perished. Or it may have been the book in which Moses wrote the words of Jehovah (Exod. xxiv, 4), that is, the laws contained in chaps. xx-xxiii. The tables of the testimony are said to be "written by the finger of God" (xxxii, 18) on both sides, and "the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables" (xxiii, 15). It is not clear whether the passage in xxxiv, 28 implies that the second tables were written by Moses or by God himself. The engraving of the gems of the high-priest's breastplate with the names of the children of Israel (xxviii, 11), and the inscription upon the mitre (xxxix, 30), have to do more with the art of the engraver than of the writer, but both imply the existence of alphabetic characters. The next allusion is not so clear. The Israelites were forbidden, in imitation of the idolatrous nations, to put any "brand" (lit. "writing of burning") upon themselves. The figures thus branded upon the skin might have been alphabetic characters, but they were more probably emblematical devices, symbolizing some object of worship; for the root כָּתַב, katháb (to write) is applied to picture-drawing (Judg. viii, 14), to mapping out a country (Josh. xviii, 8), and to plan-drawing (1 Chron. xxviii, 19). The curses against the adulteress were written by the priest "in the book," as before; and blotted out with water (Numb. v, 23). This proceeding, though principally distinguished by its symbolical character, involves the use of some kind of ink, and of a material on which the curses were written which would not be destroyed by water. The writing on door-posts and gates, alluded to in Deut. vi, 9; xi, 20, though perhaps to be taken figuratively rather than literally, implies certainly an acquaintance with the art and the use of alphabetic characters. Hitherto, however, nothing has been said of the application of writing to the purposes of ordinary life, or of the knowledge of the art among the common people. Up to this point such knowledge is only attributed to Moses and the priests. From Deut. xxiv, 1, 3, however, it would appear that it was extended to others. A man who wished to be separated from his wife for her infidelity, could relieve himself by a summary process. "Let him write her a bill (סֵפֶר, sépher, "a book") of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house." It is not absolutely necessary to infer from this that the art of writing was an accomplishment possessed by every Hebrew citizen, though there is no mention of a third party; and it is more than probable that these "bills of divorcement," though apparently so informal, were the work of professional scribes. It was enjoined as one of the duties of the king (xvii, 18), that he should transcribe the book of the law for his own private study, and we shall find hereafter in the history that distinct allusions to writing occur in the case of several kings. The remaining instances in the Pentateuch are the writing of laws upon stone covered with plaster, upon which while soft the inscription was cut (Deut. xxvii, 3, 8), the writing of the song of Moses (xxxii, 22), and of the law in a book which was placed in the side of the ark (xxxii, 24).

One of the first acts of Joshua on entering the Promised Land was to inscribe a copy of the law on the stones of the altar on Mount Ebal (Josh. viii, 32). The survey of the country was drawn out in a book (xviii, 8). In the time of the Judges we first meet with the professional scribe (סֹפֵר, sophér), in his important capacity as marshal of the host of warriors (Judg. v, 14), with his staff (A. V. "pen") of office. Ewald (Poet. Büch. i, 129) regards sophér in this passage as equivalent to שֹׁפֵט, shophét, "judge," and certainly the context implies the high rank which the art of writing conferred upon its possessor. Later on in the history we read of Samuel writing in "the book" the manner of the kingdom (1 Sam. x, 25); but it is not till the reign of David that we hear for the first time of writing being used for the purposes of ordinary communication. The letter (lit. "book") which contained Uriah's death-warrant was written by David, and must have been intended for the eye of Joab alone, who was therefore able to read writing, and probably to write himself, though his message to the king, conveying the intelligence of Uriah's death, was a verbal one (2 Sam. xi, 14, 15). If we examine the instances in which writing is mentioned in connection with individuals, we shall find that in all cases the writers were men of superior position. In the Pentateuch the knowledge of the art is attributed to Moses, Joshua, and the priest alone. Samuel, who was educated by the high-priest, is mentioned as one of the earliest historians (1 Chron. xxix, 29), as well as Nathan the prophet (2 Chron. ix, 29), Shemaiah the prophet, Iddo the seer (xii, 15; xiii, 22), and Jehu the son of Hanani (xx, 34). Letters were written by Jezebel in the name of Ahab and sealed with his seal (1 Kings xxi, 8, 9, 11); by Jehu (2 Kings xi, 6); by Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxix, 1); by Rabshakeh the Assyrian general (xxxii, 17); by the Persian satraps (Ezra iv, 6, 7, 8); by Sanballat (Neh. vi, 5), Tobiah (vi, 19), Haman (Esth. viii, 5), Mordecai and Esther (ix, 29). The prophet Elijah wrote to Ahab (2 Chron. xxi, 2); Isaiah wrote some of the history of his time (xxvi, 22); Jeremiah committed his prophecies to writing (Jer. li, 60), sometimes by the help of Baruch the scribe (xxxvi, 4, 32); and the false prophet, Shemaiah the Nehelamite, endeavored to undermine Jeremiah's influence by the letters which he wrote to the high-priest (xxix, 25). In Isa. xxix, 11, 12, there is clearly a distinction drawn between the man who was able to read and the man who was not, and it seems a natural inference from what has been said that the accomplishments of reading and writing were not widely spread among the people, when we find that they are universally attributed to those of high rank or education, kings, priests, prophets, and professional scribes.

In addition to these instances in which writing is directly mentioned, an indirect allusion to its early existence is supposed to be found in the name of certain officers of the Hebrews in Egypt, שְׁטֵרִים, shoterim, Sept. γραμματεῖς (Exod. v, 6, A. V. "officers"). The root of this word has been sought in the Arabic satara, "to write," and its original meaning is believed to be "writers," or "scribes;" an explanation adopted by Gesenius in his Lexicon Hebraicum and Thesaurus, though he rejected it in his Geschichte der Hebräischen Sprache und Schrift. In the name Kirjath-Sepher (Booktown, Josh. xv, 15) the indication of a knowledge of writing among the Phœnicians is more distinct. Hitzig conjectures that the town may have derived its name from the discovery of the art, for the Hittites, a Canaanitish race, inhabited that region, and the term Hittite may possibly have its root in the Arabic chatla "to write."

The Hebrews, then, a branch of the great Shemitic family, being in possession of the art of writing, according to their own historical records, at a very early period, the further questions arise, what character they made use of, and whence they obtained it. It is scarcely possible in the present day to believe that, two centuries ago, learned men of sober judgment seriously maintained, almost as an article of faith, that the square character, as it is known to us, with the vowel points and accents, was a direct revelation from heaven, and that the commandments were written by the finger of God upon the tables of stone in that character. Such, however, was really the case. But recent investigations have shown that, so far from the square character having any claim to such a remote antiquity and such an august parentage, it is of comparatively modern date, and has been formed from a more ancient type by a gradual process of development, the steps of which may approximately be indicated. What, then, was this ancient type? Most probably the Phœnician. To the Phœnicians, the daring seamen and adventurous colonizers of the ancient world, tradition assigned the honor of the invention of letters (Pliny, v, 12). This tradition may be of no value as direct evidence, but as it probably originated with the Greeks, it shows that, to them at least, the Phœnicians were the inventors of letters, and that these were introduced into Europe by means of that intercourse with Phœnicia which is implied in the legend of Cadmus, the man of the East. The Phœnician companions of this hero, according to Herodotus (v, 58), taught the Greeks many accomplishments, and among others the use of letters, which hitherto they had not possessed. So Lucan, Phars. iii, 220:

"Phœnicea primi, famæ æt credimne, auri Mansuram ruidibus vocem signare figuris."

Pliny (vii, 56) was of opinion that letters were of Assyrian origin, but he mentions as a belief held by others that they were discovered among the Egyptians by Mercury, or that the Syrians had the honor of the invention. The last-mentioned theory is that given by Diodorus Siculus (v, 74), who says that the Syrians invented letters, and from them the Phœnicians, having learned them, transferred them to the Greeks. On the other hand, according to Tacitus (Ann. xi, 14), Egypt was believed to be the source whence the Phœnicians derived their knowledge. Be this as it may, the voice of tradition represents the Phœnicians as the disseminators, if not the inventors, of the alphabet. Whether it came to them from an Aramæan or Egyptian source can at best be but the subject of conjecture. It may, however, be reasonably inferred that the ancient Hebrews derived from, or shared with, the Phœnicians the knowledge of writing and the use of letters. The two nations spoke languages of the same Shemitic family; they were brought into close contact by geographical position; all circumstances combine to render it probable that the ancient Hebrew alphabet was the common possession both of Hebrews and Phœnicians, and this probability is strengthened by the results of modern investigation into the Phœnician inscriptions which have of late years been brought to light. The names of the Hebrew letters indicate that they must have been the invention of a Shemitic people, and that they were moreover a pastoral people may be inferred from the same evidence. Such names as Aleph (an ox), Gimel (a camel), Lamed (an ox-goat), are most naturally explained by this hypothesis, which necessarily excludes the seafaring Phœnicians from any claim to their invention. If, as has been conjectured, they took the first idea of writing from the Egyptians, they would at least have given to the signs which they invented the names of objects with which they themselves were familiar. So far from this being the case, the letters of the Hebrew alphabet contain no trace whatever of ships or seafaring matters; on the contrary, they point distinctly to an inland and pastoral people. The Shemitic and Egyptian alphabets have this principle in common, that the object whose name is given to a letter was taken originally to indicate the letter which begins the name; but this fact alone is insufficient to show that the Shemitic races borrowed their alphabet from Egypt, or that the principle thus held in common may not have been the possession of other nations of a still earlier date than the Egyptians. "The phonetic use of hieroglyphics," says Mr. Kenrick, "would naturally suggest to a practical people, such as the Phœnicians were, a simplification of the cumbrous system of the Egyptians, by dispensing altogether with the pictorial and symbolical use, and assigning one character to each sound, instead of the multitude of homophones which made the reading of the hieroglyphics so difficult; the residence of the 'Phœnician shepherds,' the Hyksos, in Egypt might afford an opportunity for this adaptation, or it might be brought about by commercial intercourse. We cannot, however, trace such a resemblance between the earliest Phœnician alphabet known to us, and the phonetic characters of Egypt, as to give any certainty to this conclusion" (Phœnicia, p. 164, 165).

There were three kinds of writing practiced in Egypt: 1st. The hieroglyphical, or sacred sculptured characters; 2d. The hieratic, or sacerdotal, which was abbreviated; 3d. The demotic, or enchorial, which became the hand in general use. Lipsius, in The Annals of Archaeological Correspondence (Rome, 1837), maintains that the Egyptians had two colloquial dialects in use, which were very distinct; the classical or sacerdotal, and the popular. The sacred, or hieroglyphic writing, as well as the hieratic of all ages, presents the former, while the demotic presents the common dialect. Wilkinson thinks the hieroglyphical was the sole mode of writing in the more ancient times, yet allows the hieratic to have been employed in remote ages; but if M. Prisse's discovery be true, of a papyrus said to be written in the reign of an hitherto unknown king in the first Memphitic dynasty, and in the hieratic character, its extreme antiquity will be found coeval with the hieroglyphical. "In Egypt nothing was done without writing. Scribes were employed on all occasions, whether to settle public or private questions, and no bargain of any consequence was made without the voucher of a written document" (Wilkinson, i, 183). On a tomb said to have been built about the time the Pyramids were erected, is seen the representation of a steward giving an account of the number of his master's flocks and herds (iv, 131). The scribes and stewards, who were employed in domestic suits, conveying and farming, could not have used the sacred characters for their affairs, nor could they have been understood by the people generally if they had; it may, therefore, be concluded that the enchorial writing was that in popular practice.

II. Writing materials, etc.—The oldest documents which contain the writing of a Shemitic race are probably the bricks of Nineveh and Babylon on which are impressed the cuneiform Assyrian inscriptions. Inscribed bricks are mentioned by Pliny (vii, 56) as used for astronomical observations by the Babylonians. There is, however, no evidence that they were ever employed by the Hebrews (the case of Ezekiel [iv, i] is evidently an exception), who certainly at a very early period practiced the more difficult but not more durable method of writing on stone (Exod. xxiv, 12; xxxi, 18; xxxii, 15; xxxiv, 1, 28; Deut. x, 1; xxvii, 1; Josh. viii, 32), on which inscriptions were cut with an iron graver (Job xix, 24; Jer. xvii, 1). They were, moreover, acquainted with the art of engraving upon metal (Exod. xxviii, 36) and gems (xxviii, 9). Wood was used upon some occasions (Numb. xvii, 3; comp. Homer, Iliad, vii, 175), and writing-tablets of boxwood are mentioned in 2 Esdr. xiv, 24. The "lead," to which allusion is made in Job xix, 24, is supposed to have been poured when melted into the cavities of the stone made by the letters of an inscription, in order to render it durable, and does not appear ever to have been used by the Hebrews as a writing material, like the χαράται πολύβιδνοι at Thebes, on which were written Hesiod's Works and Days (Pausanias, ix, 31, 4; comp. Pliny, xiii, 21). Copper was used for the same purpose. M. Botta found traces of it in letters on the pavement slabs of Khorsabad (Layard, Nineveh, iii, 188). Inscriptions and documents which were intended to be permanent were written on tablets of brass (1 Macc. viii, 22; xiv, 27), but from the manner in which they are mentioned it is clear that their use was exceptional.

It is probable that the most ancient as well as the most common material which the Hebrews used for writing was dressed skin in some form or other. We know that the dressing of skins was practiced by the Hebrews (Exod. xxv, 5; Levit. xiii, 48), and they may have acquired the knowledge of the art from the Egyptians, among whom it had attained great perfection, the leather-cutters constituting one of the principal subdivisions of the third caste. "The fineness of the leather," says Sir G. Wilkinson, "employed for making the straps placed across the bodies of mummies discovered at Thebes, and the beauty of the figures stamped upon them, satisfactorily prove the skill of 'the leather-cutters,' and the antiquity of embossing;

some of these bearing the names of kings who ruled Egypt about the period of the Exodus, or 3300 years ago" (Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt. iii, 155). Perhaps the Hebrews may have borrowed, among their other acquirements, the use of papyrus from the Egyptians, but of this we have no positive evidence. Papyri are found of the most remote Pharaonic age (ibid. 148), so that Pliny is undoubtedly in error when he says that the papyrus was not used as a writing-material before the time of Alexander the Great (xiii, 21). He probably intended to indicate that this was the date of its introduction into Europe. In the Bible the only allusions to the use of papyrus are in 2 John, 12, where χάρτης occurs, which refers especially to papyrus paper, and 3 Macc. iv, 20, where χαρίηνα is found in the same sense. In Josephus (Ant. iii, 11, 6) the trial of adultery is made by writing the name of God on a skin, and the seventy men who were sent to Ptolemy from Jerusalem by the high-priest Eleazar, to translate the Law into Greek, took with them the skins on which the Law was written in golden characters (Ant. xii, 2, 10). The oldest Persian annals were written on skins (Diod. Sic. ii, 32), and these appear to have been most frequently used by the Shemitic races, if not peculiar to them. Of the byssus, which was used in India before the time of Alexander (Strabo, xv, 717), and the palm-leaves mentioned by Pliny (vii, 23) there is no trace among the Hebrews, although we know that the Arabs wrote their earliest copies of the Koran upon the roughest materials, as stones, the shoulder-bones of sheep, and palm-leaves (De Sacy, Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscriptions, i, 307). Herodotus, after telling us that the Ionians learned the art of writing from the Phœnicians, adds that they called their books skins (τὰς βιβλους διφθέρας), because they made use of sheep-skins and goat-skins when short of paper (βιβλος). Among the Cyprians, a writing-master was called διφθεράλοφος. Parchment was used for the MSS. of the Pentateuch in the time of Josephus, and the μεμβράναι of 2 Tim. iv, 13, were skins of parchment. It was one of the provisions in the Talmud that the Law should be written on the skins of clean animals, tame or wild, or even of clean birds. There are three kinds of skins distinguished, on which the roll of the Pentateuch may be written: 1. קֶלֶפֶה, kéleph (Meg. ii, 2; Shabb. viii, 3); 2. דִּרְבָּנִים, dirbanim (Meg. ii, 2; Shabb. viii, 3); 3. גִּבְלִי, gevil. The last is made of the undivided skin, after the hair is removed and it has been properly dressed. For the other two the skin was split. The part with the hairy side was called kéleph, and was used for the tephillin or phylacteries; and upon the other (דִּרְבָּנִים) the mezuzóth were written (Maimonides, Hilc. Tephil.). The skins when written upon were formed into rolls (מְגִלֹת, megillóth; Psa. xl, 8; comp. Isa. xxxiv, 4; Jer. xxxvi, 14; Ezek. ii, 9; Zech. v, 1). They were rolled upon one or two sticks and fastened with a thread, the ends of which were sealed (Isa. xxix, 11; Dan. xii, 4; Rev. v, 1, etc.). Hence the words גָּלָל, galál (εἰλίσσειν), to roll up (Isa. xxxiv, 4; Rev. vi, 14), and פָּרָס, parás (ἀναπτύσσειν), to unroll (2 Kings xix, 14; Luke iv, 17), are used of the closing and opening of a book. The rolls were generally written on one side only, except in Ezek. ii, 9; Rev. v, 1. They were divided into columns (דְּלָתוֹת, delathóth, lit. "doors," A. V. "leaves," Jer. xxxvi, 23); the upper margin was to be not less than three fingers broad, the lower not less than four; and a space of two fingers' breadth was to be left between every two columns (Wähner, Ant. Ebræor. vol. I, sect. 1, cap. xlv, § 337). In the Herculaneum rolls the columns are two fingers broad, and in the MSS. in the library at Stuttgart there are three columns on each side, each three inches broad, with an inch space between the columns, and margins of three inches wide (Leyrer in Herzog's Encyclop. "Schriftzeichen"). The case in which the rolls were kept was called τεῦχος or θήκη, Talmudic קֶרֶק, kerek, or קֶרְכָּה, karká. But besides skins, which were used for the more permanent kinds of writing, tablets of wood covered with wax (Luke i, 63, πίνακίδια) served for the ordinary purposes of life. Several of these were fastened together and formed volumes (טוֹמוֹס = tomos).

Books were written upon with a pointed style (צֶט, 'ét, Job xix, 24), sometimes of iron (Psa. xlv, 2; Jer. viii, 8; xvii, 1). For harder materials a graver (חֶרֶט, chêret, Exod. xxxii, 4; Isa. viii, 1) was employed: the hard point was called צֶפֶרֶן, tsippôren (Jer. xvii, 1). For parchment or skins a reed was used (3 John 13; 3 Macc. iv, 20), and according to some the Law was to be written with nothing else (Wähner, § 334). The ink, דֵּיךְ, deyê (Jer. xxxvi, 18), literally "black," like the Greek μέλαν (2 Cor. iii, 3; 2 John 12; 3 John 13), was to be of lamp-black dissolved in gall juice, though sometimes a mixture of gall juice and vitriol was allowable (Wähner, § 335). It was carried in an inkstand (כֶּסֶת הַסֵּפֶר, keseth has-sôphêr), which was suspended at the girdle (Ezek. ix, 2, 3), as is done at the present day in the East. The modern scribes "have an apparatus consisting of a metal or ebony tube for their reed pens, with a cup or bulb of the same material, attached to the upper end, for the ink. This they thrust through the girdle, and carry with them at all times" (Thomson, Land and Book, i, 188). Such a case for holding pens, ink, and other materials for writing is called in the Mishna קַלְמָרִין, kalmârin, or קַלְמָרִיִּין, kalmaryôn (calamarium; Mishna, Celim, ii, 7; Mikv. x, 1), while תְּרוּמָה, teronék (Mishna, Celim, xvi, 8), is a case for carrying pens, penknife, style, and other implements of the writer's art. To professional scribes there are allusions in Psa. xlv, 1 [2]; Ezra vii, 6; 2 Esdr. xiv, 24. In the language of the Talmud these are called לְבַלְרִין, lablarin, which is a modification of the Latin libellarii (Shabb. fol. 16, 1). See LETTERS.

BOOKS, CENSURE OF. A studious life was strongly enforced upon the clergy by the ancient fathers, and enjoined by various canons of the earlier councils. In many early writers the study of the Holy Scriptures is urged upon the clergy as being of primary obligation, and the foundation on which all the superstructure of a more general and extensive learning was to be raised. Certain canons also required that in their most vacant hours, the times of eating and drinking, some portion of Scripture should be read to them—partly to exclude trifling and unnecessary discourse, and partly to afford them proper themes and subjects for edifying discourse and meditation.

Next to the Scriptures the study of the best ecclesiastical writers was recommended as most profitable and appropriate to the clerical office, the first place in such writings, however, being assigned to the canons of the Church. These were always reckoned of the greatest use and importance, as containing a summary account, not only of the Church's discipline and doctrine and government, but also rules of life and moral practice—on which account it was ordered that the canons should be read over at a man's ordination; and again, the Council of Toledo required the clergy to make them a part of their constant study, together with the Holy Scriptures. The canons were then a sort of directory for the pastoral care, and they had this advantage over any private directory, that they were the public voice and authorized rule of the Church.

With regard to other books and writings there was considerable restriction. Some of the canons forbade a bishop to read heathen authors; nor would they allow him to read heretical books, otherwise than as a matter of duty, i. e. unless there was occasion to refute them, or to caution others against the poison of them. The prohibition did not, however, extend to cases where the study of heathen literature might be advantageous to the cause of Christian truth. St. Jerome observes that both the Greek and Latin historians are of great use as well to explain as to confirm the truth of the prophecies of Daniel. St. Augustine says of the writings of heathen philosophers, that as they said many things which were true, both concerning God and the Son of God, they were in that respect very serviceable in refuting the vanities of the Gentiles. The fathers and ancient writers of the Church were, in fact, for the most part, well versed in the classical or heathen literature.

Bookstaver, JACOB, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Montgomery, Orange Co., N. Y., Feb. 9, 1817. He graduated from Rutgers College in 1837, New Brunswick Seminary in 1840, and was licensed by the Classis of Orange the same year. He was pastor of the Church at Minisink, Sussex Co., N. J., from 1841 to 1847. From 1847 to 1848 he was teacher at Belleville, Essex Co. He died suddenly, Dec. 11, 1848. He was not a man of brilliant talents, but was of an amiable and generous temper. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 191.

Boomer, JAMES, a Baptist minister, was born at Freetown (now Fall River), Mass., May 26, 1759. He was converted in March, 1780, and baptized in the following April. While engaged in teaching he was impressed that it was his duty to preach. He was licensed, and after preaching for a time was ordained, May 2, 1795, as pastor of the Baptist Church at Fall River, where he remained about eight years. In 1804

he removed to Charlton, Mass., to take charge of the Church in that place. Although obliged to engage in secular pursuits to meet his family expenses, he regularly preached to the Charlton Church, and towards the latter part of his life he preached in destitute places in his neighborhood. For two or three years before his death he was laid aside from his ministerial work. He died at Charlton, Feb. 24, 1837. It is a proof of the esteem in which he was held that the citizens of Charlton chose him for several years as their representative to the state legislature. See The Christian Watchman, Dec. 29, 1837. (J. C. S.)

Boon[e], CHARLES, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced the work in 1771, and for twenty-four years was a faithful itinerant. His last circuit was Plymouth dock. In July, 1795, he left Plymouth for Exeter, thinking the change would be beneficial. A contrary effect was produced, however, and he died there, July 20, 1795. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Boone, Levi, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born in Fayette County, Ala. In 1869, when about forty-eight years old, he was admitted to the Mississippi Conference, within the bounds of which he labored until his death, at Daleville, Dec. 23, 1880. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 70.

Boone, Squire, a Baptist minister, was born in Berks County, Pa., in 1737, and was a brother of the famous Daniel Boone. Until 1770 his residence was a few miles from Wilkesborough, N. C. He was for some time the companion of his brother in making explorations in the state of Kentucky. In 1775 he had his home in a fort in Boonesborough, where he remained until 1779, when he built a fort in what is now Shelby County. For some time he resided in Louisville, Ky., and spent the last part of his life in what was then the territory of Indiana, where he died in 1815. The only official act of his of which we have any account was his marrying the first white persons who were married in Kentucky. His son, of the same name, and his grandson, Thomas Boone, were worthy Baptist ministers in Kentucky. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 113. (J. C. S.)

Boone, William E., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Fayetteville, N. C., Jan. 11, 1830. He received a careful religious training, joined the Church in 1846, prepared for the ministry at Cokesbury Conference School, and in 1850 entered the South Carolina Conference, in which he served the Church with fidelity until his decease, Oct. 29, 1858. Mr. Boone was characterized by deep piety and conscientiousness. He was untiring in zeal and greatly beloved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1858, p. 56.

Boos, a German Reformed minister, arrived in America about 1771. He brought no testimonials with him, but the Congregation of Reading, Pa., concluded to take him. He conducted himself well during the year, and the Cœtus permitted him to continue another year. In a letter from the secretary of the Cœtus to the fathers, in May, 1777, the highest praise is bestowed upon Mr. Boos: that his Church in Reading is in a most flourishing condition through his industry and zeal; that he is beloved not only in Reading, but by all the members of the Cœtus. In the minutes of 1782 we find that Mr. Boos was compelled to leave his Reading Church. He afterwards continued as an Independent minister. There are many traditions about him in Berks County, Pa. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 392.

Boot, JOHN F., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a Cherokee Indian, was born about 1793. Prior to his conversion he was a leader among his people, a man of unsullied patriotism. He was converted about 1833, and about two years later received license to preach. He died Aug. 8, 1853. As a preacher he had but few equals. He had a strong, comprehensive mind, and grasped his subject like a giant. He was powerful in declamation. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 452.

Booth, Bidcock, an English Congregational minister, was born at Sawley, Aug. 22, 1805. He was converted early in life, joined a Church at Clitheroe in his nineteenth year, and after earnest labor as a local preacher for some years in the neighborhood became pastor at Newton-in-Bowland in 1861. Here he died, Aug. 22, 1874. Mr. Booth was an incessant worker and a devoted pastor. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1875, p. 317.

Booth, Henry J., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in London. He was trained in the fear of the Lord, became a minister in 1844, and died suddenly, Nov. 29, 1854, in the thirty-fourth year of his age. He was active in mind and abundant in labors. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Booth, James, a Wesleyan minister in Canada, was a native of Yorkshire, England. He came to America in 1816, and was one of the most self-sacrificing laborers in the upper provinces. He became a supernumerary at Waterloo, Ont., in 1838, but resumed work again in three years. He died at Kingston, Ont., Jan. 22, 1854, in his seventy-third year. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1854; Carroll, Case and his Contemporaries, vol. v, index.

Booth, John, an English prelate of the 15th century, brother of Laurence and William, was probably a native of Cheshire. He was bachelor of laws, and in the sixth year of Edward IV (1466) became bishop of Exeter. He built the bishop's chair in his cathedral, which bishop Godwin says had no equal in England. During the troublesome times of the wars of York and Lancaster, John Booth retired to Horsley, Hampshire, where he died, April 1, 1478, and was buried in St. Clement Danes, London. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 268.

Booth, John F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., June 1, 1829. He entered the New York East Conference in 1855, passed all his itinerant ministry on Long Island, and died in the midst of his labors, Nov. 26, 1865. Mr. Booth was not loud and ostentatious, but remarkably firm and consistent. His ministry was short, but decisive, and crowned with great success; his chief excellence lay in his heart-devotedness to the young. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 63.

Booth, Joseph, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Scituate, Mass., about 1660, and was educated as an Independent. He removed to Delaware when a young man. In that colony for many years he filled the office of civil magistrate, and represented for a time the county of Sussex, in which he resided, in the General Assembly. Having been brought under the influence of the ministry of Joseph Story in 1699, he became "convinced" of the truth of the principles of the Friends, and some time after was recognised as a minister in that denomination of Christians. "His communications were solemn and awful, delivered in the power of truth." A meeting at Motherkill, Del., and one at Cold Spring, Md., were established through his instrumentality. He died about 1732. See Bowden, Hist. of Friends in America, ii, 263. (J. C. S.)

Booth, Laurence, an English prelate of the 15th century, was half-brother of William Booth, archbishop of York. He became master of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, and chancellor of that university. He was an eminent benefactor of his college, conferring thereon, among other things, the manor and patronage of Overton Waterfield, Huntingdonshire. From being chancellor of Cambridge, he was preferred to the same office to Margaret, queen of Henry VI, and, well discharging that office, he was, in the thirteenth year of Edward IV, (1474), made lord high chancellor of England, having first been bishop of Durham, and afterwards archbishop of York, and being a benefactor of both sees. He retained the mastership of Pembroke Hall till his death in 1480. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 267.

Booth, William, an English prelate of the 15th century, was educated at Gray's Inn, London, quitted the study of law to accept the chancellor's place in St. Paul's, and took orders. He was soon consecrated bishop of Lichfield, and six years after was translated to York. He expended much in enlarging his archiepiscopal palace in York. After twelve years he died, and was buried at Southwell, in 1464. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 267.

Booth, William C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Covington County, Miss. He entered the Mississippi Conference in 1851, and labored until his death, in 1854. Mr. Booth was a young man of buoyant spirit, warm and generous nature, and confiding heart. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1855, p. 606.

Booth, William Oliver, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Eccleshill, near Bradford, Yorkshire, Sept. 1, 1801. After some years employed in tuition, he was accepted by the Conference in 1824. In the prime of his life accidents befell him, which laid the foundation of great weakness; but he did not cease his labor, although subdued by the chastening of almost constant pain, until age was added to suffering. He died while living as a supernumerary in London, March 19, 1879. His love for the young was intense and his labor for their welfare incessant. Few men had more friends. "His sermons were well studied, full of evangelical theology, and brought home to the consciences of his hearers in mighty and loving appeal." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 33; Wesleyan Centenary Takings, i, 313.

Boothby, JEREMIAH, an English Wesleyan missionary, was sent to the West Indies in 1813, and died at Roseau, in the island of Dominica, July 14, 1816, of a fever induced by a cold he contracted from exposure, made necessary by a persecuting disturber in the congregation. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1817.

Boothe, PETER, a Methodist Episcopal minister, belonged to the Lexington Conference; had been for many years a local preacher, and later entered the travelling connection. He died on the Harrodsburg Circuit, Lexington District, Dec. 19, 1873. He was an earnest, faithful man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 11.

Bootman, CHARLES, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Lynn, Norfolk, in 1802, in humble life, but was brought up among the Wesleys, and converted to God in his eighteenth year. He labored hard as a class leader and local preacher till 1849, when the division took place which led to a society being formed of Methodist reformers. Mr. Bootman was the minister of the society at Lynn until 1855, when it united with the New Connection. He travelled in only four circuits, and was happy and useful in his work. His last circuit was Gloucester, where he labored for only a few months, but preached till within two days of his death, which occurred Dec. 8, 1860. He published a tract on the Conversion of the Masses. See Minutes of the Conferences.

Boots were introduced by the Benedictines, and worn by masters of arts at their inception, until the doctors of faculties appropriated them to their own use, and masters were reduced to pantables or sandals. The boot was buttoned up the side of the leg like a gaiter; hence, probably, the modern use of the latter by the bishops, who have always a doctor's degree. The doctor of divinity stood booted and spurred at his act, as if shod with the preparation of the Gospel and ready always to preach God's word.

Boots, ABRAHAM, a German theologian and historian, was born at Bremen, Sept. 27, 1628. He studied at Marburg, and there taught metaphysics in 1662, history and eloquence in 1664. He died Oct. 11, 1673. His principal works are, De Immaterialitate et Spiritualitate Angelorum (Marburg, 1658);—De Veritate (ibid. 1661);—De Variis Thematibus ex omni Scibili (ibid. 1670). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boozer, JOHN JAY, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Newberry, S. C., in 1825. He was educated in Oglethorpe University, Milledgeville, Ga., and studied in the theological seminary at Columbia, S. C. He was licensed about 1850 by the South Carolina Presbytery, and became pastor of Hopewell Church. In 1855 he removed to North Carolina; in 1858 to Arkansas, and became pastor of Pine Bluff Church, where he remained until his death in August, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 346.

Boquin (or Bouquin), PIERRE, a French Protestant theologian, was born at the beginning of the 16th century in the province of Guienne. He studied at Bourges, and received his degree as doctor of theology April 23, 1539. He joined the order of the Carmelites, and was appointed prior. Having embraced the views of the Reformation, he left France in 1541, and went to Basle, Wittenberg, and Strasburg. In the last-named place he occupied the chair formerly held by Calvin, and commenced his lectures on the Epistle to the Galatians. But the love for his own country brought him back again to Bourges, where he lectured on Hebrew and exegesis, protected by the queen of Navarre, to whom he dedicated his treatise De Necessitate et Usu Sacrarum Litterarum. In 1555 he was again obliged to leave the country, and went to Strasburg, where he acted for some time as preacher of the French Church. When in 1557 the university of Heidelberg was reformed, he was appointed professor there. He took an active part in the religious controversies of his time, and was present at the colloquy at Maulbronn. In 1574 he was obliged to give up his chair with the rest of the Calvinistic professors, since he would not subscribe to the Lutheran dogma of the ubiquity of Christ, and went as professor to Lausanne, where he died in 1582. His writings, which mainly treat of the controversy between the Lutherans and Catholics, are given in Haag, La France Protestante, ii, 404. See Hundeshagen, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bora (Bohra or Bohren), KATHARINA VON, the wife of Luther, was born at Löben in Saxony, Jan. 29, 1499, and while very young became a nun in the convent of Nimptschen. On reading some of Luther's writings, she determined to abandon the monastic life, and, along with eight of her companions, applied to Luther for help. At his instance Leonhard Koppe, a citizen of Torgau, succeeded in effecting their escape by night, April 4, 1523. Katharina found an asylum in the house of the burgo-master Reichenbach, at Wittenberg, and was married to Luther, June 13, 1525. The marriage caused a great stir in the religious world, but proved a very happy one. Luther in his will left all his property to her. She died at Torgau, Dec. 20, 1552. Borbetzy, NERSER, an Armenian theologian, was born near Tiflis about the middle of the 12th century.

He applied himself diligently to the study of logic and theology, and became bishop of Bitlis. He died in 1317. He wrote a treatise on Logic, in which he traces with discernment the systems of Plato, Aristotle, Porphyry, of David the Philosopher, and others;—a short Explanation of the Pentateuch.—and Sermons. These works are cited in the Armenian manuscripts of the Imperial Library. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borchard, G., a minister of the Lutheran Church, and a native of Germany, arrived in Nebraska in 1877, as a missionary to the German population. As a scholar his attainments were of the highest order. To the German Lutherans he was well known as a correspondent of the Kirchenfreund, especially by his letters on Japan. After two years of missionary labor, he became a teacher of German in Nebraska College, Nebraska City, where he died, Sept. 15, 1879. See Lutheran Observer, Sept. 26, 1879.

Borcht, PETER VAN DER, Sr., a Flemish landscape painter and engraver, was born at Brussels about 1540, and died in 1608. As a painter he gained very little distinction. He had great fertility of invention, but was not very judicious, either in the attitudes of his figures or the composition of his groups. The following are his best: A Set of Landscapes from the Old and New Testaments; Rural Enjoyments; A Landscape, with the subject of Hagar and Ishmael; The Festival of the Company of Archers. Bordeaux, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Burdegalense). Of these there were several.

I. Held in 385, by order of the emperor Maximus, against the Priscillianists. Instantius and Priscillianus were called upon for their defence. The former made out so bad a case for himself that he was judged unworthy of the episcopate. Priscillianus, fearing the same treatment, ventured to appeal to the emperor from the council, which appeal the bishops permitted. Priscillianus and the other accused parties were in consequence brought before the emperor at Treves, Idacius and Ithacius, their accusers, accompanying them. The emperor, at the urgent request of Ithacius, and contrary to his promise made to St. Martin, condemned Priscillianus and some of his followers to death. St. Martin had before strongly urged Ithacius to desist from his violent accusations, and after this business refused to communicate with the Ithacians. Moreover, St. Ambrose, the pope Siricius, and the Council of Turin, in 398, condemned the Ithacians, maintaining that it was far from the part of a bishop to be in any way instrumental in causing the death of heretics. St. Ambrose in his writings also evinced his disgust at these cruelties, and the irregular condemnation of the Priscillianists. See Labbe, Concil. ii, 1034.

II. Held in 1080, in the month of October. Two legates, three archbishops, and several bishops were present. The notorious Berenger here gave account of his faith, either in confirmation of what he had declared at Rome in this same year, or to retract what he had just published in contradiction of that declaration. See Labbe, Concil. x, 381.

III. Held on April 13, 1255. In it Gerard of Malemort, archbishop of Bordeaux, published a constitution consisting of thirty articles. Among other things it is enacted, that all benefited clergy and others having the cure of souls shall be constantly in residence; that those persons who remain in a state of excommunication for forty days shall pay nine livres, or some other suitable fine; it is absolutely forbidden to absolve any one under excommunication, even at the point of death, if he, or some one for him, have not made satisfaction to the party interested, the priest so absolving him to be bound for him. To such an extent had the abuse of excommunications been carried in that age, that it was a common case to excommunicate in execution of a judgment, or on account of some money debt remaining unpaid. The fifth article enjoins that the consecrated host shall not be given to children who are brought to communion on Easter-day, but only bread which has been blessed. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 738.

IV. Held in 1583, by Antoine, archbishop of Bordeaux. Thirty-six regulations, relating to matters of faith, morals, and discipline, were drawn up, similar to those of the Council of Rheims in the same year. The last of these refers to the proper regulation of seminaries, and is divided into nine chapters, which enjoin, among other things, that they should be built in some open spot not far from the cathedral church; that mass and prayer should be said daily; that the members of the seminary should obey the superior and other officers; that they shall be modest in their behavior, never eat out of the seminary, and never go out without leave; that all shall go to bed at nine, and rise at four in the morning, etc. See Labbe, Concil. xv, 944.

V. Held in 1624, under Francis, archbishop of Bordeaux, and cardinal. In this council twenty-two chapters, containing a large number of canons, were published, chiefly relating to discipline. See Labbe, Concil. xv, 1632.

Bordel, JOHN, a martyr of the Reformation period, was a Frenchman by birth, and suffered martyrdom, by strangling, in Brazil, in 1558. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 440.

Bordelum Sect. In the year 1739 a separatist party took its rise at Bordelum, near Hensburg, in the duchy of Holstein. Its founder was the Saxon licentiate David Bär, who claimed a higher spiritual life and rejected all ecclesiastical order. He even despised the Church, which he called the devil's house, rejected the sacraments and marriage, and claimed the same liberty which we find in the Oneida Community. An edict of king Christian VI, issued June 11, 1739, made an end to the immoral doings of the leader, who died in 1743. See Tschackert in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. (2d ed.), s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bordenave, JEAN DE, a French theologian and canonist, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He wrote, État des Églises Cathédrales et Collégiales (Paris, 1643, 1653):—État des Cours Ecclésiastiques (ibid. 1655). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borderies, ÉTIENNE JEAN FRANÇOIS, a French theologian, was born at Montauban, Jan. 24, 1764. He studied in the college of St. Barbe, in Paris, where he remained as principal until the Revolution. He then went to Holland, and later to Germany, but eventually returned to France. In 1802 he became vicar of Lalande, and in 1819 vicar-general of the archdeaconate of St. Denis. He died Aug. 4, 1832, leaving Œuvres, which were published after his death. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bordes, BASIL, a French preacher, was born about 1588. He was a hermit of Notre Dame d'Étang, at Dijon, and had a friend, named Nicholas, who one day confided to him quite an amount of silver. He yielded to the temptation to assassinate him and appropriate the money. A little time after, having occasion to preach at St. Benigne, of Dijon, he spoke at length upon the violent death of brother Nicholas, and, in so doing, certain expressions escaped him which led to his being suspected of the crime. He was finally convicted, and executed in 1633. He wrote, Histoire de l'Image de Notre Dame d'Étang (Dijon, 1632). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bordone, PARIS, a distinguished painter of the Venetian school, was born at Treviso in 1500. There are many of his works in the churches and public edifices at Venice, Milan, Genoa, and Florence. His most important works are the Ring of St. Mark in St. Mark's at Venice, and the dome of San Vincenzo, at Treviso, containing, in six compartments, the Annunciation, the Nativity, the Adoration of the Magi, the Crucifixion, the Ascension, and the Assumption of the Virgin. He died in 1570. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bordonì, FRANCISCO, a Franciscan of Parma, was born in 1597. At the age of fifteen he joined his order, whose general he became, and died Aug. 7, 1671. He wrote, De Constructione Syllogismorum (Milan, 1630):—De Antiquitate Religionis Tertii Ord. S. Francisci (Bologna, 1644):—Ecclesiastica Ratiocinatio Festorum Mobilium (ibid. 1657):—Chronologium Fratrum et Sororum III Ord. Seraphici (Parma, 1655):—Formalitates Doctoris Subtilis ab Objectis Vindicate (ibid. 1662):—Privilegia Clericorum in Controversiis (ibid. 1668), etc. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 719. (B. P.)

Bordonio, GIUSEPPE ANTONIO, an Italian theologian, was born at Turin, Feb. 22, 1682. He entered the Jesuit order in October, 1696, and after two years he was professor, successively, of belles-lettres at Pignerol and Genoa. In 1703 he occupied the chair of rhetoric at Turin, and in 1708 was placed in charge of the studies of the marquis of Susa. Four years after, the marquis of Trivie, being sent as ambassador to England, took Bordonio as chaplain of the embassy. He died in 1742, leaving, Beatus Aloysius Gonzaga, de Parente Triumphator, a drama in Latin verse (Pignerol, 1700):—La Iguiria in Pace, Scherzo Pastorale, etc. (Genoa, 1702):—Eduino Tragedia (Turin, 1703):—Discorsi per l'Esercizio della Buona Morte (Venice, 3 vols., of which the first two were published in 1740, and the third in 1751). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bordwell, JOEL, a Congregational minister, was born at Deerfield, Mass., in October, 1732. He graduated from Yale College in 1756, was ordained pastor of the Church in Kent, Oct. 28, 1758, and died Dec. 6, 1811. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 672.

Boreas (the north wind), in Greek mythology, was a Titan, the son of Astræus and Aurora, one of the four winds (his brothers were Zephyrus and Notus). He was reckoned among the benefactors of hot countries, because his breath brought refreshing and rain. His dwelling was a cave of the Rhiphæan mountain-range, in the country of the Hyperboreans. He was highly venerated by the Athenians, and a small temple was erected in honor of him, because he had damaged the fleet of Xerxes. He loved the daughter of the Attican king Erechtheus, Orithyia, who presented him also with a daughter, Cleopatra, who married Phineus, king of Salmydessus, in Thrace, the son of the Phœnician king, Agenor. Chloris also was betrayed by him. The nymph Pitys, however, refusing his favor, was hurled, out of jealousy, against a rock, so that she died. Many of the most famous steeds of antiquity are indebted to him for their existence. On the Temple of the Winds, at Athens, he was represented as a bearded man; his dress reminds of the cold which he brings, his sea-horn of the peculiar sound which the blowing of this wind produces.

Boreasmi, in Greek cultus, were festivals celebrated at Athens in honor of Boreas.

Borein, PETER RUBLE, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Washington County, East Tenn., Nov. 17, 1809. He experienced religion when about twelve years of age, and was distinguished during childhood and youth for his amiable and affectionate disposition and exemplary filial obedience. Having moved to Illinois, in 1830 he entered the Illinois College at Jacksonville, and on leaving college was licensed to preach, and entered the Illinois Conference in 1833. He continued his labors faithfully and with great success until his death, Aug. 15, 1838. Mr. Borein was engaging and delightful in person, manners, and public exercises. He was everywhere admired as a scholar, gentleman, and speaker. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1840, p. 54; Sprague, Annals of the American Pulpit, vol. vii.

Borgani, FRANCESCO, a painter of Mantua, lived about 1650. He studied under Domenico Fieti. There are several of his works in the churches of Mantua.

Borger, ÉLIE ANNE, a Flemish theologian, was born at Joure, in Friesland, in 1785. He completed his studies at the university of Leyden, where he received the degree of doctor, and was appointed in 1807 lecturer on sacred hermeneutics. In 1812, by a decree of the emperor of France, he was made adjunct professor. At the restoration of the university of Leyden, in 1815, Borger obtained the chair of theology, which he resigned for that of belles-lettres. He died in 1820. He wrote a large number of works, a complete list of which is found in the rectorial discourse of M. Smollenburg, delivered Feb. 8, 1821, at the university of Leyden. The most remarkable of his works are, Des Sermons:—an explanation of the Épître aux Galates:—Disputatio de Mysticismo (Hague, 1820). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borghardt, LUDWIG IMMANUEL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Magdeburg, Nov. 29, 1804. He studied theology, philosophy, and philology at Berlin. After completing his studies there, he entered the theological seminary at Wittenberg, where Nitzsch, Heubner, and Rothe were his teachers. In 1834 he went as pastor to Gross-Salze; in 1840 he was called to Kloster-Gröningen, and in 1846 as court-chaplain and superintendent of Stendal. In 1867 he was appointed member of consistory and second general superintendent of the province of Saxony. He died at his native place, June 21, 1870. See Zum Gedächtniss von L. I. Borghardt (Magdeburg, 1870). (B. P.)

Borghes, JOHN. See BOURGEOIS.

Borghesi, IPPOLITO, a reputable Neapolitan historical painter, flourished about 1620. He studied under Francesco Curia, and painted an altar-piece in San Lorenzo, at Perugia, representing the Assumption, which is his principal work.

Borghildur, in Norse mythology, was the mother of Hamund and the Hunding-slayer Helgis, famous in Northern heroic tales.

Borgia, Alessandro, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Velletri in 1682, and died Feb. 14, 1764. He was archbishop of Fermo, and left the following works: Vita di San Geraldo (Velletri, 1698):—Istoria della Chiesa e Città di Velletri, in quattro libri (Nocera, 1723):—Vita Benedetti XIII (Rome, 1741):—Letters collected by Muratori:—Homilies:—and some other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borgia, Stefano, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Velletri, Dec. 3, 1731. He early gave evidence of great talent, and received the first of his education from his uncle, archbishop of Fermo. He devoted himself especially to the study of antiquities, and at the age of nineteen was received at the academy of Cortona. He collected a very rich museum of monuments, medals, manuscripts, etc. Benedict XIV appointed him governor of Benevento, and soon after he was made secretary of the Congregation of the Propagandists, or of foreign missions. Pius VI appointed him cardinal and general inspector of the Foundling Hospital, and he introduced important changes in its administration. He went to Venice to see the men of letters, then to Padua to found an academy, and finally to Valencia to organize a kind of Propagandist society; and was sent to Africa and Asia to bear the principles of religion, and to collect monuments. The pontifical government having been re-established at Rome, in 1800, the new pontiff, Pius VII, who found the administration in disorder, placed Borgia at the head of the council, the labors of which included nearly all the material interests of the state. In 1801 he was appointed rector of the Roman College. Fatigued with his labors, and at an advanced age, he accompanied his master to France to crown Bonaparte, but he was taken ill at Lyons, and died there, Nov. 23, 1804. His museum, rich especially in Egyptian and Indian monuments, was his chief possession. He had sold his jewels to obtain these monuments, and his plate to publish a description of them. They were, however, scarcely his property, but rather that of the learned of his country. Adler, Zaega, Gergi, Paulin of St. Bartholomew, Heeren, and many others have profited by this collection, and have written concerning it. The manners of this cardinal were as gentle as his spirit was chaste. Among his principal works we notice, Monumento di Papa Giovanni XVI (Rome, 1750):—Breve Istoria dell' Antica Città di Tadino nell' Umbria (1751). An ancient map of the world in the museum of this cardinal, prepared by the curé of Camillus, Giovanni Paolo Borgia, nephew of the cardinal, is known in the history of geography under the name of the Mappe Monde du Cardinal Borgia (Encyclop. des Gens du M.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borgiani, ORAZIO, a Roman painter and engraver, was born in 1577, and studied under his brother Giulio, called Scalzo. He painted several pictures for the Spanish ambassador and also for the churches of Rome. His principal works are, The Resurrection; The Dead Christ, with the two Marys and St. John; St. Christopher giving his Hand to the Infant Jesus. He died in 1615. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Borgognone, AMBROGIO, a noted Milanese painter, lived about 1500, and studied under Vincenzo Foppa. He painted for one of the cloisters of San Simpliciano, at Milan, the history of St. Sisinio and his companions, also a Coronation of the Virgin. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Borgona (or Borgognona), JUAN DE, a Spanish painter, flourished from 1495 to 1533. He gained distinction by his works, several of which, at Toledo, in oil and fresco, were held in high estimation. At Avila he painted some pictures from sacred history. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borie, PIERRE ROSE URSULE DUMOULIN, a French missionary, was born at Beynot, in the diocese of Tulle, Feb. 26, 1808. He was trained from early youth by the Church, and at the age of fifteen went to the seminary of Servières. He afterwards studied at the seminary of Tulle, and finally at Paris. He was made deacon March 27, 1830, and soon after priest. He went to Macao the same year as vicar apostolical to the province of Tonquin, and after a series of hardships and persecutions he was finally beheaded by the natives, Nov. 24, 1838. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boring, ISAAC, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Jackson County, Ga., of pious parents, who brought him to Christ in his youth. In 1824 he was licensed to preach and admitted into the South Carolina Conference. He entered on his work with thorough devotion, and thus continued, with but one year's intermission as supernumerary, till the close of his life, in 1851. Mr. Boring was a man of high moral standing, and was greatly beloved by all. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1851, p. 305.

Boring, Washington, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Washington County, Tenn., in 1822. He embraced religion when about twenty-one, received license to preach in 1849, and in 1851 entered the Holston Conference. He served but three circuits when his useful career was closed, in 1854. Mr. Boring was alive to all excellences that brought culture and improvement to his people. He was strong in mind, energetic and deep in piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1854, p. 521.

Borj (or Al-borj) is the mythic world-mountain of the ancient Persians, from which all mundane existence took its rise and the stars leaped into their orbits. It is the symbol of creation, and is affirmed to be the navel of the world, the mountain of mountains. It is considered the centre from which have come prophets and lawgivers, and the religious dogmas and liturgic rites of the ancient Persians.

Bork, Christian, a clergyman of the Reformed Church in America, was born in Berlin, Prussia, in 1758. His father, a Prussian army officer, died of a wound received in battle before his son's birth. His mother was a pious Lutheran, who trained him with religious care. In his eighteenth year, when about thirty miles from home, he was impressed into the military service, and sent to join the British army in America in 1776. He was in the army of general Burgoyne until its surrender at Saratoga in 1777, and after this event he determined to remain in America. He then taught school near Albany, and in 1781, having left the British service, enlisted in a regiment of New York State levies, from which he was honorably discharged the same year. During his army life, he was converted under a sermon preached in a barn at Livingston Manor by Rev. Dr. Livingston of New York, who was then a voluntary exile from the city on account of the war. While he was yet in the army, Mr. Bork used to gather the soldiers on Sabbaths and read the Bible to them. He continued to teach for about twelve years, studied theology with Dr. Bassett of Albany, and entered the ministry in 1798. His early ministry was spent in the vicinity of Albany (1798-1808), after which he became pastor of the Franklin-street Church, N. Y. (1808), where he remained until his death, in 1823. He was a bold, faithful soldier of the cross. His preaching was remarkable for its scriptural fullness and holy unction, and his memory is still cherished as that of a Christian pastor who was wholly given to his work. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Borlando, Matteo, a learned Italian jurist and theologian, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He went to Germany with Giovanni Filippo Ravizza, and there embraced the Lutheran communion. He wrote Il Nuovo Testamento con Somma Fede, dal Greco Tradotto (Erlangen, 1711). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borlase, William, LL.D., F.R.S., an English clergyman and learned antiquary and naturalist, was born at Pendeen, in Cornwall, Feb. 2, 1696. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and was ordained in 1720. In 1722 he was presented to the rectory of Ludgvan, and in 1732 to the vicarage of St. Just. He died Aug. 31, 1772. He published, Antiquities, Historical and Monumental, of the County of Cornwall (1754):—Observations on the Ancient and Present State of the Islands of Scilly, and their Importance to the Trade of Great Britain (1756):—The Natural History of Cornwall (1758):—and contributed many papers to the Philosophical Transactions. His Memoirs, written by himself, were published in Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, v, 291 sq. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Börling, Jacob, a Protestant minister of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage in 1801 at Slawitts, in Volhynia, Russian Poland. He received a strict Jewish education according to the fashion of his country, where the Talmud was the main subject of study. In 1821, when Mr. Moritz (q. v.), a missionary among the Jews, visited his native place, the turning-point in Mr. Börling's life came. The arguments of the missionary shook his belief in the divine authority of the Talmud, and he resolved to become a Christian. As this was impossible for him in his native town, he decided to go to St. Petersburg. Having been furnished with letters of introduction to some Christian friends, he set out on foot, in 1822, on a journey of a thousand miles. In St. Petersburg he received instruction in the truth of Christianity, and was baptized May 5, 1823, at the Moravian chapel. He remained at St. Petersburg till 1824, when he accompanied the Rev. Saltet to Tiflis, in Georgia, the latter having been appointed minister of the Protestant community there. In August, 1825, he accompanied the Rev. Joseph Wolff (q. v.) to Shoosha, Persia, where he enjoyed the society of Zarembo and other missionaries residing there. In 1826 the government directed him to settle somewhere as a citizen, and also to enter the Russian service. He settled at Tiflis, where he was employed by the government. In 1831 he entered the missionary institution at Basle, where he remained for three years. In 1834 he entered into connection with the Berlin Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, and labored for nearly five years in their service among the Jews in Silesia. Being a Russian, he had to return every three years to his country for the renewal of his passport. After passing an examination at the University of Dorpat, he received an appointment as minister of the Gospel in the colony Belovesch, in the government Tschernigow, in the south of Russia. Here he had thirteen parishes committed to his charge. The sad state of spiritual destitution in which he found his field of labor was soon changed for the better. He established schools everywhere, and his work was only interrupted by his death, Aug. 8, 1844. (B. P.)

Bormann, Carl Joseph Anton, a German teacher, was born at Gersosten, in Silesia, in 1766. In 1782 he was teacher at Gleinig, in Silesia, and after having entered upon a military career was appointed, in 1820, secretary of the commission for military studies at Berlin, where he died, Aug. 19, 1841. He wrote, Die Christliche Lehre, etc. (Berlin, 1820):—Die Metaphysische Lehre (ibid. 1828):—Verklärung der Lehre von Gott (ibid. 1831):—Erklärung der biblischen Geschichten (2d ed. 1858). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 448; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 172. (B. P.)

Börner, Christian Friedrich, a German Protestant theologian, was born Nov. 6, 1683, at Dresden. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg. In 1705 he travelled in England and Holland; and in the latter country he purchased a manuscript now known as the Börner Manuscript (q. v.). From England he brought in manuscript the Hypomnesticon of Josephus, which was afterwards printed by T. A. Fabricius. In 1707 Börner was appointed professor of ethics, and in 1708 professor of Greek at Leipsic. In 1710 he was called to the theological chair, and died Nov. 19, 1753. Börner was a voluminous writer, and the titles of his writings fill about five printed pages in Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands. He edited Jacob le Long's Bibliotheca Sacra, seu Syllabus Omnium Fere Sacrae Scripturæ Editionum ac Versionum, etc. (Leipsic, 1709):—

Martin Luther's Works (22 parts fol. 1728-34):—Dissertationes Sacrae, quibus Illustrata Oracula Divina Sancti-onisque Doctrinae Cupita Explicantur (ibid. 1752). See Döring, l. c. i, 134 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 24, 67, 338, 500, 750. (B. P.)

Bornitz (Lat. Bornitius), JOHANN ERNST, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Meissen, in Saxony, April 12, 1622. He studied at Wittenberg, and died Nov. 14, 1645. He is the author of De Characterum Judaicorum Antiquitate (Wittenberg, 1643):—Exercit. Philol. ad c. iv Genes. Comm. Ult. (ibid. eod.):—De מיתות s. Suppliciis Capitalibus Ebraeorum (ibid. eod.):—De Synedrio Magno Hebraeorum (ibid. 1644):—De Crucum Ebraeorum Supplicium Fuerit et Qualis-nam Structura ejus cui Salvator Mundi fuit Affixus (ibid. eod.):—De Tikkun Sophrim (ibid. eod.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Borosnyai, SIGISMUND, a theologian of Hungary, who studied in Holland, where, in 1736, he was made doctor of theology by the university of Leyden, was in 1738 appointed professor of theology at the Reformed Gymnasium of Enyeden in Transylvania, where he died in 1779. He is the author of Disp. de Holocausto Jephthæ ad Jud. XI (Franeker, 1735):—De Testamentis ad Pias Causas (Utrecht, eod.):—Disp. I-VI de Symboli Apostolici Constitutione (ibid. 1737):—De Illustribus Veterum Scriptorum Testimoniis de Christi Doctrina (ibid. eod.):—De Sancto Fine Conditi Utriusque Testamenti (1737):—De Libris Refor. Eccles. Symbolicis (Enyeden, 1745). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Horanyi, Memor. Hungar.; Benko, Transylvania, ii, 464. (B. P.)

Borowsky, LUDWIG ERNST VON, a Protestant divine of Germany, was born June 17, 1740, at Königsberg, where he completed his studies. In 1762 he was appointed military chaplain, and in 1763, after the completion of the Seven Year's War, he went to Bartenstein as garrison preacher, where he remained till 1770, when he accepted a call to Schaaken. In 1782 he was called to his native place as pastor of the Neurosgärter congregation, and in 1793 he was a member of the commission for church and school. In 1812 he was appointed general superintendent, in 1815 first court-preacher, in 1816 bishop, and in 1829 archbishop of the Evangelical Church of Prussia. He delivered his last sermon Sept. 4, 1831, and died in the same year, November 10. Of his writings we mention, Ausgewählte Predigten und Reden von 1762-1831 (Königsberg, 1833):—Beitrag zur neuesten Geschichte der Unitarier und Socinianer:—Preussische Kirchenagenda nebst Abhandlung über die historische Entwicklung der Liturgie:—Ueber Geist und Styl Dr. M. Luthers, etc. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 173; but more especially Rindfleisch, Doctor L. E. v. Borowsky, ein Lebensbild (Dantzig, 1878). (B. P.)

Borras, FRANCISCO NICOLAS, a Spanish historical painter and priest, was born at Cocentayna in 1530. He studied under Juanes at Valencia, and executed the great altar-piece of the monastery of San Jeronimo of Gaudia. Several of his paintings are at the Escorial, at Antiniente, at Aldaya, at Cocentayna, and Valencia. He died in 1610.

Borrekenas, MATTHIEU, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1615. The following are his principal religious plates: The Crucifixion, with the Virgin, Mary Magdalene, and St. John; The Immaculate Conception; Christ bound and kneeling, with two Angels, holding the Instruments of the Passion; The Good Shepherd.

Borremann, ANTON, a Dutch theologian, an Arminian, died Oct. 21, 1683. He wrote, a Dialogue on the Poets and Prophets (Amsterdam, 1678):—Variarum Lectionum Liber (ibid. 1676):—a continuation, down to 1680, of the Annales of Voss. His works evince thought rather than rare and learned research. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borri, CHRISTOPHERO, an Italian missionary, was a native of Milan. He made a trip to the East, and on his return taught mathematics at Coimbra and Lisbon. It is said that he was ordered to Madrid by the king of Spain, who was informed that he had found means of determining the longitude by the declination of the needle. But his science led to his being suspected, it is thought, by his society, which he excluded from his regard in order to occupy himself in matters foreign to this organization. He afterwards entered the order of Cistercians, and died May 24, 1632. He wrote, under the pseudonym of Onuphrius, Doctrina de Tribus Coelis; Aereo, Siderio, et Empyreo (Lisbon, 1641):—Relazione a Sua Santità della Cose delle Indie Orientali, di Giappone, della China, dell' Etiopia, dell' Isola di San Lorenzo, del regno di Monomolupa, e della Terra Incognita Australe (Rome, 1631); with observations upon the manner in which the missionaries attempted to civilize the natives. He also corrected the charts used by navigators. This work was translated into French by P. Antony de la Croix (Rennes, 1631; in Latin, Vienna, 1633; in English by Robert Astley, London, eod.). This last translation was inserted by Churchill in vol. ii of his Collection of Voyages. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borriini, SPLANDIANO, an Italian theologian and poet, was born at Lodi, and lived in the early half of the 17th century. He wrote Peregrinaggio di Gerusalemme, nel quale Sotto Varj Coccidenti, Accorsi a' Peregrini, si Figurano i Pericoli, Disturbi, etc. (Rome, 1610). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bortomeo, ANDREA, an Italian theologian and missionary of Milan, entered the order of Theatines in 1637, and in 1652 visited as missionary Mingrelia and Georgia. Eleven years later he went to Rome, where he was appointed purveyor of this mission. He died in 1683, leaving Relazione della Georgia, Mingrelia, e Missioni dei Teatini in quelle Parti (Rome, 1704). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borromini, FRANCESCO, an eminent Italian architect, was born at Bissone, in the diocese of Como, in 1599. At the age of sixteen he visited Rome and studied architecture under his relative, Carlo Maderno. He copied the designs of the latter, and sculptured the cherubim at the sides of the small doors of St. Peter's, with the baskets and festoons above the arches, which are the only sculptures he ever executed. On the death of his instructor he was appointed architect of St. Peter's, under the direction of Bernini. He executed the façade of the Church of St. Agnes in the Piazza Nuova, which is considered his best performance, and gained him so much reputation that the king of Spain appointed him to enlarge and modernize his palace at Rome. He was also employed in the Barberini palace; erected the church and monasteries of the Madonna de Strada Giulia; erected the palace of Rufina at Frascati, and embellished the Spada palace. He died at Rome in 1667. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borrow, GEORGE, a noted Bible student, was born in Norfolk, England, in 1803. He was the son of an officer of the British army, and was intended for the law, but he early devoted his attention to literature. Having acquired a knowledge of the Gypsy language from some bands which encamped near Norwich, he commenced travelling among them and for years led a wandering life. In 1833 he became an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and labored in Russia. While in St. Petersburg he edited the New Testament in the Chinese Tartar language. He then pursued his Bible labors in Spain, and was twice imprisoned for circulating the Scriptures. While in Spain he translated the New Testament into the Gypsy language.

After this he returned to England and gave himself up to literary pursuits, the first result of which was a book entitled Zincali, or an Account of the Gypsies, published in 1841. His researches showed that the Gypsy language was closely connected with the Sanscrit. In 1843 he published The Bible in Spain, a work that was warmly praised by Sir Robert Peel in the House of Commons, and of which the (Lond.) Quarterly Review said, "As a book of adventures, it seems about the most extraordinary which has appeared in our or any other language for a long time past." Mr. Borrow wrote several other works of great popularity, such as Lavengro, the Scholar, the Gypsy, and the Priest (London, 1851, 3 vols.);—and The Romany Rye. He died in London, Aug. 3, 1881. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (W. P. S.)

Borrus. See BORRI.

Borsa, ALESSANDRO MARIA, an Italian theologian, was born at Milan, Sept. 2, 1645. He entered the order of Somasques in 1661, and there performed various important functions. He died July 12, 1704, leaving Dell' Amor di Filotea, Ragionamenti di Pardenio e Teorico Descritti (Milan, 1695):—Della Morte di Filotea, Ragionamenti (ibid. 1697):—Trattato della Felicità Umana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Borthwike, Sir JOHN, a martyr of the Reformation period, was a knight in Scotland, who was well learned and answered knowingly all articles brought against him, which were many. He professed Christ, and taught the Scriptures in his family and to all who would come and hear him; for this he was apprehended and tried. The examination was a long and tedious one, but ended in the burning of this godly man in 1558. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, v, 607.

Bortum is a kind of clerical dress; if of gold, it was called aurifrigium ("clamydes geminis aurifrigiis, quæ vulgariter bortum dicuntur"—Mart. Thesaur. Anecd. iv, 538).

Borum, John, a Baptist minister, was born in Notoway County, Va., Dec. 5, 1775, and removed with his father's family in 1805 to Wilson County, Tenn., where he lived the remainder of his life. He united with the Church in 1805, and soon after began to preach; the bounds of his labors, in his early ministry, embracing Brush Creek, Round Lick, Spring Creek, Salem, and many other churches. He was among the original founders of the Salem Association. As a preacher, he was experimental rather than doctrinal, and he wielded great influence in all the region where he resided. The family is a Baptist one as far back as it can be traced. He died May 30, 1844. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Bapt. Ministers, p. 41-45. (J. C. S.)

Borum, William, a Baptist minister, son of John (q.v.), was born in Wilson County, Tenn., May 24, 1828. He united with the Church Dec. 28, 1843; pursued his studies at the Union Academy and at Marion Collegiate Institute; was licensed in 1850, and ordained in June, 1855. After preaching for a few years in his native state, he removed in 1859 to Sevier County, Ark., and preached in that county and the counties adjoining. He assisted in the organization of several churches, and baptized a large number of persons. At one time he was pastor of four churches. His death from consumption took place at his home in Sevier County, Feb. 12, 1879. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Bapt. Ministers, p. 81-83. (J. C. S.)

Borysthènes (or the Dnieper), a river of Russia, was universally revered by the ancient Russians as holy, and in the holy city of Kiev, situated on its right bank, nearly all the gods of the Slavic race were at one time assembled.

Borzzone, LUCIANO, a Genoese historical and portrait painter, was born in 1590, and studied under his uncle, Filippo Bertolotti. In San Domenico, at Genoa, there is a picture by him of the Presentation in the Tem- ple, and in San Spirito the Baptism of Christ. He died in 1645. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bos, CORNELIUS. See BUS.

Bos, JEROME. See BOSCHE.

Bosa, an early English prelate, was a pupil of St. Hilda, at Stroneshall, and in 678 was appointed to the bishopric of Deira (Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv, 12), with his see at York. In 686, on Wilfrid's restoration, Bosa was expelled, but returned on the second exile of Wilfrid, in 691, and retained his see until his death, in 704 (or 705). He is highly praised by Alcuin, who says that he was a monk. Acca, bishop of Hexham, was brought up in his household. He is honored as a confessor, March 13.

Bosc, Jacques du, a French theologian, was born in Normandy, and lived in the early half of the 17th century. He published L'Hométe Femme (with Preface by D'Abiancourt, 1632):—L'Eucharistie Paisible (1647):—Jésus Christ Mort pour Tous (1651):—Le Pacificateur Apostolique (1663). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosc, Pierre du, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Bayeux in 1623. Louis XIV having published an edict against the Calvinists, Du Bosc was delegated, in 1668, to hear remonstrances on this subject. He died at Rotterdam in 1692. He wrote, Des Sermons (Rotterdam, 1671, 1692):—Des Lettres, with a sketch of his Life by Legendre (1698; a new augmented edition, 1716). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosca, PIETRO PAOLO, a Milanese, one of the oblati of St. Ambrose, and prefect of the Ambrosian Library, was born in 1632, and died April 22, 1699, leaving, De Origine et Statu Biblioth. Ambros. (Milan, 1672, 4to):—Martyrologium Mediolanensis Eccles. cum Annot. (1695, 4to). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosch, CORNELIUS. See BUS.

Bosche (or Bos), Jerome, a Dutch painter and engraver, was born at Bois-le-Duc about 1470. One of his best pictures represents Our Saviour delivering the Ancient Patriarchs from Hell. He painted several other works of a serious nature, among which were Christ bearing the Cross, and the Flight into Egypt, in the Church of Bois-le-Duc. The following are some of his principal works: The Temptation of St. Anthony (dated 1522); The Last Judgment—Christ appears in the air, seated on a rainbow, and on each side of him are two angels, sounding trumpets, with labels bearing this inscription, "Hic est dies quem fuit; surgite mortui, venite ad judicium;" The Baptism of Christ by St. John. He died in 1580.

Bosche, Peter van, a learned Flemish theologian, was born at Brussels, Oct. 19, 1686. He early entered the Jesuit order, taught philosophy in the college of Antwerp, and died Nov. 24, 1736. He was one of the Bollandist writers, and left several other works, for which see Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Böschenstein, JOHANN, a German professor of Hebrew, was born at Esslingen in 1472. On account of his knowledge of the Hebrew language, which he taught at Ingolstadt in 1489, and where Andreas Osiannder attended his lectures, some believed him to be a converted Jew. From Augsburg he was called by duke Frederick the Wise, in 1518, as professor of Hebrew and Greek, to Wittenberg; from thence he went to Nuremberg, Heidelberg, Antwerp, and Zurich; and finally returned again to Augsburg, where he died after 1539. He was the greatest teacher after Reuchlin, and many of the reformers, as Luther, Melancthon, Zwingli, Eik, etc., were among his hearers. He wrote, Elementale Introductionum in Hebraicis Literas, Teutonica et Hebr.

Legendas (Augsburg, 1514; Wittenberg, 1518; Cologne, 1521):—Rudimenta Hebraica Mos. Kimchi (Augsburg, 1520). He is also the author of some hymns, the best of which is his Da Jesus an dem Kreutze stund (Engl. transl. by Jacobi in Psalmody Germanica, i, 17, "When Christ hung on the cursed tree"), which he composed in 1515, and which was sung before the Reformation in some churches during the Passion-week. See Köhler, Beyträge zur deutschen Kunst- und Literaturgeschichte (Leipsic, 1794), ii, 1-23; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 127; Stein-schneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 23 sq.; Geiger, Das Studium der Hebräischen Sprache in Deutschland (Breslau, 1870), p. 48 sq.; Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, i, 219 sq.; ii, 469 sq. (B. P.)

Boschi, Fabrizio, a Florentine painter, was born about 1570, and studied under Passignani. One of his best works was the Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul, painted for the Church of the Certosa at Florence. In the church of the Dominican convent of S. Lucia is another excellent work, representing the Assumption of the Virgin, surrounded by angels, with the apostles below. Boschi died in 1642. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boschi, Francesco, a reputable Florentine painter, was born in 1619, and studied under his uncle, Matteo Roselli. He painted several pictures for the churches at Florence. He died in 1675. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boschini, Marco, a Venetian painter and engraver, was born in 1613, and studied under Palma. One of his best works is an altar-piece in the sacristy of San Girolamo at Venice, representing The Last Supper. He died in 1678. He was the author of A Practical Guide to the Art of Painting (Venice, 1660). See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosci. See BOSKOL.

Boscoli, Andrea, a reputable Florentine historical painter, was born in 1550, and studied under Santo di Titi. His masterpiece is a picture of St. John Preaching, in the Church of the Teresiani at Rimini. He died in 1606. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bose, JOHANN JACOB, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Leipsic in 1713. He studied at his native place, and died there as doctor of theology and archdeacon of St. Thomas, May 28, 1775. He is the author of, Dissertatt. de Potionibus Mortiferis ad Marc. xvi, 18 (Leipsic, 1736, 1737):—De Paulo in Tertium Cælum Rupto, a Sententia Clarissimi Ederi Vindicata, ad Locum 2 Cor. xii, 14 (ibid. 1740):—De Sponsæ Ornatu Splendoris Ecclesiæ N. F. Symbolo ad Esa. xlii, 18 (ibid. 1736):—De Carmelo Monte et Deo (ibid. 1740):—De Cultu Dei in Silentio, ad Ps. lxxv, 2 (ibid. 1756). See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 129. (B. P.)

Bosel was the first bishop of Worcester, that see having been created by the division of the great Mercian diocese in 679 (or 680). He governed the see until 691, when, his health having given way, Ostor was appointed to succeed him. Bosel's name is attached to a Malmesbury charter of 681, and to one of 685—both, however, of questionable authority.

Boselli, Antonio, a reputable Italian sculptor and painter, flourished at Bergamo about 1500. As a sculptor he attained some distinction, and there are a number of his works in the Bergamese churches. As a painter he executed a number of works for the churches of his native city, among which is a picture in San Cristoforo, representing St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. Luke. In the Church of the Augustines there is one of his works, representing the Virgin and Infant in the Clouds, with Saints below. It is believed he assisted Pomponio Amalteo, in the Friuli, from 1534 to 1536. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boselli, Bonaventura, an Italian Minorite of Sestola, in Modena, was born in 1598. He was a good Arabic scholar, and spent most of his time at Rome, where he died Aug. 1, 1666. He wrote, Dilucidatio Speculi Verum Ostendentis pro Achmed Filio zin Alabedin, contra Politorem Speculi (Rome, 1625, and often):—Catalogus Haeresium et Haeticorum (ibid. 1661):—Catalogus Conciliorum Catholicorum et Heterodoxorum a Calvinistis et Lutheranis Celebratorum (ibid. eod.):—Compendio Istoricco della Basilica de' Santi Apostoli (ibid. 1663). See Mazzuchelli, Scrittori d' Italia; Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bosham, HERBERT. See HERBERT OF BOSHAM.

Boshasp, in Persian mythology, is one of the seven Erzsdevs which Ahriman places opposed to the Amahaspands of Ormuzd. This dev killed the primordial bull Abudad by his bewitching power, and battled with Shriwer, the genius of light.

Bosher, THOMAS, an English Methodist preacher, entered the New Connection ministry from London in 1803, and travelled in eleven circuits. His labors were acceptable, but his health failed in 1822, and after being a supernumerary one year he died at Hull, March 14, 1825, aged forty-nine years. See Minutes of the Conference, 1825.

Bosio, Antonio, a famous antiquarian, who flourished between 1570 and 1629, is known for his great undertaking of deciphering the catacombs. For thirty years he was occupied with his grand work, and died before he completed it, which was afterwards published in 1632 by the chevalier Albrandino, under the title Roma Sotteranea. Enriched by the additions of Savarani, Aringhi, and Bottari, it was published again in 1637, 1651, 1659, 1737, 1747, 1753. See Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bosio, Ferdinando, an Italian minister, was born in 1823. He was educated for the priesthood, and at twenty years of age took the highest scholarship, and entered the seminary at Milan, under the charge of the bishop. At this time he was ordered to give up the reading of certain anti-Romanist publications, but refused. He subsequently received ordination as a priest, and in 1850 was appointed professor of rhetoric in the seminary at Mantua. He now manifested so strong an antipathy to the Austrian occupation, and gave such vent to his patriotic sentiments, that he was tried and condemned to death. The sentence was afterwards commuted to imprisonment for twelve years, and Ferdinando Bosio found himself in the Castle of Josephstadt, on the Bohemian confines. During this imprisonment his system received a shock which ultimately ended his life. The emperor Francis Joseph, on his public entry into Milan in 1856, granted an amnesty to a large number of Italian prisoners, and Bosio was among the number; the latter accordingly returned to Italy, after his five years of suffering. He was now sent as a parish priest to Casalromano, where he remained until 1861. The reading of a copy of the Scriptures sold him by a Wesleyan colporteur led to his conversion to Protestantism. He became a student, an evangelist, and finally, in 1866, a Wesleyan Methodist minister. The last eight years of his life were spent in Milan, where he died, July, 1879. Bosio, though modest and retiring, was a man of independent thought and strong moral courage. His preaching was that of a studious, thoughtful man, and was full of nervous force and earnest appeal. He was esteemed and beloved by his brethren. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 56.

Bosio, Jacopo, of Milan, a knight of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, was intrusted with the care of religious affairs in Malta at the end of the 16th century. He wrote a History of the True Cross, from the period of its discovery under Constantine the Great:—and an Account of the Order of the Knights of Malta. The best edition is that of Rome (1621, 3 vols. fol.).

Boso, Cardinal, an English ecclesiastic, nephew of Nicholas Breakspear (pope Adrian IV), was probably a native of Hertfordshire. He was made a cardinal by that pope in December, 1155, and was cardinal priest of the following churches in Rome: Cosma and Damian, Crosses of Jerusalem, Prudentiana, and of Pastor. He was instrumental in making Alexander III pope with the suffrages of nineteen cardinals, against the anti-pope Victor IV. Boso died in 1180. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 42.

Boson, a theologian of Normandy, was born in 1065 in the town of Montevilliers. He entered the abbey of Bec at the age of twenty-three, and in 1093 accompanied St. Anselm to his bishopric at Canterbury, and assisted him at the council of Clermont in 1095. Returning to the abbey of Bec in 1115, he was appointed prior, then abbot of Bec. This made him the object of persecution by those who, envious of his growing influence, wished to do something to lead to his being suspected by the king of England. He died in 1136. He wrote, in the form of a letter, Defense de l'Ordre Monastique. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosphorus, bishop of Colonia, in Cappadocia Secunda, was a confidential friend and correspondent of Gregory Nazianzen and Basil the Great. His episcopate must have commenced in 360, and continued at least forty-eight years. He had great influence over the gentler nature of Gregory, who, however, speaks of him in terms of the highest respect, both for the purity of his faith and the sanctity of his life. Bosphorus persuaded Gregory to remain at Nazianzum after his father's death, and accept the unwelcome see of Constantinople. Gregory bitterly complained of his excessive importunity, but yielded. In 383 Bosphorus was accused of unsoundness in the faith, which greatly distressed Gregory, who wrote urgently in his behalf to Theodore of Tyana, Nectarius, and Eutropius. Bosphorus attended the second Ecumenical Council at Constantinople in 381; and Palladius speaks with gratitude of the sympathy shown by him towards the bishops banished, in 406, for adhesion to Chrysostom.

Bosquet, FRANÇOIS DE, a French prelate, was born at Narbonne, May 28, 1605. He first studied law, and attained great eminence in that profession, inasmuch that the king, in recompense for his services as intendant of Guienne and Languedoc, granted him the title of counsellor of state. When he was thus on the high-road to the greatest posts, he voluntarily, in 1650, resigned every situation which he held, and was made bishop of Lodève, by the cession, in his favor, of Jean Plantavit de la Pause, his friend. In the same year he was deputed by the clergy to Rome, to treat of the affair of the Five Propositions. In 1657, he was appointed to the see of Montpellier. He died June 24, 1676, leaving, Inocentii III Epistol. Libri cum Notis (Toulon, 1635, fol.):—Pontificum Romanorum qui à Gallia Oriundi in ea Sederunt, Historia, 1305 to 1394 (Paris, 1632, 8vo); Baluze has given an augmented and corrected edition Vite pap. Aven. 1693:—Michaëlis Pselli Synopsis Legum (ibid. 1632, 8vo):—Historia Ecclesie Gallicane (best edition that of 1636, 4to):—a Life of St. Fulcran, bishop of Lodève, and other works. See Biog. Universelle, v, 220; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosquier, PHILIPPE, a Flemish theologian, was born at Mons, in Hainault, in 1561. He studied theology at the university of Paris, entered the order of the Recollets, and was sent to Rome, where he gained by his talents the favor of the cardinal Baronius. He died at Avesnes in 1636. Bosquier acquired the reputation of a good preacher, although his sermons were somewhat faulty. His most desirable productions are, Tragédie Nouvelle, dite le Petit Rusoir des Ornéments Mondains, en laquelle toutes les Misères de nostre Temps sont Attribuées tant aux Hérésies qu'aux Ornéments Superflus du Corps (Mons, 1588 or 1589):—L'Académie des Pêcheurs (ibid. 1596):—Le Fouet de l'Académie des Pêcheurs (Arras, 1597). The author himself has given a complete edition of his works (Cologne, 1621). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boss, a projecting ornament placed at the intersections of the ribs of ceilings, whether vaulted or flat; also used as a termination to weather-mouldings of doors, windows, etc., called then a Corbel or Dripstone Termination; and in various other situations, either as an ornamental stop, or finishing, to mouldings, or to cover them where they intersect each other; but their principal application is to vaulted ceilings. In Norman work the vaults are most commonly without bosses until the latter part of the style, and when used they are generally not very prominent nor very richly carved. In the succeeding styles they are used in profusion, though less abundantly in the Early English than in the Decorated and Perpendicular, and are generally elaborately carved. The Early English bosses are usually sculptured with foliage characteristic of the style, among which small figures and animals are sometimes introduced, but occasionally a small circle of mouldings, corresponding with those of the ribs, is used in the place of a carved boss. In the Decorated style the bosses usually consist of foliage, heads, animals, etc., or of foliage combined with heads and animals, and sometimes shields charged with armorial bearings are used. Many of the Perpendicular bosses bear a strong resemblance to the Decorated, but there is generally the same difference in the execution of the foliage that is found in all the other features of the style. Shields with armorial bearings are used abundantly in Perpendicular work, and there is considerably greater variation in the bosses of this style than any other; sometimes they are made to represent a flat sculptured ornament attached to the under-side of the ribs; sometimes they resemble small pendants, which are occasionally pierced, as in the south porch of Dursley Church, Gloucestershire, but it is impossible to enumerate all the varieties.

Bosschaert, THOMAS WILLEBORTS, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Berg-op-Zoom in 1613, and studied at Antwerp under Gerard Segers. After remaining at Rome four years, he returned to Flanders, where he soon gained distinction by several pictures painted for the churches of the Low Countries. There is a work by him at the Hague, representing an emblematical subject of peace and war; and in the Church of St. James at Bruges is another composition, representing the martyrdom of that saint. There are also some of his works in the Church of the Capuchins at Brussels. He died Jan. 23, 1656. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosse, ABRAHAM, a French engraver, was born at Tours about 1610. He studied at Paris, and became professor of perspective. He published several works on drawing and engraving. The following are some of his principal works: The Holy Family; The King and Queen Offering their Vows to the Virgin; Six Plates of the History of the Rich Man and Lazarus; Preparation of a Christian Soldier for a Spiritual Warfare. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bossius, JACQUES, a Flemish engraver, was born about 1520, and resided chiefly at Rome. The following are his principal works: St. Peter and St. John Curing the Lame Man; four, of The Four Evangelists; The Portrait of M. Angelo Buonarroti.

Bossler, DAVID, a minister of the German Reformed Church, was born in the vicinity of Selinsgrove, Pa., April 15, 1800. He joined the Reformed Church at fourteen, and at eighteen commenced the study of theology at Hagerstown, Md., under Rev. James R. Reily. He was licensed in 1821, and accepted a call from the Emmitsburg charge, which included several neighboring places. In 1829 he was appointed an agent to collect funds for the theological seminary at York. He served his first charge twelve years. In 1835 he accepted a charge at Harrisburg, Pa., where his field of labor at no time included less than six congregations. In addition to this work he was for many years agent for the Dauphin County Bible Society. In 1852 he became pastor of York charge with six congregations. He was very successful in collecting funds for Church enterprises. He was compelled by failing health to resign his congregation in 1868, and died in York, May 14, 1875. He was a man of great zeal, and unselfish fidelity to the Church. By nature generous and sympathizing, he was a man of exemplary piety. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 154.

Bossmann, JOHANN, a Roman Catholic prelate of Germany, was born Sept. 21, 1797, at Keppelen, on the Lower Rhine. He studied at Cologne, and received holy orders in 1821. After having served as pastor in several places, he was called in 1852 to Münster as regent of the clerical seminary. In 1858 he was consecrated as bishop of Dioklea in partibus infidelium and suffragan of Münster. In 1866 he was made cathedral-dean, and in 1871 doctor of theology. He died Aug. 4, 1875, at Münster. (B. P.)

Bosso, CARLO, an Italian theologian and poet, was a Barnabite, and had been charged with important missions. He died Nov. 1, 1649, leaving several works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosso (or Bossio), GIOVANNI ANGELO, a learned Italian theologian, was a member of the order of Barnabites, in which he performed various functions, and of which he became general. He died at Rome in 1665. He wrote, De Triplici Jubilæi Privilegio (Pisa, 1635, 1670):—Disceptiones Morales de Jurisdictione Episcoporum (Milan, 1638):—Moralia Varia ad Usum utriusque Fori (Lyons, 1649, 1651):—Methodus Serruendi Deo (Milan, 1656). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bosso (or Bossus), MATTEO, an Italian writer, was born at Verona in 1428. He was canon regular of St. John of Lateran, and died at Padua in 1502, leaving, among other works, De Veris ac Salutaribus Animi Gaudiis:—De Sapientie Cultu:—De Tolerandis Adversis, etc.:—four hundred and sixty-five of his letters and six sermons under the title, Recuperationes Fesulanæ, dedicated to cardinal Giovanni de' Medici (Bologna, 1492). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v., Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bossu (Lat. Bossulus), JACQUES LE, a French theologian, was born at Paris in 1546. He entered the order of St. Benedict, received the degree of doctor at the Sorbonne, and was tutor to the cardinal of Guise. His affection for his former pupil led him, during the troubles of the League, to favor ardently the projects of the house of Lorraine. He especially did this by his preaching at Paris and Nantes, and it was partially due to his efforts that Nantes revolted against royal authority. He claimed that Henry III was justly punished for his crimes by James Clement, and that the fact of Henry IV being a heretic removed from him all claim to the crown. The success of this monarch obliged Le Bossu to take refuge at Rome, where he attached himself to cardinal Alexandrin and a Spaniard, Francis Pegua, auditor of the tribunal, who by his writings had opposed the admission of Henry IV into the heart of the Church. Thanks to the protection of Pegua, Le Bossu was appointed by pope Clement VIII consultant of the society of Auxiliis. He distinguished himself by his regularity of conduct and purity of manner, and at the succession of Paul V manifested a desire to return to France; but this pontiff, highly appreciating his talents, opposed his leaving, and accorded to him large pensions, with permission to dispose of them as he saw fit at his death. Le Bossu used this favor in behalf of the poor. He died at Rome, June 7, 1626. He published, Les Devis d'un Catholique et d'un Politique (Nantes, 1589), in which work he strongly opposed the house of Bourbon:—Sermon Funèbre pour la Mémoire de F. Edm. Bourgoing (ibid., 1590):—Sermon Funèbre pour l'Anniversaire des Princes Henri et Louis de Lorraine (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bossuet, JACQUES BÉNIGNE, a French theologian and prelate, nephew of the illustrious bishop of Meaux of the same name, was born in 1664. He is best known by his participation in the condemnation of the book which Fénelon, archbishop of Cambrai, published under the title, Explication des Maximes des Saints. Just as this work was published, Bossuet and Philippeaux, his tutor, were about to leave Rome to return to France, but Bossuet received orders from the bishop of Meaux to remain and condemn the book. The correspondence which the nephew had on this subject with his uncle would fill not less than three quarto volumes. In this affair Bossuet showed so much violence that he injured his cause to some extent. On his return to France, he was appointed abbot of St. Lucien of Beauvais, and in 1716 bishop of Troyes. Besides the works of his uncle, of which he was the publisher, he published, Mandement Relatif à l'Office de Saint Grégoire VII (1729):—Missale Sanctæ Ecclesiæ Trecentis (1736). The innovations contained in the last-mentioned work excited universal complaint, and provoked the censure of the archbishop of Sens, who condemned him by a mandate, April 20, 1737. This caused a dispute, which the bishop of Troyes finally terminated by some concessions. Bossuet died at Paris, July 12, 1743. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bossutus, GOSWIN, a French monk of the order of Cistercians, a chanter, lived in the early half of the 13th century, at the abbey of Villers. This abbey, only the ruins of which remain, was situated in a valley of Brabant, about three leagues from the city of Gembloux. Bossutus wrote, in two books, the life of Arnulphe Cornibant, a lay brother of the abbey of Villers, which Francis Moschus published at Arras in 1600. The life of the monk Abundus, of the same abbey, is attributed to him. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bost, Jean Augustin, a French philanthropist, was born at Moutiers-Grandval, in Berne, in 1817. He was apprenticed to a bookbinder at Geneva, but love for music led him to Paris to be instructed by the great masters there. Under the influence of pastor L. Meyer he was induced to study for the ministry, and the young artist, being twenty-three years of age, passed one year of study at Sainte-Foy and two years at Montauban. But bodily infirmities obliged him to abandon his studies, and he went to Laforce, a small village in the Dordogne. The pulpit there being vacant, Bost administered to the spiritual wants of the people, and his services were highly appreciated. Without having completed his studies, the Free Church, which then originated (1844), received him among her ministers. Here Bost founded the many asylums which made his name so famous. He died in 1881. See Bouvier, Le Pasteur John Bost, Fondateur des Asiles de Laforce (Paris, 1881); Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bost, Paul Ami Isaac David, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born at Geneva, June 10, 1790. His father, a member of the Moravian Church, sent his son to Neuwid, where he spent four years. After his return, he pursued a theological course at his native place, and was ordained in 1814. In 1816 he accepted a position as assistant at Moutiers-Grandval, in the canton of Berne, where he preached for two years. Feeling that a congregation was too limited a field for him, he entered, in 1818, the services of the London Continental Society. After his first journeys in Switzerland and Alsace, he left, in 1819, the Church of Geneva, defending his course in Genève Religieuse en Murs 1819. In 1825 he returned to Geneva, and was appointed pastor of the Free Church of Bourg-de-Four. The ministers of the national Church spoke and wrote against the schismatics, which caused Bost's Défense de Ceux des Fidèles de Genève qui se sont Constitués en Église Indépendante, contre les Sectaires de cette Ville. The excitement was great. Bost was accused of libel. On Jan. 4, 1826, the matter was brought before the court. Bost pleaded his own case, and was acquitted. The procurator-general made an appeal, and the matter was brought before the supreme court. Bost pleaded again for himself, and was acquitted of the accusation for libel, but was fined five hundred francs "for offensive expressions against an official corporation" (the Compagnie des Pasteurs). On this occasion the separated members of the Free Church were brought into closer contact with each other, and Malan, especially, gave expression to his brotherly love towards the accused. Bost soon resigned his position in the Church of Bourg-de-Four, and organized a new congregation at Carouge, near Geneva. In 1838 he founded a politico-religious paper, L'Espérance, which, together with his congregation at Carouge, he soon gave up. In 1840 he was again received into the national Church of Geneva, and accepted a call to Asnières, Bourges, and finally to Melan, where he was appointed preacher to the prisoners of the Maison Centrale, and labored there until 1848. Between 1849 and 1851 we find him at Geneva, Nîmes, and Paris. The last years of his life he spent with his son at Laforce, where he died, Dec. 14, 1874. Bost left Mémoires pouvant Servir à l'Histoire Religieuse des Églises Protestantes de la Suisse et de la France (1854-56, 2 vols.). Besides the works mentioned, he wrote, Histoire des Frères de Bohême et de Moravie (1831, 2 vols.) :—Sur la Primauté de Pierre et Son Épiscopat (1832, 3 vols.) :—Histoire Générale de l'Établissement du Christianisme (1834, 4 vols.), based upon Blumhardt's history of missions :—Les Prophètes Protestants (1847). See Guers, Premier Réveil à Genève (1871), Semaine Religieuse, Jan. 1875; Église Libre, April 9, 1875; Ruffet, in Lichtenberger's Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Barde, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. (2d ed.), s. v. (B. P.)

Boston, JOHN, an English monk of St. Edmundsbury, is supposed to have died in 1410. He was one of the first collectors of the lives of English writers and the precursor of Leland, Bale, and Pits. His work was entitled Speculum Cœnobitarum (Oxford, 1722). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bostra, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Bostranum), was held about 227, in consequence of the errors of Beryllus, bishop of the place, who denied that our Lord Jesus Christ had any proper existence before the Incarnation, and maintained that he then only began to be God when he was born of the Blessed Virgin, and, moreover, that he was God only because the Father dwelt in him as in the prophets. Origen was charged with the office of convincing him of his errors, in which, after several conferences, he succeeded, and brought him back to the Catholic faith (Euseb. Hist. Eccl. v, 33). See Labbe, Concil. i, 651.

Another Council of Bostra was held, at which Origen refuted some Arabians, who said that the souls of men died with their bodies and came to life after the resurrection.

Bostwick, David, a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Milford, Conn., in 1721. He entered Yale College, but before graduating left, and completed his studies with Burr at Newark, and was for some time his assistant in the academy. He was ordained by the New York Presbytery, and installed pastor of the Church at Jamaica, L. I., Oct. 9, 1745. Davies heard him preach before the synod in 1753, and said of him, "I think he has the best style of extempore preaching of any man I ever heard." He had been appointed on a mission to Virginia and North Carolina, but he never went. He continued at Jamaica ten years, enjoying the affections of his people and the town. At a meeting of the freeholders in 1753, only three dissented from giving to the elders and deacons certain lands and the right to sell them for the support of a Presbyterian minister forever. His relation being dissolved at Jamaica, he was installed in New York, and died there, Nov. 12, 1763. A sermon which he preached before the synod in 1758 was printed, with the title, Self Disclaimed and Christ Exalted. As a preacher he was uncommonly popular, his gifts being of the highest order. After his death, his treatise, entitled, A Fair and Rational Vindication of the Right of Infants to the Ordinance of Baptism was published in New York and reprinted in London. (W. P. S.)

Bostwick, Gideon, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at New Milford, Conn., Sept. 21, 1742 (O. S.). Rev. Nathaniel Taylor, the Congregational minister of his native town, gave him his preparation for college, and he graduated at Yale in 1762. Great Barrington, Conn., became his permanent residence in consequence of his accepting the charge of a classical school recently established there. For some time he officiated as lay reader in the Episcopal Church at that place, and this ultimately led him to become a candidate for orders. He repaired to England, and was ordained deacon and priest by the bishop of London, and returned in 1770 to Connecticut. In June he became rector of St. James's Church, Great Barrington, which position he occupied until the end of his life, June 13, 1793. St. Luke's Church in Lanesborough was also under his supervision during the same period. A few years before his death he preached a part of the time in a church at Hudson, N. Y., in connection with his rectorship at Great Barrington. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 274.

Bostwick, Mary, wife of John Bostwick, was a minister of the Society of Friends (Orthodox). She died at the Plains, Ulster Co., N. Y., April 23, 1836, aged forty-eight years. See The Friend, ix, 280.

Bostwick, William W., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Whitestown, Oneida Co., N. Y., Feb. 19, 1797. He attended the Auburn Academy, and completed his academic studies with Rev. Dr. McDonald at Fairfield, Herkimer Co. When the latter, in 1821, took charge of the academy at Geneva, Mr. Bostwick again placed himself under his instruction, completing his theological course three years after, and teaching meanwhile. He was ordained deacon in 1825, and in June entered upon a career of missionary labor, to which he devoted twenty years of his life. His first field of labor was in the counties of Yates and Steuben, officiating at Penn Yan, Wayne, Tyrone, Hopeton, Pleasant Valley, Painted Post, Prattstown, Jerusalem, Dresden, and Bologna. In the beginning of 1827 his labors were extended into Alleghany County, to which, although forty miles distant from his residence at Bath, he ministered one half the time for the next eighteen months. In 1828 he made missionary visits to Olean and Ellicottville, Cattaraugus Co. In 1840 he officiated in Wayne, Hornellsville, and other villages. In the summer of 1842 Mr. Bostwick went to the West, and in the autumn assumed the pastoral care of the Church at Joliet, Ill., where he died, Oct. 6, 1845. Though not brilliant, he was a very earnest and useful minister. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 531.

Boswell, James A., a Baptist minister, was born at New Chester, now Hill, N. H., in 1796. He was converted in Hebron in 1810, and licensed to preach in 1814; studied theology with Rev. Jeremiah Chaplin in Danvers, Mass., where he was ordained in 1819, on the removal of Dr. Chaplin to Waterville, Me., to take charge of the new Baptist institution in that place, now Colby University. After remaining in Danvers two years, he resigned on account of impaired health. In 1824 he moved to Middletown, Conn., where he was pastor two years, and then was pastor in Pomfret four years. He went in 1830 to Bow, N. H., and was pastor six years. After preaching for a short time in Alexandria and Gilmanton, he moved to Newton in 1842, where he was pastor three years, and then resigned. He died Sept. 14, 1847. (J. C. S.)

Boswell, John (1), an English clergyman, became prebendary of Wells in 1786. He published, A Method of Study, or a Useful Library, with a Catalogue of Books (Lond. 1788, 2 vols.), and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Boswell, John (2), a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Bladen County, N. C., Jan. 30, 1798. He was converted in 1810, and was licensed to preach and received into the Alabama Conference in 1811, in which he performed regular work till a few years previous to his death, when he took a superannuated relation, and thus continued to the close of his life in 1853. Mr. Boswell was remarkable in his self-taught acquisition of knowledge, and in his exemplary life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 478.

Boswell, William, a Baptist minister, was born in Philadelphia, Jan. 8, 1776. His early life was devoted to business, but, having become a Christian, he united, in 1801, with the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia. He was licensed some time afterwards by the Church in Burlington, N. J., with which he had connected himself. He was ordained Sept. 6, 1809, as pastor of the Trenton and Lamberton Church, where he had a successful ministry. He was state librarian of New Jersey for several years, and chaplain to the state penitentiary. He died June 11, 1833. (J. C. S.)

Bosworth, F., an English Baptist minister, was born in 1795. He began his ministry in 1841 in Canada, where he spent several years in frequent and close fellowship with Dr. Benjamin Davies. Returning to England, Mr. Bosworth became successively the pastor of the Churches at Dover and Old King Street, Bristol; in which latter place he held the position of classical tutor in the college. From Bristol, after a protracted illness, he removed to the Church at South Street, Exeter, where he labored ten years as pastor, and two additional years with the associated labors of the Rev. Sydney W. Bowser, when failing health forced him to resign the pastorate. He died Aug. 4, 1881. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1882, p. 295.

Bosworth, Oliver E., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Northampton, Mass., in 1808 or 1809. He experienced religion in 1830, and in 1832 was admitted into the New England Conference, in which he labored with zeal and diligence till his decease in 1835. Mr. Bosworth possessed a clear understanding, was conspicuous and pointed in his preaching, dignified and graceful in manner, deep and uniform in piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 349.

Botanomancy (Borān, an herb, and μαντεῖον, a prophecy), divination by means of plants. It was practiced among the ancient Greeks by writing one's name on herbs and leaves, and then exposing them to the winds; and as many letters as remained were placed together in a word or words, which formed the answer to the inquiry. See DIVINATION.

Both, ANDREW and JOHN, brothers, were eminent Dutch painters, and natives of Utrecht, John, the elder, being born about 1610. They first studied under their father, and afterwards under A. Bloemaert. The works of these artists had gained them a wide reputation, when Andrew was accidentally drowned in 1645. John died in 1650. The following are some of their principal works: St. Anthony Praying, with a Skull; St. Francis with a Crucifix before him; Two Beggars; two of Dutch Merry-makings.

Bothwell, ADAM, a Scottish bishop, was born at Meldrumsheugh, was a Burgess of Edinburgh, promoted to the see of Orkney by queen Mary, Oct. 8, 1562, and was one of the four bishops who embraced the new Reformation. He officiated in the marriage of the queen with the earl of Bothwell. He was designated bishop of Orkney and abbot of Holyroodhouse. He died Aug. 23, 1570. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 226.

Bothwidi, JOHN, a Swedish prelate and theologian, was connected with the court of king Gustavus Adolphus as preacher, and he accompanied that prince in all his campaigns. He became bishop of Linköping in 1630. Being called to Germany the following year, and charged by the king with the direction of ecclesiastical affairs, he organized a consistory in the provinces of Minden and Magdeburg. He died Nov. 25, 1635. Among other works, he wrote Utrum Moscovitæ sint Christiani (Stockholm, 1620). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Botkin, JESSE, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Clinton County, O., November, 1807, of devout Christian parents. From childhood he was remarkable for his love of right, and for his correct moral deportment. He joined the Church in his twentieth year, was licensed to exhort in 1841, and in 1842 received license to preach and entered the Ohio Conference, in which he continued with faithfulness until his superannuation in 1864, which relation he sustained to the time of his demise, Feb. 25, 1870. Mr. Botkin was a practical, laborious preacher, an excellent man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 167.

Botolphus (or Botulf), an early English monk, according to the Anglo-Saxon chronicle, founded a monastery at Ikanho, in 654; a place identified, very probably, with Boston (or Botulfstowen), in Lincolnshire. He was born in England, but had gone to Germany, where he became a monk; and returned to England after acting as guardian, in a French monastery, to two sisters of king Ethelmund. Taking possession of Ikanho, he built his monastery, and instituted the rule of St. Benedict. His death was commemorated June 17, and his relics were removed by St. Ethelwold to Thorney. Upwards of fifty churches in England are dedicated to him, ten of which are in Norfolk. - See Hardy, Catalogue of Materials for Brit. Hist. i, 373-375; Parker, Cul. Ill. p. 311. He is probably the same with a reputed bishop, whose remains, with those of St. Germinus, were buried at St. Edmunds.

Botsac, Bartholomæus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Lubeck, Aug. 24, 1649. He studied at Giessen, where he was also made doctor of theology in 1682. In 1693 he was called to Copenhagen as pastor of St. Peter's; in 1702 he was made professor of theology and member of consistory, and died April 16, 1709. He wrote, Medulla Theologiæ Moralis:—Commonitorium de Fugiendo Papismo:—Theses de Clavibus Petri ad Illustrandum Matt. xvi, 19:—Von der Sünde wider den heiligen Geist, in Predigten. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Seelen, Athenæ Lubecenses; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Botsac, Johannes, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Hervorden, in Westphalia, in 1600. He studied at Leipsic, Wittenberg, Königsberg, and Rostock. In 1630 he was appointed rector and professor of Hebrew at the gymnasium in Dantzic, as well as pastor of Trinity Church. In 1631 he was made doctor of theology, and died Sept. 16, 1674. He wrote, Promptuarium Allegoriarum:—De Ecclesia Romano-papistica non Sancta:—Anabaptismus Reprobatus:—Gymnasium Christologicum de Ardua Controversia Omnipresentiæ Jesu Christi, etc. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Botsford, Edmund, a Baptist minister, was born at Woburn, Bedfordshire, England, in 1745. He was converted at Charleston, S. C., in 1766, and licensed to preach in February, 1771. His first congregation was about forty miles from Savannah, but he also preached in Georgia. He was ordained pastor at Charleston, March 14, 1773. Subsequently he served several churches in Virginia, and closed his earthly labors in Georgetown, S. C., Dec. 25, 1819. He published The Spiritual Allegory:—Sambo and Toney:—and A Dialogue between Two Servants. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 138.

Botsford, Eli C., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Jordan, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Oct. 10, 1829. He graduated from Union College in 1847, and from Princeton Theological Seminary, N. J., in 1851. In 1855 he was installed pastor of the Yorkville Presbyterian Church, New York city, where he labored till his death, Dec. 28, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 81.

Bott, Thomas, a learned English divine, was born at Derby in 1688. He was educated among the Dissenters, and became minister to a Presbyterian congregation at Spalding in Lincolnshire. Becoming dissatisfied with his position, he removed to London, and soon after the accession of George I took orders in the Church of England, and was presented to the rectory of Winburg in Norfolk. About 1725 he was presented to the benefice of Reymerston; in 1734, to the rectory of Spixworth; and in 1747, to the rectory of Edgelfield, all in Norfolk. He retired from public duty about 1750, and died at Norwich, Sept. 23, 1754. He published a number of sermons and other works, the chief of which is, Answer to the First Volume of Warburton's Divine Legislation of Moses. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bott, William H., a Baptist minister, was born at Salem, Mass., Nov. 25, 1816. At the age of fourteen he removed to Boston, where he was apprenticed to the printing business. He made a profession of his faith in 1834, in 1835 commenced preparation for college, and graduated from Brown University in 1840. Soon after leaving college he went South, and was ordained at Baltimore to the work of an evangelist. The winter of 1840-41 he spent with the Baptist Church in Alexandria, D. C., where his labors were blessed to the people. His health began to fail early in the spring of 1841, and in June he returned to Salem, where, after an illness of a few months, he died, Oct. 7, 1841. See Christian Watchman, Nov. 19, 1841. (J. C. S.)

Botta, Thomas Maria, an Italian Barnabite of Cremona, who died in 1728, is the author of Filosofia Sacra Morale (Pavia, 1698, and often):—Eruditi Morali (Milan, 1701):—Scuola del Savio Aperta (Pavia, 1704):—Adamo nel Paradiso Terrestre (ibid. eod.):—I Trionfi di Davide, etc. (ibid. 1712). See Mazzuchelli, Scrittori d' Italia; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bottala, Giovanni Maria (sometimes called Ru-fuellino), an Italian painter, was born at Savona, near Genoa, in 1613, and studied under P. da Cortona at Rome. He painted several pictures for the cardinal Sacchetti, the most important of which was the Meeting of Jacob and Esau; afterwards placed in Rome by Benedict XIV. His other works are in the churches of Milan and Geneva. He died at Milan in 1644. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bottani, Giuseppe, an Italian painter, was born at Cremona in 1717, and studied at Rome under Agostino Masucci. There is a historical piece of some merit, by Bottani, in the Church of SS. Cosmo and Damiano, at Mantua, representing St. Paolo taking leave of her Attendants. He died at Mantua in 1784. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bottari, Giovanni Gaetano, a learned Italian prelate, was born at Florence, Jan. 15, 1689. At the age of ten years he studied ancient literature and eloquence under Antonio Marie Biscioni, with whom he formed a friendly alliance, and whom, on one occasion, he aided in his labors. He applied himself to the study of the Greek language, mathematics, philosophy, and theology. The Accademia della Crusca confided to him the reprint of its large dictionary, in which work he associated the marquis Andrea Alamanni and Rosso Martini. He afterwards had charge of the printing-house of the grand-duke of Tuscany. At Rome, where he established himself in 1730, he became canon, professor of ecclesiastical history and controversy at the College of Sapienza, and prelate of the palace. He was appointed by Clement XII custodian of the library of the Vatican, and there arranged a cabinet of medals according to the wishes of the pope. His friend, Benedict XIV, gave to him the canonship of St. Marie Traustevesine, and wished to have him in his palace as chaplain. He died at Rome, June 3, 1775, leaving many works, among which we mention, Lezioni tre Sopra il Tremoto (Rome, 1733, 1748):—Del Museo Capitolino, Tomo Primo, Contenente Imagini di Uomini Illustri (ibid. 1741); vol. ii is in Latin, Musei Capitolini Tomus Secundus, Augustorum et Augustanarum Hermos Continentes, cum Observationibus Italice Primum, nunc Latine Editis (ibid. 1750). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Böttcher, Ernest Christoph, a German philanthropist, was born June 18, 1697, near Hildesheim. He gave his attention to commerce, and lost his fortune by unfortunate speculation. An English merchant furnished him the means to re-establish himself in business. He became very wealthy, and conceived the desire of being useful to his country. He established at Hanover a seminary for the preparation of teachers, and joined to this a free school for poor children. He consecrated the greater part of his immense fortune to similar enterprises. He died in 1750. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Böttcher, Julius Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 25, 1801, at Dresden, and died in 1863. He published, Hebräische Paradigmen (Dresden, 1825):—Hebräische Übungsbuch für Schulen (ibid. 1826):—Proben alttestamentlicher Schrift-erklärung nach wissenschaftlicher Sprachforschung, etc. (Leipzig, 1833):—De Inferis Rebusque Post Mortem Futuris ex Hebræorum et Græcorum Opinionibus libri ii (Dresden, 1846):—Exegetisch-kritische Aehrenlese zum alten Testament (ibid. eod.):—Neue exegetisch-kritische Aehrenlese zum alten Testament (Leipzig, 1863, 1864, 1865, 3 vols.; the third vol. was edited, with indices, by F. Mithlau, who also edited the following):—Ausführliches Lehrbuch der Hebräischen Sprache (ibid. 1866–68, 2 vols.). See Flirst, Bibl. Jud. i, 129; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 174 sq.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 112, 117, 119, 196. (B. P.)

Botterell, HENRY B., an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Liskeard, Cornwall, Jan. 30, 1814. He was converted at the age of seventeen under Rev. Simon Noall. In 1837 he entered the theological institution at Hoxton, where he remained until 1839, when he was called out to supply a vacancy in St. Austle Circuit. His next appointment was Tuckingmill, and the next Guernsey, 1841. In 1842 he was appointed to the Biggleswade Circuit, but disease seizing him, he left London, April 4, 1843, for his father's house at Liskeard, where he died, April 9, 1843. Encomiums on his character were published by Thos. Jackson and others. See Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1848, p. 712; Minutes of the British Conference, 1843.

Botticelli (family name Filipepi), SANDRO or ALESSANDRO, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Florence in 1437, and studied under Filippo Lippi; and subsequently visited Rome, where he executed several important works for Sixtus IV. His chief works were at Florence. They were a Venus attired by the Graces, and a Venus Anadyomene; also an Assumption of the Virgin, in St. Pietro Maggiore, painted for St. Matteo Palmieri, and now in England. It contains a multitude of figures in the heavens, the apostles around the tomb from which the Virgin has ascended, and the figures of Palmieri and his wife kneeling. Botticelli died in 1515. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bottomley, JOSEPH, an English Congregational minister, was born in Saddleworth, Nov. 2, 1806. He displayed great love for knowledge early in life, joined the Independent Church at the age of twenty-two, received his collegiate training at Airedale College, and in 1837 was ordained pastor of the Church at Richmond, Yorkshire. In 1840 Mr. Bottomley removed to Sowerby, near Halifax, where he labored until stricken by paralysis, of which he died, May 19, 1866. In his character were blended prudence, firmness, fidelity, and a loving spirit. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1867, p. 270.

Botts, SAMUEL, an English Wesleyan minister, commenced his itinerancy in 1782, and died July 1, 1812. He was "a man of sweet and amiable disposition and of solid piety." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1812.

Botolph. See BOTOLPHUS.

Botwine was the name of two early English ecclesiastics. (1) Abbot of Medeshamstede (or Peterborough), mentioned in a grant of Offa to Eardulf, bishop of Rochester, in 765. He attested many charters of Offa, in 774, 779, and for the last time in the Council of Cealchyth in 789. (2) Abbot of Ripon, who died in 786, and was succeeded by Albert. A letter addressed by an abbot Botwine to Lullus, archbishop of Mentz, XI.—19 may have been written by either of the two Botwines.

Bouchard, ALEXIS DANIEL, a French priest and theologian, was born at Besançon about 1680, and died there in 1758. He was prothonotary apostolic, and wrote several works, of which the most important is Summula Conciliorum Generalium (12mo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouche, HONORÉ, a French historian, who was born at Aix in 1598, and died there in 1671, is chiefly known as the author of Chorographie ou Description de la Provence, et Histoire Chronologique du même Pays (Aix, 1664, 2 vols. fol.); and Vindicia Fidei et Pietatis Provincia, etc. (ibid. eod. 8vo): being a defence of the Provençal tradition concerning the descent of St. Madeleine in that country, against Launoi, who replied to his defence, and drew from him a new edition of the work in French, augmented and corrected. See Biog. Universelle, v, 266; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Boucher, FRANÇOIS, a celebrated French painter and engraver, was born in Paris, Sept. 29, 1703, and studied under François le Moine. He died at Paris, May 3, 1770. The following are some of his etchings: Cupid Sporting; The Amiable Villager. He succeeded best in pastoral subjects. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Boucher, GILLES. See BOUCHIER.

Boucher, JEAN, a French theologian, was born in Paris about 1548. Instead of a tranquil life in the chair of a university or in the heart of an abbey, he chose to mingle in the civil disturbances which were then agitating the kingdom, and thus ended his life in exile. At first he taught literature and philosophy at Rhienis, later he taught philosophy at the college of Burgundy, then theology at the college Des Grassins, and finally became rector of the university. Prior of the Sorbonne, he was made doctor of theology and rector of St. Benedict. But the fortune which he had obtained by his merit he compromised by his fury against monarchy. In 1588 he wrote a satire against the duke of Épernon, entitled Histoire Tragique et Mémorable de Gueverston, Ancien Mignon d'Edouard II. The year following appeared his treatise, De Justa Henrici III Abdicatione e Francorum Regno (Paris, 1589). He delivered and published, during the last days of the resistance of Paris, his Sermons de la Simulée Conversion et Nullité de la Prétendu Absolution de Henri de Bourbon. Boucher died at Tournay in 1644. Besides the works already mentioned, he wrote several others, among which we notice, Apologie pour Jehan Chastel, Parisien, Exécuté à Mort, et pour les Pères et Écoliers de la Société de Jésus (1595, 1610):—AVIS contre l'appel Interjeté par le Célèbre Edmond Richer, etc. (Paris, 1612). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boucher, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French theologian, was born at Paris, Oct. 7, 1747. He was successively vicar of the parish of the Innocents, director of the Carmelite nuns, then rector of the foreign missions of St. Merry. He died Oct. 17, 1827. He wrote, Vie de la Bienheureuse Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation, dite dans le Monde Mademoiselle Acarie, etc. (Paris, 1800):—Retraite d'après les Exercices Spirituels de Saint Ignace (ibid. 1807):—Vie de Sainte Thérèse (ibid. 1810). Boucher co-operated in the publication of the Sermons of the abbot of Marolles. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boucher, JOAN, was an eminent English Baptist lady, holding position in the court of Henry VIII. In the reign of Edward VI, for holding certain opinions which were deemed heretical, through the influence of archbishop Cranmer, she was condemned to be burned at the stake. With great reluctance the gentle Edward signed the death-warrant. Her death, which "was marked by perfect fearlessness and by the full peace of God," took place May 2, 1550, in Smithfield, London. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 119. (J. C. S.)

Boucher, Joshua (1), a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in West Virginia, Oct. 23, 1782. He experienced religion in 1806, served some time as class-leader and exhorter, received license to preach in 1811, and in 1813 entered the Tennessee Conference. With the exception of two years as supernumerary, he did active work until the time of his decease, Aug. 23, 1845. He was solicitous, generous, cheerful, and deeply pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1845, p. 19.

Boucher, Joshua (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Lee County, Va., April 2, 1797. He experienced conversion in 1815 through the labors of a pious domestic slave, and in 1818 entered the Tennessee Conference. Everywhere he was laborious and successful. In 1827 he moved to Ohio and joined the Ohio Conference, and subsequently became a member of the Cincinnati Conference. Failing health caused him to become a supernumerary in 1867, which relation he held to the close of his life, Nov. 22, 1873. Mr. Boucher was a man of excellent qualities, energetic, successful, and highly esteemed. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 101.

Boucher, Nicolas, a French prelate, was born at Cernai, Nov. 14, 1528. He was the son of a simple laborer, and completed his studies at Paris, after which he became professor of philosophy at Rheims, and then had charge of the university as rector. He was afterwards called to the episcopacy of Verdun. In a work entitled Verdunensis Episcopatus N. Boucherii (Verdun, 1592), he proved that the Church of Verdun was not dependent upon the Germanic concordat, and Clement VIII sanctioned this doctrine. Although by his own acknowledgment on the side of the princes of Lorraine, he withdrew to take part with the League. He died April 19, 1593. He wrote Apologie de la Morale d'Aristote contre Omer Talon (ibid. eod.), dedicated to the cardinal of Lorraine, to whom Boucher had been tutor, and whose patronage he had obtained. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boucheron, Carlo Emilio Maria, an Italian philologist and theologian, was born at Turin, April 28, 1773. At the age of eighteen he became doctor of theology; studied law and became secretary of state and titular the following year. Being removed from his position by the French invasion, he taught eloquence in 1804 at the Lyceum of Turin, and in 1811 was called to the chair of Latin eloquence at the university of the same city. He applied himself to the study of the Oriental languages, and continued to divide his time between teaching and literary labors. In 1832 he was professor of history at the Military Academy, and of archæology at the School of Fine Arts. He died March 16, 1838. His principal works are, De Clemente Damiano Priocca (Turin, 1815);—De Josepho Vernazza (1837; published first in the Actes of the Academy of Sciences at Turin);—Specimen Inscriptionum Latinarum Edente Thoma Vallaurio (ibid. 1836);—De Thoma Valperga Calusio (ibid. 1833; Alexandria, 1835). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouchier (or Boucher), Gilles, a French Jesuit, was born at Arras in 1576, and died in 1665, leaving Belgium Romanum Ecclesiasticum et Civile (Liege, 1655, fol.); it extends from the end of the period embraced by Cæsar's commentaries to the death of Clovis I. See Biog. Universelle, v, 271.

Bouchier, Thomas, an English prelate was born about 1404. At an early age he went to Oxford, and took up his abode at Nevils Inn. His education was inferior. His high birth seems to have brought him early into notice. He was elected chancellor of the university of Cambridge in 1428. In 1435 he received the temporalities of his see at Worcester, and in the May following was duly consecrated in the Church of Blackfriars, London, his uncle, bishop of Winchester, officiating on the occasion. He was transferred to the more opulent see of Ely, Feb. 27, 1443. It seems that, during the whole period of his occupation of the see, the young prelate was so absorbed in politics that he thought of his bishopric only as a source of income. He was promoted to the see of Canterbury in 1454, and consecrated in February, 1455. In 1464 he was created cardinal presbyter of St. Cyriacus in Thermis. His attention was now directed to the dangers to which the Church and country were exposed. He required each person to either say mass or to repeat the seven psalms with the litany. By this means he thought he might bring about a reform, and after many hard struggles with enemies he did much to improve the state of the Church. Bouchier was distinguished in his day for his moderation and candor; he was not inclined to sacrifice the welfare of his country to the exigencies of his party, and from the fact, perhaps, that he had no very definite principles or strong personal attachments, he was able to do more good than could have been done by an abler man. When he entered public life the prospects of the country were gloomy and dark. The disasters of the English in France, and the disgrace which had been brought upon the once victorious arms of England, rankled in the minds of the people. Bouchier was well termed the peacemaker; during his whole reign, he was always ready to do anything honorable to restore peace. When he closed his career the country was not in such a state of uproar, and the debt of the court was paid; nothing, at the time of his death, could exceed the splendor of the court, and no one felt more joy than himself. The last official act of archbishop Bouchier's trembling hand was "to hold the posie on which the white rose and the red were tied together." He died April 6, 1486. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, v, 269 sq.

Bouchout, Alan, was a Flemish Dominican who died at Bruges in 1676, leaving, SS. Rosarii in Omnes Totius Anni Dominicas ac Precipue Regine SS. Rosarii Festa (Bruges, 1667):—Tractatus de Præclarissima SS. Nominis Jesu Archi-confraternitate (Louvain, 1669).—London, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Boudon, Henri Marie, a French ascetic writer, grand archdeacon of Evreux, was born at Fere, in Thiorache (Aisne), Jan. 14, 1624. He had as godmother Henrietta Marie of Bourbon, daughter of Henry IV: Marie de Medicis and Anne of Austria assisted at his baptism. He died at Evreux, Aug. 31, 1702. Having become priest and doctor of theology, he devoted himself to missions in divers provinces, and occupied his leisure in the composition of a great number of instructive works, of which the principal ones are, Dieu seul, or, Le Saint Esclavage de l'Admirable Mère de Dieu (Paris, 1674):—La Vie cachée avec Jésus en Dieu (ibid. 1676, 1691):—La Conduite de la Divine Providence, etc. (1678):—La Science et la Pratique du Chrétien (1680, 1685). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boudot, Paul, a French prelate, was born at Morteau, in Franche-Comté, about 1571, and was made doctor of the Sorbonne in 1604. The archduke Albert, governor of the Low Countries, appointed him successively to the sees of St. Omer and Arras. Boudot died at the last-mentioned city, Nov. 11, 1635. This prelate was distinguished as a theologian and preacher, and for his knowledge of languages. He left, Summa Theologica D. Thomæ Aquin. Recensita (Arras, fol.):—Nora Metempsychosis (Antwerp, 4to):—Traité du Sacrement de Pénitence (Paris, 1601):—Formula Visitationis per Totam suam Diocesim Facienda (Douai, 1627, 8vo):—Catechismus, or a summary of Christian doctrine for the use of the diocese of Arras. This was also published in French (Douai, 1628; Arras, 1633). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouette. See BLEMUR.

Bougeant, GUILLAUME HYACINTHE, a French Jesuit, who was born at Quimper, Nov. 4, 1690, and died Jan. 7, 1743, is the author of several religious works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouges, THOMAS, a French monk of the order of Grand Augustinians of Toulouse, who was born in 1667, and died at Paris, Dec. 17, 1741, wrote, Exercitationes in Universos S. Scripturæ Locos, etc. (Toulouse, 1701, in twenty-five pages only, fol.):—Dissertation sur les Soixante-dix Semaines de Daniel (ibid. 1702):—Histoire Ecclésiastique et Civile de la Ville et Diocèse de Carcassonne (Paris, 1741, 4to), a work much esteemed for its correctness. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouhier, JEAN, a French theologian, was the first bishop of Dijon, and died in 1744. He wrote Statuts Synodaux du Diocèse de Dijon (1744). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouillart, JACQUES, a French Benedictine of the Congregation of St. Maur, was born at Meulan in 1669, and died at Paris, Dec. 11, 1726, leaving a good edition of the Martyrologium of Usuardus (Paris, 1718), and Histoire de l'Abbaye Royale de St. Germain-des-Prés (ibid. 1724, fol.). He was occupied in writing a history of his Congregation when he died. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouillaud (or Boulliau), ISMAEL, a French theologian, was born at Loudun, Sept. 28, 1605, of Protestant parents; when, however, he attained his twenty-fifth year, he abjured the faith of his parents, and was received into priest's orders. In 1640 he wrote Diatriba de St. Benigno, i. e. a dissertation on the chronology of the life of St. Benignus of Dijon, which was first published by D'Achery, in the first volume of his Spicilegium (1655). Bouillaud also, in 1649, wrote Pro Ecclesiis Lusitanicis ad Clerum Gallicanum Libri Duo, in behalf of the Church of Portugal, which had remained destitute of fresh bishops from the period at which that country shook off the Spanish yoke, the pope refusing the necessary bulls to those who were nominated by king John IV. Bouillaud shows how the right of election is with the priests and people, and that the claim asserted by princes to nominate to the bishoprics of their kingdoms is a pure usurpation. This treatise, together with another on the same subject, entitled De Populis Fundis, was printed at Strasburg in 8vo, in 1656. He also gave the Historia Byzantina of Theodorus Ducas in Greek, with a Latin version and notes, printed at the Louvre; and a Treatise on the Paschal Moon, in reply to M. Toinard. He left also many scientific works. Bouillaud died in 1694.

Bouillé, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French prelate, was born at Pichauzet, in Auvergne, June 11, 1759. Before the Revolution he was almoner of the queen. During the Revolution he went to Germany, then to Martinique, where he was rector of a parish. On his return to France he became ordinary almoner of the duchess of Angoulême. Appointed bishop of Poitiers in 1819, he applied himself with zeal to the administration of his diocese. He died Jan. 14, 1842. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouillon, Emanuel Théodose DE LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE, a French prelate, son of Frederick Maurice, was born Aug. 24, 1644. He first bore the name of the abbot duke d'Albret; was appointed canon of Liege in 1658; received the degree of doctor at the Sorbonne in 1667; was made cardinal in 1669, and invested with several rich abbeys; and finally was appointed by Louis XIV his grand almoner. He claimed for his nephews the title of dauphin d'Auvergne, and, on some of his demands being refused, he so conducted himself as to become disgraced. In 1694 he wished to become prince bishop of Liege, but failed. In 1698 he was ambassador from France to Rome, and dean of the sacred college, when he refused to aid in the condemnation of Fénelon, and sought to prevent it. He was recalled to Rome, but refused to go. At length, deeply humiliated, he returned to France; but, exiled from the court, he retired to his abbey of Tournus. At this epoch appeared the Histoire Généalogique de la Maison d'Auvergne, which had been composed by Baluze. After a long time he sought to justify his conduct, and obtained, with the restoration of his income, permission to go to Rome, where he died in March, 1715. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouillon, Godfrey de. See GODFREY OF BOUILLON.

Boujas (or Bouzas), DON JUAN ANTONIO, a Spanish painter of Santiago, was born about 1672, and studied under Luca Giordano at Madrid. His principal works are in the churches of Santiago. In the cathedral is a picture of St. Paul and St. Andrew, and in the convent of the Dominicans are two altar-pieces by him. He died in 1730.

Bouju de Beaulieu, THÉOPHRASTE, a French theologian, son of Jacques, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He is the author of some ecclesiastical works, of which the principal ones are, Deux Avis, l'un sur le Livre de Richet, de la Puissance Ecclésiastique et Politique; L'autre sur un Livre Intitulé "Commentaire de l'Autorité de quelque Concile Générale que ce Soit" (Paris, 1613):—Defense de la Hierarchie, de l'Eglise et du Pape, contre les Faussesets de Simon Vigor (ibid. 1615, 1620). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouknight, S., a Lutheran minister, was connected with the South Carolina Synod, from which he received his ordination about 1846. He died at Leesville, S. C., June 30, 1876. See Lutheran Observer, July 21, 1876.

Boulai (or Boulay), CÉSAR ÉGASSE DU, a French writer, was a native of St. Élier, in Mayenne, and became professor of the humanities in the college of Navarre, and rector and historiographer of the university of Paris. He died Oct. 16, 1678. His principal work is Historia Universitatis Parisiensis (1667, 6 vols. fol.), which was censured by the Faculty of Theology, and Boulai replied in Nota ad Censuram, etc. Nearly all his other works relate to the university. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boulanger, André. See BOULLANGER.

Boulanger, Jean, a French engraver, cousin of the painter of the same name, was born at Amiens in 1607, and died about 1680. The following are some of his principal sacred prints: two busts of Our Saviour and the Virgin Mary; The Virgin Mary and Infant Jesus, with St. John presenting a Cross; The Holy Family, with St. Joseph giving the Infant some Cherries. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boule, JEAN CHARLES, a French preacher, was born about 1720 at Cannes. After having taught rhetoric at Villefranche, he entered the order of the Cordeliers, but afterwards released himself from his vows. Boule preached several times before the king. He died near the close of the 18th century. He wrote, Histoire Abrégée de la Vie, des Vertus et du Culte de Saint Bonaventure (Lyons, 1747):—Épître sur les Charms de l'Union et de l'Amitié (in the Journal of Verdun, April, 1742). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boulée, ÉTIENNE LOUIS, an eminent French architect, was born at Paris, Feb. 12, 1728, and studied under Lejai. He erected the Château de Tasse, and Chaville; also a number of churches, villas, city gates, and triumphal arches. He was architect to the king and a member of the Royal Academy for many years, and in 1795 was elected a member of the Institute. He died Feb. 6, 1799. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boulenger, Jules César, a French historian and scholar of the Jesuit order, son of Pierre, was born at Loudun in 1558. He became a doctor of theology, and died at Cahors, Aug. 3, 1628. He wrote a great number of works, among which we notice, Historia sui Temporis ab Anno 1560 usque ad Annum 1612:—Diatribæ ad Isaac Casauboni Exercitationes in Baronium:—Eclogæ ad Arnobium de diis Gentium:—Libri Sex de Tota Divinationis Ratione:—Libri Tres de Magia Licita et Velita, etc. These were published with other works under the title Opusculorum Philologicorum Systema (Lyons, 1621, 2 vols. fol.). See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Boulenger, Pierre, a French scholar, died about 1590, leaving Institutiones Christianæ, in eight books:—Commentarius in Apocalypsin. See Miræus, De Script. sec. xvi; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Boulier, Philibert, a French historian and theologian, was canon of the cathedral of Chalons and of Sainte Chapelle of Dijon, where he died in 1652. He wrote, Recueil de quelques Pièces pour Servir à l'Histoire Ecclésiastique et Sacrée de la Ville de Dijon (Dijon, 1648):—Le Devoir de l'Homme Chrétien:—Réflexions sur la Confession et la Communion (ibid. 1648). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouljanus, an ancient idol, said to have been particularly worshipped at Nantz. Its temple was destroyed in accord with an edict of Constantine. If conjecture be allowed, Bouljanus may have been compounded of Baal, corruptly expressed, and Janus.

Boullanger, André (more commonly known as petit Père André), a French preacher of the reformed order of Augustines, was born at Paris about 1578. He preached for fifty-five years, and gained a wide reputation. His singularity consisted in a habit of interspersing his sermons with a few droll expressions, in order, as he said, to keep his hearers awake. He died at Paris Sept. 21, 1657. Many of his manuscripts are to be found in the convent of Queen Margaret, but the following has been published: Oraison Funèbre de Marie de Lorraine, Abbesse de Chelles (Paris, 1627). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boullemier, Charles, a French historian, was born at Dijon, Nov. 12, 1725. He first followed the profession of arms, but at length entered upon the ecclesiastical calling. He died at Dijon, April 11, 1803. He wrote a great number of dissertations upon the history of Burgundy, also Mémoire sur la Vie et les Ouvrages d'Étienne Tabourot des Accords; and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boullier, a Protestant preacher, son of David Reynold, was born at London about 1735. He was preacher in the French language at London, and then at Amsterdam. He died at Hague in 1797. He wrote, Réflexions sur l'Éloquence Extérieure; and some Sermons. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boullier, David Reynold, a Dutch Protestant theologian of French origin, was born at Utrecht, March 24, 1699. He was successively minister at Amsterdam and London, where he zealously brought his talents to bear in behalf of religion, which was attacked by new philosophies. He died at London, Dec. 23, 1759. Some of his principal works are, Essai Philosophique sur l'Âme des Bêtes (Amsterdam, 1727); to the second edition of which was added a Traité sur les Vrais Principes qui Servent de Fondement à la Certitude Morale (ibid. 1737):—Lettres sur les Vrais Principes de la Religion, with La Défense des Pensées de Pascal against the criticism of Voltaire, etc. (1741). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boulliette, a French grammarian, was born at Burgundy about 1720. He entered the ecclesiastical calling, and became canon of the chapter of Auxerre. He wrote, Traité des Sons de la Langue Française et des Caractères qui les Représentent (Paris, 1760, 1788):—Éclaircissement Pacifique sur l'Essence du Sacrifice de J.-C. (ibid. 1799). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boulliot, Jean Baptiste Joseph, a French biographer and philologist, was born at Philipville, March 3, 1750. Having completed his studies at the college of the Jesuits at Dinant, he entered the abbey of La-valdien, and completed his theological studies at the college of Paris, where he received the order of priesthood. He became professor of theology at the abbey of St. Marien of Auxerre, and in other houses of the same kind. He afterwards became one of the vicars-general and secretary of the bishopric, by the appointment of Gobel, metropolitan bishop of Paris, whom he accompanied to the National Convention of Nov. 7, 1793. He afterwards became rector of Mureaux, and in 1822 was appointed almoner of the house of Loges, designed for the orphans of the Legion of Honor, in the forest of St. Germain; but he soon after left this position for that of curate of the parish of Mesnil. Here he completed his Biographie Ardennaise, or Histoire des Ardennais qui se sont fait Remarquer (Paris, 1830); which was considered one of the best works of the time. He also collected some facts upon the origin and progress of the Protestant academy at Sedan, down to its suppression in 1661, a fragment of which was published. He died at St. Germain-en-Laye, Aug. 30, 1833. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boullongne, Bon, a Parisian painter, the son of Louis Boullongne the elder, was born in 1649, and studied under his father. He gained the prize of the Academy by a picture of St. John, which entitled him to the royal pension, to enable him to prosecute his studies at Rome, where he remained five years. He studied the works of Correggio in Lombardy, and then returned to Paris. In 1677 he was elected a royal academician. In 1702 he painted in fresco the cupola of the chapel of St. Jerome in the Church of the Invalides. One of his best works is the Resurrection of Lazarus, in the Church of the Carthusians. He also etched a Holy Family; St. John Preaching in the Wilderness; and St. Bruno. He died in Paris, May 16, 1717. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boullongne, Louis, Sr., a French painter, was born in Picardy in 1609. He travelled in Italy, and thence to Paris, where he painted three historical subjects in the Church of Notre Dame: the Miracle of St. Paul at Ephesus, the Presentation in the Temple, and the Martyrdom of St. Paul. He died in June, 1674. He etched the Miracle of St. Paul at Ephesus and the Martyrdom of St. Paul, from his own designs. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boullongne, Louis, Jr., son of the preceding, an eminent French painter, was born in Paris in 1657. He studied under his father, and gained the first prize in the Academy in 1675, which enabled him to prosecute his studies in Rome. In 1680 he returned to Paris, and was elected a royal academician. He was employed to paint for the churches of Notre Dame and St. Augustine; in the former there are two of his best pictures, The Purification and The Flight into Egypt. The following are some of his principal plates: The Holy Family; The Holy Family, with St. John; The Dead Christ, with the Marys and Disciples; The Roman Charity. He died in Paris, Nov. 2, 1733. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boulter, Hugh, D.D., an English prelate, was born in or near London, Jan. 4, 1671, and educated at Merchant Taylors' school and at Oxford university. In 1700 he became chaplain to Sir Charles Hedges, and soon after to archbishop Tenison. He was presented by the earl of Sunderland to the rectory of St. Olave, and the archdeaconry of Surrey. In 1719 he went to Hanover as chaplain to George I, when he so won the king's favor that the latter promoted him to the deanery of Christ Church and bishopric of Bristol the same year. Five years later (1724) he was appointed archbishop of Armagh and lord primate of Ireland. He expended £30,000 in augmenting the incomes of the poorer clergy; erected and endowed hospitals at Armagh and Drogheda for clergymen's widows; contributed to the establishment of charter schools; and during the famine of 1740 provided at his own expense two meals a day for 2500 persons. In June, 1742, he made a visit to his native country, and died in London in September of the same year. He published several sermons and charges; and his Letters to several Ministers of State in England, relative to Transactions in Ireland from 1724 to 1738, were published in two volumes (Oxford, 1769-70). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Boulton, THOMAS, an English Methodist minister, was born in 1808. He was converted in early manhood, joined the Primitive Methodist Church, and in 1838 entered their ministry. After he had travelled in nineteen circuits, enduring severe toil and much privation, his health failed, and in 1872 he took a supernumerary position, still working as he had strength. He located near Whitechurch, Dorset, exhibiting his sincere piety in his very cheering visits to the sick, poor, and aged, till paralysis laid him aside. He peacefully died, July 30, 1881.

Boulware, THEODORICK, a Baptist minister, was born in Virginia, Nov. 13, 1789. He was ordained in 1810, and spent seventeen years as a preacher in Kentucky. In 1827 he removed to Missouri. He is said to have been "a man of high order of talent, well educated, energetic, and an impressive preacher, and he stood in the front rank as a defender of the faith." His connection, through his ministerial life, was with the "Old-school Baptists," who held anti-mission principles. He died Sept. 21, 1867. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 120. (J. C. S.)

Bouma, JOHANNES ACRONIUS VAN, a Dutch Protestant theologian, was professor of theology at Franeker, and died in September, 1627. He wrote, Syntagma Theologie (Groningen, 1605):—Problema Theologicum de Nomine Elohim (ibid. 1616). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bound (or Bownd), NICOLAS, D.D., an English clergyman at Norton, in Suffolk, died in 1607. In 1595 appeared his Sabbatum Veteris et Novi Testamenti; in which the Puritan doctrine of the Lord's day was for the first time broadly and prominently asserted.

Bounds Thursday is Ascension-day, which always occurs on a Thursday. This day was so called because the old parish custom of marking or beating the bounds was observed annually either upon this day or on one of the Rogation days. By this act the bounds of the various parishes remained matters of personal knowledge and individual repute.

Bounieu, MICHEL HONORÉ, a French painter and engraver, was born at Marseilles in 1740, and studied in Paris under M. Pierre. In 1775 he was elected a royal academician. He died in 1814. The following are some of his principal religious engravings: Adam and Eve driven from Paradise; Magdalene Penitent; The Deluge. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bounty, Queen Anne's, the profits of the first-fruits and tithes, which were anciently given to the pope, transferred in the reign of Henry VIII to the king, and restored to the Church by queen Anne, who caused a perpetual fund to be established from the revenue thus raised, which was vested in trustees for the augmentation of poor livings under £50 a year. This has been further regulated by subsequent statutes; but as the number of livings under £50 was at the commencement of it 5597, averaged at £23 per annum, its operation is very slow.

Bouquet, MARTIN, a French writer, was born at Amiens, June 6, 1685. He entered, in 1706, the order of St. Benedict, and became librarian of the abbey of St. Germain-des-Prés, which appointment, however, he resigned in order to give himself entirely to his studies. His first work was a new edition of Josephus, which, however, he did not complete himself, but sent the fruit of his labors to Havercamp, at Amsterdam, who published his edition of the historian (1726, 2 vols. fol.). The minister Colbert had conceived the design, as far back as 1676, of a collection of the Gallic and French historians, which, after his death, Le Tellier, archbishop of Rheims, determined to carry into execution. Mabillon refused the task, which was accepted by Père Le-long, who was occupied with it until his death, in 1721. Then Dom Denys de St. Marthe, the superior-general of the Benedictine Congregation of St. Maur, proposed that his monks should undertake the completion of the work, and Bouquet was selected to commence the labor. He published the first two volumes of the collection, under the title Rerum Gallicarum et Francicarum Scriptores (1738). These were followed, in succession, by six others, up to the time of his death, in the monastery des Blanc-Mandeaux at Paris, April 6, 1754. Bouquet had chosen for his assistants D'Antine and J. B. Handiquier, the latter of whom, with his brother Charles, completed vols. ix and x. The work was carried on by other authors to the twentieth volume (1840). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bouquin, CHARLES, a French Dominican, was born at Tarascon in 1622. He was particularly distinguished by the success of his controversies with the Calvinists, against whom many French bishops eagerly sought the aid of his services. His plan of opposing them was to mount a rival pulpit near their preachers, and taking the sermons which they had delivered, to subject them to the test of Holy Scripture, the teaching of the fathers, and the decisions of the councils. He died in his convent at Buix, Feb. 14, 1698, leaving many works; among them, Commentarius in Prosum seu Canticum D. Thomæ (Lyons, 1677, fol.):—Sermones Apologetici, quibus Sanctæ Catholicæ ac R. Eccl. Fides contra Novatores Defenditur (ibid. 1689, fol.):—Instructions Chrètiennes et Orthodoxes en Forme de Catéchisme (Carpentras, 1686, 1693, 12mo):—Sermons, in French, for Advent, Lent, the octave of the Feast of the Holy Sacrament, and all Sundays and festivals. These remain in MS.

Bouraits, RELIGION OF THE. The Bouraits are a people of Mongol origin, who reside in the western part of Siberia and on the frontiers of China, in the government of Irkutsk. Their religion is a mixture of Lamaism and Shamaism. In their huts they have wooden idols, naked or clothed; others are of felt, tin, or lamb's skin; and others again rude daubings with soot by the Shamais, or priests, who give them arbitrary names. The women are not allowed to approach or pass before them. The Bourait, when he goes out or returns to his hut, bows to his idols, and this is almost the only daily mark of respect that he pays them. He annually celebrates two festivals in their honor, and at these men only have a right to be present.

Bourbon, Charles de (1), a French prelate, warrior, and diplomatist, was born in 1437. He was the second son of Charles I, fifth duke of Bourbon, and was appointed archbishop of Lyons in 1446, legate of Avignon in 1465, and cardinal in 1477. In 1488 the death of John II, duke of Bourbon, left the cardinal in possession of this title. He died about 1488. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Charles de (2), a French prince and prelate, was born Dec. 22, 1520. He was son of Charles of Bourbon, fourth count of Vendôme. He united with more than ten abbeys the archbishopric of Rouen, the legation of Avignon, the bishopric of Beauvais, the dignity of peer, and that of commander of the order of St. Esprit. He was an earnest advocate of the Catholic faith, and was finally proclaimed king under the name of Charles X, and protector of the religion of France. He died May 9, 1590. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Charles de (3), a French cardinal-prince, was born in 1560. He was nephew of Charles, cardinal de Bourbon, and fourth son of Louis I of Bourbon, first prince of Condé. He was archbishop of Rouen, and succeeded his great-uncle in several of the abbeys. He died very young, July 30, 1594. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Jacques de, a French historian, warrior, and theologian, the son of Louis de Bourbon, bishop of Liège, was admitted to the order of Malta, and was at length appointed grand prior of France. He died in Paris, Sept. 27, 1527. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Jean de, a French prelate, was the son of John I, duke of Bourbon, and gave to his nephew, Charles of Bourbon, the abbey of St. Vaast of Arras and the archbishopric of Lyons, to which positions he had been appointed. He was one of the most distinguished prelates of his time, and enriched the library of Cluny, founded hospitals, and built churches. He also rendered important service to the state. He died Dec. 2, 1485. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Louis de (1), bishop of Liège, younger brother of Charles, was one whose life was not befitting a person of episcopal dignity, and he was assassinated in 1482. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Louis de (2), a French cardinal-prince, was born Jan. 2, 1493. He was the fourth son of Francis of Bourbon, third count of Vendôme, and was bishop of Laon at the age of twenty years. In 1516 he became cardinal, archbishop of Sens, and legate of Savoy. In 1527 he offered Francis I, in the name of the clergy, a gift of £1,300,000, and in 1552 he received of Henry II the government of Paris and of the Isle of France. He died March 17, 1556. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourbon, Louis Antoine Jacques de, a French prelate, was born in 1727. He was the son of Philip V and brother of Charles III. Designed from infancy for the ecclesiastical calling, he was at the age of eight years made cardinal by pope Clement XII. At the death of his father he resigned the archbishopric of Toledo and his office as cardinal, and devoted himself to music, botany, and natural history, which were to him much more congenial pursuits. He died at Villa de Arenas, Aug. 7, 1785. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourchier, THOMAS. See BOUCHIER.

Bourdaille, MICHEL, a French doctor of theology, of the house and society of the Sorbonne, was successively theologian, almoner, and grand vicar of Rochelle. He died March 26, 1694, leaving Théologie Morale de S. Augustine (Paris, 1686):—Exposition du Cantique des Cantiques, from the Fathers (1683, 12mo):—Théologie Morale de l'Evangile (1691):—and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdeille, HÉLIE DE, a French prelate, son of Arnaud of Bourdeille, was born at the chateau of Bourdeille about 1423. Having been from infancy in the Franciscan order, he was elected, at the age of twenty-four years, bishop of Périgueux, and confirmed by the bulls of the pope, Nicolas V, in 1447. He was remarkable for his piety and strictness of deportment. Being sent to the states-general of Tours in 1467, he was the following year elected to the archiepiscopal see of that city. In 1483 pope Sixtus IV made him cardinal. He died at Tours in 1484. He wrote some ecclesiastical treatises, the chief of which is Opus pro Pragmatica Sanctionis Abrogatione (Rome, 1486; Toulouse, 1518), wherein he attacked the pragmatic sanction as acting against the laws of the Gallican Church. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdier Deluits, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French theologian, was born at Auvergne about 1736. He was a Jesuit, and died in Paris, Dec. 15, 1811. He continued the Abrégé des Vies des Pères et des Martyrs, translated from the English by Godescard (Paris, 1802). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdigné, JEAN DE, a French chronicler, a native of Angers, was canon-priest of his native city, and died April 19, 1545, leaving several historical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdillon, BENEDICT, a missionary of the Church of England, was of French origin. Having been ordained in England, he came to America, and was made incumbent in 1735 of Somerset Parish, Somerset Co., Md. On July 24, 1739, he was presented to St. Paul's Parish (now within the limits of Baltimore). He built a chapel about ten miles distant from the parish church, which eventually developed into St. Thomas's Parish. He died Jan. 5, 1754. Though of infirm health, he was an energetic pastor and highly esteemed. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 112.

Bourdin, Charles, a French theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, was archdeacon and grand vicar of Noyon. He published the Histoire de Notre Dame de Friulaine (St. Quentin, 1662). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdin, Mathieu, a French theologian and monk, who died in 1692, wrote a Vie de Madeleine Vignerot, du Tiers Ordre de Saint François de Paule (Rouen, 1679; Paris, 1689). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdin, Maurice, antipope, a native of Limousin, accompanied, in 1095, Bernard, archbishop of Toledo, who made him his archpriest, and gave to him the bishopric of Coimbra. In 1110 he succeeded St. Geraud, archbishop of Braga, and was sent by Pascal II to settle the difficulties which existed between him and the emperor Henry V. He proved false to the interests of Pascal, who caused him to be excommunicated at the Council of Benevent. This pontiff died soon after, and Henry succeeded in electing Maurice, who took the name of Gregory VII; but his election was soon declared null, and he fell into disgrace and died in prison at Fumone, near Alatri, in 1122. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdoise, ADRIEN, a French theologian, was born in the diocese of Chartres, July 1, 1584. At the age of twenty years he commenced his studies, and allied himself in friendship with St. Vincent de Paul and the abbot Olier, founder of the seminary of St. Sulpice. Having entered upon the ecclesiastical calling, he occupied himself zealously with catechisms, missions, conferences, and, in 1618, founded the community of the Priests of St. Nicolas of Chardonet, after which he raised up two seminaries—one in Paris, the other at Laon. He died July 19, 1655. We have from him a posthumous work entitled Idée d'un bon Ecclésiastique. A history of his life has been written by Descourveaux (Paris, 1714), and abridged by Bouchard (ibid. 1784). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourdon. See STAFF, PRECENTOR'S.

Bourdon, SEBASTIEN, an eminent French painter and engraver, was born at Montpellier in 1616. He studied under his father, and subsequently went to Rome, where he remained three years. On returning to Paris he executed the Crucifixion of St. Peter, in the Church of Notre Dame, which is considered his masterpiece. He also painted in different churches in Sweden. The following are some of his principal works: Jacob

Returning to his Country in the Absence of Laban; Rebecca Meeting the Servant of Abraham; The Holy Family Resting; The Infant Jesus Feeding a Lamb; The Annunciation. He died in Paris in March, 1671. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourée, EDMÉ BERNARD. See BOURRÉE.

Bourepos, DAVID, a minister of the French Reformed Church, was the predecessor of Daniel Boudet, under whom the Church at New Rochelle seceded and went to the Episcopalians. He served the Church at New Rochelle from 1687 to 1697, and occasionally, from 1696 to 1700, served New Palitz as a supply. He was stationed at Freshkill, S. I., from 1697 to 1717. He died in 1734. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 191.

Bourg, ANNE DU, a French magistrate, a counsellor clerk at the Parliament of Paris, nephew of Antoine, was born in 1521 at Riom, in Auvergne. Destined at first for the Church, and having even taken orders, he left the ecclesiastical calling for that of the bar, in which position he won distinction. Having adopted the opinions of Calvin, he soon became full of zeal for the Reformation, which was then agitating France. The bishop of Paris declared him a heretic, and he was finally condemned to death and executed in Paris, Dec. 20, 1559, and the Protestants numbered him among their martyrs. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgade, FRANÇOIS, a French apostolic missionary, was born in 1806 at Ganjou. Having completed his theological studies at the seminary of Auch, he was ordained priest in 1832. In 1838 he was authorized to perform the offices of the sacred ministry in all the French possessions of Algeria. He founded at Tunis a hospital for poor women, and an asylum and schools for young girls. His profound knowledge of Arabic greatly aided him, and his missions were highly successful. He published, Toison d'Or de la Langue Phénicienne (1852), an important work, in which are found a great number of Punic inscriptions. He also wrote, Soirées de Carthage, ou Dialogues entre un Prêtre Catholique, un Muphti et un Cadi (Paris, eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgeois, François, a French missionary, was born at Lorraine, and lived in the latter half of the 18th century. He was a Jesuit, and having completed his theological studies at Pont à Mousson, he left France, March 15, 1767, to go to China. At Pekin he became superior of the French Jesuits residing in China. The Lettres Édifiantes contain some letters from this missionary. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgeois, Jacques, a French theologian, who lived about the middle of the 16th century, was a Trinitarian, and published Amortissement de Toutes Perturbations et Réveil des Mourants, etc. (Douay, 1576). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgeois (or Borghès), Jean, a French theologian, was born at Amiens in 1604. He was at first canon and chanter of the cathedral of Verdun, and then obtained, in the diocese of Poitiers, the abbey of Merci Dieu. In 1745 he was sent to pope Innocent X, by the French bishops who approved the book entitled De la Fréquente Communion, and he prevented the condemnation of the book by the esteem with which he inspired the pope and cardinals. On his return to Rome he consecrated himself to the ministry in the abbey of Port Royal des Champs. A little later, in order to devote himself more closely to religious duties, he withdrew from his abbey of Merci Dieu. He died Oct. 29, 1687. He composed with Lalanne, abbot of Val Croissant, and translated into French, the work entitled Conditiones Propositionis ad Examen de Gratia Doctrinæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgeois, Margaret, founder of the Congregation of Notre Dame, Montreal, was born in Troyes, France, April 15, 1620. Being refused admission to the Carmelite order of her native city in 1640, and afterwards of the Poor Clares, she finally decided to accompany M. de Maisonneuve, one of the first and truest friends of the Canadian colonists, to Canada. They arrived in Quebec, Sept. 22, 1653. She commenced a school in Montreal; founded her congregation in 1659; procured letters-patent from Louis XIV, in 1670, for the legal confirmation of her institute; founded many missions; and in 1698 obtained from St. Vallier, bishop of Quebec, the confirmation of the rules of her order. In 1693 her resignation was accepted, and this humble saint became the last and least member of the flourishing community she had founded. She died in 1700, and it is said that miracles were wrought by the application of her relics. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1878, p. 60.

Bourges, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Bituricense). Of these there were several.

I. Held in November, 1031, under Aymo de Bourbon, archbishop of Bourges. Twenty-five canons were published, the first of which orders the name of St. Martial to be placed among those of the apostles. The third forbids bishops or their secretaries to take any money on account of ordination. The seventh orders all ecclesiastics to observe the tonsure, and to be shaved. The twelfth forbids the exacting of any fee for baptism, penance, or burial, but permits the voluntary offerings of the faithful upon these occasions to be accepted. See Labbe, Concil. ix, 864.

II. Held Nov. 30, 1225, by the legate, the cardinal of St. Angelo, assisted by about one hundred French bishops. Here Raymond, count of Toulouse, and his opponent, Amauri de Montfort (who claimed to be count of Toulouse), pleaded their cause, without, however, any decision being arrived at. The pope's demand of two prebends in each abbey and cathedral church, and one prebend in every other conventual church, throughout France, was rejected. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 291.

III. Held Sept. 13, 1276, by Simon de Brie, cardinal and legate. Sixteen articles were published, tending chiefly to the maintenance of the jurisdiction and immunities of the Church, and the freedom of elections. Among other things, the laity were forbidden to make use of violence or threats, in order to obtain the removal of censures. Secular judges were forbidden to constrain ecclesiastics to appear before them, etc. The canons were sent by the cardinal to every one of the French bishops. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1017.

IV. Held on Sept. 19, 1286, by Simon de Beaulieu, archbishop of Bourges, assisted by three of his suffragans. Here a constitution, consisting of thirty-five articles, was published, reiterating and enforcing those of the preceding councils. Among other things, it was ordered that the ecclesiastical judges should annul all unlawful marriages, and separate the parties, whoever they might be; that every beneficed person who should continue for one year under excommunication, should be deprived of his benefice; that curates should keep a list of all the excommunicated persons in their parishes, and publicly denounce them every Sunday and festival; that they should warn their people to confess at least once in every year; that bows and all kinds of arms should be removed from churches; that all Sundays and festivals be properly kept; etc. Other canons relate to the regulars. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1246.

V. Held in 1528 by François de Tournon, archbishop of Bourges, with his suffragans. Twenty-three decrees were made, of which the first five relate to the Lutherans, and the rest to matters of discipline. Curates are exhorted to instruct their parishioners, and, in order to give more time for that purpose, they are directed to abridge the prayers made at sermon time. Provincial councils are directed to be held every three years, according to the decree of the council of Constance. Bishops are ordered to visit their dioceses annually, in order that they may take due care of the sheep intrusted to them. The regulations of the council of Constance and of the pragmatic sanction, concerning the residence of canons and other ministers, are confirmed; also that which directs that the psalms be chanted slowly, and with proper pauses. Curates are directed to explain to the people the commandments of God, the Gospel, and something out of the epistle for the day. Pastors are enjoined to forbid penitents to reveal the nature of their penance, and themselves to observe secrecy, both as to what is revealed to them at confession, and also as to the penance they have imposed. No confraternity is to be erected without the consent of the ordinary. It was further enacted that the bishops should have a discretionary power to retrench the number of festival days according as they should think best; that bishops should not grant letters dimissory without having first examined the candidate for orders and found him qualified; and then to those only who have a benefice or a patrimonial title; further, that nuns shall not leave their monastery. Afterwards the council made various decrees concerning the jurisdiction and liberty of the clergy: the first is upon the subject of monitions; the second upon the residence of curates, that no dispensation for non-residence be granted without a full investigation of the reasons; the third respects cemeteries, which it orders to be kept enclosed and locked up. After this, four tenths for two years were voted to king Francis I, to make up the ransom of his two sons, then hostages at Madrid, to be levied on all the clergy, secular and regular. See Labbe, Concil. xiv, 426.

VI. This council was held in September, 1584. Forty-six chapters were published, each containing several canons (preceded by the confession of faith made by those present). 1. Relates to the worship and service of God; 2 and 3, of the faith and preaching; 4, of the abuse of Holy Scriptures, and orders that the Latin version of the Scriptures shall alone be used, and that bishops' secretaries shall keep a list of prohibited books, which shall be shown annually to publishers; 5, of avoiding heretics; 6, of invocation of saints and of festivals; 7, of pilgrimages; 10 and 11, of relics and images; 12, of the celebration of the holy office, etc.; 16, of cemeteries; 17, of tradition; 18-28, of the sacraments; 31, of excommunication; 34, of canons and chapters; 35, of parish rectors, orders them to reside in their cure, and to say mass themselves; orders bishops to divide parishes which become too populous; where there is no parsonage-house, it directs the bishop to take care to provide one, at the expense of the parishioners; 36, of benefices; 40, of witchcraft and incantations; 41 and 42, of simony, concubinary priests, etc.; 43, of hospitals; 45, of the laity, forbids them to sit with the clerks at Church; bids them to abstain from dances, plays, etc.; also from the use of frizzled hair; 46, of synods. See Labbe, Concil. xv, 1067.

Bourges, FLORENTIN DE, a French missionary of the Jesuit order, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He published Voyage aux Indes Orientales par le Paraguay, etc., le Chili, fait en 1714; inserted in the Lettres Édifiantes. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgoin, EDMOND, a French theologian, became prior of the Jacobins at Paris, and showed great fanaticism, even justifying the assassination of Henry IV. He was arrested in 1589 with arms in his hands, and executed at Tours, Jan. 26 following. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourgoing, FRANÇOIS, a celebrated French theologian, was born in Paris, March 18, 1585. From his brilliant scholarship he was made doctor of the Sorbonne, and then rector of Clichy, near Paris. In 1611 he resigned this position in order to ally himself with the cardinal of Berulle, who at this time founded the order of the Oratorio, and he was actively engaged in establishing a new congregation at Nantes, Dieppe, Rouen, and especially in the Netherlands. In 1641 he was elected superior-general in place of Condren. In this high position he showed great zeal, and faithfully worked for the good of the order, yet by this very means gained for himself numerous enemies, against whom he was obliged to defend himself in very lively contradictions with the friars. Fatigued with the course of affairs, and weighed down by years and infirmities, he resigned in 1661, and died the following year. He had been for a long time confessor to Gaston, duke of Orleans. His funeral oration was pronounced by Bossuet, and in the seventeenth volume of the works of this great bishop it may be found. Bourgoing was the author of a number of works of a religious character, also of ecclesiastical discipline, of which the following are some of the titles: Lignum Crucis (Paris, 1630);—Directoire des Missions (ibid. 1646);—Veritates et Sublimes Excellentie Verbi Incarnati (Antwerp, 1630);—Homélies Chrétiennes sur les Évangiles des Dimanches et Fêtes Principales (Paris, 1642); and several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourignon, ANTOINETTE, a French visionary, was born at Lisle, Jan. 13, 1616. She rendered herself famous by her numerous works, by her religious innovations, and by the persecutions which she endured. She escaped an undesired marriage, and placed herself under the care of the clergy. At Amsterdam she abjured Catholicism, and advocated the Reformation. She published several of her works at Amsterdam, but, being accused of sorcery, she was obliged to leave the place, and betook herself to Hamburg. She died at Franeker, Oct. 30, 1680. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v. See BOURIGNONISTS.

Bourke, RICHARD, a prelate of the Church of England, was born April 22, 1767. He took his degree of M.A. July 10, 1790; and in 1813 became lord bishop of Waterford and Lismore. He died suddenly, Nov. 15, 1832. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, Dec. 1832, p. 785.

Bourle, JACQUES, a French theologian, a native of Longmenil, diocese of Beauvais, lived in the latter half of the 16th century. He was doctor of the Sorbonne and rector of the parish of St. Germain le Viel, of Paris. His principal works are, Prières à Jésus Christ sur le Mariage de Charles IX;—La Masse de Saint Denis; and others. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourlier, JEAN BAPTISTE, Count, a French theologian, was born at Dijon, Feb. 1, 1731. He entered upon the ecclesiastical calling, took the oath required of the clergy, and was consecrated bishop of Evreux April 23, 1802. He was successively member of the council of the hospitals, baron and count of the empire, and president of the electoral college of Evreux. After the empress Josephine had been divorced he became almoner of this princess, and was finally made peer of France. He died at Evreux, Oct. 30, 1821. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourn (or Bourne), Immanuel, a Puritanical divine of the English Church, was born Dec. 27, 1590, and was educated at Christ Church, Oxford. When the rebellion broke out he sided with the Presbyterian faction, and was removed from his rectory of Ashover, in Derbyshire, to St. Sepulchre's, in London. On the restoration he conformed, and died rector of Ailston, in Leicestershire, Dec. 27, 1672. Among his works are, A Defence of Scripture as the Chief Judge of Controversy (1656);—Vindication of the Honor due to Magistrates, Ministers, etc., against the Quakers (1659);—A Defence of Tythes, Infant Baptism, Human Learning, etc.;—A Golden Chain of Directions to Preserve Love between the Husband and Wife (1669). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bourn, Samuel, an English Dissenting minister, assistant to Dr. John Taylor of Norwich, was the founder of a sect of Annihilationists (q. v.), called, after him, Bourneans. He died in 1796. He published Fifty Sermons on Various Subjects, Critical, Philosophical, and Moral (Norwich, 1777):—and other Sermons (1752, 1760, 1763). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bourne, Alfred, an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Etruria, Staffordshire Potteries, Aug. 12, 1799. He was converted in 1816, entered the ministry in 1823, travelled the Redditch, Oxford, and Reading circuits, and sailed for Madras in November, 1826. Excepting a few months at Madras, his field was Negapatam. He was successful here and also in Melnatam. Exposure induced disease, and in February, 1835, he was compelled to sail for England. His heart was in the mission work, and it was a sore trial to be removed therefrom. He died at the house of Dr. Bunting, in London, May 27, 1836. Bourne translated into Tamil the Memoir of Hester Ann Rogers, commenced a treatise in the same language on the Evidences of Christianity, and assisted in a revision of the Scriptures. See Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1838, p. 321 sq.; (Lond.) Watchman, June 1, 1836; Minutes of the British Conference, 1836.

Bourne, George, a (Dutch) Reformed minister, was born at Westbury, England, June 13, 1780. He studied at Homerton Seminary, and in 1804 emigrated to America and settled in Virginia and Maryland. Subsequently he became principal of an academy at Sing Sing, N. Y., and pastor of the Presbyterian Church. Thence he went to Canada, as supply of a Congregational Church in Quebec, and remained until 1833. He then united with the Reformed Church, and settled as pastor at West Farms (1839-42). He died suddenly, Nov. 20, 1845, of disease of the heart. Mr. Bourne greatly resembled in appearance the portraits of Martin Luther. He possessed a thoroughly controversial spirit, which found full scope in his long-continued demonstrations against slavery and Romanism. He was learned, eloquent, and powerful, but his zeal was often too fiery, and sometimes overreached itself. He edited, for several years, a well-known periodical entitled The Protestant Vindicator, and was an almost constant contributor to the religious press of New York. He was also largely engaged upon literary work for prominent publishing houses, editing such works as that of Barrow and Leighton, and preparing exhaustive indices to both (Riker's editions). As a preacher, he was scriptural, illustrative, versatile, and powerful. With all his belligerent gifts, he was warm-hearted and devout, an example of conscientious and brave adherence to his own opinions in the face of obloquy and personal danger, and a true servant of God. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America, s. v. (W. J. R. T.)

Bourne, Jacob, an English Baptist minister, was born at Beckington, near Frome, Somerset Co., Dec. 31, 1802. Losing his father at the age of fourteen, he became a thoughtless youth. At length, through domestic trials, his heart was touched by the Spirit of God, and on Aug. 30, 1829, he joined the Church at Road, Somersetshire. In 1834 he was encouraged to engage in ministerial labor, and performed much itinerant work. In 1846 he was providentially led to Grettleton, in Wiltshire, and was ordained pastor of the Church in that place, July 27, 1847. Here he remained until his death, Sept. 13, 1857. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1858, p. 47. (J. C. S.)

Bourne, Milton, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was converted in his youth, in Vermont, and soon after entered the Illinois Conference, laboring first as a missionary among the Indians, and later as an itinerant minister. In 1840, on the organization of the Rock River Conference, he became a member of it. In 1863 he became superannuated, and retired to a few acres of wild land near Macomb to eke out an existence for himself and his destitute family. He closed his life in 1865. Mr. Bourne was remarkable for his zeal and piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 225.

Bourne, Richard, a missionary among the Marshpee Indians, was among the early English settlers of the town of Sandwich, on Cape Cod, Mass. Being a man of an earnest, missionary spirit, he went (about 1658) among the Indians who resided in Marshpee, a place a few miles from Sandwich. His work was successful, and he gathered a church of converted Indians, of which he was ordained the pastor, Aug. 17, 1670, the services being conducted by Eliot and Cotton. Satisfied that no permanent prosperity would attend the people for whose temporal and religious prosperity he was laboring, unless they had a fixed local habitation, he obtained a formal deed of Marshpee from those Indians who claimed it as their property. His efforts resulted in greatly promoting the welfare of his people. He died about 1685. See Mather's Mag. iii, 199; Coll. Mass. Hist. Soc. i, 172, 196-199, 218; iii, 188-190; viii, 170. (J. C. S.)

Bourneans. See ANNIHILATIONISTS.

Bourns, William H., a native of Ireland, was a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and died Dec. 15, 1851, at Huntingdon, Pa., in the forty-first year of his age. He was a man of ripe scholarship and great piety. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1852, p. 141.

Bourotte, François Nicolas, a French historian, was born in Paris in 1710, and died June 12, 1784. He entered the order of Benedictines of St. Maur, and completed the Histoire Générale du Languedoc. He wrote several other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bourrée, Edme Bernard, a French theologian, was born at Dijon, Feb. 15, 1652. He was a priest of the Oratory, and zealously devoted himself to the work of the ministry and to teaching theology at Langres and at Chalons-sur-Saône. He died at Dijon, May 26, 1722. He wrote a number of works, among which are, Conférences Ecclésiastiques du Diocèse de Langres (1684):—Manuel des Pêcheurs (1696):—Homélie (1703):—Nouveaux Panégyriques, avec Quelques Conférences Ecclésiastiques (1707; Lyons, 1713). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bours, William White, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Attica, N. Y., in 1826. His early life was spent in mercantile pursuits in Geneva. He was ordained deacon in 1853, and priest in 1855. At first he assisted in St. Peter's Chapel, Geneva, afterwards in St. James's Church, Syracuse, and finally became rector of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Fla. His death, which occurred there, Nov. 5, 1857, was caused by his assiduous attendance upon the sick in his parish during the prevalence of a malignant fever. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1858, p. 611.

Boursier, Laurent François, a French priest and doctor of the Sorbonne, was born at Ecouen, Jan. 24, 1679, and took his doctor's degree in 1706. He then gave himself up entirely to study, and in 1713 published, anonymously, his celebrated work, L'Action de Dieu sur les Créatures, which was attacked by Malebranche. He is also remarkable for the memorial presented by the Sorbonne to the czar Peter, upon the occasion of his visit in 1717, and drawn up in a single night, upon the means of uniting the Russian and Roman churches. In 1729, he, together with many other doctors, was expelled from the Sorbonne for his opposition to the bull Unigenitus. He died at Paris, Feb. 17, 1749. See Biog. Universelle, v, 893.

Bourzeïs, Amable de, a French theologian and scholar, was born at Volvic, near Riom, April 6, 1606. He was at first a page, but went to Rome and studied theology. Returning to France, he was made abbot of St. Martin of Cores, and one of the first members of the French Academy. Having taken holy orders, he distinguished himself especially in controversy, and had the glory of converting over to his side several of the ministers; among them the prince-palatine Edward and the count of Schomberg, then marshal of France. Colbert placed the abbot de Bourzeis at the head of the Academy of Inscriptions, and also made him director of an assembly of theologians which held its meetings in the Royal Library. Bourzeis at first inclined towards the Jansenists, but in 1661 signed the formulary which was approved by Alexander VII. He died Aug. 2, 1672. He wrote several works, as Sermons sur Divers Sujets (1672). Among his works of controversy we find, Excellence de l'Eglise Catholique, et Raisons qui nous obligent à ne nous en séparer jamais (Paris, 1648): —Saint Augustin victorieux de Calvin et de Molina, etc. (ibid. 1652). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bousmard (or Boussemaid), NICOLAS DE, a French theologian, was born at Xivry-le-Franc in 1512. He belonged to a family of Anjou. Charles III, duke of Lorraine, appointed him in 1572 as one of the reformers of the constitution of St. Mihiel, and four years later appointed him to the bishopric of Verdun, and after some difficulty he was consecrated, July 15, 1576. He died at Verdun, April 10, 1584, generally lamented. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boussard, GEOFFROI, a French theologian, was born at Le Mans in 1439. He studied at the College of Navarre, at Paris, and in 1487 became rector of the University of Paris, and chancellor of that Church. Traveling in Italy, he preached at Bologna in 1504, in the presence of Julius II. He was appointed scholastic of the cathedral of Le Mans by the cardinal of Luxembourg, who confided to him, in part, the administration of this diocese. In 1511 he was deputed by the university to attend the Council of Pisa, then transferred to Milan, and died after his return, in 1522. He published a corrected edition of the Ecclesiastical History of Rufinus (1497), and a commentary of Venerable Bede, or Florus Diaconus, on St. Paul (1499). He also wrote, De Continentiâ Sacerdotum (Paris, 1504, 4to), a rare and curious book, proving that the pope may in peculiar cases dispense with the celibacy of priests: —De Sacrificio Missæ (ibid. 1511, 1520; Lyons, 1525, 4to): —Interpretatio in 7 Psalmos Penitentiales (Paris, 1519, 1521, 8vo). See Biog. Universelle, v, 398.

Bousseau, JACQUES, a French sculptor, was born in 1681, at Chavaignes-en-Poitou. He studied under Nicolas Custon, and was afterwards received into the Royal Academy, where he attained the rank of professor of sculpture. He executed two statues of St. Maurice and St. Louis, and Christ giving the Keys to St. Peter, for the Church of Notre Dame. He also did much fine work for the churches at Versailles and Rouen. He died at Madrid in 1740. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boussemaid, NICOLAS DE. See BOUSMARD.

Boutats, Frederic, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1620. The following are some of his principal works: Portrait of Charles Emanuel, Duke of Savoy; Oliver Cromwell; The Virgin and Infant Jesus, with St. John.

Boutats, Gérard, a French engraver, brother of Frederic, was born at Antwerp about 1630. He was appointed engraver to the university at Vienna. The following are his principal plates: Adamus Munds, Physician; The Resurrection; Charles Joseph, Archduke of Austria.

Boutauld, Michel, a French Jesuit preacher, was born in Paris, Nov. 2, 1625. He died at Pontoise, May 16, 1688, leaving some works which are much esteemed: Les Conseils de la Sagesse (Paris, 1677, 12mo): —Suite de Ditto (ibid. 1688, 12mo; the last edition is of 1749): —Le Théologien des Conversations avec les Sages, etc. (1683). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boutelle, Asaph, a Congregational minister, was born at Fitchburg, Mass., Oct. 7, 1804. He fitted for college at New Ipswich, graduated at Amherst in 1828, and at Andover in 1831. He was ordained in the same year, and employed as a missionary for twelve years in Ohio. He was pastor at Alexandria, O., 1843 to 1847; Lunenburg, Mass., 1849 to 1851; Peacham, Vt., 1851 till his death, Jan. 12, 1866. He published a sermon in memory of Newell March, 1854. See Cong. Quarterly, 1866, p. 208.

Boutelle, Thomas, a Congregational minister, was born at Leominster, Mass., Feb. 1, 1805. He was educated at New Ipswich, N. H., Amherst (class of 1829), and Andover, Mass. He became pastor at Essex Street, Boston, in 1834; Plymouth, 1834 (ordained); North Woodstock, 1837; Bath, N. H., 1850. He died at Fitchburg, Mass., Nov. 28, 1866. See Cong. Quarterly, 1861, p. 354; 1867, p. 133; 1868, p. 287.

Bouthillier de Rancé, ARMAND JEAN, a French ecclesiastic, was born Jan. 9, 1626. He received the tonsure, Dec. 21, 1635; and, at the age of nineteen, was made canon of Notre Dame at Paris. After many other appointments he received that of the abbey of La Trappe, and having been received into the order of priests, Jan. 22, 1651, he took the degree of D.D. in 1654. Soon after he went into residence at La Trappe, where he endeavored to reform the conduct of the monks; failing in which he persuaded them to resign their house to the Cistercian monks of the Strict Observance. This done, he disposed of his property, and took his vows in the monastery of Notre-Dame-de-Perseigne, June 13, 1663. He died Oct. 16, 1700, having published a new edition of Anacreon, with notes (Paris, 1639; 2d ed. 1647): —Traité de la Sainteté et des Devoirs de l'Etat Monastique (1683, 2 vols. 4to; vol. iii in 1685). After his death were published his regulations for the government of La Trappe, and Letters (2 vols.). His Life was written by MM. Maupéon and Marsollier, and by father Dom Pierre le Nain.

Boutistès (Βουτιστής) is a Greek term to distinguish the person who dips the candidate for holy baptism while the priest repeats the baptismal formula.

Bouton, François, a French theologian, was born at Chamblay, near Dôle, in 1578. He entered the order of Jesuits, and was employed in the missions of the East. He was finally sent to Lyons, to the College of the Trinity. While professor of rhetoric there, the pestilence raged, and he devoted himself to the suffering until he fell a victim, in October, 1628. He left some manuscript works, the principal of which are, Théologie Spirituelle: —Commentarii in Deuteronomum, de Pergrinatione Israelitarum, tum Litterali, tum Mystica, ad Promissionis Terram: —Clavis Scripturæ Sacræ, seu Dictionarium Hebraicum in qua Latini vocibus Subjiciuntur voces Hebrææ Respondentes Collectum ex Sacris Litteris et ex Collatione Vulgatæ Latine Editum cum Hebraica. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouton, George, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Virgil, Cortland County, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1812. He was converted about 1843; soon after began preaching, and in 1852 entered the Oneida Conference. He died in the midst of his labors, at McLean, Oct. 31, 1859. Mr. Bouton's ministerial career was brief, but exceedingly brilliant. Few men secured a stronger hold upon the affections of a people than he, and few were more successful. Large revivals crowned his labors on every charge. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 169.

Bouton, Jacques, a French theologian and Jesuit, who died in 1658, was the author of Relation de l'Etablissement des Français dans l'île de la Martinique, depuis l'an 1635 (Paris, 1640). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouton, J. D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, in 1835 entered the New York East Conference, and in it labored diligently with but one year's vacation until his superannuation in 1867, in November of which year he died. Mr. Bouton was an exemplary Christian, a good preacher, and an excellent pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 85.

Bouton, Nathaniel, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Norwalk, Conn., June 20, 1799. From Yale College he entered the theological seminary at Andover, Mass., where he finished the course in 1824. March 23, 1825, he was settled over the First Congregational Church in Concord, N. H., with which he remained forty-two years. His residence continued in Concord, where he died, June 6, 1878. He was much interested in historical studies, and published while in the pastorate a valuable history of Concord. He was early the president of the State Historical Society, and edited two volumes of its collections. In August, 1866, he was appointed editor and compiler of the provincial records of New Hampshire, and in that capacity issued ten volumes of Provincial Papers, from 1867 to 1877. He also published over thirty sermons and addresses, and a few other volumes. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1878.

Bouton, W. S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Roxbury, N. Y., in 1815. He was converted at the age of thirty-two; and being a good singer, and having a rare gift for exhortation and prayer, he became one of the most popular lay helpers ever known throughout that region. His beaming countenance, fervent prayers, earnest exhortations, soul-stirring songs, and ringing halleluias drove away formalism and doubt, and made everybody free and happy. In 1857 he was appointed by the presiding elder to the Germantown and Myersville Circuit, and in 1858 was received into the New York Conference, and returned to his former charge. His subsequent appointments were: West Galatin, Richmond, and West Stockbridge, Stockport and Claverack, East Chatham and Red Rock, Hillsdale, Lakeville; City Mission, N. Y., and Grace Church, Newburgh, where he died, Aug. 6, 1879. Mr. Bouton was everywhere acceptable and useful. He had few superiors as a pastor. Every interest in the Church, spiritual and temporal, was ever advanced. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 45.

Boutrams, JOHN, a minister of the English Wesleyan Connection, was born near Coventry, May 7, 1840; and died June 1, 1881, in the seventeenth year of his ministry. His faithful, practical, and pointed sermons often deeply stirred and elevated the feelings of his hearers. "He possessed a vigorous intellect, a kind heart, a resolute will, and a high sense of duty." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 47.

Boutwell, JAMES, a Congregational minister, was born at Lyndeborough, N. H., May 14, 1814. He was converted while at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., under a sermon delivered by Dr. Lyman Beecher. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1836, and at Andover in 1840, and was ordained in 1841. He labored at Brentwood, N. H., 1841 to 1852, and at Sanbornton the remainder of his ministry. He died April 21, 1865. Mr. Boutwell was a diligent and faithful pastor, an ardent patriot, and his death was triumphant. See Cong. Quarterly, 1866, p. 41.

Bouvenot, LOUIS PIERRE, a French theologian and physician, was born at Arbois in 1756. He abandoned the career of arms for the ecclesiastical calling, and was appointed vicar of St. John Baptist at Besançon. At the commencement of the Revolution he became one of the grand-vicars of the metropolitan bishopric of Est, but during the civil disturbances he renounced his ecclesiastical functions, and finally gave his attention to medicine. He died at Sens, July 1, 1830. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouvens, de, Abbé, a French theologian, was born at Bourg, in Bresse, about 1750. He first went to Germany, then to England, in consequence of his refusal to take the oath required of ecclesiastics at the period of the Revolution. In 1804 he pronounced the funeral oration of the duke of Enghien in the chapel of St. Patrick, at London, in the presence of the princes of the house of Bourbon. His eloquence was of a high order. He died in 1830. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouveri, GABRIEL, bishop of Angers, who died Feb. 10, 1572, left a French translation of the Pastoral of St. Gregory, a Guide for Curates, etc. He was the first bishop at Trent to deliver his opinion in favor of the residence of bishops.

Bouvet, JOACHIM, a French missionary, was born at Le Mans about 1662. He was one of the first missionaries sent to China by Louis XIV with a scientific mission. Colbert had conceived the idea of enriching himself from the industries of this country, and at his death Louvois, his successor, took up the project and sent six missionary Jesuits, the fathers Fontanay, Gerbillon, Le-comte, Tachard, Visédelon, and Bouvet, furnished with instructions from the ministry of the Academy of Sciences, and with all the necessary instruments for taking observations. They arrived in China in 1687. Being called immediately to Peking, they were dispersed throughout the empire, excepting Gerbillon and Bouvet, whom the emperor retained with him to take charge of the mathematical affairs. These two men took charge of the erection of the church and of the residence of the Jesuits at Peking. Bouvet returned to France in 1697, and bore to the king, from the emperor Kang-hi, forty-nine Chinese volumes. Louis XIV sent back by Bouvet a complete collection of his stamps, magnificently bound, and with him ten new missionaries. Bouvet died at Peking, June 28, 1732, after having labored for a long time on the large map of the empire, prepared by the Jesuits by the order of Kang-hi. He left four accounts of different voyages which he had made in the course of his labors, and several works concerning China. Several dissertations upon the Chinese and a dictionary of that language are preserved in MS. in the library at Le Mans. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouvier, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French prelate, was born Jan. 17, 1783, at St. Charles-la-Forêt, Mayenne. Before his elevation to the episcopal see of Le Mans, in 1834, he was vicar-general of Le Mans and superior of the seminary. While the empire lasted, and during part of the restoration, ecclesiastical studies were greatly neglected. The works of Bouvier, which were considered as high authority, gave a great impulse to the teaching, in the seminaries, of both philosophy and theology. His Institutiones Theologicae and Institutiones Philosophicae were adopted in a great number of ecclesiastical establishments in France, as also in Savoy and Belgium. He also wrote several other works. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boux, GUILLAUME LE, a French theologian, was born at Anjou in 1621. After having been successively sweeper of the college, Capuchin, oratorian, and rector, he taught rhetoric at Riom, and, during the Fronde, sustained by his preaching the royal authority. He was appointed bishop of Apt in 1658, and of Périgueux in 1667. During the thirty-seven years which he occupied this position, he employed his income for charitable purposes. He died Aug. 6, 1693. He wrote, Sermons (Rouen, 1666):—Dissertations Ecclésiastiques sur le Pouvoir des Evêques, pour la Diminution ou l'Augmentation des Fêtes (Paris, 1691), in collaboration with Laval Bois Dauphin, bishop of Rochelle. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bouzias, JUAN ANTONIO. See BOUJAS.

Bouzonié, JEAN, a French theologian, was born at Bordeaux about 1646. He became a Jesuit, taught literature for several years, and then devoted himself to preaching until obliged to give it up on account of early infirmities. He died at Poitiers, Oct. 30, 1726.

He wrote, Primiæ Musarum Serenissimo Delphino Oblatæ (Bordeaux, 1663):—Cantiques sur la Naissance de Notre Seigneur Jésus Christ (Poitiers, 1675):—Douze Preuves pour la Conception Immaculée de la Sainte Vierge (ibid.):—Histoire de l'Ordre des Religieuses filles de Notre Dame (ibid. 1697, 2 vols. 4to; some copies have the date 1700). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boverio, ZACARIA, an Italian theologian, was born at Saluzzo in 1568. He entered the Capuchin order in 1590, was professor of philosophy and theology, and became definitor-general of his order. He died at Genoa, May 31, 1638. He wrote, Demonstrationes Symbolarum Veræ et Falsæ Religionis, etc. (Lyons, 1617):—Orthodoxa Consultatio de Ratione Veræ Fidei et Religionis Amplectendæ, etc. (Madrid, 1623), which was composed for the purpose of converting to Catholicism the prince of Wales, afterwards Charles II.:—Histoire des Capucins (Lyons, 1632-39, 2 vols. fol.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bovet, FRANÇOIS DE, a French prelate, was born March 21, 1745. He was consecrated bishop of Sisteron, Sept. 13, 1789, but was obliged to leave France on account of the persecution. He returned in 1814, and was appointed in 1817 archbishop of Toulouse. He resigned this in 1820, and the same year was appointed member of the first order of the chapter of St. Denis. Being highly learned, Bovet published a work entitled Des Dynasties Égyptiennes, in which he considered the degree of confidence which the chronology of Manetho merited. He died in Paris, April 7, 1838. He wrote, L'Histoire des Derniers Pharaons et des Premiers Rois de Perse, selon Hérodote, tirée des Livres Prophétiques et du Livre d'Esther (Avignon):—Les Consolations de la Foi sur les Malheurs de l'Église. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boville (or Bovelles), CHARLES, a French theologian, was born at Soyecourt, in the diocese of Amiens. He was living in 1547. We have from his pen seven books of the theological questions on, The Creation of Angels, The Pleasures of Paradise, The Deluge, etc. (Paris, 1504, 1513; Basle, 1515 fol.):—a Commentary on the Gospel of St. John (Paris, 1511):—Commentary on the Lord's Prayer and four dialogues (ibid. 1551, 4to):—and other works.

Bovus, St. (in Italian, St. Bovo, and in English, St. Bobo), was a gentleman and soldier of Provence, who strongly defended his country against the Saracens. After a time, he quitted the profession of arms, and devoted himself to a life of penitence and retirement, every year making a pilgrimage on foot to Rome, on one of which journeys he died, at Voghera, near Pavia, May 22, 985.

Bowcer, THOMAS. See BOUCHIER.

Bowden, EDWIN, an English Congregational minister, was born at Devonport, April 6, 1802. He joined the Church in youth, began village preaching, and was soon made assistant minister at Ivy Bridge. In 1839 he accepted a call to Lostwithiel, Cornwall, and after a few years he became pastor of the Church at Wadebridge, in the same county. Finally he occupied the pulpit at Oak Hill, near Bath, where, in less than three years, his health had so failed that he was obliged to resign his post. He then retired to Heavitree, Exeter, wrote tracts, contributed articles to the various periodicals issued by the Religious Tract Society, and published a small volume entitled Spiritual Fables. He continued his work until 1875, and died, Aug. 31, 1876. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 347.

Bowden, JOHN (1), a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Baltimore, Md., Feb. 1, 1820. He joined the Church in 1838, in 1841 received license to exhort, and in 1844 was licensed to preach and admitted into the Kentucky Conference. In 1846 he was transferred to the Louisville Conference, and in 1848 retired from the itinerancy and travelled for the improvement of his health in Florida and Georgia, at the same time acting as general agent for Transylvania University and colporteur for a local Bible society. He graduated in medicine at Louisville University in 1852, and practiced successfully in Bowling Green until within a few months of his death, which occurred at Russellville, Aug. 5, 1854. Mr. Bowden was a warm friend, a true Christian gentleman, remarkably amiable, and a faithful expounder of the truth. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1854, p. 506.

Bowden, JOHN (2), an Irish Methodist preacher, was born at Cootehill in December, 1853. He was converted at thirteen, under the Rev. R. Hewitt, and began at that early age a career of usefulness in Methodism. With rare maturity of judgment, he became a class leader and local preacher, and in 1871, at the age of nineteen, entered the itinerant ministry of the Primitive Wesleyans. He died at Belfast, Feb. 7, 1880.

Bowden, R., an English Baptist minister, was born at Towersey, Bucks, Aug. 26, 1788. For more than forty years he preached gratuitously in his native village, where he was greatly respected and beloved. He died Aug. 26, 1859. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1861, p. 97. (J. C. S.)

Bowden, WILLIAM, an English Methodist preacher, was for several years a member of the Bible Christian Society at Ringsash, and also a local preacher. He entered the ministry in 1828, and for seven years labored with acceptance in that body. He died Aug. 21, 1835.

Bowdish, CHARLES GILES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. William S. Bowdish, was one of five brethren, all of whom consecrated themselves to the ministry in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was born at Potsdam, N. Y., May 12, 1834, was converted in 1853; studied for the ministry at Cazenovia Seminary, and in 1858 entered the Minnesota Conference. In 1864 he was appointed chaplain of the Eleventh Minnesota Regiment of Volunteers, and in 1870 was transferred to the New York East Conference, wherein he was faithful until his death, at Astoria, July 5, 1873. Mr. Bowdish was richly gifted in mental endowments; was cultured in music and painting, was remarkably benevolent in hospitality, an earnest and successful preacher. He rendered valuable aid in the formation of the Holston Conference, was twice elected chaplain of the Minnesota House of Representatives, was appointed by president Johnson, in 1867, to superintend the annual payment of the Chippewa Indians, and in 1872 was placed on the staff of official reporters at the General Conference. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 55; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Bowdish, LEONARD, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at New Lisbon, N. Y., in 1812. He experienced conversion at the age of sixteen; soon began exhorting, and in 1833 entered the Oneida Conference, wherein, without intermission for thirty-three years, he continued with success. In 1866 he became superannuated and removed to the sea-shore; spent two years laboring in the Providence Conference, and finally died at Bainbridge, N. Y., May 23, 1870. Mr. Bowdish was a man of energy and superior intellectual ability, remarkable for elegance of style and clearness in his pulpit delivery. He was fearless, uncompromising, and eminently successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 96.

Bowdyanga, the seven sections of wisdom among the Buddhists, including (1) the ascertainment of truth by mental application; (2) the investigation of causes; (3) persevering exertion; (4) joy; (5) tranquillity; (6) tranquillity in a higher degree, including freedom from all that disturbs either body or mind, and (7) equanimity.

Bowe, JOHN ACKRELL, an English Methodist preacher, born in 1821, was converted in his youth, among the Wesleyan Methodists, under a sermon by a local preacher in Devonshire. After two years he joined the Bible Christians. He began to preach at the age of twenty, and two years later, in 1843, entered the ministry, in which he labored for only two years, when he died at his father's house in S. Devon, Feb. 17, 1845.

Bowen, Charles James, a Unitarian minister, was born in Providence, R. I., May 20, 1827. He graduated from Brown University in 1847, and from the Divinity School of Harvard College, and was ordained as pastor of the Unitarian Society at Newburyport, Mass., Nov. 20, 1850, where he remained six years (1850-56), and then removed to Kingston, where he was settled two years (1856-58). He next went to Baltimore as pastor of the Second Unitarian Society in that city. Finding his position unpleasant at the breaking-out of the late war, he resigned, and for several years acted as chaplain in a hospital near that city. He became the minister of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Society, Roxbury, Mass., where he remained until his death, April 10, 1870. (J. C. S.)

Bowen, Elias, D.D., at the time of his decease a minister in the Free Methodist Church, was born at Warwick, Mass., June 6, 1791. Under the preaching of the Rev. Marvin Richardson of the M. E. Church, he was converted. On April 25, 1813, he received license to preach, and June 15, 1814, he entered the travelling ministry of the M. E. Church. He was prominently before the Methodist public for over fifty years. He was elected delegate to the General Conference seven times, and at one period was strongly urged to become a candidate for the episcopacy. During the anti-slavery struggle, he took a decided stand in favor of the oppressed. In the fall of 1869 he was admitted into the Susquehanna Conference of the F. M. Church. He died Dec. 25, 1871. Few men wielded a more vigorous and powerful pen than Dr. Bowen. His contributions to religious periodicals were numerous. His last literary work was a History of the Origin of the Free Methodist Church. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the F. M. Church, 1871, p. 16.

Bowen, Henry Perrotte, an English Congregational minister, was born at Ford, Pembrokeshire, Aug. 3, 1822. He was converted early in life, educated for the ministry at Airedale College, and in 1851 was ordained pastor at Middlesbro'-on-Tees. Here he labored seven years, then removed to Whitfield Chapel, London; but not finding the place at all congenial, he accepted a call to Brentwood, Essex. Here he labored eleven years with much success, and died Sept. 10, 1869. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 306.

Bowen, John, LL.D., was an English colonial prelate. The early part of his life was spent in farming operations in Canada, and at one time he served in the militia of that country. In 1842 he went to Ireland, and entered Trinity College, Dublin, from which he regularly graduated. He was subsequently ordained, went to Palestine and the East in 1847, remaining three or four years, assisting Mr. Layard in his excavations at Nineveh; returned to England, and in 1853 became rector of Orton-Longville, with Botolph-bridge, remaining four years; was appointed to the see of Sierra Leone, being the third bishop of that diocese, the jurisdiction of which extends over the western coast of Africa between 20° N. and 20° S. He died of yellow fever, June 2, 1859, at Fourah Bay, near Freetown, Sierra Leone. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 539.

Bowen, Josiah, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1788. After carrying on a printing establishment for some time in Brooklyn, N. Y., he entered the New York Conference in 1815, and continued in the regular work until 1840, filling many of the most important charges. He then became supernumerary, and in 1843 took a superannuated relation, which he held to the close of his life. He died Jan. 14, 1873. Mr. Bowen as a Christian was noticeable for his patience and meekness, and as a preacher for his ability. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 50.

Bowen, Penuel, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Woodstock, Conn. He graduated at Harvard College in 1762; was ordained as colleague-pastor with the Rev. Samuel Checkley, of the New South Church, Boston, April 30, 1766; was dismissed May 9, 1772; went to South Carolina in 1787; took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church; became rector of St. John's parish, Colleton, and died in October of the same year. He was the father of bishop Bowen of South Carolina. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 708.

Bowen, Reuben, a Methodist Episcopal minister, for years was an infidel, and took delight in perplexing all who could not give a reason for their hope. He finally began a careful reading of the Bible, was convicted of his sin, and embraced Christ as his Saviour. In 1835 he entered the New England Conference, and labored with acceptance and success until his death, June 28, 1843. Mr. Bowen was a man deeply devoted to God, studious, and laborious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 583.

Bowen, Robert J., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Pennsylvania, entered the ministry in 1872. He became rector of St. Thomas's Church, Philadelphia, where he remained until the time of his death, May 20, 1874. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Bowen, William, an English Congregational minister, was born in March, 1790, near St. Helen's, Lancashire. In early life he went to Liverpool, and there united with the church of Rev. Mr. Charrier, where his piety and talent found exercise in village preaching. He left Liverpool, and for some years travelled through the midland counties as a book-agent. He studied at Rowell College from 1816 to 1818. In the latter year he returned to Bretherton, where, by his exertions, in 1819, a church was formed. He set apart two days in the week to receive medical patients. He resigned his charge in 1851, after a pastorate of thirty-three years, in which he won all hearts to himself. He died Oct. 9, 1854. His piety was calm and consistent, and he was pre-eminently the friend of the poor. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1855, p. 208.

Bowens, EDWARD, LL.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Vermont, was, for a great many years, president of the University of Norwich, Conn.; subsequently, about 1867, he became professor of moral, intellectual and political philosophy in the same institution, having resigned the presidency. The following year he was president pro tem.; in 1870 was professor of ancient languages and political economy, a position which he held at the time of his death, July 6, 1872. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 133.

Bower, Jacob, a Baptist minister, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., Sept. 26, 1786. He was converted in 1812; licensed in October, 1816; and ordained in Logan County, Ky., Feb. 27, 1819—the only books he then had being a German Testament, the English Bible, and a hymn-book. For nearly ten years he served churches in Kentucky, and enjoyed many revivals. In 1828 he removed to Scott County, Ill., and became pastor of the Church at Winchester—a strong anti-missionary Church—from which he was dismissed on account of his interest in mission-work, and was sent by the Home Mission Society to preach in several counties in Illinois. He was a great sufferer for many years from a disease resembling elephantiasis, and died April 26, 1874. See Minutes of Ill. Anniversaries, 1874, p. 15, 16. (J. C. S.)

Bower, Moses, a minister of the Evangelical Association, was born in Adams County, Pa., April 28, 1814.

He was converted at the age of nineteen, and entered the ministry at the age of twenty-two. At the age of thirty-two he was elected presiding elder. Eleven months and twenty days after this election, in the midst of his usefulness, he was suddenly stricken down with fever, and died. He was a man of prepossessing appearance, of fine talents, and of marvellous pulpit powers. In 1882 a plain and neat chapel was erected to his memory in Stoytown, Somerset Co., Pa. See Evangelical Messenger.

Bowers, John (1), a British Wesleyan minister, was born at Chester, July 19, 1796. He was brought up in the principles of the Established Church; was converted under the Methodist ministry when seventeen; entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1813; was appointed house governor at Didsbury College in 1843, which position he held until 1864; was for some time general secretary of the Theological Institution. He was president of the Conference in 1858. He retired to Southport in 1864, and died in that city, May 30, 1866. Bowers was an eminent preacher at a time when the British Conference had not a few great preachers. His voice was "rich, varied, mellow, powerful." He made the art of preaching a study; to the preparation of his discourses he devoted indefatigable pains, and in their delivery his action was so finished and theatrical, and his elocution so graceful, that Everett says he might rather have been taken for a disciple of Kean or Kemble than of Wesley. His language was often glaring, yet still "varied, figurative, poetical, chaste, and elevated, showing a man of more than ordinary education." He was a memoriter preacher—"to the word of one syllable," says Everett. His supervision of the institution at Didsbury was eminently successful. See Everett's finely written portraiture, Wesleyan Centenary Takings (3d ed. Lond. 1841), i, 190 sq.; Minutes of the British Conference, 1866, p. 34; Dr. Osborn in West. Meth. Magazine, March, 1870, art. i.

Bowers, John (2), a Congregational minister, was born at Thompson, Conn., Sept. 14, 1805. He graduated at Yale College in 1832, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1836; was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Long Island, at Franklinville, Oct. 15, 1835. After leaving the seminary he taught one year, 1836 to 1837, in Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass. His first settlement was at Wilbraham, where he was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church, Dec. 13, 1837, and continued to serve in this relation for nearly twenty years; after which he supplied the pulpit at Agawam Falls nearly a year. In October, 1857, he preached a few Sabbaths to the Third Congregational Church in St. Johnsbury, Vt., and was unanimously invited to the pastorate. He commenced his permanent labors there Jan. 1, 1858, and was installed Feb. 4, 1858. Here he labored with great fidelity until his death, Feb. 4, 1863. Mr. Bowers was to the end a man of scholarly habits, and of remarkable benevolence. In domestic life he was genial and affectionate, and, as a pastor, earnest and faithful. Three of his sermons were published. See Cong. Quarterly, 1863, p. 194; 1864, p. 114.

Bowers, Thomas, S. T. P., an English prelate, became prebendary of Canterbury in 1715, archdeacon of Canterbury in 1721, and bishop of Chichester in 1722. He died Aug. 13, 1724. See Le Neve, Fasti, vol. i.

Bowers, W. W., a Lutheran minister, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., April 16, 1827. Although a student at Pennsylvania College, he did not graduate. For three years he studied theology at Heckerstown, Md., under the Rev. Dr. Anspach, and was licensed to preach in 1855. Soon after he removed to Nova Scotia, and became pastor at Lunenburg. Subsequently he ministered at Bridgewater and contiguous places, having his residence at Bridgewater. In August, 1873, he resigned his Nova Scotia charge, and removed to Concord, N. C., as pastor of the Church there. He died in Concord, Oct. 17, 1873. See Lutheran Observer, October, 1873.

Bowers, William V., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Pennsylvania, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1806. He graduated at the Virginia Theological Seminary, and was ordained by bishop Moore in 1834. After a rectorship of twenty years in St. Martin's Parish, Hanover County, Va., he officiated in Lewiston, New Milford, and Great Bend, Pa., and latterly in his native city. He died at Olney, June 6, 1880. See Whittaker, Almanac and Directory, 1881.

Bowersox, James Grier, a Congregational minister, was born in North Industry, O., Dec. 15, 1833. After preliminary study at the academies at Williams Centre and Neville, he was a member, for one year, of Oberlin College. For five years he was a teacher in Butler, Ind., and for two years in Edgerton, O. In 1871 he graduated from Otterbein University, and then, in 1873-74, studied theology in Oberlin. Previous to this time, in 1869, he had been ordained by the United Brethren. In 1872 he became acting-pastor of the Congregational Church at Edgerton, and during the two years following held the same position at Fitchville. On account of impaired health he removed to a farm at Edgerton, where he became principal of a school. He died Jan. 14, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 17.

Bowery, James, an English Congregational minister, was born at Bristol, July 20, 1816. In 1834 he joined the Congregational Church at Zion Chapel. During the week-days he was engaged in business, yet he managed to prepare himself for the ministry by the time he was twenty-one years of age, and became pastor of the Congregational Church at Whitechurch, Hants. After seven years' work there he offered himself to the London Missionary Society; was accepted and appointed to Rodborough, Berberce, where he labored for nine and a half years, and became very popular. His sermons were clothed in simple language, admirably adapted to his people, full of stirring thought and striking illustrations. In 1854 he was driven from his missionary work by colonial fever. He returned to England, and in 1856 became pastor of Ebenezer Chapel, Shadwell, where he continued as pastor until his death, Aug. 15, 1877. Mr. Bowery's mind was logical rather than imaginative. To feelings of ambition, and pride, and envy he seemed a stranger. The poor, the suffering, the perplexed not only found in him a sympathizer, but a sharer. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 308.

Bowes, Joseph, an English Wesleyan minister, was trained a Romanist, but united with the Methodist Church. He entered the ministry in 1792, and travelled twenty-eight circuits. In 1835 he became a supernumerary in Bristol, where he died, Sept. 26, 1849. His characteristics were simplicity, humility, and charity. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1850.

Bowie, John, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was a native of Prince George's County, Md. Having gone to England to be ordained, he was licensed to preach in Maryland, July 28, 1771. Returning to America, he became curate to the Rev. Alexander Williamson of Prince George's Parish, in Montgomery Co. In 1774 he was pastor of Worcester Parish, Worcester Co. With the beginning of the Revolution he exhibited violent Tory sentiments, for which he was imprisoned two years in Annapolis. Having been released, he settled in Talbot County, on the Choptank River, teaching a classical school and becoming the rector of St. Peter's Parish. In 1785 he was pastor at Great Choptank Parish, still, however, retaining his school. Having resigned this parish in 1790, he became rector of St. Michael's, in Talbot Co., where he remained until the close of his life, in the meantime maintaining his school. He died in 1801. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 374.

Bowker, Samuel Drake, a Congregational minister, was born at Blanchard, Me., April 2, 1835. He was converted at Biddeford in 1851; prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and graduated from Bangor Seminary in 1860. In that year he was settled as pastor of the Church in Winthrop, Me. After two years he was compelled to resign on account of ill-health. In 1863 he became pastor of a Church in New Market, N. H., but resigned before the close of the year. He went West, hoping to regain physical vigor. In 1865 he was appointed agent of Lincoln College, in Kansas, and subsequently became professor of English literature in that institution. He died in Topeka, Kansas, Feb. 15, 1868. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 288.

Bowler, John, a preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was born at Newcastle-under-Lyme in 1833. Being left an orphan when young, he entered the Methodist Sunday-school, became a teacher, and was converted under Mr. W. Lawton's preaching. He was a local preacher some years, entered the ministry of the Methodist Free Church in 1863, and for eleven years occupied good circuits. He was a diligent student, good preacher, and useful pastor. He died at Launceston in 1874. See Minutes of the 19th Annual Assembly.

Bowles, Nathaniel (1), a Baptist minister, was born in 1758. He was converted in 1777, was baptized in 1786, ordained in 1794, and spent his life in serving his Master largely in itinerant labor. A journal of eighty-six days informs us that he rode 1017 miles, preached 52 times, attended 13 meetings, expended $239, and received for all his service during this time $17.95. He died at Richmond, N. H., Dec. 2, 1843. (J. C. S.)

Bowles, Nathaniel (2), a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Richmond, N. H., Aug. 12, 1788, and was a son of the preceding. In 1811 he became a Christian, and united with a Free-will Baptist Church at Lisbon. He labored with great zeal and success in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. He was ordained in 1815. The last twenty-five years of his life were spent in Bethlehem, N. H., where he died, July 6, 1881. See Morning Star, April 26, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Bowles, John Sharpe, an English Congregational minister, was born in Norwich, July 3, 1801. He was trained in the ways of piety and truth, was converted when quite young, and began preaching when about twenty years of age. In 1838 he was appointed city missionary by the Norwich City Mission Committee. Six hours per day, for five days in the week, during seventeen years, he was employed in visiting from house to house, distributing tracts, reading and praying with the people, holding prayer-meetings, and preaching in cottages and school-rooms in a parish that was the haunt of thieves, prostitutes, beggars, and gypsies. Mr. Bowles removed to Hingham in 1855, and became pastor of the Independent Church in that town. Thence he went to Sutton, Herefordshire, and thence, in 1862, to Market Lavington, Wiltshire, where he died, Feb. 13, 1864. Mr. Bowles excelled as a pastor. His kindness of heart peculiarly fitted him for this work. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 226.

Bowles, Oliver, an English clergyman, was fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge, and rector of Sutton. He died in 1674. His publications include Tractatus de Pastore Evangelico (1649, 1739):—and some Sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bowles, Orlyn D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Nashville, O., about 1836. He experienced conversion when about twenty-one, and in 1861 united with the Upper Iowa Conference. He was a man of prodigious energy, and labored with unflinching zeal and fidelity until his decease, March 18, 1879. Mr. Bowles was deeply pious, untiring in his pastoral work, and an able minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 50.

Bowman, A. T., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Sidney, Me., in 1822. He was converted at the age of fourteen, licensed in 1860, spent a year at the Maine State Seminary (now Bates College), and was ordained in 1861 as pastor of the Somerset Mills Church, where he remained six years, during three of which he sustained the relation of pastor to the Church at Clinton. He next settled at Hartland, where he was pastor six years (1867-73), after which he became pastor of the Church at West Pittsfield. He died at Hartland, Me., June 3, 1880. See Morning Star, Aug. 25, 1880. (J. C. S.)

Bowman, Francis, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Westford, near Burlington, Vt., Feb. 27, 1795. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Otsego. He graduated from the University of Vermont, and entered Princeton Seminary in 1821, where he spent only one year. After completing his studies, he went to Virginia in 1823, and in 1824 was ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry by the Presbytery of Hanover, and became pastor of the Church at Charlottesville, at which place and at South Plains he labored with great success. He was engaged in the service of the American Bible Society. Then he labored at Greensborough, Ga., for nineteen years. Four years he ministered at Bryan Neck. In 1862 he returned to the scenes of his early labors. From this time he devoted himself to study and meditation, and had nearly completed a work on The-Baptism of the Spirit, when he died April 26, 1875. Dr. Bowman was a noble specimen of a refined Christian gentleman. See Necrolog. Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1876.

Bowman, Jarrett, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Charlestown, Va., Dec. 1, 1816. He was born a slave, and held in bondage until he was forty-one years old, and then bought his freedom. In his forty-eighth year he was converted, soon afterwards began exhorting, received license to preach in 1862, and in 1865 was admitted into the Washington Conference, and labored faithfully until his death at Strasburg, Va., June 11, 1878. Mr. Bowman was a man of fine qualities, sound in judgment, untiring in industry, practical, clear, systematic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 18.

Bowman, John, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Frederick County, Va., Sept. 13, 1773. He entered the itinerancy in 1812, and labored faithfully in Tennessee and Kentucky until compelled to become a supernumerary. He belonged to the Holston Conference, and died Sept. 25, 1847. Mr. Bowman was an excellent man, cheerful and submissive, eloquent and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1847, p. 114.

Bowman, Jonathan, a Congregational minister, was born at Lexington, Mass. He graduated from Harvard College in 1724, resigned his pastoral charge in December, 1773, and died March 30, 1775, aged sixty-eight years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 140.

Bowman, Joseph, a Unitarian minister, was born at Westborough, Mass., in 1733. He graduated at Harvard College in 1761, was ordained at Boston as missionary to the Indians, Aug. 31, 1762, and installed at Oxford, Nov. 14, 1764. From thence he went to Bernard, Vt., and was installed as pastor Sept. 22, 1784. He died Dec. 8, 1820. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 10.

Bowman, Robert, an English Congregational minister, was born at Langholm, Dumfriesshire, July 27, 1818. At the age of seventeen he went to Huddersfield, and shortly afterwards was converted and joined the Independent Church at Highfield. He was educated at Edinburgh University. He preached successively at Sunderland, 1843; Chelmsford, 1846; Fish-street Chapel, Hull, 1854; Melbourne, Australia, 1858; and at Heckmondwike, England, 1860, where he died, Sept. 4, 1867. Mr. Bowman had clear and correct perceptions of divine truth and wonderful power of imagination, which he carefully cultured. He had great facility of utterance, aptness, with a peculiar force of expression, and an attractive eloquence. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 252.

Bowman, Samuel, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was rector of St. James's Church at Lancaster, Pa., thirty-four years, and for three years prior to his death was assistant bishop of the diocese of Pennsylvania. He died suddenly, Aug. 3, 1861. He was highly esteemed for purity and amiability of character. See Record of the Class of 1845 of Yale College, p. 21.

Bownas, Samuel, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Westmoreland, England, in 1676, and was converted under the preaching of Anne Wilson, a Quaker minister. Shortly after he was himself called to the ministry, but for the first two years seldom exercised his gifts. In 1701 he made a religious visit to Scotland. While preaching at Jedburgh, not far from Edinburgh, he was arrested for preaching in the street. Shortly after he was released, and at the end of two hours was again arrested for the same offence. He was permitted to leave the town, however, especially as one of the soldiers who guarded him interposed in his behalf. In 1702 he arrived in America, and soon after came in contact with George Keith, who caused him to be committed to prison at Hempstead, L. I., under the charge of speaking scandalous lies against the Church of England. As the court was not in session, he remained in prison three months. The grand jury refused to indict him, whereupon the chief justice requested them to reconsider the bill. This was accordingly done, but with the same result. While in prison he learned the trade of a shoemaker. After nearly a year of imprisonment he was set at liberty. He returned to England in 1706, and for several years was occupied with his ministerial work. In 1726 he again visited America, also the north of England and Ireland in 1740, and again in 1746. He died April 2, 1753. See Friends' Library, iii, 1-70; The Friend, viii, 310.

Bowne, Anne, relict of John Bowne, was an elder in the Society of Friends (orthodox). For more than fifty years she resided in the ancient dwelling at Flushing, L. I., where the yearly, quarterly, and monthly meetings of Friends had been held for a long time, and where she often entertained the ministers of her denomination. She died at Flushing, April 16, 1834, aged seventy-three years. See The Friend, vii, 232.

Bowring, Sir John, LL.D., a modern hymn-writer, was born at Exeter, England, Oct. 17, 1792. He exhibited unusual intellectual precocity in his youth, and had a remarkable aptitude for acquiring modern languages. His first attempt at authorship was in the publication of his translations of the popular poetry of Russia, Holland, and Spain. Subsequently he published translations from the poetry of writers in Poland, Servia, Hungary, Portugal, Iceland and Bohemia. After the death of Jeremy Bentham, he published an edition of the works of that distinguished writer on political economy, and also wrote his biography. The works thus collected are included in eleven vols. 8vo, and were issued in 1843. When the Westminster Review came into existence, he was appointed its first editor, and himself wrote largely for it on matters pertaining to parliamentary reform and free-trade. He published, in 1833, Matins and Vespers, with Hymns, a collection of original poetry, chiefly of a devotional character. With Villiers, he prepared a work On the Commercial Relations between France and Great Britain (1834-35, 2 vols.). He extended his inquiries in a similar direction in connection with the countries of Switzerland, Italy, the Levant and Germany. He was a member of Parliament for two years (1835-37), and again for eight years (1841-49). He was a warm advocate of liberal opinions, and one of the counsel of the anti-corn-law league. He filled a high diplomatic position in China, having been appointed, in 1849, British consul at Canton, and afterwards acting plenipotentiary. On his return to England he published, in 1853, two volumes in which he strongly advocated the decimal system of coinage. He was knighted in 1854, and made governor of Hong Kong. Coming under the censure of Parliament on account of the course he pursued in the bombardment of the Chinese forts in 1856, he was recalled. Having been sent to Siam to conclude a treaty of commerce with that kingdom, he published his Kingdom of Siam and its People (Lond. 1857, 2 vols.), and not long after he published A Visit to the Philippine Islands in 1858-59. The hymn by which Sir John Bowring is best known is the one commencing

"Watchman, tell us of the night, What its signs of promise are," written in 1825. He died Nov. 22, 1872. See Butterworth, Story of the Hymns, p. 128; Belcher, Historical Sketches of Hymns, p. 95; Appleton's New Encyclop. iii, 169. (J. C. S.)

Bowron, John, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Cotherstone, Yorkshire, England, in 1627, and was converted under the ministry of George Fox. "At Edinburgh he preached to the people as he went through the streets of that city, and at the Cross. The soldiers were very kind to him, but the priests were in a rage against him, for he was a dread to them." Subsequently he visited Barbadoes and Guiana, returning to England after a most perilous voyage. One of the first things he did after landing was to go to Richard Cromwell "with a message from the Lord, warning him of the day of the Lord." He made six tours in Ireland in six years. Several times he was cast into prison, and was frequently despoiled of his goods. His last days were full of peace, and he died a happy, Christian death, Aug. 5, 1704. See Evans, Piety Promoted, i, 233-236. (J. C. S.)

Bowschyre, Thomas. See BOUCHIER.

Bowser, Joseph P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore, Md., March 4, 1825. He gave his heart to God while very young, became an exhorter in 1852, a local preacher in 1854, and on the organization of the Washington Conference became a member thereof, and in it labored until his decease, Sept. 12, 1870. Mr. Bowser was characterized by zeal, wisdom, and devotion to his work. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 27.

Bowstead, John, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born near Carlisle in 1659. He was converted when young, and in early manhood "received a gift of the ministry." He labored in all parts of England, also in Scotland and Ireland, holding meetings not only among Friends, but among others, as Providence seemed to open the way, and the blessing of the Spirit of God came to many through his preaching. He did not escape the persecutions of his times, being frequently deprived of his goods because he would not pay tithes. He died in 1716. See Piety Promoted, ii, 160, 161. (J. C. S.)

Bowtell (or Boltell), an old English term for a round moulding, or bead; also for the small shafts of clustered pillars in window and door jambs, mulions, etc., probably from its resemblance to the shaft of an arrow or bolt. It is the English term for the torus.

Bowyer, Reynold Gideon, LL.B., an English divine, was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge. In 1791 he was appointed prebendary of Durham, and in 1814 was made rector of Howick and vicar of North Allerton, in connection with which he also held the chapelries of Brompton and Dighton. He died Jan. 30, 1826. Dr. Bowyer published A Sermon preached before the Delivery of the Colors to the Durham Volunteer Infantry (1803), and Comparative View of the Two New Systems of Education for the Infant Poor (1811, 8vo), in a charge delivered to the clergy of Durham. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1826, p. 224.

Boyce, Hector. See BOECE, HECTOR.

Boyce, James, a Roman Catholic priest, was born in Ardagh, County Longford, Ireland, in 1826. He emigrated to the United States early in life, completed his ecclesiastical studies at St. Joseph's Seminary, Fordham, N. Y., and in 1854 was ordained priest and pastor of St. Mary's Church. In 1863 he was installed pastor over St. Teresa's parish, New York city, and by his zeal made it one of the best in the city. He founded a parochial school for boys in Rutgers street, and established a convent for girls, under the direction of the Ursuline nuns, in Henry street. He died July 9, 1876. See Appletons' Annual Cyclop. 1876, p. 613.

Boyce, John, an associate Reformed minister, graduated at Dickinson College in 1877. He studied divinity under the Rev. Matthew Lind, of Greencastle, Pa., and was the first pastor of Hopewell congregation, Chester district, S. C. He died after a very brief ministry. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iv, 67.

Boyce, William, Mus. Doc., an eminent English musical composer, was born in London in 1710. He received his early musical training while a chorister of St. Paul's, and in 1736 became organist of St. Michael's Church, Cornhill, and composer to the chapel royal. He became master of the king's band in 1757, and soon afterwards was appointed principal organist to the chapel royal. He died in London in 1799. "As an ecclesiastical composer Boyce ranks among the best representatives of the English school." Among his anthems the best are, By the Waters of Babylon, and O, Where shall Wisdom be Found! He published Anthems (1788)—and three volumes of Cathedral Music, a collection in score of the most valuable compositions for that service by the several English masters of the two preceding centuries. See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Boyce, William M., a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1807. He was licensed by the First Presbytery of Ohio in 1832, and was installed pastor of Richmond and Ebenezer, on which charges he labored for twenty years. He died Oct. 31, 1862. "He was an earnest preacher of the Gospel and of a blameless life." See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 357.

Boyd, Abraham, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland in December, 1770. He pursued his studies at Cannonsburg Academy; was licensed to preach June 25, 1800, by the Presbytery of Ohio; was received by the Presbytery of Erie, April 13, 1802; preached at Middlesex until 1817, and at Bull Creek until June 25, 1833; and died near Tarentum, Pa., Aug. 14, 1834. He was a practical preacher, a firm disciplinarian, and had great power in prayer.

Boyd, Adam, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Ballymoney, Ireland, in 1692. He came to New England as a probationer in 1722; was received under the care of the New Castle Presbytery in 1724, and was sent to Octorara with directions to supply New Castle and Conestoga. He accepted a call from Octorara and Piqua, and was ordained. In 1727 he was directed to spend every sixth Sabbath at Middle Octorara. The Forks of Brandywine composed part of his field till 1734. In the progress of the great revival a large portion of his congregation left him and joined the Brunswick brethren. He continued pastor forty-four years, and resigned, his congregation agreeing to pay him twenty-five pounds yearly during his life. He died Nov. 23, 1768. (W. P. S.)

Boyd, Alexander (1), a Presbyterian minister, studied theology at the university of Glasgow, and came to America in 1748. He was licensed by the Boston Presbytery, and in 1749 accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Georgetown, Me. We find no trace of him after 1758. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 29, 30.

Boyd, Alexander (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1796. He graduated at Belfast College in 1825. In 1831 he came to America; was ordained by the New Castle Presbytery of the Reformed Church, and was stationed in Western Pennsylvania. In 1853 he removed to the West, and was stationed at Solon, Ia. He died in Johnson County, Dec. 9, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 96.

Boyd, Andrew, a Scottish clergyman, was minister of Egleshaw, and was preferred to the see of Argyle in 1613. He did much good in the diocese. He died Dec. 22, 1636. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 291.

Boyd, Andrew Hunter Holmes, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Boydsville, Va., June 4, 1814. He graduated at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1830; studied theology in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J.; also at New Haven, Conn.; and for a few years in Edinburgh, Scotland, attending the lectures of Dr. Chalmers and Sir William Hamilton. He filled several of the most important Presbyterian churches in Virginia and Maryland. He was not stationed long at one place, for he was constantly receiving calls to other and larger churches. At the disruption of the Church in 1837, he identified himself with the New School. He died Dec. 15, 1865. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 425.

Boyd, Bankhead, a Presbyterian minister, was born in County Londonderry, Ireland, March, 1808. He came to America in 1824, and settled in Pennsylvania. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1829. In 1833 he was licensed by Cartiers Presbytery, and stationed at Strabine, where he labored until his death in 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 208.

Boyd, Benjamin, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., Dec. 25, 1776. He was educated at Jefferson College, and was licensed and ordained in 1801, and labored in Erie County until 1811, when he removed to Western Virginia. He was chaplain in the army during the war of 1812. In 1814 he removed to Kentucky. In 1827 he was a member of the Cincinnati Presbytery; in 1834, of the Madison Presbytery. He died Oct. 1, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 79.

Boyd, Charles Henry, a Congregational teacher and minister, was born at Francetown, N. H., Nov. 4, 1836. He studied at the academy in his native village; and graduated at Dartmouth in 1858. After teaching a year in Washington city, he was tutor of mathematics in his alma mater for another year, and then entered Andover Theological Seminary, and, on graduating, went to assist Rev. Dr. Bond, of Norwich, Conn. In 1864 he was ordained pastor of the Church at Mystic Bridge, Stonington, and here he toiled so severely that in a year he was compelled to desist from preaching, and he died at Manchester, N. H., Jan. 5, 1866. See Cong. Quarterly, 1866, p. 209.

Boyd, David, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Maine, May 20, 1781. He occupied a prominent place in his denomination, and during his long service in the ministry did much to promote the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. He was frequently called to posts of public trust; was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature when Maine was a district of that state, and was a member of the convention that framed the constitution of his native state. He died at his residence in North Berwick, Dec. 11, 1855. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1857, p. 87. (J. C. S.)

Boyd, Erasmus J., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Hartwick, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1815. He graduated at Hanover College in 1837, and at the Union Theological Seminary in 1840. He was ordained Nov. 3, 1842, and was pastor at Brooklyn, Mich., 1840 to 1850. For many years thereafter he was principal of the Monroe Female Seminary, Michigan. In 1881 he served the Church at Sarinac with great acceptability and usefulness, and died there suddenly, Nov. 24, 1882. See Presb. Home Missions, Jan. 1882; Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Seminary, 1876, p. 16.

Boyd, George, D.D., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in New York city, Feb. 8, 1788. In 1806 he graduated at Columbia College, and began the study of law with the Hon. James Emott, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and in 1812 he removed to Ogdensburg, to practice his profession. Soon after he began the study of theology under the Rev. Dr. Reed, of Poughkeepsie, to which place he removed. In 1814 he was ordained, and not long after became rector of St. John's Church, Northern Liberties, Philadelphia. For some time he was president of the standing committee of the diocese of Pennsylvania, an active member of the Board of Missions, a trustee of the General Theological Seminary, and once or twice a delegate to the General Convention. He died in Philadelphia, Dec. 3, 1850. Although his style of preaching was not of the popular cast, his voice was musical and of great compass, and his discourses were instructive, logical, and often very effective. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 572; Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1851, p. 639.

Boyd, Green, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Independence County, Texas, in September, 1824. He was converted in 1838, licensed to exhort in 1842, to preach in 1848, and in 1854 was ordained deacon. For several years he was a prominent member of the Arkansas Conference, and in 1865 united with the Texas Conference, in which he did zealous work until his death in 1870. Mr. Boyd was a pious man, a good citizen, and a useful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1870, p. 501.

Boyd, Hugh M., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated at Union College, N. Y., in 1813, and at New Brunswick Seminary in 1830. He was pastor at Saratoga, N. Y., 1830 to 1833; Schaghticoke, Saratoga Co., 1835 to 1841; and died in 1846. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 193.

Boyd, James (1), a Scottish clergyman, was a native of Trochrig, and received the title of the see of Glasgow in 1572. He exercised the office of particular pastor at the cathedral church. In 1578, when the legality of the episcopal function was first called into question by the Assembly, he learnedly and solidly, from the Scripture and antiquity, defended the lawfulness of his office. His health failed him, and he died in June, 1581. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 261.

Boyd, James (2), a Presbyterian minister, was ordained by the First Presbytery of Philadelphia in 1770, and installed pastor of the Presbyterian churches of Newtown and Bensalem, Pa., where he remained for forty-three years. He was a graduate of Princeton College. In 1781 he was elected a trustee of that college, which position he resigned in 1800. He died in 1813. Mr. Boyd's influence was widely felt. See Alexander, Princeton College of the 18th Century.

Boyd, James (3), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania in 1774. After studying in private for a time, he went to Cannonsburg and completed his classical studies at Jefferson College. He then studied theology with Dr. McMillan. He was taken under the care of the Presbytery of Erie, as a candidate for the ministry, April 10, 1806. He was licensed by the same, April 22, 1807. He labored as a supply in various portions of the Presbytery, in the autumn of 1808, and in the same year accepted calls to the churches of Newton and Warren, O. These were his only charges. He died March 8, 1813. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Erie.

Boyd, Jesse M., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born Nov. 2, 1817. He experienced religion in 1844; was licensed to exhort in 1845, to preach later in the same year, and in 1846 entered the Arkansas Conference. About six years later he removed to Texas and united with the Northwest Texas Conference, and in it did noble work until his death, Dec. 19, 1871. As men estimate ministerial talent, Mr. Boyd was only common, but he was a mighty man of God in rescuing the perishing. He was fully consecrated to his work. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 763.

Boyd, John (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Scotland. He came to America as a probationer, and was ordained by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, Dec. 29, 1706. He labored at Freehold and Middletown, and died in 1708. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Boyd, John (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland in 1768. His early studies were pursued under John McPherrin, his pastor. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Redstone, April 23, 1801. He preached one year as a licentiate in the bounds of the Presbytery of Erie. At the first meeting of the Presbytery of Erie, April 18, 1802, he presented a dismission from the Presbytery of Redstone, and was taken under the care of the new Presbytery. He accepted calls from Slate Lick and Union churches, in what is now Armstrong County, Pa. He was ordained at Union on June 16, 1802. This pastoral relation continued until April 17, 1810. At the meeting of the General Assembly, in May, 1809, he was appointed a missionary for two months on the headwaters of the Alleghany and the borders of Lake Erie. He also supplied, for a short time, the churches of Amity and West Liberty. He was transferred, on account of ill-health, from Erie Presbytery to that of Lancaster, Oct. 4, 1810. Shortly after this he was preaching at Wills Creek, in South-eastern Ohio. Afterwards he served Red Oak and Strait Creek churches, in Chillicothe Presbytery. He next settled as pastor of the Church of Bethel, in Oxford Presbytery. He died Aug. 20, 1816. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Erie.

Boyd, John (3), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Douglas, Isle of Man, July 14, 1796. He was converted at nineteen under Dr. Raffles, in Liverpool; was ordained in 1823 for the Newfoundland Wesleyan mission; labored in that island until 1832; returned to his native land; preached until 1864; retired to Lymm, near Warrington, and died Jan. 15, 1868. He was an indefatigable worker, never allowing a moment to be unemployed. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1868, p. 20; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1871, p. 769.

Boyd, Joseph, an English Congregational minister, was born about the year 1810, and educated at the Borough-road Training School, from which place he went to teach a school connected with Hanover chapel, Toxteth Park, Liverpool. While here he was converted and began to preach, and in 1837 entered the Hull Town-mission. He afterwards spent a short time in Hull College, and was appointed evangelist at Ousefleet, Whitgift, and Reedness, by the East Riding Home Missionary Society. In 1843 he became pastor of the Church at Burley-in-Wharfedale, where he labored for twelve years with much acceptance. In 1855 he removed to West Melton, near Rotherham, where for twenty-five years he pursued his calling with abundant labors. He resigned his charge at the end of September, 1880; and died June 17, 1881. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 285.

Boyd, Joshua, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Goshen, N. Y., March 10, 1785. He graduated at Union College in 1814; studied theology under Dr. McDowell of Elizabeth, N. J.; and was licensed by the Presbytery of Elizabeth in 1826. He was missionary to Roxbury and Middletown, N. Y., 1826 to 1827; to Herkimer and Fallsburgh, 1827 to 1828. From 1828 to 1836 he served the First and Second Churches of Rotterdam, and the Second Church only from 1836 to 1840. He served the Church at Middleburgh, Schoharie Co., 1840 to 1842; Germantown, Columbia Co., 1842 to 1850. He was without a charge from the time he left Germantown until his death, Nov. 23, 1874. He was venerable in appearance, modest in deportment, and unusually solemn, but acceptable in pulpit services. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 193.

Boyd, Reuben T., a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, was born in Maryland, July 3, 1794. He was converted at a camp-meeting in 1813, and was licensed to preach by the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1825. In 1829 he connected himself with the Maryland Annual Conference of the Associated Methodist churches. In 1838 he removed by transfer to the North Illinois Conference. For two years he preached on a circuit in western Kentucky. From thence he removed within the bounds of the Ohio Annual Conference, where he labored until 1849, when he returned East, and in March, 1850, he was again received into the Maryland Conference. In 1859 his health failed, and he died in 1865. As a preacher, he was earnest, pointed, and practical; his sermons were well digested and arranged. As a writer, he greatly excelled. A series of articles published by him, among which was an exposition of the Lord's Prayer, in the Methodist Protestant, were greatly eulogized and admired. See Cobhauer, History of the Founders of the M. P. Church (Pittsburgh, 1880), p. 220.

Boyd, Robert (1), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., April 5, 1792. He united with the Church in 1811, was received into the Baltimore Conference in 1815, transferred to Pittsburgh Conference in 1825, became a superannuate in 1860, was a member of the General Conferences of 1844 and 1856, and died at Barnesville, O., July 4, 1880. He was of decided convictions, conscientious, and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 242.

Boyd, Robert (2), D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Girvan, Ayrshire, Scotland, Aug. 24, 1816, and was reared in the Presbyterian Church, of which he became a member at the age of fifteen. Subsequently he became a Baptist. He removed to America in 1843, and became pastor of a Church at Brockville, Canada. After serving churches in London and Hamilton, Canada, he removed, in 1854, to Waterville, Wis., where, for a time, he resided on a farm. Afterwards he was a pastor in Waukesha, Mich., and of the Edina Place Church, Chicago. An attack of paralysis, in 1863, obliged him to retire from the Church in Chicago, and he once more took up his residence in Waukesha. For four years he preached from the pulpit to which he had to be carried, and where he sat in his chair while addressing his congregation. He was for twelve years an invalid, but during this long period his fertile pen was constantly busy. Among the works which he wrote during this time were, Glad Tidings, None but Christ, Grace and Truth, The Good Shepherd, Lectures to Young Converts, etc. He died at his residence in Waukesha, Aug. 1, 1879. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 122. (J. C. S.)

Boyd, Robert J., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Chester district, S. C., Nov. 24, 1805. He received a careful religious training; was early converted; did zealous labor for some time as a local preacher, and soon after (1820) entered the missionary field adjacent to Walterboro, S. C., under the auspices of the South Carolina Conference. In 1839 he began circuit work, and in 1859 station work. He closed his life of active service in the midst of his duties on Marion district, Feb. 21, 1865. Whether missionary to the negroes, circuit rider, preacher, pastor, or presiding elder, Mr. Boyd always met his duties courageously and proved himself equal to the task. He was conspicuously unostentatious, possessed a powerful, well-poised intellect, and adorned his character with every Christian grace. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1869, p. 314.

Boyd, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Europe. He was four years in the ministry, and died in Bedford County, Pa., September, 1794. He was characterized as eminently pious by his innocent and holy life and conversation. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1795, p. 60.

Boyd, William, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Franklin County, Pa., in 1758. He graduated at Princeton College in 1778, and was engaged for two years thereafter in teaching. He was licensed to preach by Donegal Presbytery in 1783. In 1784 he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at Lamington, N. J., where he continued his labors until his death, May 17, 1807. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 444.

Boyd, William A., a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Lancaster County, Pa. He graduated at Dickinson College in 1809, and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Castle. He received calls from the united congregations of Spruce Creek and Sinking Valley in the latter part of the year 1816, and was ordained and installed April 2, 1817. He resigned his charge in the fall of 1821, and died May 11, 1823. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Huntingdon, 1874.

Boyden, D. Hanson, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Virginia, began his active ministry by officiating, in 1870, at Fairfax Courthouse and Haymarket, Va. In 1871 he resided at Cobham Depot, and died Dec. 22 of that year. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 133.

Boyden, Edward D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Charleston, S. C., Jan. 14, 1827. He joined the Church in 1852, was licensed to preach in 1853, and in 1854 united with the South Carolina Conference, wherein he toiled faithfully till his death in 1856. Mr. Boyden was a man of much promise, clear in perception, correct in judgment, poetic in imagination, invincible in will, and untiring in zeal. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1856, p. 698.

Boyden, James, a Universalist minister, was born in 1799. He labored for a while in fellowship with the old Northern Association in Vermont; was a frequent contributor to the Christian Repository, an intelligent and consistent Christian, and died Feb. 22, 1875, in Montpelier, Vt. See Universalist Register, 1876, p. 115.

Boyden, Luman, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Nov. 12, 1805. He experienced religion in 1830, and in 1836 entered the New England Conference, wherein he labored faithfully till 1857, when he became a supernumerary, in which relation, and that of a superannuate, he remained to the close of his life, March 9, 1876. Mr. Boyden was characterized by humility, honesty, purity, and sincere, earnest devotion to the cause of Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 69.

Boyden, Orvil P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Kentucky, Sept. 23, 1819. He experienced conversion in early manhood, and in 1843 received license to preach, and was admitted into the Indiana Conference. The last twenty years of his life were spent in the North Indiana Conference, wherein he filled some of its most important appointments, and in which he had no pulpit superiors. He died at Angola, Ind., Aug. 22, 1865, greatly beloved by all who knew him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 69.

Boyer, Benjamin, a German Reformed minister, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., Feb. 4, 1792, and was instructed early in life in the precepts and doctrines of the German Reformed Church. He took a theological course at Philadelphia under the direction of Rev. Samuel Helffenstein, D.D. After his ordination in 1820, he took charge of four congregations in St. Peter's, in Schuylkill Co., also Berne and Zion, in Berks Co., and Stumptown, in Lebanon Co. He labored hard in this field in different congregations in Pennsylvania, from 1830 to 1854, when his health failed him. After much suffering he was released by death, Nov. 15, 1864. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 164.

Boyer, Jean François, a French Theatine, was born in Paris, March 12, 1675. He was the third of eight children, seven of whom took the monastic vows, and all lived to be more than eighty years of age. In 1730 François was made bishop of Mirepoix, and five years afterwards he was appointed preceptor to the Dauphin, upon which he resigned his see. He died Aug. 20, 1755. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boyer, Pierre (1), a Protestant theologian of France, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He wrote Abrégé de l'Histoire des Vaudois (Hague, 1691). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boyer, Pierre (2), a French theologian, was born at Arlac, Oct. 12, 1677. He was a strong writer against the Jesuits and the bull Unigenitus. In consequence of his unquiet behavior he was imprisoned, and died at Vincennes, Jan. 18, 1755. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boyer, Robert Charge, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Illinois, resided, in 1870, in Pulaski, N. Y. About a year after this he was connected with the diocese of Illinois, and continued to make his home in that state until his death in 1878. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1879, p. 168.

Boyer, Stephen, a Presbyterian minister, was born in New Brunswick, N. J., March 18, 1783. He spent several of his early years as a merchant's clerk in Philadelphia, and graduated at Jefferson College in 1808; was licensed to preach in 1810; was stationed in Easton, Pa., in 1812; resigned his charge in 1814, and accepted a call to the Church at Columbia. He subsequently removed to York, and divided his services between the churches of York, Columbia, and Wrightsville. He was for several years teacher in York County Academy, and was an accomplished scholar and teacher. He died Nov. 10, 1847. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 424.

Boeyermans (or Boeyermans), THEODORE, an eminent Flemish painter, flourished in the 17th century. He was a native of Antwerp. His principal works are in Flanders and Brabant. In the Jesuits' Church at Ypres is his master-piece, representing St. Francis Xavier Converting an Indian Chief. In the convent of the Jacobins at Antwerp is the Decollation of St. John; and in the Church of St. James is a fine picture of the Assumption. He was living in 1660.

Boyle, Isaac, D.D., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in 1783. He was admitted to priest's orders in 1822, and soon after became rector of St. Paul's Church, Dedham, which deafness compelled him to resign in the course of a few years. He died at Boston, Dec. 2, 1850. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1851, p. 639.

Boyle, Joseph, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Baltimore, May 7, 1812, of Roman Catholic parentage. By business associations with a devout and intelligent Methodist in his youth, he became acquainted with the principles of Protestantism, and in his eighteenth year was converted and joined the Church. In 1834 he joined the Pittsburgh Conference, in which he labored successively and successfully eight years; then, in 1842, he was transferred to the Missouri Conference, in which he served the Church actively to the close of his life, May 3, 1872. Mr. Boyle was directly and actively connected with the establishment of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. As a preacher he was earnest, able, and edifying; as a pastor, exemplary in sympathy, courtesy, and fidelity. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 777.

Boyle, Michael, an Irish prelate, succeeded to the see of Dublin in 1663. In 1637 he was incorporated master of arts at Oxford, and subsequently took the degree of doctor of divinity in the University of Dublin. In 1640 he was made dean of Cloyne. In 1660 he was advanced to the sees of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, and was one of the twelve bishops who were consecrated together in St. Patrick's Church after the Restoration. Having repaired the palace of St. Sepulchre while he resided there, he was translated to Armagh by the king's letter, Jan. 27, 1678, with which last preferment he held the chancellorship of Ireland for twenty years. He died in 1702. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 280.

Boyles, THOMAS D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Randolph County, West Va., Aug. 30, 1817. He was converted in 1839; licensed to preach in 1848; and in 1855 entered the Iowa Conference, wherein he labored zealously until his last sickness. He died Dec. 16, 1867. As a preacher, Mr. Boyles was emphatically practical; as a pastor, faithful; as a Christian, exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 181.

Boym, MICHEL, a missionary of Poland, of the Jesuit order, went to the Indies and to China in 1643, and returned to Lisbon in 1652. In 1656 he again went to China and died there in 1659. This career, wholly evangelical, was filled with useful labors. He wrote Flora Sinensis (Vienna, 1656), and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Boynton, Beman, a Baptist minister, was born at Worcester, Mass., in 1767, and at an early age removed to Weathersfield, Vt. He became a Christian when about twelve years of age, and when twenty-five years old united with the Church in Chester. He was ordained in 1809, and was called to the pastorate of the Church in North Springfield, where he remained for thirteen years, when, on account of ill-health, he resigned. He died very suddenly at Weathersfield, June 24, 1849. "Few men have won a larger share of esteem, and few have had less real faults." See Watchman and Reflector, July 5, 1849. (J. C. S.)

Boynton, Isaac, Jr., a Baptist minister, was born in Maine about 1810, and was ordained as an evangelist in 1836, and in 1837 accepted a call to the pastorate of the Second Church in Addison, Me. He found the Church in a weak condition, but, by the blessing of God on his labors, it was greatly strengthened. He died Oct. 28, 1844, in East Harrington, having resigned a few months before his decease. See Millett, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 437. (J. C. S.)

Boynton, John, a Congregational minister, was born at Wiscasset, Me., April 11, 1801. His preliminary education was acquired in the Wiscasset Academy, and in 1822 he graduated from Bowdoin College. Afterwards he spent one year at Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained at Phippsburg, Me., in 1827, from which Church he was dismissed in 1840; from 1840 to 1861 he resided at Wiscasset without charge, supplying, however, the First Church, New Castle, from 1857 to 1858, and Brownfield and Hiram from 1860 to 1861. In the latter year he removed to Richmond; in the year following went to Winthrop, and subsequently made his residence in Felton, Del., from 1864 until his death, March 1, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 411.

Boys (Lat. Boethius), DAVID, a Welsh divine of the 15th century; studied at Oxford. He was prefect of the Carmelites in Gloucester, where he died in 1450. He had the writings of John Badningham, his fellow Carmelite, fairly transcribed in four volumes, and bestowed them on the library in Cambridge. He wrote many books, especially Of Double Immortality [soul and body]:—The Madness of the Hagarenes, etc. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 501.

Boyse, WILLIAM, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was a missionary at Woodstock, Ulster Co., N. Y., and Ashoken (now Shokan), 1826 to 1829. From 1829 to 1837 he labored at Woodstock. He died in 1853. He published a small volume of Writings and Letters, Religious, Historical, and Pastoral, in 1838. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 193.

Boysen, Detlef, a Lutheran minister of Germany, who was born at Flensburg, April 18, 1763, and died March 4, 1826, at Ulsnis, in Holstein, is the author of Beiträge zur Verbesseung der Kirchen- und Schulwesens in protestantischen Ländern (Altona, 1797, 1798, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 36. (B. P.)

Boysen, Friedrich Eberhard, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born April 7, 1720, at Halberstadt. He studied at Halle, where Michaelis instructed him in Oriental languages. In 1742 he was called as pastor to Magdeburg; was made in 1760 court-preacher, member of consistory, and inspector of the gymnasium at Quedlinburg. He died June 4, 1800. He wrote, Kritische Erläuterungen des Grundtextes der heil. Schrift A. T. (Halle, 1760–64, 10 parts):—Acta inter Cyprianum et Stephanum in Disceptatione de Hæreticis Baptizandis, Collecta, Vindicata et Animadversionibus Illustrata (Leipsic and Quedlinburg, 1762):—Kritische Erläuterungen des Grundtextes der heiligen Schrift N. T. aus der Syrischen Uebersetzung (ibid. 1762):—Praktische Erklärung des Briefes Pauli an die Colosser (ibid. 1766–81):—Der Koran aus dem Arabischen übersetzt, mit Anmerkungen, etc. (Halle, 1773, 1775):—Versuch einer praktischen Erklärung der beiden Briefe Petri und des Briefes Judä (ibid. 1775). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 196, 241, 527, 859; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 147 sq. (B. P.)

Boysen, Jasper, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Sept. 12, 1765, at Flensburg; and died July 26, 1818, at Altona. Besides the Beiträge which he published with Detlef Boysen (q. v.), he wrote Kurzgefasste Darstellung der Geschichte des Zweckes und Wesens und die wohlthätigen Folgen der Reformation Luther's (Altona, 1807). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 313. (B. P.)

Boysen, Peter Adolphus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 15, 1690, at Aschersleben. He studied at Wittenberg and Halle; was in 1716 pastor at Aschersleben; in 1718, rector of the cathedral school at Halberstadt; in 1723, pastor of the Frauenkirche there; and died Jan. 12, 1743. He wrote, Disp. de Asiurchis ad Act. xix, 31:—Diss. de κυρίῳ ἀνδραγατῶν ad Eph. iv, 14:—De Codice Græco et Consilio quo usus est B. Lutherus in Interpretatione Germanica N. T.:—De Difficili Pauli Itinere ad Act. xvii, 9:—De Sepultura Stephani ad Act. viii, 2. Boze Sedleshko, in Slavonic mythology, is a deity of the Sorbs and Wends, who is worshipped in the form of a small naked child.

Bozeman, SAMUEL, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was admitted into the South Carolina Conference in 1830, and labored in it until his decease in 1835. He was a man of sincere piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1836, p. 407.

Bozez, CLIFF OF. Lieut. Conder notes this (Tent-work, ii, 335) as the modern el-Hosn, but he gives no further account of it, except to remark (ibid. p. 113) that the rocks on the north side of the pass, glaring in the strong sun of an Eastern midday, give a good explanation of the name ("shining"). See MICHMASH. On the Ordnance Map el-Hosn is laid down on the north brink of Wady Tuwénit, two miles from its junction with Wady Farah.

Bozio, TOMMASO, an Italian theologian, a native of Eugubio, was priest of the oratory of the congregation of St. Philip of Neri, and died at Rome in 1610. He wrote, De Signis Ecclesiæ de libri xxiv (Rome, 1591, 1596; Cologne, 1598):—De jure Divino (Rome, 1600):—Annales Antiquitatum (2 vols.); and other works against Machiavelli. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brabrook, BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, a Baptist minister, was born at Acton, Mass., Sept. 15, 1809. He pursued his classical studies at Granville College, now Denison University, O., and at Columbian College, Washington, D. C. One year, 1836–37, was spent by him in theological study at the Newton Institution. He was ordained at St. Louis, Mo., May 13, 1837, was a pastor there two years, at Great Falls, N. H., four years, an agent for a religious society, 1843 to 1845, pastor of the Baptist Church in Davenport, Ia., 1845 to 1848; and finally an agent of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society. He died at Davenport, June 9, 1853. See Newton General Catalogue, p. 19. (J. C. S.)

Bracan. See BREAN.

Braccresco (Dagli Orzi Novi), GIOVANNI, an Italian philosophical hermit, a native of Brescia, lived in the middle of the 16th century. He was prior of the canons regular of St. Second, and wrote some philosophical works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Braccioli, GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, an Italian painter, was born at Ferrara in 1698, and studied under Giacomo Parolini; but afterwards under Giuseppe Crespi at Bologna. There is an altar-piece by him in the Oratory of the Theatines at Ferrara, representing the Annunciation; and in the Church of St. Catharine a Flagellation, and Christ Crowned with Thorns—these two last being his best works. He died in 1762. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brace, Joab, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 13, 1781. He studied theology, was licensed on Jan. 16, 1805, and was ordained and installed pastor of the Congregational Church in the parish of Newington, and there continued until he had completed fifty years of active and useful service as pastor. Jan. 16, 1855, he delivered a half-century discourse, reviewing the history of the Church and society from the earliest times. This has been printed. Still retaining a nominal connection with his parish, he removed to Pittsfield, Mass., where he passed the last six years of his life. He died April 20, 1861. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1861.

Brace, John, an English Congregational minister, was born near Tenby, Pembrokeshire, in 1793. After his conversion he applied for admission to Hackney Academy for a ministerial preparation, and in 1821 was admitted. In 1825 he was appointed to East Grinstead, and in a short time became pastor of three churches situated respectively at Cophorne, Turner's Hill, and Hoathley. In these stations he labored nineteen years with great perseverance and success. He next preached two years at Bodmin, in Cornwall; four years at St. Ives; and one year at Ilfracombe, when he retired to Bristol, where he died Aug. 31, 1860. A Christian, Mr. Brace was eminently devout and earnest as a preacher, he was at once simple and evangelical. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 265.

Brace, Jonathan, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Hartford, Conn., June 12, 1810. He was prepared for college in his native city, and graduated at Amherst College in 1831. He first studied theology at Andover, then at New Haven, but came to Princeton Seminary towards the close of 1834, entered the senior class, and spent one year. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Congregational Church at Litchfield, Conn., June 12, 1838, and labored there very successfully until, for reasons connected with his health, he was dismissed, Feb. 27, 1844. His next charge was the First Congregational Church of Milford, over which he was installed Sept. 24, 1845. His labors here were largely blessed, several precious revivals occurring in connection with his ministry. From this pastorate he was dismissed, Dec. 15, 1863. After that time he was not again a pastor, but resided for the remainder of his life in Hartford, at different times supplying various pulpits in that city and its vicinity. In 1857, while pastor at Milford, he became editor of The Religious Herald, which position he retained until his death, in Hartford, Oct. 1, 1877. Dr. Brace was the author of Scripture Portraits (N. Y. 1854, 12mo); besides Sermons and contributions to the Biblical Repository, etc. See Necrol. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1878, p. 18. (W. P. S.)

Bracht, TIELMAN VAN, a Dutch Protestant theologian, was born at Dort in 1625. He was pastor of the Mennonite communion in his native city, and died in 1664. His principal works are, Schole der zedelijke Dengd (Dort, 1657):—Sermons (ibid. 1669). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bracken, REID, a Presbyterian minister, was born in York County, Pa., in 1778. He graduated at Jefferson College in 1802; studied theology with Dr. McMillan, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Ohio, Oct. 17, 1805. He travelled one year in Ohio and Virginia, preaching to vacant churches. In 1806 he received calls in Butler County, Pa., from Mt. Nebo and Plain Churches. On Oct. 20, 1807, he joined the Presbytery of Erie; was ordained April 20, 1808, and installed pastor of those churches; became pastor of Middlesex, Sept. 28, 1820; left in 1832, and was installed at Portersville. But during all these years he gave half his time to Mt. Nebo Church, being pastor of it thirty-seven years. He died July 29, 1849. See Hist. of Presbytery of Erie.

Bracket, an ornamental projection from the face of a wall, to support a statue, etc.; they are sometimes nearly plain, or ornamented only with mouldings, but are generally carved either into heads, foliage, angels, or animals. Brackets are very frequently found on the walls in the inside of churches, especially at the east end of the chancel and aisles, where they supported statues which were placed near the altars.

Brackett, Daniel, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Berwick, Me., Oct. 4, 1803. His parents were Friends. When about nineteen years of age he became a Christian, and in 1824 he commenced to labor as an itinerant minister. In 1829 he was at Houlton, on the border of the province of New Brunswick, and was there ordained by a council of ministers, who came more than a hundred miles through the forest for that purpose. About 1832 he removed to Brownfield, where his labors were greatly blessed. He preached in several of the adjoining towns, as Hiram and Fryburgh. He died near Cincinnati, O., Dec. 22, 1836. See The Morning Star, xx, 49. (J. C. S.)

Brackett, Edward, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Limington, Me., July 10, 1806. He was converted at the age of nineteen, received license to preach in 1837, and in 1841 entered the Maine Conference. On the division of the conference he became a member of the East Maine division, and in it labored till his decease, Sept. 30, 1869. Mr. Brackett was eminently plain and practical, exemplary in his life, and much beloved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 151.

Braco, PIETRO DELLA, an Italian canonist, lived in the middle of the 14th century. He was auditor of the sacred palace, and chaplain of pope Innocent VI. He left in manuscript, Utriusque Juris Repertorium (preserved at Cambrai):—Reputium Ambitionis contra Miseros Cardinalium Servitores (in the library of the Vatican). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Braconier, DANIEL, an esteemed minister of the German Reformed Church, was born in Washington County, Md., Oct. 10, 1808. He early united with the Church; studied at York, Pa.; was ordained in 1833, and placed as pastor over the Church at Clear Spring, in his native county. After laboring here for three years, he removed to Shepherdstown, Va., and afterwards to Winchester, whence he returned again to his former charge, and spent the remainder of his life in this field, dying there Oct. 23, 1868. Mr. Braconier was a faithful and efficient minister of the Gospel, and highly esteemed by the people whom he served. He took a deep interest in the cause of education, and was for many years a member of the board of visitors of the theological seminary at Mercersburg, Pa. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 294-299. (D. Y. H.)

Bracton, HENRY DE, LL.D., a learned ecclesiastic, was chief justiciary in the reign of Henry III. He was probably a native of Bretton-Clovelly, in Devonshire. He studied at Oxford, and is believed to have delivered lectures in that university. He was appointed a justice itinerant for the counties of Nottingham and Derby in 1245. In 1254 the king assigned to him by letters patent the use of a house in London belonging to William, late earl of Derby, during the minority of the heir, and in 1263 he was collated to the archdeaconry of Barnstable. In 1265 he was appointed chief justiciary, and held that office until the end of 1267, when all notice of him ceases. He wrote a learned work, entitled De Legibus et Consuetudinibus (first printed in 1569), modelled after the Institutes of Justinian. See Encyclop. Brit. (9th ed.), s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bradberry, DAVID, an English Dissenting minister, was born Nov. 12, 1735, at Reeth, Yorkshire. He spent the early part of his life in business, and when twenty-three years old entered Homerton Academy, where he remained three years and a half. He began his ministerial career April 25, 1762, as an assistant to the Rev. Mr. Sayer, at Alnwick, Northumberland; and in April, 1764, removed to Wellingborough, Northamptonshire. On Oct. 11, 1767, he removed to Ramsgate, at which place he was ordained. After spending eighteen years in Ramsgate, he proceeded to Manchester, where he remained ten years; but some unpleasant disputes arising, he resigned his office and went to London. There he leased a hall and endeavored to gather a congregation, but not meeting with the success anticipated, and the expenses of the place being heavy, he disposed of it. Shortly afterwards he died, Jan. 13, 1803. See (Lond.) Theological Magazine and Review, April, 1803, p. 168.

Bradbury, Charles Webster, a Baptist minister, was born at Bangor, Me., Nov. 30, 1807. He graduated at Waterville College in 1834, and at the Newton Theological Institution in 1837. He was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church in Saco, Me., in April, 1838, where he remained but a year. Subsequently he was pastor in several places for brief periods of time. He was a teacher as well as a preacher. Some years were spent by him in California, where in different places he taught and preached, and for a while was engaged in mining. He died in Salisbury, Mass., May 4, 1877. (J. C. S.)

Bradbury, William Batchelder, a composer of sacred music, was born at York, Me., in 1816. He spent two years in Europe studying music and collecting a large and rare library of musical works. He edited the New York Musical Review, and contributed to various journals. He died Jan. 7, 1868. Mr. Bradbury published various juvenile singing-books for Sunday-schools and day-schools, and various collections of sacred music, among which are the Psalmodist, Choralist, Mendelssohn Collection, The Shawm (N. Y. 1854), and many others.

Braddock, Cyrus Greene, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Green County, Pa. He graduated at Jefferson College, and subsequently entered the Allegheny Theological Seminary, at which he also graduated. He was licensed to preach by the Pittsburgh Presbytery, and receiving a call from the Bethany Church, was ordained and installed its pastor. In this, his first and only pastorate, he remained eighteen years, giving full proof of his ministry. He died at Bethany, June 29, 1874. See Presbyterian, July 18, 1874. (W. P. S.)

Braden, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Marylebone, Nov. 22, 1840. He was educated for the profession of law; was converted in his youth, and entered Cheshunt College in his eighteenth year to prepare for the ministry. In 1861 Mr. Braden entered upon his first pastorate in St. Albans, and after laboring in that place six years, he preached four years at Huddersfield, and five years at the King's Weigh-House Chapel, London. He then took a voyage to America, and for two months supplied the pulpit of Dr. Scudder, in Brooklyn. On returning to London, he resumed his editorial work on the English Independent and his ministerial duties. These proved too great a strain on his already weakened constitution, and he died July 20, 1878. Mr. Braden's power in preaching consisted in his thorough mastery of his themes, and in his putting the deepest truths into terse, vigorous, and simple words. He published, while at Huddersfield, a course of week-evening lectures on the book of Ruth, entitled The Beautiful Gleaner. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 301.

Bradfield, John of, an English prelate, was a native of Bradfield, Berkshire. He became chanter and bishop of Rochester, probably in 1274. "Vir conversationis honeste decenter literatus, et in omnibus morigeratus." His surname was sometimes written John de Illoe. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 128.

Bradford, Allen, a Unitarian minister, was born at Duxbury, Mass., in 1765. He graduated at Harvard College in 1788, and was tutor there from 1791 to 1793. He was settled as pastor of a Congregational Church in East Pownalborough, Me., in 1793, and, after continuing there for eight years, engaged in the book trade in Boston. He was secretary of state in Massachusetts from 1812 to 1824. He died Oct. 26, 1843. He published a number of single sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 209.

Bradford, Ebenezer, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Canterbury, Conn. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1773; was ordained by the Presbytery of New York in 1775; preached for three years in the churches of Chester and Succasunna; became pastor in Madison, N. J., in 1779; in Danbury, Conn., in 1781; and in Rowley, Mass., a few years afterwards, where he preached until his death, in 1801. In addition to his pastoral charge at Madison, he conducted a classical school. Mr. Bradford was a man of fine literary attainments and uncommon ability. See Tuttle, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Madison, N. J. (N. Y. 1855), p. 30-33; Aikman, Historical Discourse Concerning the Presb. Church in Madison, N. J. (1876), p. 6.

Bradford, Ebenezer Green, a Congregational minister, was born at Francestown, N. H., May 24, 1801. He was a lineal descendant, in the seventh generation, of William Bradford, for thirty years governor of Plymouth colony, and related to John Bradford, a martyr with his friends Latimer, Ridley, etc., at Smithfield. He graduated at Amherst College in 1827; studied theology at Andover, and with Dr. J. M. Whiton; was ordained at Colebrook, N. H., in 1829; labored there and at Wardsboro', Vt., from 1836 to 1842; removed to Wisconsin and supplied the Presbyterian Church in Plattville over a year, and the Congregational Church in Prairie du Lac three years, and in Waupun three years. In 1852 he organized a Congregational Church at Princetown, and preached there until 1856, when failing health induced him to return to New England. He died of paralysis, in Leverett, Mass., Aug. 29, 1861. Humble and diligent, he loved ardently the Church and the truth. See Cong. Quarterly, 1862, p. 69.

Bradford, Enoch W., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Maine about 1800, and belonged to the Exeter Quarterly Meeting. He was ordained when about twenty-six years of age. His useful labors were mostly of an itinerant character. His last discourse was preached in Montville, Me., Sept. 22, 1829, and a few days after this he died. He is spoken of as a young preacher of no ordinary talents, and highly esteemed in the churches to which he ministered, and in the destitute regions where he preached. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1831, p. 49. (J. C. S.)

Bradford, Ephraim Putnam, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Milford, N. H., Dec. 27, 1776. He graduated from Harvard University in 1803, and studied theology under Dr. Lathrop. In 1806 he was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church in New Boston, N. H. His ministry there, for more than forty years, was more than an ordinarily successful one. He died Dec. 14, 1845. His publications are, An Address before the Handelian Musical Society:—a Sermon before the Legislature of New Hampshire (1821);—a Discourse on Moses Bradford:—a Sermon at the Funeral of Rev. Dr. Harris. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 373.

Bradford, John, an English martyr in the reign of Mary, was born in Manchester, Lancashire. He was bred a lawyer in Inns of Court, and went to Cambridge a man of maturity and ability, the university by special grace conferring on him the degree of master of arts; his writings and disputings gave a sufficient testimony of his learning. "He was a most holy and mortified man, who secretly in his closet would so weep for his sins one would have thought he would never have smiled again; and then appearing in public, he would be so harmlessly pleasant one would think he never wept before." He was martyred in 1555. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 193.

Bradford, Moses, a Congregational minister, was born in Canterbury, Conn., Aug. 6, 1765. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1785, taught for some time, and in 1790 was ordained over the Church in Francetown, N. H., where he labored successfully for thirty-seven years. From 1830 he labored for a year or two at Colebrook, N. H., infusing life into a dead people. His son, Ebenezer G., settled there. A stroke of paralysis weakened and deranged his mind, and he removed to Montague, Mass., to spend the remainder of his days with one of his sons. Here he died June 14, 1833. See Cong. Quarterly, 1864, p. 175.

Bradford, Moses Bradstreet, a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Moses Bradford, was born in Frankestown, N. H., April 20, 1799. After attending the academies at Kimball Union and Pembroke he entered Amherst College, from which he graduated in 1825, and subsequently studied theology under Rev. Dr. Packard of Shelburne Falls, Mass. He was ordained in Montague, Mass., Nov. 19, 1828, and continued to be pastor of that church until Jan. 16, 1832. From October of that year until February, 1859, he was pastor in Grafton, Vt.; from December, 1859, until 1869 he was acting-pastor at McIndoes Falls, Barnet, and continued to reside there from that time until the close of his life. When the General Convention of Vermont met in St. Albans in 1854, he was elected its moderator. His death occurred Sept. 23, 1878. See Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 39.

Bradford, Shadrach Standish, a Baptist minister, was born at Plympton, Mass., May 24, 1813. He pursued his college studies at Waterville, and at the Columbian College, Washington, D. C., where he graduated in 1837. He studied theology at Newton, Mass., taking the full course, and graduated in 1840. His ordination occurred at Pawtucket, R. I., June 8, 1841, where he remained ten years. Failing health obliged him to retire from the pastorate, and to enter active life. He was successful in accumulating a handsome fortune in his business. He was chosen a trustee of Brown University in 1863, and a fellow in 1865, and was the founder of two scholarships in the university. He died in Providence. See Newton General Catalogue, p. 21. (J. C. S.)

Bradford, William, a Congregational minister, brother of Rev. Moses Bradford, was born at Canterbury, Conn., March 4, 1745. He graduated at the college of New Jersey in 1774; "is believed never to have been the pastor of any church, and to have spent the most of his life teaching and preaching in Connecticut and other states. During the latter part of his life he acted as minister of the 'North Society' Church in Canterbury." He died March 31, 1808. See Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 26.

Bradford, William J., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Canterbury, Windham Co., Conn., March 10, 1795. He was a lineal descendant of William Bradford, second governor of Plymouth colony. He early desired to enter the ministry, and gave himself diligently to study with this in view. Without taking a collegiate course, he was matriculated at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1822, and after leaving the seminary he taught school at Pawlings, Dutchess Co., N. Y., and in 1825 at Homer, N. Y., at the same time pursuing his theological studies. In 1826 or 1827 he was ordained or installed over the Church at Pitcher, Chenango Co., remaining there seven or eight years. In 1834 he was settled at Berkshire, Tioga Co., and in 1837 at Marathon, Cortland Co., supplying Freetown also. In 1854 he removed to Lysander, Onondaga Co., to take charge of a Reformed (Dutch) Church there, but in 1858 returned to Marathon, where he purchased a farm, and died March 31, 1874. He was an active servant of the Lord. See Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 469.

Bradford, Zabdiel, a Baptist minister, was born in Marshfield, Mass., July 13, 1809. He was descended on his father's side from governor William Bradford, and on his mother's from captain Miles Standish. Mr. Bradford was a graduate of Waterville College, Me., in 1834, and took the entire course of the Newton Theological Institution, with the exception of the last term in the senior year. His ordination took place at North Yarmouth, Me., May 24, 1837, and his pastorate of seven years with the Baptist Church in that place was a very successful one. In consequence of the severity of the climate in Maine he was obliged to resign, and accepted a call to the Pine street Baptist Church in Providence, R. I., over which he was installed in November, 1844, and remained until his death, May 16, 1849. See Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. p. 126. (J. C. S.)

Bradley, H. S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Square Pond, Conn., June 10, 1806. His early years were spent on a farm, and when only twelve years of age he was converted. In 1838 he went to Ohio, and in 1840 joined the North Ohio Conference. In this and the Central Ohio Conference he continued to labor until 1875, when he took a supernumerary relation and removed to Springfield, O. He, however, continued to preach as he had opportunity until his death, Feb. 2, 1881. He was an earnest preacher, and filled some of the best charges in his conferences. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 320.

Bradley, James, D.D., F.R.S., an eminent English divine and astronomer, was born at Sherburne, Gloucestershire, in 1692. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and took holy orders in 1719. He received some preferments, but resigned them to become Savilian professor of astronomy at Oxford in 1721. In 1741 he was appointed astronomer royal. He made important discoveries in astronomy. He died July 13, 1762. His publications and unpublished manuscripts all relate to astronomical subjects. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Biographia Britannica, s. v.

Bradley, J., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Warren County, Tenn., Nov. 9, 1816. He joined the Elk Presbytery, and was licensed to preach in 1842. After itinerating for some years he settled in the eastern part of Arkansas, in 1849, where he labored until his death, Sept. 13, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almatanac, 1862, p. 282.

Bradley, Thomas Scott, a Congregational minister, was born at Lee, Mass., April 15, 1825, and graduated from Williams College in 1848. He studied theology at East Windsor, Conn., and graduated at Andover in 1851. For six months he was with Dr. John Todd of Pittsfield, Mass., engaged in study and pastoral work. He preached prior to ordination at Lanesboro, Mass., and Cornwall, Conn., and was ordained at Wilton, Conn., July, 1853. Here he remained about four years. After teaching for a time in the High School at Norwalk, he resumed his ministerial duties in New Lebanon, N. Y. On the breaking out of the civil war he was chosen captain of a company of the New York Sharp-shooters; was taken sick at Suffolk, Va., and died at Philadelphia, June 28, 1863. See Cat. of the Theol. Institute of Conn. p. 60. (J. C. S.)

Bradnack, ISAAC, an English Wesleyan minister, was born Aug. 4, 1774. At the age of twenty-three he was awakened under the ministry of Samuel Bradburn. He entered the ministry in 1801, labored with great success in Jamaica and Barbadoes, and on his return to England he travelled several circuits and witnessed numerous conversions. His unremitting toil killed him. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1834; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism, iii, 201.

Bradner, Benoni, A.M., a Congregational minister, after his licensure, preached at Jamaica, L. I., from 1760 to 1762. Afterwards he was settled at Nine Partners, Dutchess Co., N. Y., and in June, 1786, became the minister of the Independent Church in Blooming Grove, Orange Co. He died Jan. 29, 1804. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Bradner, John, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Scotland. On his arrival in this country the presbytery of Hampton and Henry took him on trial, and licensed him in 1714. He was called to Cape May, and ordained May 6, 1715. He removed in 1721 to Goshen, N. Y., and died in 1733. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Bradshaw, Amzi, a Presbyterian minister, was born in North Carolina, July 12, 1800. He studied under Rev. Geo. Newton, and was licensed by Shiloh Presbytery in 1826. In October of the same year he was ordained pastor of Spring Creek Church, in Tennessee, and in 1831 became pastor of Fayetteville and Union churches. In 1858 he removed to Texas, and became principal of a female school at La Grange. He died July 15, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Abnacinac, 1861, p. 79.

Bradshaw, Fields, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Lincoln County, N. C., in 1799. He preached in the Baptist Church ten years; but afterwards joined the Presbyterian Church in Montgomery, Ala. In 1830 he was received under the care of the Tuscaloosa Presbytery. He pursued a course of study in Danville College, and, after examination by the Presbytery, was sent forth, his previous license and ordination being satisfactory. He supplied the churches of Montgomery and Antango, after which he took charge of Concord and Mount Zion churches. After remaining two years he accepted a call to the Mesopotamia Church, where many souls were converted and the Church enlarged. His next charge was the churches of Ebenezer and Hebron. For the last seven years of his life he was the faithful and successful pastor of Oak Grove Church, where he died, June 12, 1859. (W. P. S.)

Bradshaw, Harvey, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Danbury, Conn., March 26, 1810. He received a careful religious training; experienced conversion at the age of fourteen; received license to preach in his eighteenth year; and in 1833 entered the Pittsburgh Conference. He labored faithfully until 1856, when failing health led him to locate and remove to Iowa. In 1858 he united with the Upper Iowa Conference, wherein he served to the close of his life—several years in the regular work, and later as agent of Cornell College. He died Nov. 7, 1861. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 240.

Bradshaw, Henry, an English Benedictine of the monastery of St. Werburga, in Cheshire, studied at Gloucester (now Worcester) College, and died in 1513. He composed a Chronicle; a Life of St. Werburga; and a work on the city of Chester. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bradshaw, John W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Dec. 28, 1808, in Fairfield County, Conn. At an early age he removed to the West. He was converted in 1824; received license to preach in 1836; was received on trial in the Indiana Conference in 1841, and at the same time ordained local deacon. He was admitted into full connection and ordained elder in 1848. After serving nineteen charges, he became superannuated in 1869, but up to the time of his death he was always ready to supply any vacancy. He died in DeWitt, Ia., May 17, 1880. He was a sound, logical preacher; always interesting, and frequently rising to powerful flights of eloquence. His Christian walk and uniform kindness won the respect and love of all who knew him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 87.

Bradshaw, William, D.D., an English prelate, was educated at Oxford, and became proctor of the university in 1711. He became a prebendary of Canterbury in 1716, and of Oxford in 1723. In 1724 he was appointed dean of Christ Church, Oxford; and Oct. 18 of the same year was consecrated bishop of Bristol. He died at Bath, Dec. 16, 1732, aged sixty. He published two Sermons (1714, 1747). See Le Neve, Fasti.

Bradstreet, Simon, a Congregational minister, was born in New London, Conn., in 1669. He was a grandson of Simon Bradstreet, one of the most distinguished of the pilgrim fathers, and for many years governor of Massachusetts; and son of the Simon Bradstreet who was pastor of the Church in New London in 1670. The subject of this sketch graduated at Harvard College in 1693; and was called to be assistant minister, in March, 1697, of the Church in Charlestown. He declined this invitation, but in May, 1698, when the pastorate of that Church was vacant, he was ordained minister there, Oct. 26, 1698. For fifteen years he performed the duties alone, but in 1713 the town gave him a colleague, the Rev. Joseph Stevens of Andover, who died in 1721. For over two years after this, Mr. Bradstreet was without a regular assistant; in February, 1724, the Rev. Hull Abbot became his assistant; in October, 1739, the Rev. Thomas Prentice was installed as associate pastor. Mr. Bradstreet died in Charlestown, Dec. 31, 1741. It is said that he was a very learned man, possessed of a tenacious memory and a lively imagination, but subject to a hypochondria to such an extent that for several years before his death he was afraid to preach in the pulpit. Accordingly, his sermons were delivered in the deacon's seat, and were frequently melancholy effusions upon the vanity of the world. Seldom, if ever, did he appear with a coat, but always with a plaid gown and with a pipe in his mouth. Gov. Burnet spoke of him as one of the first literary characters and one of the best preachers he had met in America. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 241.

Brady, John Irwin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., Nov. 10, 1831. He joined the Church in his fifteenth year; received license to preach in 1854; and in 1855 united with the Pittsburgh Conference. In 1862 he volunteered in the Ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and was commissioned first lieutenant of Company B. Hardship and exposure in the army brought on consumption, on which account he was honorably discharged. He died soon afterwards, victorious, amid great and protracted sufferings. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 22.

Brady, William C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Anderson District, S. C., Nov. 16, 1823. He embraced religion in 1842; was licensed to preach in 1847; and in 1850 was received into the Florida Conference, in which he served with zeal and undoubted piety until his death, May 20, 1853. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1854, p. 486.

Braga (or Bragi), in Norse mythology, was the son of Odin and Frigga, the god of eloquence and the art of poetry, the wisest among the Asas. Odin gave each of the Asas an attribute which he could loan to his favorites. To Thor he attributed strength; to Freia, love; to Baldur, beauty; and to Braga, the poetry-inspiring nectar. Braga sates this nectar, and endows few with it, but uses it often himself, so that no spiritless word escapes his lips, and all he says is wisdom in the dress of beauty. Those arriving at Walhalla he meets with the welcome of the gods: "We welcome you to Walhalla; partake of peace and drink consecrated nectar with the Asas." His wife is the youthful Idun (later Iduna); she possesses the apples of immortality. To whomsoever her husband gives the nectar, him she presents with eternal life. The god was so highly worshipped that an oath, made by his cup, was inviolable. A king could not sit on his throne until he had emptied the Braga cup, and made an oath relating to his enthronement. If he drank the contents of the cup with more than one draught, it was an evil omen. It is curious that at Aegir's great supper, Braga does not appear to have had any courage or bravery.

Braga, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Braccarense). Of these there were several.

I. Held about the year 411, by Pancratius, bishop of Braga, assisted by nine other bishops, who condemned the Arian and heathenish errors of the Vandals and other barbarians who had ravaged Spain. See Labbe, Concil. ii, 1508.

II. Held about 560, by Lucretius, the metropolitan, assisted by seven other bishops, against the errors of the Priscillianists. They drew up twenty-two canons, mostly relating to ceremonies.

7. Orders a tripartite division of the property of each Church; one for the bishop, another for the clergy, and the third for the repairs or lights of the Church, of which the archdeacon should give in an account to the bishop.

9. Enjoins the deacons to wear the stole over the shoulder, and not to conceal it under the tunicle, in order to distinguish them from the subdeacons.

10. Directs that the sacred vessels be carried only by persons in holy orders.

11. Forbids the readers to chant in the Church in a secular dress, and to let their hair or beard grow.

12. Forbids the singing of any hymns in Church, save the Psalms, and passages taken from the Old or New Testament.

14. Orders clerks who are unwilling to eat flesh, to avoid the suspicion of Priscillianism, to be compelled to eat at least herbs boiled with meat.

18. Forbids burials within the Church.

See Labbe, Concil. v, 836.

III. Held in June, 572, by Martin, the archbishop, at the head of twelve bishops. In this council the first four oecumenical councils were acknowledged, but not the fifth, which was not yet recognised in Spain. Ten canons were drawn up. See Labbe, Concil. v, 894.

IV. Held probably in 675, in the time of king Wamba. Eight bishops were present, who drew up nine canons, in order to remedy certain abuses which had crept in.

2. Forbids the offering of milk instead of wine, and also the dipping the bread in the wine at the holy eucharist.

3. Forbids using the sacred vessels and ornaments of the Church for profane purposes.

4. Forbids the priest to celebrate mass, or to receive the communion, without having the "orarium" or stole over both shoulders, and crossed upon his breast.

In some of these canons complaint is made of the conduct of the bishops, whom they accuse of augmenting their private estates at the expense of the Church. See Labbe, Concil. vi, 561.

Bragelongne, ÉMERY, a French prelate, was first dean of St. Martin of Tours, and was appointed bishop of Luconia in 1624. He resigned his bishopric in 1637, retired to the abbey of Marolles, and died in 1645. He wrote Ordonnances Synodales (Fontenay, 1629). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bragg, Jesse Kendall, a Congregational minister, was born at Royalston, Mass., Oct. 11, 1811. He graduated at Amherst College in 1838, and at Union Theological Seminary in 1841. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Middleborough Church, Mass., Oct. 19, 1842, where he remained ten years, a faithful and efficient pastor. He was next installed pastor of the Brookfield Church, which charge he occupied for seven years. From this he served the Church at Sandwich as a stated supply for one year. He then became editor of a religious periodical in Boston, which post he occupied for seven years, when he resumed his ministerial work and supplied the North Wrentham Church for two years, and the Church at Norfolk three years, at which place he died, June 14, 1874. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. (1876), p. 19. (W. P. S.)

Bragg (née Wilson), Margaret, an English minister of the Society of Friends, daughter of Isaac Wilson, was born at Kendal in 1775, and early in life became a subject of God's renewing grace. In 1790 she was married to Hadwen Bragg of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and at the age of thirty-four began her ministerial life. At different times, being freed from her domestic cares, she visited most of the meetings of Friends in Great Britain, and in 1825 made a religious tour in Ireland. She is said to have been endowed with great natural abilities, and was thus prepared for the management of affairs as few women are. Her ministry at the meetings of Friends was on many occasions close and searching, calculated to arouse the supine and indifferent, and was blessed to those who heard. She died June 2, 1840. See Testimonies at Yearly Meeting, 1841, p. 13-18. (J. C. S.)

Bragg (née Furnas), Mary, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Liverpool in 1762, and became a Christian when she was about eighteen years of age. In 1785 she was married to Henry Bragg of Parton, Cumberland, and in 1794 was recorded as a minister by the Pardshaw meeting. In company with another minister she was engaged in ministerial work in Scotland during a part of the year 1801, and for several years performed much evangelical labor within the bounds of her own quarterly meeting. In 1817 her husband and herself were appointed to the superintendence of the provincial Friends' school at Prospect Hill, near Lisburn, Ireland. This position they held until 1820, when they removed to Belfast, and a few years after to Cotton Mount, a few miles from Belfast, which was her residence during the remainder of her life. During the years which followed, she, from time to time, visited the families of Friends in several meetings within the bounds of her quarterly meeting, and travelled through some parts of Lancashire. "Her communications," it is said, "were generally plain and simple, and many cherished a lively recollection of the comfort and instruction which they derived from her ministry." Her death took place April 7, 1849. See Testimonies at Yearly Meeting, 1851, p. 28-32. (J. C. S.)

Bragg, Seneca G., a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was a graduate of Middlebury College, Vt.; studied theology at the Alexandria Seminary, Va., and was the founder and rector of Christ Church, Macon, Ga., where he labored for fifteen years. His later years were passed in great physical infirmity. He died at Kingston, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1861, aged sixty-eight years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1861, p. 188.

Bragge, FRANCIS, an English divine, was vicar of Hitchin, and became prebendary of Lincoln in 1704. He published, Discourse on the Parables (1704, 2 vols.):—Observations on the Miracles (1702-4, 2 vols.):—Thirteen Sermons (1713):—and Theological Works (5 vols. 8vo). Brahspadi (also Brisput or Vyasa), in Hindû mythology, is the planet Jupiter, or the genius inhabiting it. He is the protecting god of knowledge, and instructs the good dæmons in the sciences which the holy books contain. His wife was Tarci. She had an intimate relation with a friend of her husband, Shandarma, the genius of the moon, from which sprang Buddha, whom Brahspadi long thought to be his own, until a divine revelation taught him otherwise.

Brahma, in Hindû mythology, must be carefully distinguished from Brahm, which is the name of the supreme being, the only one god, as all others are only manifestations of one or more of his attributes. The high idea which the Hindûs connect with Brahm arises from the surnames which they give him—the supremely perfect, the one without beginning and end, the indescribable, the omniscient, the prime soul of the world. Brahm is the sole existence. The world as it stands is only the reflection of his majestic being, only a revelation of his might, and when it ceases it will return to him whose emanation it was. But he and the world are nevertheless not one. The latter is entirely separate from him. He created a being full of beauty and love, who is called Maja. With this being Brahm had intercourse, and there resulted three of his most pre-eminent powers—Brahma, the creator of all living; Vishnu, the preserver; and Siva, the destroyer. They all three are substantially one, and form the Trimurti, or trinity, and are not essentially different from each other or from the god whose powers they are.

Brahma is thus the creative god, a mighty person in the trinity of India. The same name also signifies the science of laws, because Brahma ordered nature according to eternal laws, by which he is also the guide of fate, designating time and duration of existence, and thus not only gives life, but also death. He is the revealer of the Vedas, and his worship is the oldest cult of India. It is fabled that a giant tore off one of Brahma's four heads in a combat and placed it on his own head; since then time has only three periods or directions—past, present, and future. Another fable says that Brahma's sister and beautiful wife fled from him, and in order to follow her in all directions he made himself five heads, one of which Siva tore off to punish his fleshly lust, and placed the same as a trophy on his tiara. From this head the Brahmins sprung. Brahma's birth or production is variously related: according to one myth, he is a son of Brahm and Maja, as above; according to another, he is a creation of Brahm out of himself, who, with him, created the higher and lower gods; another myth makes him spring from an egg, which, shining, floated on the surface of the deep, and out of which Brahma, directly after birth, formed the earth, heaven, the sea, and the ether; a fourth fable says he grew in a lotus-flower which came from the navel of the sleeping Vishnu. See BRAHM.

BRAHMA, in the Buddhist system, is also an inhabitant of a Brahma-loka (q. v.).

Brahma-jagnam, in Hindû doctrine, is a solemn offering which the Brahmins bring to Brahma. After a bath they dress entirely in white, sing songs, and read various passages out of the Vedas, during which time the youngest among them make a fire with the sweet-smelling sandal-wood; then they drop cocoa oil or melted butter into the fire, and throw flowers on it. This is the only sacrifice brought to the great Brahma.

Brahma-kiari, in the religious doctrine of India, is the period of the Brahmins from childhood until the age of puberty, i. e. until the twelfth year. During this period the youthful Brahmin is instructed by one teacher in all that it is necessary for him to know, the teacher ever afterwards being held in high respect as a saint by the youth who came under his instruction.

Brahma-loka is the highest of the celestial worlds, reckoned by the Buddhists as sixteen in number. It is the abode of Brahma himself and of those beings who, in their different states of existence, have attained a superior degree of merit.

Brahma-lossey, in Hindû mythology, is a heavenly dancer, beloved of Indra (god of the sun). She is his favorite, and is privileged to be near him daily.

Brahmanda, in Hindû mythology, is the egg from which, according to some, Brahma (q. v.) was produced.

Brahma-Sampradayis. See MADHWACHARIS.

Brahmi, in Hindû mythology, was the surname of the wife of Brahma, namely, Sarasvati, who at the same time is Brahm's daughter. She was surnamed thus as goddess of language and the sciences.

Brahmo-Somaj is the name of a theistical society in India. Its founder was a well-known Brahmin, named rajah Ram Mohun Roy, a man of great ability, born near Burdwan in 1774. Besides exerting himself for the abolition of Suttee, or the burning of Indian widows with their deceased husbands, and the promotion of native education, he preached everywhere pure monotheism, endeavoring to prove that the idolatry of the Hindûs was contrary to the practice of their ancestors, and to the precepts of the Vedas; but he used the Indian name Brahma for the supreme being, and called the society he founded the Brahmo-Somaj, or Society of God. Its doctrines were, in fact, founded on a monotheistic interpretation of the Vedas. After the death of Ram Mohun Roy (at Bristol, in 1833), his friend Dvaraka Nath Tagore, a man of great weight and influence, gave his support to the Brahmo-Somaj, but it languished without a leader till his son Debendra Nath Tagore formed the nucleus of a new community, now called the Adi Somaj, or First Church. He propagated a pure deism, renounced idolatry, and declared his belief in the one God, as defined in the Vedanta. Then a third great leader arose, Keshub Chunder Sen, who confessed a revealed deism, answering more the religious than the speculative need of man. He rejected entirely the Hindû system. His society is called the Progressive or New Somaj. The creed of this party may be described as "a belief in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of mankind," and its theology might be well expressed by the first part of the first article of the Church of England: "There is but one living and true God—everlasting, without body, parts, or passions, of infinite power, wisdom and goodness, the maker and preserver of all things." Keshub's doctrines were carried by missionaries to different parts of India with such a success that, in 1876, one hundred and twenty-eight congregations belonged to the New Somaj, or Progressive Society, in opposition to the Conservative, or Adi Somaj of Debendra. Their worship consists in reading, on Sunday, portions from the Vedas, Avesta, Bible or Koran, which are discussed. In 1870 Keshub founded the Reform Association at Calcutta, for propagating a moderate and moral life, to disseminate nate literature and ameliorate the condition of women, the latter especially with the help of the "Native Marriage Act" passed in 1871, and which legalized marriages by Brahmaic rites, required that the bridegroom should be at least eighteen, and the bride fourteen years old, and made bigamy a penal offence for any one marrying under the act. But Keshub's tendency towards mysticism, and his marrying in 1878 his daughter to a maharajah, caused a split in the society, and a new one according to purely rationalistic principles was formed, approaching more the conservative society under the leadership of Debendra. The theistical societies, of whatever shade they may be, are the present Protestants of India. See Leonard, A History of the Brahmo-Somaj, from its Rise to the Present Day (Calcutta, 1879); D'Alviella in the Révue des Deux Mondes, Sept. 15, 1880; Brockhaus, Conversations-Lexikon (13th ed.) s. v. Braine, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Brennacense). Braine (Brana) is an abbey of the order of Premonstratensians, four leagues from Soissons, on the Vesle, founded in 1130 by André de Baldimonto and Agnes his wife (Gall. Christ. ix, 488). A council held here (at Berni, near Compiègne, according to L'Art de Vérifier les Dates, but wrongly), which was rather a state than a church council, A.D. 580, under king Chilperic, excommunicated Leudastes (who had been count of Tours) for falsely accusing Gregory of Tours of having calumniated queen Fredegunda. Witnesses were not produced, as an inferior was not to be believed against a priest. Yet Gregory exculpated himself by solemn oath at three several altars after saying mass, the accusers in the end confessing their guilt.

Brainerd, Davis Smith, a Congregational minister, was born Oct. 12, 1812, at Haddam, Conn. He was licensed to preach May 30, 1837, by the Association of the Western District of New Haven County. In 1829 he went to Munson, Mass., and there completed his preparations for college. He graduated at Yale College in 1834, and entered Princeton Seminary in the fall of the same year. After one year in Princeton he continued his theological studies at New Haven, and afterwards spent part of a year at Andover, Mass. In the autumn of 1840 Mr. Brainerd was invited to preach at the First Congregational Church of Lyme, Conn., and June 30, 1841, was ordained and installed as pastor of that Church by the Middlesex Association of Connecticut. He remained pastor of this Church until his death, April 30, 1875. The Church at Lyme enjoyed much spiritual prosperity under Mr. Brainerd's ministry. He took much interest in the educational and other interests of the town. In 1861 he was elected a fellow of Yale College, and in 1867 a member of its prudential committee. He was a man of lovely Christian spirit, a sound theologian, a faithful pastor, and secured in an uncommon degree the confidence of his people. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1877, p. 33.

Brainerd, John, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Haddam, Conn., Feb. 28, 1719. He graduated at Yale College in 1746. Soon after his graduation he was licensed to preach, and began his labors as a missionary among the Indians in the West, where he spent the greater part of his life. He was employed by the Church in many important missions, all of which he filled with great satisfaction to his presbytery. He died March 18, 1781. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 153.

Braithwaite, WILLIAM, D.D., an English divine, was born about 1560, and became master of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, in 1607. He was one of the forty-seven divines appointed by James I to prepare our present authorized version of the Holy Scriptures, being one of the committee on the Apocrypha. He died Feb. 15, 1619.

Braithwaite, Anna, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Kendal, Westmoreland, in 1788. Though for many years under the pressure of great bodily infirmity, she was a diligent laborer for the Gospel, visiting, as a minister, many parts of Great Britain and Ireland. She visited America about the time of the great secession, known as the "Hicksite Separation." She took her place in the forefront of the conflict, and zealously defended unity and peace. She died Dec. 18, 1859. See Annual Monitor, 1861, p. 15.

Braithwaite, George, an English Baptist minister, was born at Furnace-Falls, Lancashire, in 1681. After leaving the university he came to London, and in 1706 joined the Baptist Church near Cripplegate, but soon after returned to Lancashire, and devoted himself to the spiritual welfare of the poor of his own native place. He next removed to Bridlington, Yorkshire, where he preached several years with reputation and success, but his zeal against intemperance awakened bitter hostility to him, and he resigned his office. Soon after he was called to London, and was installed March 28, 1784, as pastor of the Church worshipping in Devonshire-square. Here he remained until his death, July 19, 1748. Mr. Braithwaite was the author of several publications, among them, The Nation's Reproach and the Church's Grief; or, A Serious and Needful Word of Advice to those who Needlessly Frequent Taverns and Public-houses:—and two Funeral Discourses (1736, 1739). See Haynes, Baptist Cyclop. i, 60-63. (J. C. S.)

Brake, CHARLES, an English Congregational minister, was born in Bath in 1805, and entered upon his ministerial career when about twenty-five years of age, by accepting the pastorate of a village church in Cambridgeshire. After two years of labor there he was invited to a small church at the East-end of London. In 1834 he settled at Brighton, but could not remain there on account of ill-health. From 1839 to 1849 he labored in London; then removed to Bristol, where he labored five or six years; and in 1854 returned to London. In 1859 he became pastor of the Congregational Church in Essex road, Islington, which position he held until declining health compelled him, in the autumn of 1878, to give up his labors altogether. He died Dec. 30, 1880. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 286.

Brakeman, Josiah, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Aug. 22, 1806, and joined the Church when quite young. He travelled about six years in the Genesee Conference, then went West and joined the Michigan Conference in 1837. There he travelled eleven years, the last six as presiding elder. He died July 19, 1849. Mr. Brakeman was a respectable preacher, a prudent administrator, and as a man, a bright example of Christian integrity and meekness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1849, p. 396.

Brakeman, Nelson W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in St. Clair County, Mich., Oct. 8, 1829, and went to northern Indiana in early life. He was converted while young, and entered the North-west Indiana Conference in 1851. In 1853 he was ordained deacon, and in 1855 elder. Excepting three years, from 1865 to 1868, during which he was a member of the Louisiana Conference, he remained connected with the North-west Indiana Conference, where he served the following appointments: Danville; Michigan City; Delphi and Pittsburgh; Eastern Charge; Lafayette; Strange Chapel, Indianapolis; Fifth street, Lafayette; Centenary; Terra Haute; Frankfort, and Valparaiso. He died May 15, 1881. He was for some time a chaplain in the United States army. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 310.

Bralion, NICHOLAS DE, a French theologian and historian, a native of Chars, entered the congregation of the Oratory in 1619, resided fifteen years in Rome, and then returned to Paris, where he died, May 11, 1672. His principal works are, Choix des Vies des Saints, translated from the Italian of Ribadenerra:—A Life of St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra (Paris, 1646):—Pallium Archiepiscopale . . . Accedunt et Primum Prodeunt Ritus et Forma Benedictiois Ipsius ex Antiquo M.S. Basilicae Vaticanae (ibid. 1648, 8vo):—Cærimoniale Canonicorum, etc. (ibid. 1657, 12mo):—Histoire Chrétienne (ibid. 1656). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bräm, ANDREAS, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died Jan. 11, 1882, at Neukirchen, near Moers, at the age of eighty-four years, is the author of Beschreibung des heiligen Landes (2d ed. Moers, 1838):—Die Wahrheit zur Gottseligkeit nach dem Lehrgange der heiligen Schrift (ibid. 1845):—Das Reich Gottes im Alten Testamente (Heidelberg, 1850):—Züge aus Abraham's Hausleben (Solingen, 1855):—Der Sündenfall. Beleuchtung von I. Mose iii (Barmen, 1857):—Israel's Wanderung von Gosen bis zum Sinai (Elberfeld, 1859):—Der Orient in seiner Bedeutung für die Christenheit unserer Tage (Moers, 1867). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 178. (B. P.)

Bramall, JOHN, an English Congregational minister, was born at Redditch Farm, near Stockport, Aug. 15, 1803. He was brought up to the strict observance of religious forms and ceremonies of the Established Church, confirmed at the age of thirteen, converted about the age of sixteen, and joined the Independent Church in his twenty-first year. In 1826 he entered Highbury College, and in 1830 received for his first pastorate the parish at Patricroft, near Manchester. In 1841 Mr. Bramall accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Stainland, near Halifax. He removed to Swanland, near Hull, in 1845, where he remained until his health broke down. He died at Islington, Jan. 19, 1864. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 227.

Braman, ISAAC, a Congregational minister, was born at Norton, Mass., July 5, 1770. He graduated at Harvard with high honors in 1794, and was ordained over the Church at Georgetown, Mass., 1787, where he continued the remainder of his life, a pastorate of more than sixty-one years. He died Dec. 26, 1858. "He possessed great originality, and his sermons evinced deep thought." See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 223.

Bramante (D'Urbino), DONATO LAZZARI, an Italian architect and painter, a relative of Raphael, was born near Urbino in 1444. He studied at Milan, and remained there in the practice of his profession from 1476 to 1499, when he removed to Rome, and received the patronage of pope Julius II. He designed the galleries which connect the Vatican palace with that of Belvedere; and began to build St. Peter's in 1506, although his plans were largely deviated from by subsequent architects. He died in 1514. See Vasari, Lives of the Painters; Milizia, Lives of Architects (by Cresy), i, 208; Pungileoni, Memoria Intorno alla Vita di Donato Bramante.

Bramantino, BARTOLOMEO, a Milanese painter, whose real name was Suardi, was a pupil of Bramante. He painted for the churches and public edifices of Milan. There are also some fine pictures by him in the Church of San Francesco. One of his best pictures was the Dead Christ between the Marys, painted for the Church of San Sepolero; another fine work by him is the Descent of Christ into Purgatory. He flourished in the first part of the 16th century.

Brambilla, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, a reputable Piedmontese painter, flourished in Turin about 1770, and studied under Cav. Carlo Delfino. Some of his works are in the churches at Turin; the best of them is in San Dalmazio, representing the martyrdom of that saint. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Brame, John Todd, Sr., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Caroline County, Va., in August, 1792. He professed conversion in his fourteenth year, and in his twenty-third year entered the Virginia Conference, wherein he served until his death, Sept. 29, 1819. Mr. Brame possessed an amiable and cheerful disposition, agreeable manners, good natural talents, and a fair degree of culture. He was earnest and successful in his ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1820, p. 342; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 825.

Brame, John Todd, Jr., son of the above, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Newbern, N. C., June 1, 1820. He grew up under the sole care of his devout, widowed mother; was weak in frame, but possessed of uncommon mental strength. He matriculated as freshman in Randolph Macon College in his fourteenth year; experienced conversion while there; graduated in 1838, and was made A.M. in 1841; and in his nineteenth year was admitted into the North Carolina Conference. He died Sept. 9, 1845. Mr. Brame was remarkable for his tender filial affection, for the extent and accuracy of his acquisitions, for the purity and impressiveness of his style of preaching, and for his devotion to his work. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1845, p. 29; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 825.

Brame, Thomas, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., Oct. 1, 1796. He was converted in 1817, and in 1820 was admitted into the North Carolina Conference. He died at his residence in Granville County, N. C., Jan. 13, 1848. Mr. Brame's talents as a preacher were more solid than showy, and his labors were eminently successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1848, p. 186.

Bramford, WILLIAM, an English Wesleyan minister, was born of religious parents at Scotton, Lincolnshire. He joined the Church when seventeen; was received into the ministry in 1838; for nineteen years laboriously discharged its duties; and died April 22, 1857, in the forty-fourth year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Brammah, WILLIAM, an English Methodist preacher, entered the ministry in 1762, and died in 1780. Although with very little ability, his devotion and zeal won many souls to his ministry in Yorkshire and Lancashire. See Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism, i, 318, 319; Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Bramston, JAMES, an English clergyman and author, who died in 1744, was vicar of Starting in Sussex, and wrote some pieces, principally satirical. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bramwell, JOHN, a Protestant Episcopal missionary, began his work in the mission-field at Copper Harbor, Mich., about 1857, and here he remained until the close of his life, extending his labors latterly to Eagle River. He died in 1859. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1860, p. 93.

Bran, apparently a very common name in Ireland from the 7th to the 9th century, and used sometimes by itself, sometimes in composition, as Bran-beg, Bran-dubh, etc. In 735 St. Bran of Lann-Eala died, according to the Four Masters, but really in 740 (Ann. Tig.). At May 18 stands the festival of Bran-beg of Clannadh. This is Branius (or Bran), one of the seven sons of Cuimne.

Brancaccio, Francesco Maria, an Italian prelate, was successively bishop of Viterbo, of Porto, and of Capaccio. A captain of infantry, sent to the last-named place by the king of Naples, wished to infringe upon the liberties of the Church. Brancaccio killed him, and in recompense for this act, Urban VIII made him cardinal in 1634; but the Spaniards opposed his election when he was proposed for the successor of pope Clement

IX. He died Jan. 9, 1675. We have from him a collection of Latin dissertations (Rome, 1672). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancaccio, Landolfe, an Italian prelate, a native of Naples, attached himself to Charles I and II, princes of the house of Anjou. Celestine V appointed him cardinal in 1294, and the popes Boniface VIII and Clement V employed him in various negotiations. He died at Avignon, Oct. 29, 1322. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancaccio, Luigi, an Italian prelate, was well versed in civil and canonical law. The popes Innocent VII and Gregory XII sent him as legate to Naples, and the last-named pontiff made him archbishop of Tarentum and cardinal in 1408. He died in 1411. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancaccio, Nicolo, an Italian prelate, was archbishop of Coseza, where he attached himself to Clement VII. This pontiff made him cardinal in 1378, then bishop of Albano. In 1412, in which year his death occurred at Florence, he was appointed by John XXIII legate to the kingdom of Naples. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancaccio, Raymando, an Italian prelate, was made cardinal by Urban VI in 1384. Boniface IX made him arch-priest of Santa Maria Maggiore, and the succeeding popes employed him in several important affairs. He also assisted at the Council of Constance, and died at Rome in 1427. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancaccio, Stefano, an Italian prelate, nephew of Francesco Maria, was archbishop of Adrianople, bishop of Viterbo, and nuncio at Florence and Venice. Innocent XI made him cardinal in 1681. He died Sept. 8, 1682. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancaccio, Tommaso, an Italian prelate, lived at the commencement of the 15th century. He was bishop of Tricarica when John XXIII, his uncle, made him cardinal in 1411. He earned the opprobrium of the Church by the infamous vices to which he was addicted. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brancato, FRANCESCO, an Italian missionary, arrived in China in 1637, and there preached the Gospel with zeal until 1665. Protected by the magistrates, he constructed forty-five oratorios and more than ninety churches. He died at Canton in 1671. He wrote several works in the Chinese language, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Branch. (1) A light consisting of three tapers, as an emblem of the Holy Trinity, carried in funeral processions and set upon the coffin when it rested. (2)

A large cumbrous corona, consisting of branches of brass for lights, used in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, in England. Few specimens now remain; one still hangs in the sanctuary of Chichester.

Branch, Gilman Ide, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Benson, Rutland Co., Vt., in 1811. At the age of sixteen he became a Christian and united with the Methodist Church, and was licensed to preach, but subsequently united with the Free-will Baptist Church in Cherry Creek, O. Soon after, he was licensed to preach in the churches of this denomination, and ordained Jan. 13, 1845. He died at Solon, O., Aug. 28, 1847. He was a faithful preacher, and earnestly devoted to his work. See Morning Star, 1848. (J. C. S.)

Branch, John, an English Baptist minister, was born near London Road, Southwark, May 19, 1806. At the age of sixteen he was converted, and for some time was a member of the Independent Church at Aldermanbury Postern. He was engaged in the business of bookselling till 1839, when he entered the service of the London City Mission, and was so successful in his work that he was appointed, in 1842, to the office of one of the general superintendents. In 1845 he resigned his connection with the society, and was ordained as pastor of the Baptist Church meeting in Waterloo Road. Here he remained from 1845 to 1851, when he became pastor of the Church meeting in Church street, Blackfriars. He died Jan. 12, 1856. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1856, p. 44. (J. C. S.)

Branch, S. S., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Vermont, Jan. 27, 1803. In 1820 he emigrated to Ohio, where he was converted in 1831. He was ordained in 1841, and for several years preached in the town and neighborhood in which he had his residence. In 1853 he removed to Illinois, and gathered a Church in Jeffersonville in June, 1854. He died in Wayne County, Ill., Jan. 29, 1863. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1863, p. 91. (J. C. S.)

Branch, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Prestoi, Conn. He began his ministry in 1800, and entered the New York Conference in 1801. In 1811 he became a superannuate, and in June, 1812, died. He was an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1813, p. 220; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 346.

Branchiðæ were priests of the temple of Apollo at Didymus in Ionia. They were plundered by Xerxes, after which they fled to Sogdiana and built a city called by their own name, which was destroyed by Alexander the Great.

Brand, Jacob, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born June 20, 1776, at Neudorf near Aschaffenburg. For some time he acted as priest at Weisskirchen, Kallbach and Homburg, in the duchy of Nassau, until he was called, in 1827, to the episcopal see at Limburg. He died Oct. 26, 1833. He wrote, Handbuch der geistlichen Beredsamkeit (ed. by Halm, Frankfurt, 1836, 1837, 2 vols.); Neunzehn Reden bei der Feier der ersten Communion der Kinder (ibid. 1830); Kleines Gebetbuch für Kinder (ibid. eod.; 3d ed. 1835); Der Christ in der Andacht (ibid. 1816; 8th ed. 1835); Gott ist unser Vater (ibid. 1819; 6th ed. 1834); Die öffentliche Gottesverehrung der Kath. Christen (ibid. 1831). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 35, 49, 62, 164, 267, 285, 347. (B. P.)

Brand, John (1), an English divine, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1743, and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1774 he was presented to the curacy of Cramlington, near Newcastle, and in 1784 to the rectory of St. Mary-at-Hill, London. He was also appointed secretary to the Society of Antiquaries in the same year. He died Sept. 11, 1806. Mr. Brand was a finished scholar, an able writer, and exemplary in the discharge of all life's duties. He published, Illicit Love (1775, 8vo); Observations on Popular Antiquities (1777, 8vo); The History and Antiquities of the Town and County of Newcastle-upon-Tyne (1789, 2 vols. 4to). See The Annual Register (Lond.), 1806, p. 547.

Brand, John (2), an English divine, was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, and died in 1808. He published an essay on Conscience (1772);—several political treatises, etc. (1772, 1807);—and two Sermons (1794 and Brandani, FREDERICO, an Italian sculptor, a native of Urbino, was a celebrated modeller of statuary in clay; he also made beautiful vases and other vessels of the same materials. One of his vases was ornamented with a group of the Nativity of St. Joseph. He was much patronized by the princes and nobles of the land. He died in 1575. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandano, ANTONIO, a Portuguese monk, was born April 25, 1584. He entered the order of Bernardines in 1599, and in 1617 was elected their general. He carried on the Monarquia Lusitanica of Bernard de Britto, which had been interrupted by the death of the latter. Brandano published his work at Lisbon (1632, 2 vols. fol.), and died Nov. 27, 1637. His nephew Francesco continued the book, bringing the history down to 1325 (1650, 1672, 2 vols. fol.). Antonio was the author of several other works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Brandao (or Brandam), Hilarion, a Portuguese theologian, a native of Coimbra, died at Lisbon, Aug. 22, 1785. He wrote several religious works, of which the principal is, Vox de Amaado (Lisbon, 1579). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandao (or Brandam), Lois, an ascetic theologian of Portugal, of the Jesuit order, a native of Lisbon, died May 3, 1663. He wrote, in the Portuguese language, Meditations on the Gospel History (Lisbon, 1679, 1683). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandenberg, JOHANN, a Swiss painter, was born at Zug in 1660, and studied under his father, Thomas Brandenberg, an obscure artist. He painted some historical pieces for the churches and convents of the Catholic cantons. He died in 1729.

Brandes, CARL, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born at Brunswick, April 18, 1810. In 1837 he received holy orders, in 1865 became doctor of theology, and died, August 7, 1867, as capitial of Maria-Einsiedeln, in the castle Pfäffikon. He wrote, Leben und Regel des heiligen Vaters Benedict (Einsiedeln, 1857, 3 vols.); he also translated the great work of Montalembert, on the monks of the west, into German. (B. P.)

Brandi, GIACINTO, an Italian painter, was born at Poli, in 1623, and studied under Cav. Gio. Lanfranco. His best works are said to be at Gaeta, where he painted in the Nunziata a picture of the Virgin and Infant Christ; Ten Angels, in the inferior part of the Duomo; and over the altar the Martyrdom of St. Erasmus, bishop of Gaeta. He died in 1691. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandimarte, BENEDETTO, an Italian painter, was born at Lucca, and was employed considerably in painting for the churches. He was living in 1592. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandis, Christian August, a German philosopher, was born in 1790 at Hildesheim. In 1813 he was privat docent at Copenhagen, and in 1815 he lectured at Berlin. In 1821 he was appointed professor of philosophy at Bonn; from 1837 to '39 he acted as tutor of king Otto of Greece, and died July 24, 1867, at Bonn. He wrote, Handbuch der Geschichte der griechisch-römischen Philosophie (1835-60):—Geschichte der Entwicklungen der griechischen Philosophie und ihrer Nachwirkungen im römischen Reiche (1862-64, 2 vols.):—Mittheilungen über Griechenland (1842, 3 vols.). (B. P.)

Brandis, Johann, a German antiquarian, was born in 1830, at Bonn, where he also completed his studies. Attracted by a prize offered by the university for the best essay "On the statements of ancient writers on Assyria, compared with the recent discoveries of Botta and Layard," he devoted himself with great ardor to the study of Assyrian antiquities. He gained the prize—at least half of it—and published his essay under the title of Assyriarum Rerum Tempora Emendata, in 1852. He then went to Berlin, partly to teach at one of the gymnasia, partly to attend lectures in the university. From there he went, in 1854, to London, as private secretary to Bunsen, who was then finishing the last volumes of his work on Egypt, and wanted the assistance of a young scholar to collect for him the newly-discovered materials for settling the chronology of Babylon and Assyria. Though Bunsen's recall, in June, 1854, put an end to this engagement, Brandis had during his short stay in London derived great advantage both from his intercourse with English scholars, and from a study of the original monuments of Assyria in the British Museum. The fruits of these researches were published in 1856, in his work on The Historical Results of the Decipherment of the Assyrian Inscriptions, the first attempt of a German scholar at showing the solid character of the discoveries made by Rawlinson and others, in the study of the Assyrian cuneiform language and literature. Brandis then established himself at Bonn as a privat-docent. In 1857 he published an academic programme, De Temporum Græcorum Antiquissimorum Rationibus, an essay which Curtius considered of permanent value, as establishing for the first time the origin of the lists of the ancient kings of Greece from local traditions kept up in different Greek towns. At that time he was appointed private secretary to the princess of Prussia, and all his leisure he now devoted to a careful examination of the influence which Assyrian civilization had exercised on Asia and Europe. The result of his researches he laid down in his great work on measures, weights, and coins, Das Münz-, Mass- und Gewichtswesen in Vorderasien (Berlin, 1866), a work which, as he said himself, attracted more attention in England than in Germany, and secured to him, once for all, a respected position among scholars and antiquaries. More than five thousand coins are carefully described in that book, and this alone would secure to it a permanent value. He hoped to follow up the history of these early arts from Asia and the isles to the continent of Greece, and while engaged in these researches, the discovery of the Cyprian inscriptions—or, rather, of the first bilingual Cypro-Phœnician inscription—at once roused his liveliest interest. Brandis came to England in 1873, and he saw at once that the spell of the Cyprian inscriptions had been broken by the clever guesses of Smith and Birch. They had established the value of thirty-three letters, they had proved that the language of the inscriptions was Greek. Brandis carried on their work, and in the paper published after his death in the Monatsberichte of the Berlin Academy, he fixed the value of the remaining letters, he showed the peculiar character of the Greek dialect spoken in Cyprus, and by a translation of the large inscription of Idalion, he proved that it contained a lease between a landlord and a farmer, fixing the amount of corn which the farmer was to retain for himself. Soon after his return to Germany, he died at Linz, July 8, 1873. See Curtius, Johannes Brandis. Ein Lebensbild (Berlin, 1873). (B. P.)

Brandmiller, JOHN, a minister of the German and Dutch Reformed Churches, was born in Basle, Switzerland, Nov. 24, 1706. At thirteen years of age he was taken into the Reformed religion, and soon after placed with his uncle to learn the printing business, but becoming restless he went to sea. He soon returned to his home, and enlisted as a soldier. While in the army he had a severe attack of fever, and, when convalescent, became anxious to know more of religion. In 1738 he was spiritually blessed. After much travelling and many wondrous adventures he came to America in 1741, and was finally ordained, May 13, 1745, in Philadelphia, and took charge of several congregations in Pennsylvania. He remained four years, and then removed to Friedenthal, where he labored as a teacher for eight years. During the year 1768 he went to Bethlehem, at which place he was found dead in the mill-race, Aug. 16, 1777. "It is a singular fact that, after having narrowly escaped death three times in his youth by drowning, at last, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, he should die in the water." See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, i, 375; Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 194.

Brandmüller, Gregory, an eminent Swiss painter, was born at Basle, Aug. 25, 1661, and studied under Gaspar de Meyer, an obscure artist. He gained the prize of the Royal Academy at Paris. One of his best works was a Deposition from the Cross, in the Church of the Capuchins at Dornach. He died June 7, 1691. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandmüller, Jacobus, a Swiss Reformed theologian, was born at Basle in 1665, and died there Nov. 19, 1629. He wrote, Analysis Typica Domical. et Festival. Evangel. cum Observationibus:—Analysis Librorum Poeticorum et Prophetiarum Vet. Testamenti:—Comment. in Ezechielem et Threnos:—Series Locorum Commun. Theologicorum. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brandmüller, Johannes, a Reformed doctor and professor of theology—father of Jacobus—was born at Biberach, in Suabia, in 1583. He studied at Tübingen and Basle; was in 1555 inspector of the Basle college, in 1565 pastor of St. Theodor; in 1576 professor of Hebrew, and in 1581 doctor and professor of theology, and died in 1596. He was a zealous advocate of the teachings of Ecolampadius and of the Reformed doctrine of the Lord's Supper, and was therefore called "Ecolampadianæ sinceritatis Germanus Successor." His writings were mostly homiletical. See Ruppejus, Descriptio Vitæ et Obitus Joh. Brandmülleri (Basle, 1601). (B. P.)

Brandolini, AURELIO (surnamed Il Lippo, on account of a humor in his eyes), an Italian writer, was born at Florence about 1440. He was called into Hungary, where he taught elocution at Buda and Strigonia; upon his return to Florence he became a monk of the order of St. Augustin, and died at Rome in 1498, leaving, A Commentary on St. Paul's Epistles:—De Humana Vitæ Conditione et Toleranda Corporis Aegritudine, and other works. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brandon (Lat. fax), a torch (Le Dimanche des Brandons, Dominica in Brandonibus), is a popular name in France for the first Sunday in Lent, so called from the custom, at one time common in many places, for the peasants and others on that night to carry lighted torches and candles through their gardens and vineyards, threatening to cut down and burn the trees if they did not bear fruit in the coming year. At Lyons the people on this Sunday used also to fetch green branches, to which they attached fruit, cakes, etc., and which were also called Brandons.

Brandreth, John (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Buxton, Derbyshire, in 1797. He was converted when eighteen; received into the ministry in 1821; entered his last appointment (Durham) in September, 1858; preached his last sermon on Feb. 20; and died April 24, 1859. He was an instructive and useful minister. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1859.

Brandreth, John (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Nottingham, England, July 25, 1838. He emigrated to America in his youth; experienced religion, and in 1859 entered the Philadelphia Conference. He died at Frankfort, Del., Oct. 3, 1872. Mr. Brandreth was amiable, a careful student, a fluent speaker, and a faithful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 16.

Brandt, August Hermann W., a Protestant minister of Germany, was born in 1812 at Detmold. He was for some time pastor of the Reformed Church at Essen, and was in 1852 called to Amsterdam as pastor of the German Reformed Church, where he died April 6, 1882. His main work is Anleitung zum Lesen der Offenbarung St. Johannes für Suchende in der Schrift (Amsterdam, 1860). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 179. (B. P.)

Brandt, Charles, a minister in the Free Methodist Church, was a native of Prussia. In 1869 he was received into the Church, and in 1870 into the Illinois Conference. His appointments were Winnebago and Freeport, Savannah and Plum River, Freeport and Lena, the German Mission, and the Oregon Mission. He died in Oregon in the early part of 1879. He was a student of cultivated taste. He could speak readily the German, the French, the Spanish, and the English languages. See Annual Conferences of the Free Methodist Church, 1879, p. 94.

Brandt, Christian Carl August, a Lutheran minister, was born Sept. 10, 1821. While a candidate for the ministry he went to America; where he joined at one time the Roman Catholic Church, but he soon recanted and became a true witness of Christ. He died as pastor of the Lutheran Church at Suspension Bridge, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1873. In connection with his father, he published Homiletisches Hülfsbuch (Leipzig, 1855-58, 7 vols.); while in America, Homiletischer Wegweiser durch die evangelischen und epistolischen Perikopen (Halle, 1870-71, 4 vols.);—Predigt-Studien über alttestamentliche Texte, etc. (Basle, 1872). Brandt, Sebastian. See BRANT.

Brandubh is the name of three Irish bishops. (1) Commemorated June 3. The Mart. Donegal, says, "This may be Brandubh, the bishop, son of Maenach, race of Mac Con." Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, 596, n.) calls him bishop, and places him among the seven brothers (saints) of St. Fagnus (or Fachtna), bishop of Ros-Alethir, now Ros-Carbery, Co. Cork; while in Tr. Thaum. 383, n., he gives his complete genealogy (A.D. 196-225). (2) Commemorated Feb. 6. Of Lochmuintreahair, i. e. Loch Ramor, in Cavan. The Mart. Donegal, says, "There is a Brandubh, bishop of the race of Eochaidh, son of Muireadh, race of Heremon." Among the saints of the family of Maccarthenus, Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 741, col. 2) cites "Brandubius Episc.; videtur esse qui colitur Lochmuintreahair in Ultonia, Feb. 6." (3) Bishop, June 13. In Colgan's Life of St. Fintan (Acta Sanctorum, 352) there is mentioned a bishop named Brandubh, "vir sapiens, mitis, humilis," from the district of Kinsealagh, who came to abbot Fintan of Clonenagh, to his monastery of Achadh-Finglais, to be a monk and end his days there.

Brandwood, JAMES, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Bolton, Lancashire, in November, 1739. After a long spiritual struggle he was converted, in his twentieth year. In 1761 he united with the Friends, and soon after "appeared" as a minister. For this he was disinherited by his father. After having served in the ministry for several years he ceased to be a preacher among them, but eventually he was once more recognised as a minister; and, although he had reached an advanced age, his service was much to the comfort and edification of his friends. He died March 23, 1826. See Piety Promoted, iv, 283-88. (J. C. S.)

Branis, CHRISTLIEB JULIUS, a German philosopher, was born at Breslau, Sept. 18, 1792. In 1826 he was appointed professor extraordinarius of philosophy at the university of his native city; in 1833, professor ordinarius; and died June 2, 1873. He wrote, Ueber Schleiermacher's Glaubenslehre, ein kritischer Versuch (Berlin, 1825);—Grundriss der Logik (Breslau, 1830);—System der Metaphysik (1834);—Geschichte der Philosophie seit Kant (1837);—Wissenschaftliche Aufgabe der Gegenwart (1848). (B. P.)

Bransford, GIDEON H., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Buckingham County, Va., Aug. 9, 1805. In 1829 he entered the Tennessee Conference. Several years later he removed to West Tennessee, and joined the Memphis Conference. He died suddenly in Union City, Aug. 28, 1869. Mr. Bransford was eminent for his parental and friendly qualities. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1869, p. 345.

Branson, REBECCA, wife of Jacob Branson of Flushing, O., was an elder in the Society of Friends (orthodox), and died Oct. 28, 1834, aged sixty-two years. See The Friend, viii, 192.

Branston, EDWARD, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Newark, Nottinghamshire, in 1808. He was converted when about seventeen; was received into the ministry in 1833; was sent in 1835 to the West Indies; labored at Georgetown and Mahaica, Demerara, and in Barbadoes; returned to his native land in 1846; occupied various home circuits henceforward; was sent to Shepton-Mallet in 1862; and while from home visiting a friend was seized with a sickness which in a few days terminated fatally, Feb. 2, 1863. He was an earnest, practical evangelist, whose ministry resulted in the conversion of many. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1863, p. 18.

Brant, Joseph (Thayendanege), a famous Indian chief of the Mohawks, was born in Ohio about 1742. He was a student in Dr. Wheelock's Indian school in Connecticut, and visited England in 1775-76. During the Revolution he excited the Indians to oppose the colonies, but afterwards used his influence to preserve peace between the Indians and the United States. He visited England a second time in 1786, where he was received with great distinction. While there he collected funds for a church, and published the Book of Common Prayer and the Gospel by Mark in Mohawk and English. He died on his estate at the head of Lake Ontario, Canada, Nov. 24, 1807. See Stone, Life of Joseph Brant (1830).

Brant, Sebastian (also called Tito), a German satirist, was born in 1458 at Strasburg. He studied law and literature at Basle, took in 1480 his degree as doctor of law, and was for some time teacher there. In 1500 he returned to his native city and was made syndicus in 1501, a position which he occupied till his death, May 10, 1521. He is best known as the author of the famous satirical poem Das Narrenschiff (Basle, 1494), which has not only been often reprinted, but was also translated into Latin, French, and English; best edition of the original text by F. Zarncke (Leipzig, 1871); Simrock has translated it into modern German (Berlin, 1872). Besides, he also published two volumes of Latin poems, In Laudem Gloriosæ Virg. Mariæ Multiplicis Sanctorum Varii Generis (Basle, 1494), and Varia Sebast. Brant Carmina (ibid. 1498). See Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, i, 150 sq.; Scherer in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Chas. Schmidt, Sebastian Brant (1874). (B. P.)

Brantly, WILLIAM TROPHILUS, Jr., D.D., a Baptist minister, son of Rev. Dr. W. T. Brantly, was born at Beaufort, S. C., in 1816. At the age of nine he removed with his father, who had been called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia. Under careful training he was fitted for college, and graduated from Brown University in 1840. He became a Christian when young, was baptized in 1834, and at the age of twenty-two was licensed to preach. Soon after he graduated he was invited to take the pastorate of the First Baptist Church in Augusta, Ga. Here he remained eight years, his ministry being attended with great success. From 1848 to 1856 he was professor of belles-lettres and evidences of Christianity and history in the University of Georgia. In 1853 he was called to the pastorate of the First Church in Philadelphia, of which his father had been pastor. This call he declined, but when, three years later, he was invited to take charge of the Tabernacle Church in Philadelphia, he accepted the call. He was pastor of this Church from 1856-61, and then removed to Atlanta, Ga., and was pastor from 1861-71, with the exception of a short period during the war. From Atlanta he went to Baltimore, as the successor of Rev. Dr. R. Fuller, in the Seventh Baptist Church. Here he remained till his death, March 6, 1882. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopedia, p. 128. (J. C. S.)

Branwalator, Saint, occurs in the Breton liturgy of the 10th century, in conjunction with St. Sampson. Middleton Abbey, Dorsetshire, was dedicated to Athelstan and Branwalator. St. Branwalator's day is given as Jan. 19 in the calendars of Winchester and Malmesbury.

Braschi, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian antiquarian, was born at Cesena in 1664. He was bishop of Sarsina and titular archbishop of Nisibis, and died in 1727. He wrote several works upon the antiquities of his country. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Braschi-Onesti, ROMUALD, an Italian prelate, brother of duke Luigi, was born at Cesena July 10, 1753. He was made cardinal by Pius VI, his uncle, Dec. 18, 1786, and became archpriest of St. Peter's, grand-prior at Rome of the order of Malta, secretary of the pope's briefs, prefect of the Propaganda, and protector of a great number of religious institutions and societies and cities and public establishments. During the captivity of the pope, he had, like the other cardinals, to suffer persecution. In 1814 he accompanied the pope to Genoa, and returned with him to Rome. He died in 1820. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brasher, LARKIN TARRANT, a Universalist minister, was born in South Carolina in 1806. He joined the Campbellite Baptists in 1834, and preached for that denomination until 1840, when he was admitted into fellowship with the Universalist clergymen. The field of his labors is not mentioned. He died at his home in Christian County, Ky., Oct. 28, 1876. Mr. Brasher possessed great and distinguished gifts as a preacher. But loss of health led him to retire from the ministry, and during his latter years he served as justice of the peace, county sheriff, and superintendent of the poor, as well as attorney-at-law. See Universalist Register, 1878, p. 82.

Brasses, SEPULCHRAL, are monumental plates of brass or the mixed metal anciently called latten, inlaid on large slabs of stone, which usually form part of the pavement of the church, and representing in their outline, or by the lines engraved upon them, the figure of the deceased. In many instances, in place of a figure there is found an ornamented or foliated cross, with sacred emblems or other devices. The fashion of representing on tombs the effigy of the deceased, graven on a plate of brass, appears to have been adopted about the middle of the 13th century. This was embedded in melted pitch, and firmly fastened down by rivets leaded into a slab, usually in England of the material known as Forest marble, or else Sussex or Purbeck marble. These memorials, where circumstances permitted, were often elevated upon altar-tombs, but more commonly they are found on slabs, which form part of the pavement of churches; and it is not improbable that this kind of memorial was generally adopted, from the circumstance that the area of the church, and especially the choir, was not thereby encumbered, as was the case when effigies in relief were introduced.

The Sepulchral Brass, in its original and perfect state, was a work rich and beautiful in decoration. It is, by careful examination, sufficiently evident that the incised lines were filled up with some black resinous substance; the armorial decorations, and, in elaborate specimens, the whole field or background, which was cut out by the chisel or scraper, were filled up with mastic or coarse enamel of various colors, so as to set off the elegant tracery of tabernacle-work, which forms the principal feature of ornament.

The earliest specimen of a brass that has been noticed in England is that at Stoke Dabernon, Surrey, apparently the memorial of Sir John d'Aubernoun, who died in 1277. This exhibits traces of color. Next to this occur the brasses of Sir Roger de Trumpington, at Trumpington, Cambridgeshire; he died in 1289, but Brasseur, PHILIP, a Flemish poet and historian, was born at Mons about 1597. Having been ordained priest, he devoted himself to preaching and confession in his native city, and consecrated all his leisure to Latin poetry, applied especially to the religious antiquities of Hainault. He died in 1650. Some of his principal works are, Dionysiani Monasterii Sacrarum, seu Ejusdem Sacre Antiquitates, Versibus Illustrate (Mons, 1631):—Sidera Illustrum Homonymie Scriptorum (ibid. 1637). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brassoni, FRANCESCO GIUSEPPE, an Italian missionary and historian of the Jesuit order, a native of Rome, lived in the early half of the 17th century. After suffering captivity and great distress in the missions of Canada, especially in that of the Hurons, he returned to Italy, where he devoted himself to preaching. He wrote, Breve Relazione d'Alcune Missioni de' Padri della Compagnia di Gesù nella Francia Nivora (1653). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brassy, ROBERT, an English divine of the 16th century, was born at Bunbury, Cheshire, and became doctor of divinity at King's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected thirteenth provost. He publicly protested against the visitors of the university, in the reign of Mary, pleading exemptions granted by the Pope. He seems to have resided at Cambridge during his life, and died in 1558. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 279.

Brastberger, Gebhard Ulrich, a Protestant theologian, was born Nov. 15, 1754, at Gussenstadt, and died at Stuttgart, July 28, 1813, where he had been rector of the gymnasium since 1807. He wrote, Versuch über Religion und Dogmatik (Halle, 1783-84, 2 vols.):—Erzählungen und Beurtheilungen der wichtigsten Veränderungen, etc. (ibid. 1790):—Ueber den Grund unseres Glaubens an Gott und unsere Erkenntnis von ihm (Stuttgart, 1802). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 408, 409, 414. (B. P.)

Brastberger, Immanuel Gottlieb, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died in 1764, is widely known by his ascetical writings, which to this day are household works in German Christendom. He wrote, Evangelische Zeugnisse der Wahrheit zur Aufmunterung im wahren Christenthum, etc. (Reutlingen, 1870-72, 83d ed.):—Die Ordnung des Heils, oder die Busse zu Gott und der Glaube an unsern Herrn Jesum Christum, etc. (latest ed. 1857). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 180 sq. (B. P.)

Bratten, JAMES HUSTON, a Lutheran minister, was converted about 1848, and soon after entered the ministry of the United Brethren. In 1861 he entered the Lutheran Church, and became pastor of a charge in Huntingdon County, Pa. He died in Chambersburg, Pa., Jan. 3, 1868, aged fifty years. See Lutheran Observer, Jan. 24, 1868.

Bratton, THOMAS, a Presbyterian minister, arrived in Maryland in the fall of 1711. A call was made for him from Monokin and Wicomico. He had probably preached in these places after his arrival, but before he was regularly settled he died, October, 1712. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Braulio (or Brauli), a Spanish prelate, succeeded his brother John as bishop of Saragossa in 627, having previously been archdeacon. He was present at the councils of Toledo in 633, 636, and 638, and died in 646. He was one of the most learned men of the age, to whom Spain was largely indebted for the revival of the study of the Scriptures and classical literature, as well as for the reformation of ecclesiastical discipline. It was owing to his persevering importunity that Isidore commenced his great work, De Etymologiis, the incomplete manuscript of which was placed, at Isidore's death, in Braulio's hands to arrange, and was by him published in its present form. Braulio took part in the fourth, fifth, and sixth councils of Toledo, drawing up the canons of the last. He also drew up, in the name of those there assembled, a letter to Honorius I, refuting the calumnies brought against them. His voluminous correspondence includes letters between him and the kings Chindesvinthus and Recesvinthus, and the bishops and presbyters of Spain and Gallia Narbonensis. He left also a Life of St. Amilianus:—an Iambic Hymn, in honor of the same saint:—and Acta de Martyribus Cesarauugust. (Migne, Patrol. lxxx, 639-720). See Cæve, i, 579; Idlefons, de Vir. Ill. 12; Mabillon, Sæc. Bened. i, 205; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brault, CHARLES, a French prelate, was born at Poitiers, Aug. 14, 1752. Shortly before the revolution he was professor of theology at the university of Poitiers. Having emigrated, he returned, in 1802, at the period of the Concordat, and was made bishop of Bayeux. At the council of 1811 he was of the number of bishops who were in favor of the four articles regarded as the foundation of the liberties of the Gallican Church. In 1823 he was made archbishop of Albi. In the empire he was appointed baron and knight of the Legion of Honor, and was created peer of France by the restoration in 1827. He died Feb. 25, 1833. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Braun, Georg, a German Catholic theologian, who lived in the latter half of the 16th century, was archdeacon of Dortmund, then dean of the collegiate church of Cologne. He wrote, Theatrum Urbium Præcipuarum Mundi (1572, 1st ed.; published in concert with Francis Hogenberg from 1593 to 1616):—Catholicorum Tremoniensium Adversus Lutheranicæ Ibidem Factionis Præfaticæ Defensio, etc. (Cologne, 1605). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Braun, Heinrich, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born March 17, 1782, at Tressberg in Bavaria, and died as doctor of theology and canon law of the Frauenkirche at Munich, Nov. 8, 1792. He is the author of, Die göttliche heilige Schrift des Alten und Neuen Testaments in Lateinischer und Deutscher Sprache durchaus mit Erklärungen nach dem Sinne der heiligen römischen Kirche u. der berühmten kathol. Schriftausleger (Augsburg, 1788, s. q. 13 vols):—Biblisches Universal-Lexikon über die nützlichsten und wichtigsten Gegenstände der heiligen Schrift, etc. (ibid. 1836, 2 vols. 2d ed.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 173; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 181. (B. P.)

Braun, Johann Wilhelm Joseph, a German theologian, was born at Gronau, April 27, 1801. In 1820 he went to Cologne to prepare himself for the ecclesiastical calling, and in 1821 to Bonn, for the same purpose. At Vienna, in 1825, he entered the priestly office. He returned to Bonn, where he taught church history. In 1837 he went to Rome for the purpose of bringing about a reconciliation on the subject of the Hermesian doctrines. Returning to Bonn in 1839, he completed a course of ecclesiastical law. He was suspended from his duties as professor for zealously defending the ideas of his master, Hermes. He held his seat at the German national assembly of 1848, and in 1850 was a member of the first Prussian chamber. His principal works are, an edition of the Œuvres de Saint Justin Martyr (Bonn, 1830):—Bibliotheca Regularum Fidei (ibid. 1844):—Meletemata Theologica (ibid. 1837), and several others. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Braune, KARL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born March 10, 1810, at Leipsic, where he also studied under G. Hermann and Wiener. In 1852 his alma mater conferred on him the degree of doctor of divinity, and in the same year he was called as member of consistory and general superintendent to Altenburg, where he died, April 29, 1879. He published, Das Evangelium von Jesus Christus, synoptisch zusammengestellt (Grimma, 1846):—Momiku und Augustinus (ibid. eod.):—Die sieben kleinen katholischen Briefe des Neuen Testaments (ibid. 1847-48):—Unsere Zeit und die innere Mission (Leipsic, 1850):—Die Bergpredigt des Herrn (Altenburg, 1855):—Die Briefe an die Epheser, Philipper, Kolosser, in Lange's Bible-work (Elberfeld, 1867):—and in the same work, Die drei Briefe des Apostels Johannes (ibid. 1866):—Zwölf Charakterbilder aus dem Neuen Testamente (Altenburg, 1878), besides a number of sermons. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 182; Schlitter, Theologische Literatur-zeitung, 1878, p. 271; Hermann, Leben und Wirken von Dr. Karl Braune (Altenburg, 1880). (B. P.)

Brauronia, the name of a festival celebrated in honor of the goddess Artemis at Brauron, in Attica. The festival was held every fifth year, when a number of young females about ten years of age, dressed in crocus-colored garments, walked in solemn procession to the temple of the goddess, and were consecrated to her service. Another festival bearing the same name was celebrated every five years at Brauron in honor of Dionysus, in which both men and women took part.

Brausiet, MATHIEU, a French monk, director-general of the Christian Brothers, was born Nov. 1, 1792, at Gachat, Department of the Loire. In 1809 he entered on his novitiate in the Christian Brothers at Lyons, and was subsequently entrusted with the direction of the Brothers' schools at Metz and Rheims. In 1817 he made his profession, and in 1823 was called to Paris to act as director of the community of St. Nicholas, and as visitor of the Brothers' schools of the Department. Seven years later he became assistant to the superior-general of the Christian Brothers, brother Anacleto, upon whose death in 1838 he became director-general of that order, which office he held for thirty-six years. In 1873 he visited Rome to witness the beatification of his exemplar, John Baptist de la Salle, the founder of his order. This journey proved too much for him, and on his return to Paris he died, Jan. 7, 1874. His works of instruction have had a large circulation. The following have been published in America: Meditations on our Last End:—Meditations on the Blessed Virgin Mary:—Particular Examen:—Meditations on the Holy Eucharist. Brausiet's advice was sought on many occasions by the French government, and twice did two sovereigns, Louis Philippe and Napoleon III, offer him the cross of the Legion of Honor, which he declined. He accepted it, however, from the president of the French republic, for his community, in acknowledgment of their self-sacrificing conduct in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. In 1838 the Christian Brothers numbered 2300; scholars, 130,000. At the death of brother Philip, by which name Brausiet was known in his order, the brethren numbered 10,000; scholars, 400,000. Brausiet was one of the greatest promoters of Christian education that modern times have produced. See (N. Y.) Cath. Almanac, 1875, p. 64.

Bravo, NICOLAS, a Spanish theologian and poet, a native of Valladolid, was abbot of Oliva, of the Cistercian order, in Navarre. He died in 1648. He wrote a Life of Saint Benedict, in verse; and some theological works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brawn, SAMUEL, an English Baptist minister, was born in Woodford, Northamptonshire, in 1791. He was baptized in 1812; entered Stepney Academical Institution in 1813, where he remained four years; and in June, 1817, became pastor of the "forest-village" of Loughton, Essex, where his labors were blessed to the establishment of a flourishing Church. His pastorate, which was his only one, continued for fifty-two years. For many years he was a useful member of the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society. He died April 10, 1869. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1870, p. 188-190. (J. C. S.)

Bray, Charles H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. Sullivan Bray, was born at Winslow, Me., Dec. 26, 1840. He was converted in early life; received a careful Methodist training, having rare opportunities for understanding the doctrines, usages, and genius of the Church; and began his ministerial career as supply at Cushing in 1867, under the auspices of the East Maine Conference. His after appointments were: 1868, Westport and Arrowsic as supply; then in succession, Bremen and Round Pound, Clinton and Benton, and in 1873, Woolwich. Loss of health necessitated his being placed on the supernumerary list in 1874, where he continued to the close of his life. He resumed preaching in 1878 at China, Me., labored one year, and was again prostrated by sickness. He died in that town, June 23, 1879. Mr. Bray was a devoted Gospel preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 88.

Bray, Horace L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at East Vassalborough, Me., March 19, 1831. He was favored with tender religious instruction; professed conversion at the age of eighteen; received a thorough mental culture at Lincoln Academy and at Waterville College; began preaching in 1854, and in 1855 was admitted into the East Maine Conference, in which he served as health permitted until 1862, when he joined the 12th Maine Regiment as chaplain. Ill-health obliged him to return home in a few months, and he resumed his connection with the conference as a superannuate, which relation he sustained until his decease, Feb. 21, 1868. Mr. Bray was an able minister, more zealous than strong in body. He was sympathetic and deeply earnest. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 142.

Bray, John Evans, a Congregational minister, son of Rev. Thomas Wells Bray, was born at North Guilford, Conn., Nov. 28, 1787. In 1806 he went to Portland, Me., and the next year entered the Fryeburg Academy. The death of his father, in 1808, compelled him to abandon a collegiate course. Until 1816 he was engaged in various kinds of business, part of the time teaching school, and then he began the study of theology at Portland. In 1818 he was licensed to preach by the Cumberland Association, and for several months was employed as a missionary in and about Newfield.

In 1821 he taught a select school in North Guilford, and in 1823 became a missionary in northern Vermont. The next year he received a call to St. Johnsbury, Vt., which he accepted, but owing to difficulties in the Church declined ordination. On May 16, 1827, he was ordained and installed in Columbia (now Prospect), Conn., where he had already preached two years as a supply. In August, 1832, he was dismissed, and for two years following preached at Westfield, where he was the means of organizing a Church. From 1834 to 1842 he was acting pastor in Humphreysville (now Seymour), Conn. On account of impaired health, he withdrew from the active duties of the ministry, and settled on a small farm at Clinton, in the hope of regaining his health; but he was never able to resume regular labor. In 1855 he removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., residing there until 1867, when he went to Newburyport, Mass. This was his residence, with the exception of two years at Elizabeth, N. J., until his death, April 30, 1873. See Cong. Quarterly, 1873, p. 442.

Bray, Nathan H., a Baptist minister, was born in Petersborough, England, April 29, 1809, and came to America in 1840. He began to preach in 1847, his ministerial labors being put forth in that portion of Louisiana which borders on the Sabine River. He bore the title among his brethren of "apostle of the Sabine region." To his efforts, in a large measure, is to be attributed the organization of fifty or sixty churches, which were gathered into three associations, of one of which he was the moderator for twenty years. He was for many years an officer in the Grand (Masonic) Lodge of Louisiana, and parish judge for the last three years of his life. He died Feb. 18, 1875. See Catholic, Baptist Encyclop. p. 129. (J. C. S.)

Bray, Samuel, a Baptist minister, was born in Randolph County, N. C., April 6, 1806. He removed in 1838 to Perry County, Tenn.; professed faith in Christ in 1840; shortly afterwards moved to Henderson County, Tenn., and resided near Mifflin. He was licensed in November, 1850, and ordained in 1856. "His preaching was eminently practical in its character, attracting attention, not so much by the graces of oratory and the charms of eloquence as by his earnest manner and faithful enunciation of those truths which are the common heritage of the children of God." He died at his home in Henderson County, Jan. 31, 1870. See Borum, Sketches of Tennessee Ministers, p. 64. (J. C. S.)

Bray, Sullivan, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Minot, Me., Sept. 15, 1795. He was carefully trained by a Christian mother; experienced a change of heart when quite young; began to preach at the age of twenty; and in 1818 entered the East Maine Conference, wherein he spent his long and useful life, dying suddenly, March 15, 1876. Mr. Bray was a diligent student of the Bible, a close observer of nature, a plain, practical preacher, and a powerful man in prayer. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 89.

Bray, William (or Billy Bray, as he was familiarly called), was a distinguished, eccentric, and useful local preacher among the Bible Christians. He was born in Cornwall, England, June 1, 1794. He was converted in 1823, and in 1824 made a local preacher. He died May 25, 1868. His benevolence was remarkable, his faith strong, and his prayers mighty. He detested smoking and drinking. See Memoir (Lond. 1872).

Brayer, PIERRE, a French theologian, was born in Paris, May 19, 1654. He was canon, grand deacon, and vicar-general of the diocese of Metz, where he died, Jan. 26, 1731. He wrote, Rituel du Diocèse de Metz (Metz, 1713); Oraison Funèbre de M. le Dauphin, son of Louis XIV (ibid. 1711). He also wrote several religious works which were published anonymously. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brayton, George, a Presbyterian minister, was born in western New York, Jan. 8, 1844. He graduated at Amherst College in 1866, and at Union Theological Seminary in 1869; was ordained June 29 of the latter year; was pastor at Norwood, N. Y., from 1869 to 1872, and at Newark, N. J., 1872-73; and died at Utica, N. Y., June 9, 1873. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 128.

Brayton, Isaac Henry, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Deerfield, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1821. He graduated at Harvard College in 1846, and at Union Theological Seminary in 1849; was ordained Jan. 18, 1850, and in that year became stated supply at San José, Cal.; agent at San Francisco in 1853; editor in 1854; pastor at Marysville, Cal., some years thereafter; professor in California College, Oakland, in 1860; and died at Nevada City, Cal., April 12, 1869. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 52.

Brayton (née Greene), Patience, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in North Kingston, R. I., Nov. 18, 1733, and, at about the age of twenty-one, was "approved," in accordance with the usages of her denomination. In 1758 she became the wife of Preserved Brayton. Among the praiseworthy acts of their early married life was the liberation of their slaves. In the spring of 1771 she left her home, for the purpose of making an extended religious tour among Friends in the Middle and Southern States. Her Journal relating to this tour is full of interesting details, dwelling largely upon her own spiritual trials, and recounting the many hardships which she and her companion endured while engaged in what they believed to be the Lord's work. Early in the year 1772 they were in South Carolina. After her long and arduous service, she reached her home in Rhode Island, June 27, 1772. On Dec. 14, 1783, she sailed for Great Britain. Of the incidents connected with this tour in the Old World, we have a minute account in her Life. Having accomplished her mission abroad, she returned home to America, Sept. 10, 1787. After this she travelled but little, on account of the infirmities of age. She died July 30, 1794. See Friends' Library, x, 480. (J. C. S.)

Brazer, JOHN, D.D., a Unitarian minister, was born at Worcester, Mass., in 1787. He graduated at Harvard College in 1813; was appointed Latin tutor in the university one year before taking his regular master's degree; and in 1817 became the immediate successor of Professor Frisbie in the Latin chair. His early determination was for the profession of the law. In after-life he resolved to study theology, and began while at the university. He was one of the chief agents in effecting a transition from the severe and ceremonial academical government of the olden time, to an intercourse with the pupils more courteous and winning. In 1820 he accepted the pastorate of the North Church in Salem, at the same time declining a call from the new Unitarian Church in New York. He labored long and with untiring zeal at Salem. He died in 1846. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 504.

Breaca, Saint. Among the companies of Irish ascetics who landed in the Hayle Estuary, on the north coast of England, are named Breaca, Ia, Uni, Sininus, and others. Lives of Breaca, Ia, Elwinus, and Wynerius, existed in Leland's time (Itin. 3, p. 4, 15, 16, 21), which connected some of their companions with St. Patrick. It is possible that we may place the arrival of Breaca in the latter part of the 5th century. He is said to have been born on the confines of Ulster and Leinster, i. e. East Meath. The parish of Breage is by some thought to be named after him. St. Breaca's day is June 4.

Bread, DAY OF, a name sometimes given in the early ages of the Christian Church to the Lord's day, because of the general prevalence of breaking bread in the Lord's Supper on that day. See LORD'S DAY.

Breaker, JAMES WHEELER, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born of pious parents at Bethel, N. Y. He was remarkable for his thoughtful, studious disposition from childhood; experienced religion in his eighteenth year; spent the next ten years in studying and teaching; and in 1856 was admitted into the New York Conference, in which he served with zeal and marked success until his sudden death, April 10, 1868, in the thirty-seventh year of his age. Mr. Breaker was warm-hearted, true, confidential; intelligent and thorough, prudent and faithful, affectionate and devoted. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 76.

Brearley, WILLIAM, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lawrenceville, N. J., Nov. 30, 1801. He received his preparatory education in the high-school of his native place; graduated at the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, in 1820; then taught two years, entered Princeton Seminary in 1822, and graduated in 1825. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, April 27, 1825; then went to South Carolina, where the remainder of his life was spent. He was ordained by Harmony Presbytery March 26, 1826, and then supplied Sion Church at Winnsborough, S. C., until 1842, giving half of his time to the churches of Salem, Aimwell, and Horeb, all in the same county. He was installed pastor of Darlington Church, May 5, 1842, and continued there until Oct. 12, 1878. He died Jan. 9, 1882, at Mayesville. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1882, p. 10.

Brébeuf, JEAN DE, a French Jesuit missionary in Canada, was born in Bayeux, March 25, 1593. He came to America with Champlain in 1626, and entered upon his mission among the Hurons, but was carried a prisoner to England in 1629. He returned in 1632, and prosecuted his labors among the Hurons and other tribes on the Niagara. In the wars between the Hurons and Iroquois he was taken prisoner, with his associate Lalemant, at the town of St. Louis, and put to death at St. Ignatius with the most cruel tortures, March 16, 1649. He acquired a thorough knowledge of the Indian language and a just appreciation of the Indian mind, and exerted a powerful influence among this people. He translated Ladesma's Catechism into the Huron language. He wrote also the Huron Relation in the Jesuit Relations for 1635 and 1636. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brebllette, PIERRE, a French painter and engraver, was born at Mantes-sur-Seine in 1596. The following are some of his principal prints: The Holy Family; The Death of the Children of Niobe; The Martyrdom of St. George; The Adoration of the Magi. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brecan (Bracan, Brocan, or Berchan). Of those bearing this name it is difficult to define what properly belongs to each. (1) Bishop of Ard-Bracan, commemorated Dec. 6. He was of the race of Eoghain, son of Niall, and bishop of Meath; but the name of his place is derived from Brecan of Ara and Killbraccan. (2) Of Cillmor-Dithruibh, commemorated Aug. 9, is one of the nineteen saints of Kilmore, near the Shannon, Co. Roscommon. (3) Of Cluain-catha and Ard-Bracan—July 16. In Mart. Doneg. he is Bracan of Cluain-catha in Inis-Eoghain, bishop of Ard-Bracan and abbot of Magh-bile. Another dedication may be April 29. (4) Of Ros-tuire—Sept. 17. Mart. Doneg. calls him Bracan, and his name is still found in Killbraghan, Co. Kilkenny. In Colgan's Life of St. Abban an account is given of a meeting between the two saints Abban and Brecan, the latter being abbot of the two monasteries in the region of Ossory, Ros-tuire and Cluain-imurchair; but we must doubt the legend. (5) Bishop—May 1. This was Brecan of Ara and of Cill-Breacain, in Thomond, the son of Eochaidh Balldearg. In the island of Inishmore there was a beautiful parish church, called Templum Brecani (Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 715). This Temple-braccan was St. Brecan's principal establishment; but he also founded and gave his name to Ard-Braccan, the diocesan seat of the bishop of Meath.

Brecc, FELK, an Irish saint of Bealach-Fele, commemorated Jan. 15, was of the family of Fiacha Suidhe, and the son of Silan. He is now associated with Bal-lyfoyle, in Kilkenny.

Brecher, GIDEON, a Jewish physician and German scholar, was born Jan. 14, 1797, at Prossnitz, in Moravia. He received his early education, according to the customs of those days, in the Talmud, which study he continued at different schools. At the age of sixteen he commenced the study of Latin and medicine, in 1825 he became "magister of surgery," and in 1850 he became doctor of medicine. He spent his lifetime at his native city, where he died May 12, 1873, having been decorated in 1871 by the emperor of Austria. Of his publications we mention, Die Beschneidung der Israeliten von der historischen, praktisch-operativen und ritualen Seite (Wien, 1845):—Das Buch Kusari, mit einem hebr. kurzen Commentar und einer ausführlichen Einleitung (Prague, 1838-40):—Das Transcendentale, Magie und magische Heilarten im Talmud (Wien, 1850):—Die Unsterblichkeitslehre des jüdischen Volkes (Leipzig, 1861):—Concordantia Nominum Propriorum quæ in Libris Sacris continentur, edited by his son (Frankfort-on-the-Main, 1876). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 130, and the review of the posthumous work by Mühlau, in Schlürer's Theol. Literaturzeitung, 1877, col. 471. (B. P.)

Breck, Joseph Hunt, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Northampton, Mass., July 9, 1798. He graduated at Yale College, in 1818, studied theology at the Andover (Mass.) Seminary, graduating in 1823, and being ordained in December of that year by the Hampshire County Central Association, was at once sent as a Home Missionary to Ohio, and began his ministerial life in Portage County. After three years of varied service, he was installed, April 25, 1827, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Andover, Ashtabula Co., which he served two years. Thence he removed to Cuyahoga County, and preached in Brecksville and vicinity until his health failed, when, in 1833, he opened a school for boys in the village of Cleveland. In 1843 he took up his residence in Newburgh, where he resided until his death, June 21, 1880. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1881.

Breck, Robert, Jr., a Congregational minister, was born at Marlborough, Mass., July 25, 1713. He graduated at Harvard College in 1730. About 1733 he began preaching in Windham, Ct. He was ordained pastor of the Springfield (Mass.) Church July 26, 1736; although nearly the whole Hampshire Association opposed the ordination on the ground of heterodoxy, and a portion of the parish remonstrated against it. The controversy was the occasion of three spirited pamphlets, two by the County Association, and one by the Ordaining Council. Although he was indiscreet, doubtless, previous to his ordination, after that event he exhibited great prudence, and succeeded in harmonizing the elements in his parish. He died April 23, 1784. Several of his published sermons are extant. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 385.

Breckenridge, George W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Charlotte, Vt., Sept. 26, 1812. He removed with his parents to Monroeville, O., in 1818; experienced conversion in 1833; received license to exhort in 1834; was licensed to preach in 1836; and in 1837 entered the Michigan Conference. Subsequently he became a member of the North Ohio Conference. In both of these conferences he labored zealously, as health permitted, to the close of his life, Feb. 26, 1869. Mr. Breckenridge was upright, practical, courageous; strong in character, intellect, will, and affection. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 194.

Breckenridge, William Lewis, D.D., LL.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lexington, Ky.,

July 22, 1803. He graduated at Yale College, and, studying theology for a time, was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church of Maysville, where, after remaining some years, he accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church of Louisville. His ministry, which extended over a period of twenty-five years, was marked with success. The pastorate was dissolved to enable him to accept the presidency of the University of Mississippi. He occupied this post until 1868, when he returned to his native state, and became president of Centre College. After remaining at this post for several years, he resigned, and went to live on a farm in Raymore, Mo., where he closed his earthly mission, surviving all his brothers and sisters. Though retired from public life, he continued, as health and opportunity would permit, to preach in the rural churches. He was frequently a member of the General Assembly, of which he was moderator in 1859. He died Dec. 26, 1876. (W. P. S.)

Breckinridge, ROBERT JEFFERSON, D.D., LL.D., an eminent Presbyterian minister, was born at Cabell's Dale, Ky., March 8, 1800. He pursued his early studies successively in Princeton, Yale, and Union Colleges, and graduated at the latter in 1819. He then studied law, and practised in Kentucky eight years. In 1829 he united with the Second Church, Lexington. In October, 1832, he was ordained pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, in which charge he remained during thirteen years, and rose to eminence as an eloquent preacher. In 1845 he accepted the presidency of Jefferson College, Pa., and with the duties of this office he supplied the pulpit of a church in a neighboring village. In 1847 he returned to Kentucky, and became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Lexington, and was also State Superintendent of Public Instruction. He resigned this charge and his pastorate in 1853, having been elected by the General Assembly professor of exegetic, didactic, and polemic theology in the seminary at Danville, which office he retained until Dec. 1, 1869, when he resigned. While in Baltimore he edited the Literary and Religious Magazine, and the Spirit of the Nineteenth Century. During his visit to Europe, in 1835, he purchased and transmitted to this country a large amount of rare and valuable literature, and through this means he contended successfully for the principles of the Protestant Reformation against the Roman Catholics of Baltimore. He died in Danville, Dec. 27, 1871. He published, Travels in Europe (2 vols.):—Presbyterian Government not a Hierarchy, but a Commonwealth:—Presbyterian Ordination not a Charm, but an Act of Government:—The Christian Pastor one of the Ascension-gifts of Christ. In 1851 he delivered his elaborate discourse on the Internal Evidences of Christianity, before the University of Virginia; in 1852 he published a tract, On the Use of Instrumental Music in Public Worship; and in 1857-58, his most important work, Theology, Objectively and Subjectively Considered (2 vols.). He was eminently conservative in theology and church polity. See Index to Princeton Review, 1825-1868.

Breckling, FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Denmark, was born in 1629 at Handewitt, in Sleswick. He studied at different universities, and succeeded his father in the pastorate of his native place. He wrote against the immoral life of the clergy, was suspended, and was to be imprisoned at Rendsburg, but he managed to flee to Hamburg. In 1660 he was elected pastor at Zwill, in Upperyssel, but his difficulties with the clergy, whom he accused of a worldly life, and his chiliastic views caused his deposition in 1665. From that time he lived at Amsterdam, afterwards at the Hague, where he was aided by the princess Mary, wife of William III, afterwards by Spener and others. He died in 1711. He wrote a great many things, but, as Spener said, of little use to the Church. His life and writings are given by his nephew, John Moller, in his Cimbria Litterata, iii,

72 sq. See also Adelung, Geschichte der menschlichen Narrheit (Leipsic, 1787), iv, 16 sq.; Arnold, Kirchen- und Ketzehistorie, iii; Spener, Consilia Latina, iii, 203, 431; Herzog, Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bredendach, Matthias, a German writer, born at Kerpen, in the duchy of Berg, in 1489. He was principal of the college of Emmerich, in the duchy of Cleves, where he died, June 5, 1559. He wrote various works, both historical and theological, the latter chiefly against the Lutheran opinions; among them were, De dissidiis Ecclesie componendis Sententia (Cologne, 1557);—Hyperaspistes pro Libro de dissidiis (ibid. 1560);—Apologia pro acerbitatibus in Lutherum in Libro de dissidiis (1557). He also composed a Commentary on the first sixty-nine Psalms, and another on the Gospel of St. Matthew. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bredendach, Tillmann, a German theologian, son of Matthias, who brought him up with extreme care, was born at Emmerich, about 1544. He went to Rome, and finally settled at Cologne, where he died a canon of the cathedral, May 14, 1587. He wrote, besides an account of the Livonian war of 1558, Institutionum Divinæ Pietatis Lib. v (Cologne, 1579);—A collection of Ascetic Conferences, under the title, Sacrarum Collectionum Libri viii (ibid. 1584, 1589, 1599, 8vo);—Orationes de Purgatorio, and other works. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bredencamp, Hermann, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Bremen, Feb. 22, 1760. In 1798 he was rector of the Athenæum at his native city, and in 1805 he was appointed cathedral preacher, and died Oct. 26, 1808. He wrote, Kurzer Abriss der christl. Religionslehre (5th ed. Bremen, 1837);—Predigten über die Lehre von Gott (ibid. 1809). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 199, 235; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 184. (B. P.)

Bredin, John, an Irish Wesleyan minister, commenced his itinerancy in 1769, and travelled for fifty years. He died in Belfast, Nov. 2, 1819. He had a severe temper, but much charity. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1820.

Bree, Philippe Jacques van, a Flemish painter of historical, fancy, and architectural subjects, was born at Antwerp in the year 1786, and studied under his brother Matthew. He painted, among other works, a view of the interior of St. Peter's. He died in 1840.

Breed, Charles Cleveland, a Congregational minister, was born in New Haven, Conn., Aug. 10, 1815. After a time spent in Yale College, he entered Oberlin College, and subsequently graduated from the Oberlin Theological Seminary in 1855. The next year he was acting-pastor in Penfield, O.; and on April 30, 1857, was ordained an evangelist at Bristol, Ill., becoming acting-pastor at Jericho and Big Rock, Ill. From 1858 to 1861 he was acting-pastor in Hadley; 1862 in Marseilles; from 1862 to 1864 in New Rutland; from 1864 to 1875 in East Paw Paw; and from 1876 to 1878 in Princeton and Baldwin, Minn.; and in 1879 in Thawville, Ill. After this he resided without charge in East Paw Paw, until his death, Dec. 17, 1881. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 24.

Breed, William James, a Congregational minister, was born in Massachusetts in 1810. He graduated from Yale College in 1831, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1834; was pastor in Nantucket from 1835 to 1839; district secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in the valley of the Mississippi from 1840 to 1841; pastor in Bucksport, Me., from 1841 to 1845; supply in Cincinnati, O., from 1845 to 1846; and pastor in Providence, R. I., from Nov. 11, 1846, to April 13, 1852. From 1853 to 1858 he acted as financial agent for Yale College; for five years (1858-63), he was pastor of the Congregational Church in Southborough, Mass.; for one year acting-pastor of the Church at Hamilton, and the same for about four years (1865-69), at Raynham. He died at West Taunton, April 12, 1869. See Memorials of R. I. Congregational Ministers; Andover Triennial Catalogue. (J. C. S.)

Breeden, Henry, an enthusiastic preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was born at Southwell, Nottinghamshire, England, Aug. 11, 1804, of godly parents. He was converted in 1822, and was made a local preacher. In 1832 he became the minister of a seceding body of Methodists at Derby; but joined the Wesleyan Association in 1837, and the Methodist Free Church in 1857. He travelled forty-six years in some of the best circuits, held many offices, was president in 1848, and in 1872 became a supernumerary. In 1878 he prepared Striking Incidents of his Life for publication, and died very happy, Nov. 24, 1878. He had genuine piety, firm faith, and perfect peace. See Minutes of the 23d Annual Assembly.

Breeden, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted in early life, entered the work in 1803, became a supernumerary in 1834, and died May 6, 1837, aged sixty-seven. He was "circumspect, regular, and conscientious." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1857.

Breemberg (or Breenberg), Bartholomew, an eminent Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht in 1620. He painted mostly in small size. He died at Rome in 1663. The following are some of his principal prints: Joseph Delivering Corn in Egypt; The Martyrdom of St. Lawrence. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Breeze, Scott James, an English Congregational minister, was born at Ramsgate, Nov. 22, 1796. He was led to Christ by the teaching and example of a godly mother and sister. On removing to Queenborough in 1814, he became remarkable for his Sunday-school and evangelistic labors. At this place he received his theological training under the care of his pastor, upon whose removal he was invited to the pastorate, which he accepted and retained till his death, Nov. 8, 1865. With the young Mr. Breeze was a particular favorite. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 236.

Bregwin (or Bregowinus), the twelfth archbishop of Canterbury, was consecrated on St. Michael's day, 759. Although the majority of historians follow Eadmer, the evidence of Osborn is confirmed by the charters, and his death may be fixed Aug. 24 (Aug. 26, or Sept. 1), 765. He was buried in the chapel of St. John the Baptist, at the east end of the cathedral church. The most important relic of him is a letter to Lullus, archbishop of Mentz, about 762, from which we learn that Bregwin visited Rome, probably in 751. A synod held by him is mentioned in an act of the Council of Clovesho. Ralph de Diceto says that Bregwin received the pall from pope Paul I. See Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, i, 235.

Breidablik, according to the Scandinavian mythology, was one of the mansions of the celestial regions. It was the region of ample vision.

Breidenbach, Bernhard von, a priest of Mentz, visited Palestine about 1483, and on his return to Germany wrote a Latin account of his travels, which was published with illustrations of the scenery, costumes, and animals of the Holy Land, and several Oriental alphabets, said to have been the first ever printed. He died in 1497. See Appleton's American Cyclopædia, s. v.

Breiger, Gottlieb Christian, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 29, 1771, at Hanover. In 1796 he was appointed con-rector at Harburg; in 1798 assistant minister, and in 1805 pastor there. In 1815 he was made superintendent at Dransfeld, and in 1827 general superintendent; and died Feb. 7, 1853. He wrote, Ueber den Einfluss trauriger Zeitumstände auf die Führung des Predigtamtes (Hanover, 1810);—Ueber die Wahl des Predigtamtes und die Vorbereitung darauf (ibid. 1819);—Das Gebet unsers Herrn in freien Betrachtungen (ibid. eod.);—Die Stämme der Religion an ein friedliches Volk, etc. (ibid. 1831);—Religiöse Familienreden (ibid. 1823);—Trostlehre bei dem Grabe der Unsrigen (ibid. 1800);—Die Zukunft Christi (Lüneburg, 1833). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 45, 46, 120, 171, 180, 187, 357, 373; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 184. (B. P.)

Breitenstein, JOHANN PHILIPP, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born July 16, 1753, at Nieder-Dorfelden, near Hanau. He studied at Heidelberg, Göttingen, and Erlangen. In 1785 he was appointed second preacher of the Reformed Church at Marburg, and in 1820 became first preacher there. He died Nov. 21, 1825. He wrote, Untersuchungen dunkler Schriftwahrheiten (Leipsic, 1789);—Das Evangelium Johannis, übersetzt und mit ausführlichen Erläuterungen versehen (Marburg, 1818). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 44, 75, 307; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 157 sq. (B. P.)

Breithaupt, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a German scholar, who died at Gotha, June 5, 1713, is known by his Latin translations of Josephus Gorionides, which he published with notes (Gotha, 1707); and of Rashi's Commentary on the Old Testament (ibid. 1710–1713). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 157, 193; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 130 sq.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Breithaupt, Andreas Cyriacus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 27, 1705, at Göttingen. He studied at Halle, was in 1736 pastor at Rottenhütte, in 1742 at Altenrode, in 1746 at Ilsenburg, and from 1759 at Wernigerode, where he died, Oct. 13, 1780. He is the author of several hymns. See Kesslin, Nachrichten von Schriftstellern und Künstlern der Grafschaft Wernigerode, vom Jahre 1074–1855 (Wernigerode, 1856); Jacobs, Zur Geschichte der Bildung und Begründung der evangelischen Gemeinde und Pfarre zu Ilsenburg (ibid. 1867), p. 50; Koch, Geschichte des deutschen Kirchenliedes, iv, 500. (B. P.)

Breithaupt, Christian, a German theologian, nephew of Johann Friedrich, was born May 1, 1689, at Ermsleben, in the principality of Halberstadt. He was professor of philosophy at Helmstädt in 1718, and of eloquence in 1740. He died Oct. 12, 1749. His principal works are, De Principiis Humandarum Actionum (Halle, 1714);—De Stylo Sulpitii Severi (ibid. 1713);—Commentatio de Recta Linguae Anglicanae Pronunciatione (Helmstädt, 1740). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Breitinger, Johann Jacob (1), a Swiss theologian, was born April 19, 1575, at Zurich. He studied at different universities, was in 1611 called to Zurich as pastor of St. Peter's, and in 1613 was appointed first pastor at the great Münster; with the latter position he became also superintendent of the Church at Zurich. In the spirit of the Reformed-Church discipline he endeavored to elevate public morality. He represented his Church at the Synod of Dort, and opposed the Remonstrants. He died April 1, 1645. Of his writings may be mentioned, Das heilige Vater-Unser (1616, 1628);—Versio Novi Testamenti Fontibus Proxima (1628);—Der reformirt christliche Glaub (1640). See Miscellanea Tigurina, i, No. 5; Meyer, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Breitinger, Johann Jacob (2), a Swiss theologian, was born at Zurich in 1701. He was canon and professor of Greek there, became famous for his controversies with the Leipsic school, and died in 1776, leaving an edition of the Septuagint (Zurich, 1730, 4 vols. 4to), and some lesser works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brekell, JOHN, a Unitarian minister of Liverpool, died about 1775. He published An Essay on the Hebrew Tongue, to show that the Hebrew Bible might be originally read by Vowel Letters without the Vowel Points (Lond. 1758);—Sermons (1744–69), and Twenty Discourses (1765). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bremer, CHARLES, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Pymont, Germany, in 1814. He was religiously raised; professed faith in Christ among the Pietists in Germany at the age of sixteen; emigrated to America about 1836; joined the Methodists in 1842; was licensed to preach shortly afterwards in New Orleans, and began preaching to the Germans in that vicinity in private houses. He was eminently successful, and organized the first German Methodist Church in New Orleans. Thus he labored with unbounded zeal and fidelity until his death, Sept. 14, 1847. Mr. Bremer was energetic beyond his strength, and generous beyond his means. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1848, p. 140.

Bremond, ANTOINE, a French theologian and historian of the Dominican order, was born at Cassy, in Provence, in 1692. In 1716 he was sent as missionary to Martinique, but was obliged, on account of his health, to return to Rome, where he confined himself to the publication of the Bullaire de l'Ordre de Saint Dominique, which appeared from 1729 to 1740. He was appointed in 1748 general of his order, and died in 1755. He wrote, De Germana Stirpe Sancti Dominici (ibid. 1740);—De Illustr. Viris Petro Martyre Sansio et Francisco Serrano, et aliis in Fo-kienna Provincia Martyribus (ibid. 1753);—Annalium Ordinis Prædicatorum Volumen Primum (ibid. 1756). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brémont, ÉTIENNE, a French theologian, was born at Châteaudun, March 21, 1714. In 1759 he was appointed canon of the Church of Paris; this gave rise to some complaint, and injurious statements concerning him were published in the Gazette Ecclésiastique. He was kept under surveillance by the Parliamtent of Paris, who, in order to uphold the miracles pretended to be wrought at the tomb of the abbé Paris, held many ecclesiastics in prison. Brémont was eventually obliged to retire into Italy, where he remained till 1773. He died Jan. 25, 1793, his end being accelerated by grief occasioned by the imprisonment of Louis XVI. His great work is entitled De la Raison dans l'Homme (Paris, 1785, 1787, 6 vols. 12mo). This work was so highly thought of, that pope Pius VI addressed a brief on the subject to the author, who, besides, received the congratulations of several of the cardinals and bishops of France. See Biog. Universelle, v, 532.

Brenainn. See BRENDAN.

Brend, WILLIAM, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London about 1586, and was converted under the preaching of Burrough and Howgill. He did not enter the ministry until very late in life. He was in the second company of Quakers who visited New England in 1657, being carried thither under remarkable circumstances, in the little vessel named Woodhouse, of which Robert Fowler was the commander. He was engaged in "Gospel labors" in Rhode Island until November, 1657. Subsequently, while in Plymouth, Mass., he received a "severe scourging" for alleged contempt of the magistrates. After various fortunes in America and in the West Indies, he returned to England, reaching that country at a time when the Quakers were suffering the severest persecutions. For a time he was in the wretched Newgate prison, but escaped with many other Friends during the great plague in London in 1665, when the prison-doors were thrown open. He died July 7, 1676. See Bowden, Hist. of the Society of Friends in America, i, 129–134. (J. C. S.)

Brendan (Brandan, or Brenainn) is the name, according to Colgan, of fourteen Irish saints. Two only of them are conspicuous; and with the exception of Brendan, abbot of Fobhar, commemorated July 27, but little is known of the other minor saints.

1. BRENDAN OF BIRR, commemorated Nov. 29, was the son of Neman and Mansenna, of the race of Corb Olum. Lanigan (Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 38), however, calls him the son of Luaigene. The monastery over which he presided, and from which he received his designation, viz. Birr (or Bior), is now represented by Parsonstown. He is sometimes called "Senior Brendanus," to distinguish him from St. Brendan of Clonfert. An intimate friend and companion of St. Columba, he seems to have aided him at the Synod of Teltown, and protested against the attempt to excommunicate him. He died on the eve of Nov. 29, 573. His Acts are preserved in the Cod. Salmant.

2. BRENDAN OF CLONFERT, commemorated May 16, was the founder of the Church of Cluainfearta, now Clonfert. He was the son of Finulogh, brother of Domaingen, bishop of Tuaim-Muscraige, and Brigh (or Briga), abbess of Enach-duin. He was born about 482 (or 484), in Kerry, West Munster, and at an early age was under the charge of bishop Erc, who placed him under St. Ita, whom he ever regarded as his spiritual mother. By her advice he attached himself to St. Jarlath. He was closely associated with Brendan of Birr, and, like him, was regarded as one of the second order of Irish saints and one of the twelve apostles of Ireland. Like St. Columba, he was a priest, and, like him also, was considered a prophet. That for which St. Brendan is most famous is the seven years' voyage in search of the Fortunate Islands, which Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, Ind. Chron.) says began in 545. Returning, he founded the monasteries of Clonfert (dated from 553 to 564) and Annadown, placing his sister Briga over the latter. It is said that he built many monasteries and cells through Ireland, where he had three thousand monks under him. He died in his sister's monastery, A.D. 577. Archdall says that he became bishop of Kerry, where he ended his days, and was buried at Cluainarca. St. Brendan had also a connection with Scotland. Fordun states that he erected a cell in Bute and lived in Scotland about 531. He had many dedications in that country, but another St. Brendan of a later date is imagined by Camerarius and Dempster.

Brenius, DANIEL, a Dutch Protestant theologian, was born at Haarlem in 1594. He was a disciple of Episcopius. He died in 1664. He wrote, Opera Theologica (Amsterdam, 1664):—an examination of the treatise of Episcopius upon the question, An Liceat Christiano Magistratum Gerere:—The Mirror of Christian Virtues, in Flemish (ibid. 1630):—Compendium Theologiæ Erasmiæ (Rotterdam, 1677). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Brenner, Franz, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born Jan. 10, 1784, at Bamberg, and died there as cathedral dean in 1835. He wrote, Aufdeckung der Unwissenheit und Unredlichkeit lutherischer Doctoren der Theologie und Pastoren (Bamberg, 1829):—Lichtblicke von Protestantem Geyern (ibid. 1830):—Versuch einer historischen Darstellung der Offenbarung (ibid. 1812):—Geschichtliche Darstellung der Verrichtung und Auspendung der Sakramente (1818–24, 3 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 351, 398, 630; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 185. (B. P.)

Brenner, Frederick W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Prussia in 1818. He was converted in Philadelphia, Pa., received license to preach, and for several years travelled under the direction of a presiding elder in the Philadelphia Conference. In 1847 he was engaged as missionary in the West Baltimore German Mission; in 1849 was sent to the Williamsburgh German Mission, L. I.; in 1851 to Callicou Mission; and in 1852 returned to the New York Conference with broken health. With great reluctance he took a supernumerary relation, and located in West Baltimore, where he served as best he could in the German work until his death, in September, 1852. Mr. Brenner was an excellent, energetic, enthusiastic man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1853, p. 194.

Brent, James Henry, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Rockingham County, N. C., in 1825. He was endowed with a fine intellect and noble nature, and was instinctively high-minded, honorable, and generous; received the tender care of a pious mother; was preparing himself for the practice of medicine when, in 1843, he was converted. He immediately began a ministerial course of study at Randolph Macon College, and in 1850 entered the North Carolina Conference. His first appointment was in connection with the Topsail Academy; his third was at Goldsborough, where he founded the Goldsborough (now Wayne) Female College, over which he presided successfully two years. He died in the midst of his labors, at Newbern, Aug. 17, 1860. He was highly esteemed and greatly beloved. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 247.

Brent, John Caldwell, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Rockingham County, N. C., April 20, 1837. He made a profession of religion under the preaching of his brother, Rev. J. H. Brent, in 1852, while a student in Smithville Academy; finished his school course at Chapel Hill University; and in 1858 was licensed to preach, and received into the North Carolina Conference. His ministry was short, but full of energy and success. He died Aug. 8, 1863. Mr. Brent was eminent for his fortitude, singleness of aim, and deep piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1863, p. 445.

Brentana, SIMONE, an Italian painter, was born in 1638. Most of his pictures are in the palaces and churches of Italy. One of the finest is in San Sebastiano, at Verona, representing the Martyrdom of St. Sebastian. He died in 1726. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brentano, DOMINICUS VON, a Roman Catholic theologian, was born in 1740 at Rappersweil, Switzerland. He studied at the Collegium Helveticum in Milan, in 1794 was appointed pastor at Gebratshofen, and died in 1797. He published, Die heilige Schrift des Neuen Testaments (Kempten, 1790–91; 2d ed. 1794):—Die heilige Schrift des Alten Testaments (the Pentateuch only) (Frankfort, 1798). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 173, 174; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 167 sq. (B. P.)

Brentford, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Brandanfordense), was held about the year 963 by king Edgar. Here the ordinances of king Edwin were annulled, and the property which he had usurped and plundered restored to the Church and monasteries. Also St. Dunstan was recalled from exile, and shortly afterwards preferred successively to the sees of Worcester and Canterbury. See Labbe, Concil. ix, 657; Wilkins, Concilia, i, 224.

Brentzen, JOHANN. See BRENTIUS.

Brenz, SAMUEL FRIEDRICH, a German controversialist, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He gave up Judaism in 1601 in order to embrace Christianity, and published his motives for so doing in a work in which he accused the Jews of the most odious crimes. Another Jew, named Solomon Zebi, responded in a work in which he accused the Christians of abominable practices. These two works, written in German, were translated into Latin and republished (Nuremberg, 1680, 1715). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brerewood, EDWARD, an English antiquary, was born at Chester about 1655. He entered Brasenose

College, Oxford, and in 1596 was appointed professor of astronomy in the college lately founded in London by sir Thomas Gresham. He died Nov. 4, 1613. He wrote many works, among them two tracts upon the observation of the Lord's day, in which he maintained the Catholic opinion that there is no obligation to observe the Sunday as a Jewish Sabbath, as the Puritans taught. He also wrote a Treatise on the Patriarchal Government of the Ancient Church, in question and answer (Oxford, 1641, 4to). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bresal (or Breasal) is the name of several Irish saints: (1.) Son of Seghene, was abbot of Iona from A.D. 772 to 801. During his presidency two Irish kings were enrolled under him, and Iona became a celebrated place of pilgrimage. His dedication is May 18. (2.) Another, mentioned by Tirechan, and cited by Ussher as one of the disciples of St. Patrick. (3.) The Four Masters give the obit of Bresal, son of Colgan, abbot of Fearná (Ferns), as A.D. 744, but the true date is 748.

Bresang, HANS, a German engraver, lived about 1513. The following are his principal prints: Christ Bound to the Pillar; The Dead Christ, with the Marys; Christ and the Twelve Apostles. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Brescia (or Bresciano), Giovanni Antonio da, an Italian engraver, born at Brescia about the year 1461, was probably the brother of Raffaele. The works of this artist are few and as follows: The Virgin Suckling the Infant Jesus; The Scourging of Christ; The Virgin Adoring the Infant, St. Joseph Sleeping.

Brescia (or Bresciano, Lat. Briziensis), Giovanni Maria da, an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Brescia about 1460, and studied painting and engraving for some time, after which he joined the order of the Carmelites at Brescia, and painted several pictures for the church of his monastery, and some frescos in the cloister, representing subjects from the history of Elijah and Elisha. Some of his best works are, The Virgin and Infant Jesus; The Virgin and Infant in the Clouds. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brescia, Leonardo, a Ferrarese painter, lived about 1530. There are a number of his pictures in the churches and convents of Ferrara, the best of which are, The Assumption, in the Church of Il Gesu; The Annunciation, in the Madonna del Buon Amore; and The Resurrection, in Santa Monica. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brescia, Raffaele da, a painter of the Venetian school, was born at Oliveto in 1479. He adorned the choir of the Church of San Michele in Bosco, at Bologna, with some excellent works. He died in 1539.

Brescius, CARL FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Bautzen, Jan. 31, 1766. In 1788 he was preacher at Muskau, and in 1806 at Triebel; in 1811 was general superintendent at Lübben; in 1816 he was at Frankfort, and in 1836 was made doctor of theology and general superintendent of the Neumarkt. He died in 1845. He wrote, Apologien verkannter Wahrheiten aus dem Gebiete der Christenlehre (Leipsic, 1804);—Predigten, Reden, etc. (ibid. 1845). See Spieker, Darstellungen aus dem Leben des General-Superintendenten und Consistorialrath C. Fr. Brescius (Frankfort-on-Oder, 1845). (B. P.)

Breslau, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Fratislaviense), was held in February, 1268, by Guy, cardinal and legate, who there preached a crusade for the deliverance of the Holy Land, and received grants for succor. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 858.

Bresler, CARL HEINRICH, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1797 at Brieg. He became superintendent and member of consistory; and died in 1860. He published, Geschichte der deutschen Reformation (Berlin, 1846, 2 vols.);—Dr. Luther's: Tod und Begräbniss, von Augenzeugen geschildert (Dantzig, 1846);—Vatum Præagia et Consilia Germaniæ Proscribis, Demagogis, etc. (ibid. 1848). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 185. (B. P.)

Bressani, FRANCESCO GIUSEPPE, an Italian missionary, was born at Rome in 1612. He entered the Society of Jesus at the age of fifteen, went to Canada in 1644, and was on his way to the Huron Indians, when (April, 1644) he fell into the hands of the Mohawks, who subjected him to mutilations and torments, and after four months' suffering sold him to the Dutch at Fort Orange. The latter treated him kindly, and sent him to France. Bressani returned to Canada in July, 1645, and labored for five years among the Hurons, that is, until the extinction of the Huron mission. In 1650 he was recalled to Italy, and devoted many years to establishing missions. He died in Florence, Sept. 9, 1672. Bressani wrote a history of his mission (Macerata, 1653; a French translation, with biography and notes, was published in Montreal, 1852). See De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the United States, p. 311, 312; Shea, Cath. Missions, p. 193-212; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bresslau, MORITZ H., a Jewish teacher and professor of Hebrew, who died in London, May 14, 1864, is the author of, A Compendious Hebrew Grammar (Lond. 1855);—A Hebrew and English and English and Hebrew Dictionary (ibid. 1856). (B. P.)

Bressler, NATHANIEL E., a German Reformed minister, was born in the town of Lower Mahantango, Schuylkill Co., Pa., Sept. 7, 1821. He received his education at Marshall College, Pa. In 1846 he was licensed and ordained pastor of the Armstrong Valley charge in Dauphin County, where he remained to the close of his life, except an interval of three years, during which he served the Second Reformed Church at Harrisburg. He died March 7, 1877. He was unassuming, conscientious almost to a fault, and earnest in his labors. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 275.

Bret, JOHANN FRIEDRICH LE, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Unter-Türkheim, near Canstadt, Nov. 19, 1732. He studied at Tübingen, travelled through Italy, and acted as tutor at Venice from 1757 to 1761. In 1763 he was appointed professor at the gymnasium in Stuttgart, and in 1779 professor at the military academy, and at the same time member of consistory and first ducal librarian. In 1782 he was made chancellor of the famous Charles' School, and in 1786 chancellor of the Tübingen University, first professor of theology and provost of St. George's. He retired from his office in 1806, and died April 6, 1807. He published, Diss. Hist. Ecol. de Statu Præsentis Ecclesiæ Græcæ in Dalmatiâ, quæ Vltum Slavo-Servicum Sequitur (Stuttgart, 1762);—Act. Eccles. Græcæ Annorum 1762-63 (ibid. 1763);—Progr. de Consensu Ecclesiæ Polonicæ Dissidentium cum Ecclesiâ Wirtembergicâ (ibid. eod.);—Progr. de Antiquo Codice Hebræico (ibid. 1765);—Diss. de usu Versionis Latinæ Veteris Test. in Ecclesiâ Christiana (Tübingen, 1786). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 546, 695, 746, 867, 901; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 169 sq. (B. P.)

Bretagne, CLAUDE, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born at Semur, in Auxerrois in 1625, and died at Rouen, July 13, 1694. He wrote, among other things, Méditations sur les principaux Devoirs de la Vie Religieuse (Paris, 1689);—Constitution des Filles de St. Joseph (ibid. 1691, 8vo). See Biog. Universelle, v, 549.

Bretagne, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Britannicum), was held in 848, by order of the duke of Bretagne, to put a check upon the practice, of which the bishops were guilty, of taking money for ordinations. Convoyn, the founder and first abbot of Redon, accompanied two bishops, who were sent to Rome upon this business.

Bretland, JOSEPH, a Unitarian minister of Exeter, England, was born in 1742, and died in 1819. He left for publication two volumes of Sermons (Exeter, 1820). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Breton Version. Breton is the language of the ancient independent kingdom of Armorica, and is now spoken in Lower Brittany, by about 800,000 people, most of whom are unacquainted with French. As French is now the only language used in all the elementary schools, it is likely that it will soon supersede the native Breton in the larger towns. The priests, however, from a principle, it is thought, of ecclesiastical conservatism, oppose the encroachments of the French language, and Breton will, in all probability, continue for a long time to be the vernacular of the uneducated portion of the population.

The first version of the New Test. in Breton was completed in 1827, at Angoulême, by Legonidec, a Breton scholar. The translation was made from the Latin Vulgate, and in spite of many excellences of style and diction, it was scarcely suitable for general circulation. When Protestant missionaries first commenced their labors in France (about the year 1834) they found that this version was but imperfectly understood by the Bretons. The Rev. J. Jenkins, therefore, of Morlaix, a native of Glamorganshire, and agent of the Baptist Missionary Society, undertook a new translation, which was found to be intelligible to almost the whole population, and in 1847 the British and Foreign Bible Society had three thousand copies printed at Brest. A revised edition of the New Test. of this translation was published shortly afterwards. As Mr. Legonidec had left a translation of the Old Test. in MS., the British and Foreign Bible Society undertook the edition of the Psalms, based on Legonidec's translation, and prepared and edited by the Rev. J. Williams, which was published in 1873. See Bible of Every Land, p. 170. (B. P.)

Breton (Brecton, or Britton), John le, LL.D., an English prelate, was promoted from being canon of Hereford to bishop of that diocese in 1269, and died May 12, 1275. He was noted for his knowledge of the civil and common law, and made a digest of the laws of England.

Breton, Raymond, a French Dominican, was born at Beaune in 1609, went to America in 1635, and spent many years as a missionary among the Antilles or Caribbee Islands. After his return he composed a Dictionary of the language, and a Grammar of the same, also a Catechism (Auxerre, 1625). The great sterility of the language, and its variety (for the young are said to speak a different dialect from the old, and males from females), must have added incredibly to the labor. Breton died in 1679. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Breton, William, an English writer of the 14th century, was born in Wales. He was educated a Franciscan at Grimsby, Lincolnshire; was a great scholar, a deep divine, and a writer of many books, both in prose and verse, of which his masterpiece was An Exposition of all the Hard Words of the Bible; and such was the reputation of the book that in the controversy between Standish, bishop of St. Asaph, and Erasmus, the former appeals to Breton's book about the interpretation of a place in Scripture. Breton died at Grimsby in 1356. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 500.

Bretonneau, Francois, a French theologian, was born in Touraine, Dec. 31, 1660. He became a Jesuit, and for thirty-four years devoted himself to preaching. He died at Paris, May 29, 1741. He wrote, Réflexions Chrésiennes pour les jeunes Gens qui entrent dans le Monde (Paris, 1708):—Sermons, Panegyriques et Discours sur les Mystères (ibid. 1743, published by P. Berruyer). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bretonneau, Gui, a French ecclesiastical historian, a native of Pontoise, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He was canon of St. Laurent of Plancy, and wrote, Histoire Généalogique de la Maison des Brignonnet (Paris, 1620):—Histoire de l'Origine et Fondation du Vicariat de Pontoise (ibid. 1636):—Examen Désintéressé du Livre de la Fréquente Communion (Rouen, 1645). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brett, Richard, a learned English divine, was born in London in 1561. He was made rector of Quainton, Berks, in 1595, and was selected as one of the translators of King James's Bible. He died a fellow of the intended foundation of Chelsea College, April 15, 1637, leaving some works.

Brettell, Jeremiah, an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Wrogle, Staffordshire, April 16, 1753. He was converted about 1771, appointed to the Epworth Circuit as his first charge in 1774, and labored in Ireland for nearly three years thereafter. In 1778 he was again preaching in England. Here he worked hard until 1810, when he became a supernumerary in Bristol. He died Dec. 4, 1826. "He exemplified what the apostle recommends"—Rom. xii, 12. See Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1830, p. 649, 721; Minutes of the British Conference, 1827.

Brettell, John, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born at Stourbridge, Worcestershire, in 1742. After being a local preacher for about four years, he was sent out by the Conference in 1771. Except for an interval of three years (on account of illness), he travelled in the ministry for about twenty-six years. He died in 1796. He was a plain, sincere, upright man. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Bretteville, ÉTIENNE DUBOIS DE, a French theologian, was born at Bretteville-sur-Bordel, near Caen, in 1650. He entered the Jesuit order in 1667, but withdrew in 1678, and consecrated his time to the instruction of young ecclesiasts in eloquence. He died in 1688. He wrote, Essais de Sermons pour tous les Jours de Carême (Paris):—a posthumous work entitled L'Éloquence de la Chaire et du Barreau (ibid. 1689). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brettie, ELIAS, an English Methodist minister, was born at Carleton, Nottinghamshire. He was converted at sixteen; made a local preacher at eighteen; was sent to Newfoundland by the Wesleyan Missionary Committee in 1848; labored in that island from 1848 to 1865; preached thereafter at Windsor and Amherst, N. S., Sackville, N. B., Greysborough, Digby, and Newport; was for several years chairman of district, and in 1877 was elected to the presidency of the Nova Scotia Conference. In 1879 he became a supernumerary, and settled at Avondale, N. S., where he died, Dec. 9, 1881. Mr. Brettle was a painstaking and faithful minister. "The beauty and force of a holy life shone forth in every word, and beamed in every look." See The Wesleyan, Dec. 16, 1881; Feb. 10 and 17, 1882.

Breuck (or Dubrucque), Jacob van, the elder, an eminent Flemish architect and sculptor, was a native of Mons or St. Omer, and flourished in the former part of the 16th century. He travelled in Italy, and in 1539 erected the château near the city of Mons for the comte de Boussu, which he decorated with an admirable collection of works of art. As a sculptor he executed, for the Church of St. Wandru, at Mons, several statues, and some bass-reliefs representing the Last Supper, The Flagellation, Christ Bearing the Cross, etc. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Breuck, Jacob van, the younger, a reputable Flemish architect, was born at Mons, or at St. Omer. About 1621 he erected some important edifices at St. Omer, and at Mons in 1634 he built the handsome monastery for the monks of St. Julian. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brewer, Aaron G., a Methodist minister, was born in Monmouth County, N. J., Dec. 5, 1795. He was converted March 1, 1816, and immediately afterwards became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was licensed to exhort in 1820. On Jan. 1, 1821, he withdrew, and afterwards associated himself with the Methodist Reformers. At their first Annual Conference, held in April, 1822, he was ordained deacon, and appointed a general missionary to labor and organize churches in the states of New York and Connecticut. At the Conference of 1825 he succeeded in having a call issued to all the non-episcopal Methodist societies in the United States, to meet in convention in New York, which convention was held June 1, 1826; when a constitution, declaration of rights, and articles of religion were adopted. At the Conference of 1827 he was appointed to visit the state of Georgia, and form churches, ordain preachers, organize an annual conference, etc. Being successful, and having made a good impression, he was earnestly importuned to go and labor in the South; he yielded to the call, and went to Georgia the second time, in 1829. At the General Convention of Methodist Reformers, held in Baltimore, November, 1830, he was a delegate. On Sept. 20, 1834, he organized the Methodist Protestant Church in Charleston, S. C., and for two years was its pastor. In 1836 he was principal of the academy at Mechanicsville; at this place he organized a Methodist Protestant Church, which Church became the nucleus of the South Carolina Conference. In 1838 he was appointed general missionary in the South. Soon afterwards, his health and that of his family failing, he taught school until 1852, when he became editor of the Christian Telegraph and Southern Olive-tree, which was published at Atlanta, Ga. From 1858 to 1860 he filled appointments in the Alabama Conference. For some years he was chaplain in the Confederate army. In 1865 he went to live with his daughter at Charleston, S. C., where he died, April 7, 1877. See Cothouer, Founders of the M. P. Church, 1880, p. 365.

Brewer, Daniel, a Congregational minister, graduated at Harvard College in 1687; was ordained pastor of the Church in Springfield, Mass., May 16, 1694; and died Nov. 5, 1733, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 385.

Brewer, Daniel D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in North Carolina. He received very limited educational privileges; was converted in 1827, and with marvellous success began preaching. He united with the Mississippi Conference about 1829, in which he toiled until his last severe and protracted illness, which terminated in his death in 1834. Mr. Brewer's career was short but eminently successful. Hundreds were brought to Christ through his instrumentality. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1834, p. 277.

Brewer, Darius Richmond, an Episcopal minister, was born in Dorchester, Mass., June 23, 1819. He graduated at Harvard University in 1838, studied theology at Andover and New Haven, took orders in the Episcopal Church in 1842, and was ordained priest in 1844. In 1842 he commenced his public ministry at St. Peter's Church, Cambridgeport, Mass., where he remained until 1844, when he became rector of St. Paul's Church, Concord, N. H. In December, 1846, he became minister of Trinity Church, Newport, R. I. In 1855 he became rector of Immanuel Church, in the same city; this Church having been organized by himself. In 1858 he removed to Yonkers, N. Y., where, having organized St. John's Church, he was its rector for more than eight years. The Church of the Reformation in Brooklyn was a third Church organized by Mr. Brewer, of which he was the rector over six years. In October, 1873, he went to Christ Church, Westery, R. I., where he remained until his death, March 18, 1881. Mr. Brewer "was a preacher of rare ability, his sermons being marked by great clearness of style, aptness of illustration, and fervor of spirit. He was in full sympathy with all of Christ's disciples of every denomination, and his occasional sermons in the Congregational and other pulpits of his native town are specially remembered. See R. I. Biographical Cyclopædia, p. 441. (J. C. S.)

Brewer, Jehoida, a Welsh Congregational minister, was born in Wales in 1752, and died in Birmingham, England, in 1817. He is described as "a profound theologian, a popular preacher, and an earnest man." Mr. Brewer was the author of the hymn found in many collections, commencing with the line, "Hail! sovereign love, which first began." See Belcher, Historical Sketches of Hymns, p. 96. (J. C. S.)

Brewer, Josiah, a Congregational minister and missionary, was born in Tyringham (or Monterey), Berkshire Co., Mass., June 1, 1796. After studying at Phillips Academy in Andover, he graduated from Yale College in 1821, and immediately commenced his theological studies at Andover, at the same time acting as missionary one year among the Penobscot Indians in Maine. From 1824 to 1826 was a tutor at Yale College. On May 10, 1826, he was ordained at Springfield, Mass.; and in September following resigned his tutorship and embarked for the East, under the direction of the Boston Female Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews. He spent about two years in laboring in Smyrna and Constantinople, and then returned to the United States. While here he published a volume descriptive of his residence in Turkey. In 1830 he went back to Smyrna, where he remained for eight years as a missionary of the Ladies Greek Association of New Haven, Conn. In 1832 he commenced a semi-monthly newspaper, entitled The Friend of Youth. After his final return to America, in 1838, he was for three years chaplain of the Connecticut State-prison, at Wethersfield, and then for a short time agent of the Anti-slavery Society, and editor of an anti-slavery paper in Hartford. In 1844 he opened a Young Ladies' Seminary in New Haven, which was afterwards removed to Middletown, and which occupied him until 1857. He then took up his residence in Stockbridge, Mass., and, after serving for nine years as stated supply of the Congregational Church in the neighboring town of Housatonic, lived in retirement till his death, Nov. 19, 1872. In 1851 he published Primos and the Seven Churches of Asia. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1873; Memoirs of American Missionaries.

Brewer, Walter W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, appears first in 1834, as being then admitted into the New York Conference. For twenty years he received his appointments regularly, and attended faithfully to his ministerial and pastoral duties. In 1854 he became superannuated, and retired to Hunting Ridge, near Stamford, Conn., where he died in 1868. Mr. Brewer was a faithful, zealous minister, an industrious pastor, and an excellent man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 84.

Brewer, William (1), an English prelate, son of the sheriff of Devonshire (under Henry II), was preferred bishop of Exeter, 1224, and died in 1244. He founded a dean and twenty-four prebendaries in connection with his see. He was a great courtier and was employed in embassies, as when he was sent to conduct Isabel, sister to Henry III, to be married to Frederic, the emperor, whom he afterwards attended to the Holy Land. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 404.

Brewer, William (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1827. He was converted in 1847; soon after received license to preach; studied at Mount Morris Seminary, Ill.; in 1853 entered the Rock River Conference, and in its active ranks labored to the close of his life, Dec. 27, 1855. Mr. Brewer was a young man of great promise. As a preacher he excelled, as a Christian he was exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1856, p. 143.

Brewis, William, an English Congregational minister, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Oct. 8, 1804. When thirteen years old he was converted through the influence of pious Presbyterian parents. He entered the Rotherham Independent College, to prepare for the ministry, just before completing his sixteenth year. In 1825 he was ordained pastor at Lane-end, Staffordshire, where he labored two years, when he removed to Kirby Moorside, and thence to Gainsborough, and seven years later to Penrith, where he died May 22, 1869. Mr. Brewis was a total abstainer from all intoxicating drinks during the last thirty years of his life. As a preacher he was diligent, plain, energetic, and fervent. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1870, p. 277.

Brewster (née Shewell), Ann, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in London in 1762. She was converted in early life, was married to Thomas Brewster in 1784, and took up her residence in Clapham in 1800. For many years she was impressed with the duty of becoming a minister, and was recognized as such in 1821, at the somewhat advanced age of fifty-nine years. She labored very diligently in her own meeting, and in some of the neighboring quarterly meetings. She seems to have been especially blessed in family visitations, for which she had a rare gift. Her last years were attended with great physical sufferings from chronic rheumatism, which she bore with Christian patience. She died April 21, 1835. See Testimonies of Deceased Ministers, 1836, p. 17-23. (J. C. S.)

Brewster, Frederic Humphrey, a Congregational minister, was born at Waterloo, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1822. He graduated at Williams College in 1846, spent one year at Andover Seminary, and graduated at Connecticut Theological Institute in 1851. He was ordained at Enfield, Conn., and received an appointment as a missionary to China from the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He sailed July 31, 1852, and died at Canton, Jan. 29, 1853. See Alumni Records of Conn. Theol. Inst. p. 61. (J. C. S.)

Brewster, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born at Starston, Norfolk, Sept. 14, 1813. Some time from 1831 to 1834 he joined the Church at Wortwell, in Norfolk. In November, 1834, giving up his school at Starston, he entered as a student in the Borough-road School; and in March, 1835, he was sent to Farnham, Surrey, to commence a British school in that town. Two days after his arrival here he preached his first sermon. In August, 1841, he went to Chumleigh, Devonshire, where he remained only a few days, but this visit resulted in his settlement as a home missionary, under the auspices of the Somerset Association. His sphere of labor was the villages of Stowey and Can-nington, near Bridgewater. Here he labored assiduously, but with little success. Subsequently he proceeded to Milborne Port to establish a day-school in connection with the Independent Church. Soon afterwards the Rev. J. Gay, of Cheriton, engaged him as his assistant; on Mr. Gay's resignation Mr. Brewster became pastor, and was ordained at Cheriton, May 16, 1848. He died there, Sept. 28, 1852. "Mr. Brewster was a man of great reserve, great attainments, and great piety." See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1853, p. 206.

Brewster, James (1), an English martyr, was of the parish of St. Nicholas, in Colchester. He was a carpenter, and listened to the reading of the Bible from one William Sweeting. For this he was burned in Smithfield, Oct. 18, 1511. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 215.

Brewster, James (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Green County, O., May 6, 1809. He was converted in 1826, and in 1833 received license to preach, and was admitted into the Ohio Conference, wherein he served faithfully until his death, June 25, 1844. Mr. Brewster was an acceptable and useful minister, bringing many to Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1845, p. 585.

Brewster, John (1), an English martyr, was a Frenchman by birth, and was burned at Smithfield in 1511 for alleged heresy concerning the sacrament. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 180.

Brewster, John (2), an English divine, was educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, and died in 1843. His publications include, Meditations of a Recluse (1800):—Meditations of the Aged (1810):—Lectures on the Acts of the Apostles (1807):—Contemplations on the Last Discourses of our Blessed Saviour with his Disciples, etc. (1822):—and other works. See Alibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brewster, Jonathan McDuffee, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Alton, N. H., Nov. 1, 1835. He was fitted for college at New Hampton, graduated at Dartmouth College in 1860, and studied theology at New Hampton and Andover. In May, 1863, he became pastor of the Free Baptist Church in Springvale, Me., and was ordained the following December. From May, 1864, to May, 1869, he was the assistant editor of the Morning Star, the organ of his denomination, published at Dover, N. H. After preaching a short time in Fairport, N. Y., he removed, in 1871, to Rhode Island, and for three years and a half was pastor at North Scituate. In 1875 he accepted a call to the Park-street Church, in Providence, and at once took a prominent position among the ministers of his denomination. In 1872 he was elected clerk of the Rhode Island Association of Free Baptist Churches, and held this position till his death, which occurred in Providence, June 1, 1882. For several years he was on the editorial corps of the Morning Star, and was a constant contributor to the columns of the paper. He was a trustee of Storers College, at Harper's Ferry, Va., and a member of the Executive Board of the Free-will Baptist Foreign Mission Society. Among the productions of his pen were, Life of William Burr, editor of the Morning Star:—History of the Free Baptists of Rhode Island and Vicinity:—and The Free-will Baptists, embodying an outline history of the denomination. See R. I. Biog. Dict.; Providence Journal, June 3, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Brewster, Le Roy S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Unity, N. H., in 1836. He experienced conversion when about fourteen; at the age of nineteen received license to preach; and at the age of twenty-two entered the New England Conference. He died in Webster, Mass., in March, 1873. Mr. Brewster possessed excellent natural ministerial endowments, a winning voice, address, and genial spirit. He was punctual and systematic, studious and eloquent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 52.

Brewster, Loring, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Weybridge, Vt., in 1796. He was licensed by the Congregational Association, and appointed over a Church in Addison, Vt., in 1822. In 1840 he joined the Presbyterian Church (N. S.), and became pastor of a Church at Livonia, N. Y. In 1856 he joined the Hudson Presbyterian (O. S.), and became pastor of Bethel Church, New York. He died Feb. 12, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 80.

Brewster, William, elder of the Pilgrim fathers, was born, so far as can be ascertained, at Scrooby, England, in 1560, and was educated at the University of Cambridge. During his college course of study he became a Christian. William Davison, who had been appointed ambassador of queen Elizabeth in Holland, received him into his service, and formed for him an enduring friendship. On returning from Holland Brewster took up his residence in his native place. Not satisfied with the religious condition of affairs in the Church of England, he left it and joined the Puritans. In the attempt which was made by himself, Bradford, and others to escape from England to go to Holland, where they hoped to enjoy religious liberty, he was seized and thrown into prison, and lost no small part of his property. At length he, with his impoverished family, reached Leyden, and, for a time, devoted himself to teaching and printing. He was chosen a ruling elder of the Church in Leyden, and when it was decided by the Pilgrims to leave the Old World for the New, he was among the first company which came to this country in 1620. For several years the Plymouth Church was without a regularly ordained minister. Elder Brewster supplied the want, in so far as preaching was concerned, but would not administer the sacraments. He died about April 16, 1644. His life was one of great usefulness, and his holy influence was felt among the Pilgrims long after his decease. See Belknap, Amer. Biog. ii, 252-256; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Breyer, Remy, a French theologian, was born at Troyes, in Champagne, in 1669. He was a doctor of the Sorbonne, and ultimately treasurer in the collegiate establishment of St. Urban, at Troyes. He died Dec. 29, 1749, leaving a translation of the Letters of St. Lupus of Troyes, and St. Sidonius of Clermont (Troyes, 1706, 12mo). He also wrote the lives of several saints, and two works in defence of the veneration and cultus paid by the Church of Troyes to St. Prudentius, etc. There is said also to exist in MS. a History of the Councils of the Province of Sens, by the same author. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Breysing, in Norse mythology, was a large, richly engraved, golden ornament on the neck of the goddess Freia. Four clever smiths of the family of dwarfs had made it. Loke stole it to bring it to Odin, who presented it to Freia, and she could now no longer withstand the love of the god.

Briant, Alexander, an English controversialist, was born in Somersetshire in 1557. In 1574 he entered Hart Hall, whence he went to Rheims and thence to Douay, where he was ordained priest. In 1579 he returned to England, and showed his zeal for Catholicism. In 1581 he was imprisoned, and in the same year executed for treason. He wrote several Letters.

Briant, Denis, a French Benedictine of St. Maur, who was born about 1655 at Pleudeben (Côtes-du-Nord), and died Feb. 6, 1716, at Redon, wrote a Histoire de Bretagne, and several memoirs in the Gallia Christiana. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Briant, Lemuel, a Congregational minister, was born in Scituate, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1739; was ordained pastor of the Church in Quincy, Sept. 4, 1745; was dismissed Oct. 22, 1753; and died at Scituate, Oct. 1, 1764, aged thirty-two. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 499.

Briard, Johannes, a Flemish theologian, was born at Bailleul in Hainault. He was a doctor of theology, and vice-chancellor of the University of Louvain; a man held in estimation by Erasmus. He died Jan. 15, 1520, leaving Questiones Quodlibeticæ (Lyons, 1546):—De Contractu Sortis seu Loteriæ:—De Causa Indulgentiarum, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Briareus, in Greek mythology, is the name which the deities gave to the frightful hundred-armed giant Ægæon.

Bribery. It may be a question whether the qualification required of bishops and deacons by the Pastoral Epistles, that they should not be "given to filthy lucre" (1 Tim. iii, 3, 8; Tit. i, 7), implies proneness to bribery, properly so called, or covetousness generally. If, however, we reckon the Apostolical Constitutions as representing generally the Church life of the 2d century, we see that the offence was then beginning to take shape. The bishop is directed not to be open to receive gifts, since unconscious men, "becoming acceptors of persons, and having received shameful gifts," will spare the sinner, letting him remain in the Church. In two other passages there are even more marked recognitions of such offences.

In the Roman law there were numerous enactments against bribery. Theodosius enacted the penalty of death against all judges who took bribes. In Justinian's time, although the penalty of death seems to have been abrogated, the offence is subjected to degrading punishments.

The law of the Church on the subject of bribery was substantially that of the State. The spiritual sin was looked upon as equivalent to the civil offence, and the Church needed no special discipline to punish the former. One form of bribery, indeed, relating to the obtaining of the orders or dignities of the Church, is considered separately under the head of SIMONY (q. v.).

Briccio, Francesco. See BRIZZIO.

Briccio, Paolo, an Italian prelate and historian, entered the order of the Recollets, was theologian of the duchess of Savoy, and had charge of a Spanish negotiation. He obtained the bishopric of Alba in 1642, and died in November, 1665. He published, Seraphica, Subalpinae D. Thomæ Provinciæ Monumenta Regio Subalpinorum Principi Sacra (Turin, 1647):—De Progressi della Chiesa Occidentale per Sedici Secoli (Carmagnole, 1648, 1650; Turin, 1652). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brice, Saint, a French prelate, a native of Tours, was educated by St. Martin, to whom he caused great chagrin on account of his indolence. After a thorough reformation of his habits, he was raised to the episcopal see of Tours upon the death of St. Martin. He was finally driven from his diocese, and obliged to take refuge in Rome until recalled by the inhabitants of Tours. He died there, Nov. 13, 444. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brice (or Bricius), a Scottish bishop, was a son of the noble family of Douglas, prior of Lesmahagow. He became bishop of Moray in 1203, and was the first bishop who located the cathedral of this see in the place of Spynie. He founded the college of canons, being eight in number, and went to Rome to a council in 1215. He died in 1222. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 137.

Brice, Edward (1), an Irish Presbyterian minister, appears to have been a man of good ability and strong moral resoluteness. He studied under Fernu, at Edinburgh, between 1589 and 1597; "he took the degree of M.A. in Edinburgh in 1593, and must have entered college in 1589." In 1607, having resolutely opposed the motion for making Spottiswood, archbishop of Glasgow, permanent moderator of the Synod of Clydesdale—"the expedient then adopted for securing the introduction of prelacy into Scotland"—he was marked out for persecution, and was compelled to leave the kingdom. At this time he was minister of Drymen, in Stirlingshire, where he had been pastor for some years. The next statement in regard to Brice is in reference to the close of his life. He was at this time (1636) at Broadisland. He was deposed by the bishop for holding Presbyterian doctrines; but before the sentence had been carried into effect he died. From the inscription on his tombstone, it appears that he began preaching in Broadisland in 1613, where "he labored with quiet success" until his death in 1636. See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Brice, Edward (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Bristol, May 16, 1810. Maternal piety attracted him to religious thoughts and engagements. In 1833 he was sent as a supply to the Dorchester Circuit, and he subsequently became an acceptable and useful minister. Wolverhampton was his last field, and he died there, May 10, 1859. Gentle and timid, he manifested great courage when duty called to action. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1859; Wesl. Meth. Mag. Jan. 1869.

Brice, Étienne Gabriel de, a French writer, was born at Paris in June, 1697, and became, first, a Carthusian, and, subsequently, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur. He labored, with Tachereau, at the Gallia Christiana, and died Nov. 18, 1755. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Brice, François, a French Capuchin and Orientalist, was born at Rennes near the close of the 15th century. After having been a missionary in Egypt and Palestine, where he acquired a profound knowledge of the Arabic language, he was called to Rome by the congregation of the Propaganda, which employed him to translate several large works into that language. He died in 1533, at the château of Esmont, near Montreuil. Some of his translations are as follows: Amalium Ecclesiasticarum Caesaris Baronii Arabico Epitome (Rome, 1653-71); Amalium Sacr. a Creatione Mundi ad Christi Incarnationem Epitome Latino Arabica (ibid. 1655). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brice (Lat. Brizius), Germain, a French theologian, native of Auxerre, entered the ecclesiastical career, was almoner of the king, and canon of the cathedral of Paris. He died in the diocese of Chartres in 1538. Besides some small works, he wrote, Germani Brizii Carmina (1519); Dialogus de Episcopatu et Sacerdotio (1526). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brice, John (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Maryland. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Redstone in 1788, and by the same he was ordained and installed pastor of the congregations Three Ridges and Forks of Wheeling, April, 1790. When the Presbytery of Ohio was formed in 1793 he was one of its original members. In the above-named congregations he labored until the year 1807, when, on account of ill-health, the pastoral relation was dissolved. He still continued, however, to preach the Gospel in Green County, Pa., and in the adjacent parts of Virginia, as often as health would permit, until April 18, 1810, when he was dismissed to connect himself with the Presbytery of Lancaster. He died Aug. 26, 1811. See Smith, Old Redstone.

Brice, John (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Harrietsville, Pa., Oct. 20, 1820. He received an early religious training; professed conversion and united with the Presbyterians in his twenty-first year; joined the Methodists in 1851; was soon after licensed to exhort, in 1852 to preach, and in 1853 entered the North Ohio Conference. In 1856 he received an appointment from the Delaware to the Van Wert

Circuit, and in the midst of his labors there died, April 2, 1857. Mr. Brice was a consistent Christian, a systematic, sound, practical preacher, and a cheerful, faithful pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 478.

Brice, John H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Annapolis, Md., in 1813. He was converted when quite young; obtained a local license in 1836; and in 1864 joined the Washington Conference. In 1876 failing health obliged him to accept a supernumerary relation, which he sustained to the close of his life, June 6, 1877. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 27.

Brice, William, a Universalist minister, was born in the state of New York, Jan. 23, 1801. He was educated in England, and on returning travelled over most of the Atlantic States, preaching a universal salvation. He finally settled in Missouri; removed to Washington Territory in 1870; and died June 18, 1878. Mr. Brice was a man of intelligence and culture, and of exemplary life. See Universalist Register, 1879, p. 95.

Bricianörum Ordo was a military order, established by St. Bridget, queen of Sweden, in 1366, during the pontificate of Urban V, who confirmed it, and gave for its observance the rule of St. Augustine. Their peculiar duties were to bury the dead, to assist widows and orphans and sick persons, to fight for the true faith, etc.

Bricin, an Irish saint of Tuaim Dreacain, commemorated Sept. 5, was of the race of Tadhg, son of Cian, and had at Tuaim Dreacain a famous college, consisting of three distinct schools—poetry, general Gaelic learning, and the classics. Among other pupils, St. Bricin had the most remarkable man of his age, Cennfaeladh, "the learned."

Bricius. See BRICE.

Brick. The Romans used brick extensively in architecture; and though it might seem singular that such an art when once learned should have been lost, nevertheless the remains of buildings between the Roman times and the 13th century show no evidence of bricks having been used, beyond, in a few instances, employing them as old material from buildings left by the Romans, as at Colchester and St. Alban's Abbey. Perhaps the earliest true brick-building existing in England is that of Little Wenham Hall (cir. 1260). A few instances of early 14th-century brick-work occur, and towards the close of the style, and in the 15th century, brick-work becomes common. The most elaborate mouldings and ornamentation are exhibited in some of the remains of brick-work; and the fine 16th-century chimneys, of which there are many examples, are for the most part built of brick.

Brick, DANIEL, a Congregational minister, was a native of Boston. He graduated from Princeton College, became chaplain in the army and accompanied Porter's regiment to Canada, and shared in the hardships of that campaign. He was present in the attack upon Quebec. After the war he visited the North-west Territory, and delivered the first sermon ever preached on the spot where Marietta, O., now stands. He died in Vermont in 1845. Mr. Brick was a man of high Christian character. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Brickwood, RICHARD, a preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was born in Camelford, Cornwall, in June, 1822. He was religiously brought up, was converted at sixteen, and became a local preacher, and a home missionary in 1845, travelling in Davenport, Worcester, and ten other circuits, in which large congregations attended his instructive and earnest ministry. In November, 1860, sickness prostrated him, but he rallied a little. His sudden death, March 9, 1861, terminated a useful and happy life. See Minutes of Fifth Annual Assembly.

Briconnet, ROBERT, a French prelate, uncle of Denis and William, was archbishop of Rheims and chancellor of France. His rapid advancement was due to the favor which his brother, the cardinal of Saint Malo, enjoyed. He died at Moulins, June 3, 1497. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bricot, THOMAS, a French writer, was professor of theology at Paris at the close of the 13th century. He composed upon the works of Aristotle, upon logic and scholastic philosophy, numerous books which were considered quite important, and editions of which were multiplied at the close of the 15th century, at Paris, Lyons, Basle, and Venice. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brictanus (or Bristanus), an English Benedictine, who lived about 870, composed some works in verse, one of which, written in imitation of the Lamentations of Jeremiah, is styled In Cineris Monasterii Croylandensis Threni, etc.

Bridan, CHARLES ANTOINE, a distinguished French sculptor, was born at Rivière, in Burgundy, in 1730. When about twenty-three years of age he went to Rome, and studied there three years. In 1764 he returned to Paris, and presented to the Academy his marble group of the Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew. He was elected an academicien in 1772. He died in Paris, April 28, 1805. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Briddon, JOHN, an English Wesleyan missionary, was converted in early life, and was appointed by the Conference upon his entering the ministry in 1824 to Kingstown, W. I. He labored on the islands with great acceptance for ten years, when impaired health induced him to return to England. He died Jan. 20, 1836, aged thirty-five. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1836.

Bride, Saint. See BRIGIDA.

Bridel, Jean Louis, a Swiss scholar, was born in December, 1759. After being preceptor in Switzerland, then in Holland, he was successively pastor of the French Church at Basle, at Cassonay, in the canton of Vaud, and finally professor of the interpretation of the books of the saints and the Oriental languages at Lausanne, where he died, Feb. 5, 1821. Some of his principal works are, Introduction à la Lecture des Odes de Pindare (Lausanne, 1785); Oraison Funèbre (Basle, 1806); Dissertation sur l'Etat et les Fonctions des Prophètes (Lausanne, 1808); Discours sur l'Efficacité Morale de la Lecture des Livres Sacrés, et sur le Style de leurs Auteurs (ibid. 1809).

His brother, PHILIP SIRACH BRIDEL, pastor of Montreux, wrote sermons, poetry, an Essai Statistique sur le Canton de Vaud, and a Course de Bâle à Brienne par les Vallées du Jura (Basle, 1802). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bridel, Louis, a French Protestant minister, was born in 1813 at Vevay. He studied at Lausanne, and after having preached for some time in his native country, he went in 1840 to Paris, where, as one of the preachers at the chapel Taitbout, he soon became the centre of evangelistic work. In 1855 he returned to his native land, and devoted his entire energy to the benefit of his Church. In 1858 he founded the Chrétien Évangélique, which he edited as long as he lived. The evangelization of Spain very much occupied his mind, and the carrying-out of his plans was interrupted by his death, Nov. 1, 1866. His important work is Trois Séances sur Paul Rabaut et les Prot. Franc. au Dix-huitième Siècle (1859). See Chrétien Évangélique, 1866, p. 585-604; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bridferth, an English Benedictine mathematician, who flourished about 980, taught at Ramsey, and wrote

*Commentaries on the treatises of Bede:—De Institutione Monachorum:—*and, according to Mabillon, a Life of St. Dunstan. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bridgart, JOHN, an English Wesleyan missionary, after laboring with great acceptance in West Africa for five years, was compelled the second time to quit his field for the recovery of his health. On the voyage home he called at St. Mary's, on the Gambia, but was too ill to go on shore. He was visited by Cooper, the missionary. He died June 24, 1859, and his remains were committed to the deep. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1859.

Bridge, THE SHARP. See AL-SIRAT.

Bridge, Christopher (1), a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was educated at the University of Cambridge, England, and arrived in Boston, Mass., in March, 1699, as an assistant to Rev. Samuel Myles, rector of King's Chapel. After a few years a difficulty, which threatened to convulse the Church, arose between the two on account of the inequality of the official rights. Mr. Bridge was removed in 1706 to the Church at Narragansett, R. I., where he again became involved in difficulty—the bishop of London, in a letter to the officers of King's Chapel, declaring that he had “committed an insolent riot upon the Church of Rhode Island.” The nature of the “riot” has not been ascertained. Mr. Bridge remained only a short time at Narragansett, and in January, 1709, became rector of the Church at Rye, N. Y., where he closed his ministry and his life, May 23, 1719, aged about forty-eight years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 70.

Bridge, Christopher (2), a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, believed to be a son of the foregoing, graduated at Harvard College in 1733, settled as an Episcopal clergyman on the island of Jamaica, and died in 1773, aged seventy years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 71.

Bridge, Ebenezer, a Unitarian minister, was born at Boston in 1714, and graduated at Harvard College in 1736. He was ordained minister of Chelmsford, May 20, 1741, and died in October, 1792. He published two sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 58.

Bridge, George Washington, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Betherton, Kent, England, Nov. 27, 1817. He was led to Christ as a Sunday-school scholar at the age of ten, and licensed to preach at sixteen. When about thirty he emigrated to America; in 1849 settled as a mechanic at Stockbridge, N. Y., and in 1851 entered the Oneida Conference. In 1863 he was transferred to the Providence Conference, and in its active ranks labored until his death, Oct. 28, 1867. Mr. Bridge was intelligent, affectionate, and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 60.

Bridge, Henry Martyn, a Methodist, and afterwards a Congregational, minister, was born at Northfield, Mass., Aug. 21, 1823. His parents were devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his two brothers, J. D. and J. W., were ministers in that Church. Mr. Bridge united with the Church at the age of seventeen, and was licensed to preach in 1844. As a local preacher he was stationed one year at Centerville, R. I. Between 1845, when he joined the Northeastern Conference, and 1854, he was stationed at North Malden, Gloucester, Lunenburg, Princeton, Blandford Centre, and Williamsburg, Mass. Veering in his views towards Congregationalism, he left the Conference, and accepted a call in 1854 to a Church of that body at Warwick. In 1859 he went to Minnesota, hoping to recruit his health. He returned after a few weeks and entered upon the pastorate of the Church at Colebrook, N. H., where he died, Dec. 31, 1861. He was a solemn and instructive preacher, and a sympathetic pastor. See Cong. Quarterly, 1862, p. 303.

Bridge, Josiah, a Congregational minister, was born at Lexington, Mass., Dec. 28, 1789. He graduated at Harvard College in 1758, was ordained pastor of the Church at Sudbury, Nov. 4, 1761, and died June 20, 1801. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 518.

Bridge, Matthew, a Congregational minister, was a native of Lexington, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1741, was ordained at Framingham, Feb. 19, 1746, and died Sept. 2, 1775, aged fifty-five years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 502.

Bridge, Thomas, a Congregational minister, was a native of Hackney, England. He came to America while young, and graduated at Harvard College in 1675. After visiting Europe as a merchant he became a minister. He preached in various places at different times, and then was ordained one of the pastors of the First Church in Boston, Mass., May 10, 1705. He died Sept. 26, 1715, aged fifty-eight years. He was distinguished for his piety, diligence, and modesty. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 163.

Bridgeman, Peter G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Bainbridge, N. Y., March 25, 1804. He was converted at the age of eighteen, licensed to exhort in 1826, to preach in 1828, and in 1836 entered the Oneida Conference, wherein he labored until disabled in 1843 by a shock of paralysis. In 1856 he resumed his place in the active ranks, remained effective some nine or ten years, when he again became superannuated, and retained that relation until his death, July 24, 1872. Mr. Bridgeman was an excellent preacher and pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 55.

Bridges, Albert, a colored Lutheran missionary, was born in South Carolina about 1845. In 1863 he emigrated with a colony of colored people to Liberia, where he remained a year and a half. While there he was connected for a short time with the Lutheran Muhlenberg Mission, but soon returned to America to prepare himself for missionary work. He spent three years studying at the Missionary Institute, and for a time was engaged as an agent for the American Tract Society. He died at Milton, Pa., June 30, 1871. See Lutheran Observer, Aug. 4, 1871.

Bridges, Charles, an English divine, was born at Northampton, March 24, 1794. He received a careful religious training, was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, took holy orders in 1817, and entered upon his first curacy at Gosfield, Essex. He was presented to the living of Old Newton, Suffolk, in 1823, where he wrote his Christian Ministry and Exposition on the Proverbs. In 1849 he accepted the living of Melcombe Regius, and in 1855 that of Hinton Martell, Dorsetshire, where he spent the remainder of his life, writing his Exposition on Ecclesiastes. He died April 2, 1869. Mr. Bridges was characterized by great spirituality of mind, deep and accurate knowledge of Scripture, retentiveness of memory, and singular aptitude. See Christian Observer, June, 1869, p. 471.

Bridges, John, S.T.P., an English prelate, was installed prebendary of Winchester, Aug. 19, 1565, became dean of Salisbury in 1577, and was consecrated bishop of Oxford, Feb. 12, 1604. He died at March-Baldon, near Oxford, March 25, 1618. He wrote, Supremacy of Christian Princes, etc. (1573):—Defence of the Government Established in the Church of England, etc. (1587):—and Quatuor Evangelii (1604). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bridges, Solomon T., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Putnam County, Ga., Dec. 22, 1822. He joined the Church in 1847, removed to Texas in 1852, received license to preach in 1853, and in the following year entered the East Texas Conference. In 1860 he located, and in 1861 joined the Confederate army, and in it served four years, preaching on every opportune occasion. In 1866 he joined the West Texas Conference, labored one year, and then took a supernumerary relation, which he retained to the close of his life, Nov. 13, 1870. Mr. Bridges was fervent in spirit, cultured in intellect, and faithful in labor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1870, p. 511.

Bridget, Saint. See BRIGIDA.

Bridget (Saint), THE XV OES OF, are fifteen prayers (oraciones, of which oes is the abbreviation), composed by St. Bridget (whose revelations were fervently credited in mediæval times), and used before the crucifix daily in St. Paul's Church at Rome. They were formerly very popular.

Bridget (Saint), ORDER OF. See BRIGITTINES.

Bridget (Saint), SISTERS OF, a religious order founded in 1806 by Dr. Delaney, bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, Ireland. Candidates take vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience. The costume is black, similar to that of the Presentation nuns and Sisters of Mercy. The first convent was established at Tullow, County Carlow, Ireland, and the second at Mount Rath, in 1808. One was established at Buffalo, N. Y., about 1853.

Bridgewater, Francis Henry Egerton, eighth Earl of, an English clergyman and author, was born Nov. 11, 1756, and educated at Eton and All-Souls' College, Oxford, where he graduated as master of arts in 1780. In the same year he became prebendary of Durham, and in the following year rector of Middle in Shropshire. In 1797 he was collated to the rectory of Whitechurch in the same county. He succeeded to his brother's titles in 1823, and died April 11, 1829. He resided entirely at Paris for many years previous to his death. He published several works, literary and historical (for which see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.); but the most enduring monument to his memory is his bequest for the publication of the Bridgewater Treatises (q. v.).

Bridgewater (Lat. Aquepotanus), John, an English Jesuit theologian, was educated at Hart Hall and Brazenose College, Oxford. He was chosen rector of Lincoln College in 1563, and archdeacon of Rochester in 1570. He subsequently espoused the cause of Romanism, resigned his preferments, and sought a home in the college for English Roman Catholics at Douay. He died in Germany about 1600. His writings include Concertatio Ecclesie Catholicae in Anglia (1583; enlarged ed. 1594):—Confutatio Virulentiae Disputationis Theologiae, etc. (1589). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bridgman, David, an English Baptist minister, was born in the vicinity of Bovey Tracey, Devonshire, March 13, 1795. He united with the Church at the age of sixteen; studied with Rev. James Viney of Bridgewater two years, and in 1825 was ordained pastor of the Church at Modbury, where he remained five years. In 1830 he removed to Horsington, Somersetshire, where his pastorate continued for nearly thirty years. His next and last settlement was at Ashley, Hampshire, where he died, July 4, 1868. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1869, p. 137. (J. C. S.)

Bridgman, Elijah Coleman, D.D., a pioneer missionary to China, was born in Massachusetts in 1801. He graduated at Amherst College in 1826, and at the Andover Theological Seminary in 1829. He was ordained Oct. 8, 1829, and sent out by the American Board the same year. He was welcomed by Rev. Dr. Morrison, and entered upon his work with ardent hopes for success. He labored first at Canton and Macao, and in 1847 went to Shanghai, where he died, Oct. 27, 1861. (W. P. S.)

Bridgman, James, an English Congregational minister, was born in London in 1783. He was converted in early life; became a student in Cheshunt College, where he remained as student and assistant tutor for five years. He was ordained at Spa Fields Chapel in 1809, and after preaching in various places in the "Connection," according to the practice of the "Society," he settled at Chester in 1814, where he remained for the rest of his life. He died Aug. 11, 1857. He was a man of faith and prayer, patient and calm in spirit, simple and faithful in declaring the truth to dying men. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1858, p. 192.

Bridgman, Thomas, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted in early life, and entered the itinerant work in 1811. He died April 21, 1832. He was pious, studious, deliberate in forming his plans, but tenacious in adhering to them. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1832.

Bridgman, William, a Presbyterian minister, was settled at Trenton, Ill., in 1866, and at Richview in 1867, as a member of Kaskaskia Presbytery; at Streator, from 1873 to 1875, as a member of Ottawa Presbytery. He died at Streator, May 27, 1875, aged seventy-three years. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois.

Bridgnell, James, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born in 1767. He commenced his ministry in 1792; became a supernumerary in 1825, and died suddenly, May 2, 1831. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1831.

Bridgnell, William, an English Wesleyan missionary, son of the preceding, was educated at Woodhouse Grove. He was converted in early life; accepted for the ministry in 1822; sent to Ceylon; labored at Kornegalle, Negombo, Matura, Galle, and Caltura, and after twenty-five years' service returned with broken health. After three years' rest he resumed the work in his native land, and continued it until 1857, when he retired to his daughter's house in Edinburgh. He died April 19, 1858, in his fifty-eighth year. Mr. Bridgnell was humble, yet possessed of real dignity; meek and patient under trials, yet firmly maintaining right and truth. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1858.

Bridoul, Toussaint, a French ascetic theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Lisle in 1595, and died at the same place July 28, 1672. His principal works are, La Boutique Sacrée des Saints et Vertueux Artisans (Lisle, 1650):—L'Ecole de l'Eucharistie, établie sur le Respect Miraculeux que les Bêtes, les Oiseaux et les Insectes ont rendu, en différentes Occasions, au très saint Sacrement de l'Autel (ibid. 1672; translated into English, Lond. 1688). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brie. See BRY.

Brief, is applied to a little ecclesiastical calendar, containing the order of saying the Holy Office, daily, throughout the year. It is also called Ordo. These briefs vary in different dioceses, and among different religious orders. Hence there is Le Bref de Paris, Le Bref des Benedictines, etc.

BRIEFS are also letters patent, formerly issued in England, giving license for public collections in churches.

Brieli, Jehuda Leon, an Italian Jewish rabbi, was born about 1643, and died as chief-rabbi at Mantua in 1722. The only printed work of his is the Hebrew grammar, נְסִיחַת הַדְּבָרִים (Mantua, 1730). He wrote besides, הַשְׁלִישִׁים הַשְּׂגוּרִים, a polemical work against the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles. In the Italian language he wrote a treatise on miracles, Breve Ragionamento Sopra i Miracoli, and a reply to Pinamonti's La Sinagoga Disingannata, all of which are still in MS. See Fürst, *Bibl. Brien, O'. See O'BRIEN.

Brierly, Benjamin, a Baptist minister, was born in York, England, Nov. 24, 1811. He came to America in 1821, and united with the Church in Cunningham, Mass., in 1831. He studied for four years at Newton and New Hampton. In 1835 he was ordained in Dover, N. H., and during the fourteen years thereafter he was pastor at Dover and Great Falls, N. H.; Springfield and Middlebury, Vt.; Manchester, N. H.; and Salem, Mass. In 1849 he went to California, and became pastor in Sacramento. Subsequently he was pastor at San Francisco for six years, at San José two years, and at Nevada City three years, where he died, July 21, 1863. An address, which, in 1847, he preached before the American Baptist Home Mission Society, had a wide circulation. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 133. (J. C. S.)

Brierly, Isaac, an English Congregational minister, was born at Rochdale, Oct. 29, 1812. From early boyhood he was remarkable for his studious habits. He was religiously trained, joined the Church June 2, 1832, and from that time was diligently employed in Sunday-school teaching. He soon became Sunday-school superintendent, then was induced to deliver short addresses, and finally to conduct cottage services. In 1839 he entered the academy at Pickering, with a view chiefly to home mission work. His ministerial services during his academical course were highly valued and extensively sought. In 1842 he was ordained at Mixenden, where he labored for twenty-two years, and then removed to Ayton, near Stokesley. He retired in 1872 to Leyburn, and there died, March 22, 1873. Mr. Brierly adorned his profession with a modest, consistent, and devoted life. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 312.

Briesmann, Johannes, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born Dec. 31, 1488, at Cottbus in Lusatia. In 1507 he went to Wittenberg and entered the monastery of the Minorites. In 1510 he read his first mass in the monastery. The disputation held in 1519 between Luther and Eck was the turning-point of his life. He now joined himself to Luther, whose teachings strengthened him more and more in the truth of the Gospel; and the eleven theses which he published in 1521, in order to become a doctor of theology, were his first confession, and show a very clear perception of the truth. From Wittenberg he went, in 1522, to Cottbus, and preached there the Gospel. In 1523 he was appointed preacher at Königsberg, and on Sept. 27 he delivered his first sermon, being the first of the series of reformers who evangelized Prussia. In 1527 he accepted a call to Riga, and brought about a new state of things in religious matters. In 1531 he returned to Königsberg and caused the foundation of a high-school, which since 1544 has been known as the Königsberg University. He died Oct. 1, 1549. See Ranke, Deutsche Geschichte (8d ed.), ii, 54 sq.; Kostlin, Luther, i, 658, 661, 680, 709; ii, 155; Erdmann, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. s. v. (B. P.)

Briet, Philippe, a learned French Jesuit, was born at Abbeville about 1600, and, in conjunction with Père Cossart, had the care of the Jesuits' library at Paris. He died Dec. 9, 1668. Among his works are, Parallelæ Geographiæ Veteris et Novæ (1648, 1649, 3 vols. 4to; the part relating to Asia and Africa was by some unaccountable accident lost before publication):—Annales Mundi, sive Chronicon Universale ab Orde Comito ad ann. Christi, 1663 (Paris, 1662, 1663, 7 vols. 12mo). He also assisted in the Concordantiæ Chronologica of Cossart (ibid. 1670, 5 vols. fol.). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brieuc, Saint. See BRIOCUS.

Briga, Saint. See BRIGHT.

Briga, Melchior della, an Italian mathematician of the Jesuit order, was born at Cesene in 1686. He was professor of philosophy at Florence, and of theology at Sienna, where he died, July 25, 1749. His principal works are, Fascia Isauca Statice Capitoline (Rome, 1716, in Acta Erudit. Lipsien. 1722). — Philosophie Veteris et Novæ Concordiæ (Florence, 1725). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Briggs, Alfred, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wilsden, York, Sept. 13, 1819, and joined the Church at Warley, near Halifax, Dec. 5, 1839. He became a student of Airedale College in September, 1842, and pastor of a small church at Rothbury, where he was ordained, Aug. 14, 1847. He died in January, 1848. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1848, p. 213.

Briggs, Charles (1), an English Baptist minister, was born in 1753. He was successively pastor of the General Baptist churches at Loughborough and at Spalding. He died at the former place Sept. 9, 1840. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1841, p. 32. (J. C. S.)

Briggs, Charles (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Whitwic, Leicestershire, Dec. 27, 1827. He had a godly training, and, being converted at the age of eighteen, put forth earnest efforts to prepare himself for the ministry. He had connected himself with the Primitive Methodists, and in 1848 was called to the regular ministry in the Maidenhead Circuit. Thence he removed to Witney, Oxfordshire, and thence to Southampton, where he joined the Congregationalists, preached for them four years at Coleford, Gloucestershire, three years at Leicester, a few years at Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, and at Chatteris, Cambridgeshire. In 1868 he accepted a call to Kingswood, and there labored up to the time of his death, Aug. 5, 1878. Mr. Briggs was a kind-hearted, genial, frank man; a sincere, devout, earnest Christian; and a faithful minister. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 302.

Briggs, Ebenezer, a Baptist minister, was born in Middleborough, Mass., in 1768, where he became pastor of the Fourth Baptist Church for many years, preaching also for several years in Raynham, likewise at what was known as "The Four Corners." He is spoken of as having been eminently a peacemaker, though never at the expense of truth. He died at his residence in Middleborough, Feb. 8, 1851. See Watchman and Reflector, Feb. 20, 1851. (J. C. S.)

Briggs, Isaac, a Congregational minister, was born at Halifax, Mass., May 7, 1775. He was the son of the Rev. Ephraim Briggs, pastor of the Congregational Church of that place, and the brother of four ministers. He graduated at Brown University in 1794, and was pastor of the churches in the following places: York, Me., from 1797 to 1805; Boxford, Mass., from 1805 to 1830; New Rochester, Mass., from 1835 to 1858. He died at East Morrisania, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1862. Mr. Briggs was a pious and faithful servant of his Master. See Cong. Quarterly, 1862, p. 388.

Briggs, James, a Congregational minister, was born at Newton, Mass., Jan. 18, 1746. He graduated at Yale in 1773; was ordained pastor of the Church in Cummington, in 1779, where he had been preaching for several years previous; and died Dec. 7, 1825. "When he was settled, the town voted to give him 200 acres of good land and £60 (estimated by rye at 3s. 4d. a bushel), for 'settlement,' and £50 salary, to be increased by £5 a year until it reached £60, estimated by rye, as above; by beef at 20d. a pound, and flax at 8d. a pound." See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 44; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 408.

Briggs, Joel, a Baptist minister, was born in Norton, Mass., April 15, 1757. He became a Christian early in life, and was baptized in March, 1770. He pursued his collegiate studies at Brown University for nearly three years, when he was obliged to leave college on account of a weakness in his eyes. In January, 1785, he accepted a unanimous invitation from the Baptist Church and Society in Randolph, to become their pastor, and was ordained Dec. 5, 1787. After a pastorate crowned by four or five revivals, he resigned in 1825, on account of growing infirmities. He continued to preach, as occasion offered, until his death, Jan. 18, 1828. He left a good record as a faithful servant of Christ, who loved the cause to the promotion of which he had consecrated his life. See Amer. Baptist Mag. viii, 285. (J. C. S.)

Briggs, Otis, a Baptist minister, was born about 1788, and graduated at Brown University in 1808. He commenced his ministry in Farmington, Me. In 1816 was ordained pastor of the Church in North Yarmouth, but soon after took charge of the township of land given by the state of Massachusetts to Waterville College. In 1818 he removed to Bangor, Me., and about two years afterwards became pastor of the Church in Hampden for eight years, and of the Second Baptist Church in the same place three years. For several years he was engaged in agencies for benevolent causes, and died Oct. 1, 1842, while he was in the employment of the Home Mission Society. See Millett, History of the Baptists of Maine, p. 437. (J. C. S.)

Briggs, T. C., a Baptist minister, was born in Vermont, March 19, 1813. When but two years of age he lost his father. His taste for books early developed itself, and he gave promise of his future usefulness. He became a Christian when he was seventeen years of age, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the next ten or twelve years he attended school, and taught and preached. Having gone through a course of study at the Delaware College, he went to Kentucky, where he was ordained by bishop Andrews. In 1850 he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Newton, where he remained two years, and afterwards at Lawrenceburg, Ind., for three years. His next pastorate, which was of four years' duration, was at Barrington Centre, Ill. From this place he removed to Orlando, Ind., where he remained ten years, and then to Chickasaw, Ia., where he remained until his death, preaching a part of the time at Fredericksburg, and a part of the time at Jacksonville. While the civil war was in progress, Mr. Briggs was outspoken in his anti-slavery sentiments, and lectured on the subject, and circulated a small work which he wrote, entitled, An Exposition of the Constitution of the United States. He died at Chickasaw, Jan. 24, 1880. See Chicago Standard, Feb. 12, 1880. (J. C. S.)

Brigh (Lat. Briga), Saint, is given in Irish martyrologies as the name of a saint of Coirpre, commemorated Jan. 7. She is thought by some to be the daughter of Feargna, a noble matron, who assisted St. Patrick on the banks of the Liffey (Evrinus, St. Patrick, iii, 19), by others the sister of St. Brendan of Clonfert. If daughter of Feargna, she was probably a Palladian Christian, and lived at Glashely, near Narraghmore. See O'Haylon, Irish Saints, i, 300 sq.

Brigham, Charles Henry, a Unitarian minister, was born in Boston, July 27, 1820. He graduated at Harvard; became pastor at Taunton, Mass., in 1844, and at Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1865; professor of ecclesiastical history at Meadville, Pa., in 1866; and died at Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 19, 1879. He wrote, Letters of Foreign Travel; — Life of S. Daggett, numerous pamphlets, sermons, and articles in reviews. See Memoir (Bost. 1881).

Brigham, John Clark, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New Marlborough, Mass., in 1793. He graduated at Williams College in 1819, studied theology at Andover (class of 1822), spent three years in South America in missionary exploration and Bible distribution, and on his return, in 1825, became connected with the American Bible Society, of which he was appointed a corresponding secretary in 1827, a post he filled with ability for thirty-five years. He was ordained Oct. 10, 1832, and died in Williamsburgh, N. Y., Aug. 10, 1862. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1862, p. 671.

Brigham, Willard, a Congregational minister, was born in Marlborough (now Hudson), Mass., May 4, 1813. He prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, graduated at Williams College in 1838, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1842. On May 24, 1843, he was ordained pastor of the new Church at Wardsborough, Vt., a pastorate which lasted twelve years. He next became the pastor of the Church at Ashville, Mass., for eight years. As acting-pastor, he served the Church in Wardell three years, and that at South Wellfleet two years. For two years he was also minister of the First Church, Winchendon, into whose service he entered in the spring of 1869. After this he relinquished all active labor, gradually wasting under an incurable disease. He died at Winchendon, March 1, 1874. As a preacher and pastor he was considered superior. See Cong. Quarterly, 1874, p. 470.

Brigham Young. See YOUNG, BRIGHAM.

Bright, Saint. See BRIGIDA.

Bright, George, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Virginia, in 1812. He removed to Georgia when a young man; devoted himself to teaching; received license to preach in 1840, and in 1841 entered the Georgia Conference, in which he occupied many important appointments, laboring without interruption, save one year, first in the Georgia, then in the Missouri, then in the Louisiana, and finally two years in the Florida Conference. He died at Key West, Fla., Sept. 20, 1874. Mr. Bright was an active and faithful minister and pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 40.

Bright, Thomas, a Baptist minister, was born in Walton, England, in 1808. He came to America, and took up his residence in Utica, N. Y., where he was baptized, and soon after became a minister. The churches he served were in New York state, and in Wisconsin, whither he removed in 1852. He suddenly died, Sept. 10, 1876, while preaching in Madison. He took a high rank among the ministers of his denomination in Wisconsin. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 134. (J. C. S.)

Bright, Timothy, M.D., an English clergyman, was appointed rector of Methley, in Yorkshire, in 1591, and died in 1616. He published, De Dyscrasia Corporis Humani (1583);—A Treatise of Melancholy (1586);—an Abridgment of the Book of Acts and Monuments (1589), and other works.

Brightman, Thomas, an English Puritan divine, was born at Nottingham, in 1557, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge. He became rector of Hawnes, in Bedfordshire, and died Aug. 24, 1607. His character was saintly, but his writings are highly fanciful; they were published collectively (Lond. 1644), and include, Apocalypsis Analyti et Scholiis, etc. (1609):—a work on Canticles, and a portion of the book of Daniel (1614):—and Predictions and Prophecies written forty-six years since, concerning the three Churches of Germany, England, and Scotland (1641). See Rose, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), ii, 575; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brigida (Bridget, Bright, or Bride) is the name of several Irish saints. Colgan (Tr. Thaum. p. 611-618) gives a list of fourteen Brigidas who are distinguished from each other, and another list of eleven who are not so distinct. As regards many of these little can be said; and even of those who are better known there is no little difficulty in keeping the lines of distinction clear.

1. The daughter of Aedh. On Sept. 30 the calendars give the name "Bright" without dedication; but Colgan identifies her with the daughter of Aedh, son of Eochaidus. She is probably the Brigida of Moimniolain—March 9—in Dalaradia, the district governed by the offspring of Coelbadinus.

2. Daughter of Darius, commemorated May 13 and 24. Colgan thinks that this Brigida is she who so carefully nursed her infirm husband and converted him. After his death she dedicated all her property to God and St. Mochteus, and the saint advised her to return to her father's house, build a cell, and there await the resurrection. Colgan also tries to identify her with Brigida of Hauchter-aird, and Brigida of Senboith or Stranbo in Wexford.

3. Daughter of Leinin, of Cill-inghen-Leinin, commemorated March 6. Among the saints descended from the family of St. Foillan, Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 104, c. 2) enumerates "Brigida V. filia Leinini," who is venerated March 6 in the Church of Kill-naninghean, district of Ui-Briuin. This "Church of the Sisters" is dedicated to her and other five daughters of Leinin.

4. Daughter of Neman and sister of St. Sedna or Sedonius (commemorated March 9), abbot of Killaine; sister also of Sts. Gorba, Lassara, etc.—all descended from Erc, son of Eochaidh.

5. Fifth virgin abbess of Kildare, the "Mary of the Irish" (commemorated Feb. 1), was of the race of Eochaidh Finnfuathairt, son of Feidhlimidh Reachtmhar, and thus connected with St. Columba. Her father was Dubtach of Leinster, and her mother a slave or captive, Broiceseach. Brigida was born at Fochart, near Dundalk, about 450. In order to avoid marriage she received, about 467, the pallium album et vestem candidam, dedicating her to virginity. Her chief residence was the monastery of Kildare, which she founded; but affiliated houses of both men and women (de utroque sexu) were raised all over the country, she being abbess over all other abbesses, and the bishop with her at Kildare being similarly above all bishops in her other monasteries. She is connected with bishop Mel, disciple of St. Patrick; and her lector and preacher was bishop Nadfraoich. Thirty years after the death of St. Patrick, whose winding-sheet she prepared, and at the age of about seventy-four, St. Brigida died. Montalembert (Monks of the West) gives an account of St. Brigida and her monasteries, and places her birth at A.D. 467, and her death A.D. 525. He says that "there are still eighteen parishes in Ireland which bear the name of Kilbride or the Church of Bridget." The Irish annals vary as to the time of her death, but the most probable is A.D. 525. Cogitus (Colgan, Tr. Thaum. p. 523, 524) says that when she died her body and that of bishop Conlaeth were placed on either side of the decorated altar of the church at Kildare. Others say that her body was afterwards translated to Down and deposited in one grave with St. Patrick and St. Columba. This, however, is controverted as an invention of the 12th century. In the Scotch account, she was buried or her relics were kept at Abernethy, but it is more probably another St. Brigida (see 6). St. Brigida was a very frequent object of invocation; and churches dedicated to St. Bridget, St. Bright, and St. Bride, in all parts of the British Isles, attest the belief in the efficacy of her intercession. In Ireland they are almost numberless, and many are forgotten. In Scotland, also, the cultus of this saint was very extensive, her dedications being found chiefly in those parts nearest to Ireland and most under Irish influence. For a full and critical account of her life, see Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. Ireland, i, 68, 355, and ch. viii, ix; Todd, Book of Hymns, i, 65 sq.; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, ii, 1 sq.; Baring-Gould, Lives of the Saints, ii, 14 sq.

6. Virgin, commemorated March 14. It is probable there was a Scotch saint of this name, whose relics were kept at Abernethy. A Brigida is said, in the Irish Life of St. Cuthbert, to have been brought from Ireland, and educated by St. Columba, the first bishop of Dunkeld, along with St. Cuthbert, at Dunkeld. See Usher, De Brit. Eccl. Prim. (Dublin, 1639) p. 703, 704, who also cites the dedication of Abernethy to God and to St. Brigida by king Nectan.

Brignon, JEAN, an ascetic theologian of France, of the Jesuit order, who died in 1725, wrote, among other works, Instructions Spirituelles et Pensées Consolantes pour les Âmes Affligées ou Scrupuleuses (Paris, 1706, 1711):—a translation of L'imitation de Jésus-Christ (ibid. 1694, many times republished):—Le Combat Spirituel, translated from the Italian (ibid. 1688):—Le Guide Spirituel, translated from the Spanish of P. Dupont (ibid. 1689):—a translation of the Opusculs of Bellarmin (ibid. 1701):—a translation of the Traité des Sept Paroles de Jésus-Christ sur la Croix, from the same (ibid. 1700). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Briguet, SEBASTIAN, a Swiss historian, was canon of Sion in Valais, and sought diligently for the antiquities of his native country. He died in 1780. He left some works, among which we notice Vallésia Christiano seu Diœcesis Sedunensis Historia Sacra, Vallenium Episcoporum Serie Observato, Addito in Fine Eorundum Syllabo (Sion, 1744):—Oraison Funèbre de Louis XIV (Paris, 1726, 1734). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brihat-Katha (the great story), a collection of the popular legends of India.

Bril, PAUL, an eminent Flemish painter, the brother of Matthew, was born at Antwerp in 1556, and studied under Daniel Wortelmans, an obscure artist. He was engaged, on the accession of Sixtus V, to execute some considerable works in Santa Maria Maggiore, in the Sistine chapel, and in the Scala Santa, at St. John of Lateran. He died in Rome in 1626. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brill, JACOB, a Dutch mystic, was born Jan. 21, 1639, and died at Leyden, Jan. 28, 1700. He was deposed from his office as preacher of Phillipsburg in 1683 for attaching himself to the doctrines of Pontian van Hattem. He wrote about forty treatises, which were published in 1705 at Amsterdam, and in a German translation at Leipsic in 1706. His teaching is unbiblical, and represents an unchristian mystical pantheism. Thus, according to Brill, the true sacrifice of Christ was not on the cross, but must take place in every Christian. Poirer, in the Bibliotheca Mysticorum Selecta, 1708, speaks very highly of Brill. His writings are given in Unschuldige Nachrichten, 1712, p. 876-882. See Göbel, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Brillhart, JACOB, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in York County, Pa., Sept. 16, 1808. He was converted in 1834; removed to Richmond, Va., in 1839, where he was licensed to preach; and in 1848 entered the Kentucky Conference. On the organization of the Western Virginia Conference in 1850 he became a member of it; and in 1865 was transferred to the Holston Conference. In 1870 a stroke of paralysis rendered it necessary for him to become a superannuate, which relation he sustained to the close of his life, April 10, 1874. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 16.

Brim, WILLIAM W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Henrietta, N. Y., May 18, 1827. He went to reside with friends on a farm, near Cazenovia, at the age of thirteen; was apprenticed to a turner at eighteen; experienced religion at nineteen; studied at Wyoming Seminary one year, a short time at Cazenovia, and graduated at Dickinson College in 1857. Soon afterwards he became principal of Rainsburgh Seminary, and in 1859 entered the East Baltimore Conference. In 1862 he became superannuated, and travelled for his health. In 1863 he became principal of Jonesville Seminary, and in 1864 retired to Lockport, N. Y., where he resided until his death, Oct. 7, 1874. Mr. Brim was a genial Christian gentleman, and led a gentle, devoted life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 32.

Brimner, in Norse mythology, is the hall in Gimle or Okolni, where the best drink is to be found for departed souls.

Brinckmann, PHILIP JEROME, a German painter and engraver, was born at Spire in 1709, and studied under J. G. Dathan. The following is a list of some of his works: David with the Head of Goliath; The Resurrection of Lazarus; Christ and the Samaritan Woman; Mary Magdalene at the Feet of Our Saviour. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Brindley, RICHARD, an English Congregational minister, was born at Worcester in 1825. He was converted and received into Christian fellowship at the age of fourteen, obtained his education at Highbury College, and was pastor first at King's Lynn. Severe weather at this place caused his removal to Argyll Chapel, Bath, where he labored successfully during ten years, and then accepted an invitation to the pastorate of the Church at Markham Square, Chelsea. Here he died, Oct. 19, 1865. Mr. Brindley, during his life, published several Sermons and Tracts, which had considerable circulation. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 237.

Brine, JOHN, an English Baptist minister, was born at Kettering in 1703. Although placed when quite young in a factory, he devoted his spare hours to reading and study. He became a Christian, and joined the Baptist Church at Kettering, which subsequently gave him a license to preach, and he was, after a time, called to the pastoral charge of the Church at Coventry. After a few years he was called to London, to become the pastor of the Baptist Church worshipping in Currier's Hall, Cripplegate. As a minister in the metropolis he took a prominent stand in all matters pertaining to the prosperity of his denomination during his thirty-five years' residence in London. After a life of great usefulness he died, Feb. 24, 1765. The publications of Mr. Brine were very numerous, consisting largely of Sermons, with a few treatises, the design of which was to vindicate his peculiar tenets. He belongs to the school of divines represented by Gill, and may be termed a High Calvinist. See Wilson, Hist. of Dissenting Churches, ii, 574-580. (J. C. S.)

Brinkerhoff, ABRAHAM D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Fishkill, N. Y., June 5, 1795. He was educated at Columbia College and the Auburn Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Champlain Presbytery of New York in 1832, and became pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Chazy in September, 1833; subsequently at Plattsburgh, Keeseville, and Champlain (till 1850), and in 1852 again at Chazy until 1858. He afterwards resided without charge at Champlain, where he died, March 2, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 157.

Brinkerhoff, GEORGE G., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Closter, Bergen Co., N. J., in 1761. He studied under Meyer, Romeyn, and Froeligh, and was licensed by the Synod of Dutch Reformed churches in 1788. In 1789 he was missionary "to the North," and to Conewago, Pa., from 1789 to 1793. While he was there, and about the time of his departure, his congregation was broken up by the almost total emigration of his people farther west. He was pastor at Wakeat and Ramapo from 1793 to 1806, and at Sempronius, near Owasco, Cayuga Co., N. Y., from 1808 to 1813. He was also missionary to "Genesee Country" in 1796. He died in great peace and triumph in 1813. He was a godly man and a faithful minister, mild and gentle, and yet firm and resolute. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 195.

Brinkle, SAMUEL CRAWFORD, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Dover, Del., Jan. 26, 1796. He graduated at Princeton College, N. J., in 1815; was ordained deacon in 1818 and priest in 1820; officiated at St. David's Parish, Radnor, Pa., for fourteen years; in Grace Church, Philadelphia, two years; and was assistant minister to the United Swedish churches fourteen years. In May, 1848, he took charge of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, near Wilmington, Del., where he remained until his death, March 12, 1863. He was a delegate from Delaware to the General Convention of 1862. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. July, 1863, p. 321.

Brinkley, JOHN, an English prelate and astronomer, was born in 1763. He graduated from Caius College, Cambridge, in 1788. In 1826 he was appointed bishop of Cloyne, in Ireland, having been previously for many years professor of astronomy in Trinity College, Dublin. His death occurred Sept. 14, 1835. Dr. Brinkley was eminent for his knowledge of mathematical science and astronomy. He published Elements of Plane Astronomy (1822, 8vo; the 6th edition was edited, with notes, by the Rev. Dr. Luby). See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, Oct. 1835, p. 640; Rose, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Brinsley, JOHN, an English Nonconformist divine, nephew of bishop Hall, was born at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, in 1600, and educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge. He preached first at Oreston, near Chelmsford, then at Smerleyton, in Suffolk, and lastly was called to Yarmouth, but, on account of his principles, was not permitted to preach except on week-days at a small village, until the people of Yarmouth applied to the king for his license. At the Restoration, however, he was ejected for nonconformity. He died Jan. 22, 1665. He published several theological and educational works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brinsmade, DANIEL, a Congregational minister, graduated from Yale College in 1745, was ordained pastor of the Church at Washington, Conn., in 1749, and died in 1793. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 631.

Brinsmade, Horatio Nelson, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Hartford, Conn., Dec. 28, 1798. He prepared for college at Phillips Academy, Andover, and graduated at Yale College in 1822. Immediately thereafter he entered Princeton Seminary, where he remained one year, and afterwards studied theology under Dr. Hawes. He taught in the Deaf and Dumb Asylum at Hartford from 1823 to 1831. He was licensed by the North Congregational Association of Hartford, June 1, 1828. He supplied the North Congregational Church at Hartford, the Church at Collinsville also (1831); became pastor at Pittsfield, Mass. (1835-41); and from there he went to the Third Presbyterian Church of Newark, N. J. (until 1853); was pastor subsequently of a Congregational Church at Beloit, Wis., and closed seven years of highly successful labor, Jan. 1, 1861. During nearly the whole time of his pastorate there he gave gratuitous instruction in Beloit College. From there he returned to Newark in 1864, and commenced labors with a mission of the Third Presbyterian Church, and as a result the Wycliffe Presbyterian Church was formed in 1865, of which he was pastor from 1867 to 1872. He died in Newark, Jan. 18, 1879. See Necrolog. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 19.

Brinsmead, WILLIAM, a Congregational minister, was a native of Dorchester, Mass. He entered Harvard College in 1646, but left in 1647, without taking his degree. He first preached at Plymouth, but he was laboring at Marlborough as early as 1660, though he was not installed there until Oct. 3, 1666. As he was preaching on March 20, 1676, the assembly was surprised by the approach of Indians. All reached the fort safely except one man, who was wounded. The meeting-house and many dwellings were burned. Brinsmead died July 3, 1701. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 256.

Briocus, Saint, as is not uncommon with the early Celtic saints who led a wandering life, is claimed by several of the Celtic tribes. According to Acta Sanctorum, May 1, Briocus was born of idolatrous parents in Corriticia, and educated from the age of ten years by Germanus, bishop of Paris. He settled in Brittany, where he died at the age of ninety. His monastery at St. Briec was made the centre of a bishopric about 844, but his body was soon after translated to the monastery of Sts. Sergius and Bacchus, near Angers, the monks flying before the Danes. His bell was still existing in 1210. The parish of St. Breock, in Cornwall, is on the river Camel, and the parish fair is held May 1, the day of the saint's translation, but his feast day at St. Poi de Léon was April 28 (or 29). He is known in Scotland as Brayoch, Broc, Brock, and Bryak, and had dedications at Montrose, Rothesay, and Dunrod, in Kirkcudbrightshire, but does not appear in Scotch calendars. See Forbes, Kal. Scott. Saints, p. 291; Orig. Par. Scot. ii, 223).

Brion, a French ascetic theologian, lived at the commencement of the 18th century. Some of his principal works are, Paraphrases sur divers Psalmes Mystérieux (Paris, 1718);—Vie de la Sœur Marie de Sainte Thérèse, Carmélite de Bordeaux (ibid. 1720);—Considérations sur les plus Importantes Vérités du Christianisme (ibid. 1724);—Traité de la Vraie et Fausse Spiritualité (ibid. 1728);—Vie de Madame Guyon (Cologne, 1720). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brionne, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Brioniense), was held in 1050. (The place is the ancient Brionia, in France, fifteen miles N.E. of Bernay.) This was rather a conference than a council, in it Béranger was silenced, and made to profess the Catholic faith. See Labbe, Concil. ix, 1054.

Briosco, ANDREA (called il Riccio), an Italian architect, was born at Padua, and flourished about 1500. His chief work was the grand Church of Santa Giustina. This work gained him a reputation. He was also a sculptor of some eminence, as there are some of his works in San Antonio, at Padua. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Briot, SIMON, a French historian of the Benedictine order, died in 1701. He left in MS. Histoire de l'Abbaye de Moleme. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brisacier, Jacques Charles de, a French theologian, was born about 1646. He was for seventy years overseer of the seminary of foreign missions. He died in 1736. His chief works are, Oraison Funèbre de la Duchesse d'Aiguillon (Paris, 1675);—Oraison Funèbre de Mademoiselle de Bonillon (Rouen, 1683). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brisacier, Jean de, a French theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Blois in 1603. He taught classics and philosophy in several colleges, and afterwards devoted himself to preaching. His zeal against Port Royal gained for him a great deal of credit in his society. He was successively rector of several places, provincial in Portugal, rector of the college of Clermont at Paris, and finally died at Blois in 1668. Among his writings we notice, Le Jansénisme Confondu (Paris, 1651). This work was censured by the archbishop of Paris, M. de Gondy, and strongly combated by Arnauld. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brisbane, William H. (I), D.D., a Baptist minister, was born near Charleston, S. C., in 1803. "His ancestors were of aristocratic English and Irish families, and he was the heir of large wealth." Bishop England of the Romish Church, and Rev. W. T. Brauntly were his early instructors, and he was a graduate of the military school at Middletown, Conn., in 1822. Shortly after leaving this place he became a Christian, and immediately decided to study for the ministry. His social standing and ability as a preacher at once brought him into repute, and he was a welcome visitor in the best circles of society. Much of his time was spent in Washington and the principal cities of the country, where he was brought into friendly relations with some of the ablest statesmen in the land. He took an active part in the anti-slavery cause, and early in the history of that movement emancipated his own slaves, and provided homes for them in Ohio. He became a resident of Cincinnati, where he devoted himself most zealously to the work of the ministry. The last twenty-five years of his life were spent in Wisconsin, where, in Madison and other places, he preached with great power and success. His death occurred at Arena, Wis., April 5, 1878. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 135. (J. C. S.)

Brisbane, William H. (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New York city, Aug. 5, 1824. He was thrown upon his own resources at the age of ten; became a messenger boy in the employ of a lawyer, where he formed a fondness for books; found his way to Philadelphia while yet young, apprenticed himself to a chair-maker, sought religious associations, attached himself to a Sabbath-school, and in 1843 gave his heart to God. Three years later he received license to preach, and in 1848 entered the Philadelphia Conference, where in he served faithfully until his death, April 29, 1862. Mr. Brisbane combined devoted piety, studious habits, and industry, thus starting favorably in his ministry, and continuing to increase in ability and acceptableness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 44.

Briscoe, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan preacher, commenced his ministry in 1751, and continued in the harness for about thirty years. Damp beds and poor accommodations in Ireland induced the disorder from which he died in the city of Chester, where he was superintending, in 1797. He was a well-read man, a good preacher, but with little physical energy. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Brisson was a eunuch of the empress Eudoxia, an orthodox Christian, and a faithful friend of Chrysostom. He took the lead in the processions set on foot to overpower the services of the Arians, and in an assault made by them received a serious wound in the head from a stone. When, on Chrysostom's first deposition, Eudoxia's fears had been aroused by the earthquake, Brisson was one of the messengers sent to discover the archbishop's place of retreat. He found him and brought him back. On his arrival at Cucusus, Chrysostom wrote to Brisson, giving an account of his journey and its miseries.

Bristed, JOHN, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born in Dorset, England, in 1779. He studied medicine and practiced it before he came to America. In 1806 he arrived in New York, began the study of law, and was admitted to practice in the courts of that state. He married the daughter of the late John Jacob Astor of New York city, in 1820, and continued in the legal profession until 1824, when he removed to Bristol, R. I., and began the study of divinity under bishop Griswold, and was admitted to orders. Subsequently he went to Vermont and completed his studies under bishop Smith. For some time he was in charge of a Church at Vincennes, and in 1828 returned to Bristol as an assistant to bishop Griswold. In the following year he was rector of St. Michael's Church in that town, which position he held until April, 1843, when he resigned it on account of failing health. He died at Bristol, Feb. 23, 1855. See Amer. Quar. Church Review, 1855, p. 161.

Bristol, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Bristolense), was held under the pope's legate, on St. Martin's day, in 1216, upon matters relating to discipline. Eleven bishops of England and Wales were present, with others of the inferior clergy, and of the nobility who continued faithful to Henry III. The barons who opposed that monarch were excommunicated. See Wilkins, Concil. i, 546.

Bristow, James H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Clark County, Ky., July 26, 1813. He received a liberal education, and on reaching manhood made choice of the law as a profession; but being converted in 1832 he joined the Presbyterians, and soon after was licensed to preach in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He thus continued to labor, first in Kentucky, and afterwards in Ohio. Eventually he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in 1844 was admitted into the Kentucky Conference. At the unfortunate division of the Church, Mr. Bristow, for peace' sake, though an avowed enemy to slavery, took work in the Church South, in which he filled many of its best appointments, and gained merited distinction in his able defence of some Methodist doctrines which are in direct opposition to popular belief in the region where he was born and reared. In 1852 he was sent as a missionary to California; two years later he returned and united with the Louisville Conference of the Church South. At the beginning of the war Mr. Bristow was intensely southern in feeling and education, as well as association; but he was equally patriotic, and declared, "I am determined to stand by the old flag," which assertion made the Confederates his deadly enemies, and obliged him to flee for refuge to the Louisville Legion, of which he was immediately chosen chaplain, and with it thus remained till near the end of the war. On closing his military career he found no affiliation in his heart for the sentiments of the Church South, and returned to the bosom of his mother Church, procured an upper room in Louisville, Ky., and soon formed a religious society, to whom he preached, and with which he labored until it became a strong Church. His last charge was in the city of Paducah, as presiding elder of that district. That was, indeed, pioneer work. He had no supporters, few friends, and many opposers; but he rose superior to every discouragement and obstacle, secured a room in which to hold meetings, organized a Sabbath-school, travelled thousands of miles soliciting money for the erection of a house of worship, was eminently successful, and at his death left there a fine brick edifice worth three thousand dollars, a Church of one hundred and four members and probationers, and a fine Sunday-school, equipped with a library of one hundred volumes. Mr. Bristow was struck with paralysis April 10, 1869, and on the first of the following March he died. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 24.

Bristow, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at Great Marlow, Jan. 27, 1787. He joined the Church at Wooburn in his nineteenth year, and was sent, in 1809, to the Gosport Academy, but at the close of the first year removed to the college at Hoxton. In September, 1814, he was ordained over the Church at Wilton, and continued to exercise his ministry here for ten years. He became pastor of the Church in Castle street, Exeter, in 1824, but in 1847 he resigned his pastoral charge, as he found his health was failing greatly. He preached occasionally, as his health admitted, but his sufferings and life ended Aug. 30, 1852. As a minister and a Christian, he was much revered and honored. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1853, p. 207.

Bristow (or Bristolius), Richard, an Englishman in Roman orders, was born at Worcester in 1533. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, lived first at Louvain, and then at the English College at Douay—at a time when it was not safe for one of his sect to remain in England. He was the first of that college to be made a priest, being the right hand of cardinal Allen, who, departing to Rheims, left Bristow prefect of Douay College. He was afterwards sent for to Rheims, where he wrote his book, Contra Futilem Fulgur. He returned to his native land for his health, and died in London in 1582. He also collected, and for the most part wrote, Annotations on the English Translation of the New Testament, at Rheims, and some minor works. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Britain, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Britannicum), is a name (1) for Councils of the Welsh Church. See AUGUSTINE'S OAK; CAERLEONENSE; LLANDEWIBREFFI; LUCUS VICTORIAE; VERULAMIUM.

(2) Breton Councils. See BRETAGNE, COUNCIL OF.

The councils called "Britannica" are either those above named (mostly misdated and incorrectly described), or are pure fables; Cave has chosen to add to them the Northumbrian Synod of Onestrefield of A.D. 702, which see under its proper title.

Brithwaldus (or Britwold), a monk of Glastonbury, and afterwards abbot of Reculver (? Regulbiensis), was elected to the see of Canterbury, July 1, 692. He drove into banishment Wilfred of York; but at length, frightened by the papal menaces, restored him to his see. He held the metropolitan see thirty-eight years and six months, and died in 780. He wrote, the Life of St. Edwinus, Bishop of Worcester:—De Origine Eveshamensis Cænobii, etc. See Godwin de Præs, p. 43; Landon, Ecclesiastical Dictionary, s. v.

British Church. See ENGLAND, CHURCH OF.

Britius, Saint, bishop of Tours, was licentious in early life, but was converted by St. Martin, and became his successor. He died Nov. 13, 444.

Britius, FRANCIS, a French missionary and Orientalist, a native of Rennes, lived in the latter half of the 17th century. He at first preached the Gospel in the East, but was finally recalled to Rome by his superiors, who employed him to translate into Arabic an abridgment of the Annals of Baronius, continued by Sponde down to the year 1646 (Rome, 1658, 1655, 1671). He also assisted in an Arabic version of the Bible, published by Nazari (Rome, 1671), with the text of the Vulgate opposite. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brittain, JOSEPH, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Wednesbury, Staffordshire, in 1784. He joined the Methodist Church in early life, and the itinerancy in 1806. He died in the work, Nov. 28, 1821. "He was of a meek and quiet spirit." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1822.

Brittinians, a congregation of Augustinian monks, so called from their having been first established at Brittini, near Ancona, in Italy, in the former part of the 13th century. They were very austere, ate no animal food, and observed long fasts. They were recognized by Gregory IX, and joined the general congregation of Augustinian monks (q. v.) in 1256.

Britton, MAURICE, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Kingswood, Nov. 3, 1802. He was converted when sixteen, received an appointment from the Conference in 1830, and died at Hereford, Feb. 22, 1869. He was a godly man, attentive to the poor and the afflicted, and a soul saver. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1869, p. 19.

Britton, THOMAS, a Presbyterian minister, came to America from England in 1850, joined the Brooklyn Presbytery, and was stationed in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y. He died in the autumn of 1858. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 120.

Brivio, GIUSEPPE, an Italian poet, was born at Milan in 1370, became canon of the cathedral of that place, and died at Rome in 1450. He composed a great many Latin poems, only fragments of which have been published, among which is a letter to Niccolo Nicoli. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brixen (or Bresse), COUNCIL OF (Concilium Brixense), was held in 1080, by the emperor, Henry IV. (The Italian name is Bressanone; it lies in the Tyrol, south of the Alps, and is the seat of a bishopric.) Cardinal Hugo the White and thirty bishops were present. They maintained the rights of the emperor against pope Gregory VII, who had excommunicated him; they proceeded so far as to depose Gregory, and to elect Guibert of Ravenna in his place, who took the name of Clement III. See Labbe, Concil. x, 389.

Brizio (or Brizzi), Filippo, an Italian painter, the son of Francesco, was born at Bologna in 1603. He studied under Guido, and executed a picture in the Church of San Giuliano, at Bologna, representing St. Julian Crowned by Angels; also an altar-piece in San Silvestro, representing the Virgin, with Saints. He died in 1675. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brizio (or Briccio), Francesco, a distinguished Italian painter and engraver, was born at Bologna in 1574. He studied art in the academy of Caracci, and died in 1623. The following are some of his principal works: The Return out of Egypt; The Holy Family; St. Francis kneeling holding the Infant Jesus, and the Virgin Mary in the Clouds; The Great St. Jerome; Christ and the Samaritan Woman. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brizo, in Greek mythology, was a local deity of the island of Delos, the protectress of sailors. Only fruits and animals of the earth were offered to her as sacrifices. Her oracles were uttered in dreams.

Broach (or Broche), an old English term for a spit, and applied to a spire; still in use in some parts of the country, as in Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, etc., where it is used to denote a spire springing from the tower without any intermediate parapet. See SPIRE. The term "to broche" seems to be also used in old building accounts, perhaps for cutting the stones in the form of vousoirs.

Broad, JOHN, an English Baptist minister, was born in London, Jan. 22, 1809. He was convinced of sin in 1833, at the Wesleyan chapel in Hinde Street, Manchester Square, London, and soon afterwards found peace in Christ. He immediately gave himself to evangelical work among the neglected classes of the great metropolis. After a time he became pastor of a Church in Kensington, giving up a business which was yielding him a large profit. Here he remained nine years, and then became pastor of a Church in Hitchin, Herts, for sixteen years. In 1858 he visited Melbourne, Australia, for his health. On his return he preached at Hastings, Oct. 3, 1858, and on the Saturday morning following he was found dead in his bed. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1859, p. 45. (J. C. S.)

Broad (or Broadæus), Thomas, an English clergyman, was born in Gloucestershire in 1577, and educated at St. Mary's Hall and Alban Hall, Oxford. In 1611, on the death of his father, he became rector of Rendcome, Gloucestershire, where he continued until his death in June, 1635. He wrote Touchstone for a Christian (1613):—The Christian's Warfare (eod.):—Three Questions on the Lord's Day (1621):—and Tractatus de Sabbato, etc. (1627). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Horsley Church, Derbyshire.

Broadbent, John, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born near Leeds, Yorkshire, in 1751. He was converted young, and entered the ministry in 1772. He was lively and fervent in preaching, and having naturally a weak constitution, he frequently so exhausted himself as to be ready to drop down when the sermon was concluded. A short time before his death he settled in Frome, Somersetshire. He died Nov. 10, 1794, aged forty-three years. "Those who knew him best, knew but in part the goodness and greatness of his heart." He prayed with Wesley in his (Wesley's) last moments, and signed the circular announcing his death. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Methodism, i, 580; ii, 200.

Broadbent, Joseph, son of Rev. Samuel Broadbent, was sent by the British Wesleyan Conference to Calcutta in 1867, and at the end of that year was removed to Lucknow, where his kindness of spirit and uniform attention to duties won the confidence and love of all. He died Aug. 20, 1872, in the thirty-third year of his age. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1873, p. 46.

Broadbent, Samuel, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Braistow, near Sowerby Bridge, Yorkshire, Oct. 27, 1794. He was converted in early life, was received into the ministry in 1815, and was sent at once to Ceylon, where he labored at Galle, Trincomalee, and Point Pedro until 1820, when he was deputed to commence missionary operations in Madagascar. At the instance of the Missionary Committee, however, this enterprise was abandoned, and he and F. L. Hodgson were sent to commence operations among the Bechuanas of South Africa. After six years' toil his health failed and he returned to England, where he received regular Conference appointments until 1863, when he retired from the toils of the itinerancy and settled at Lytham. He died June 3, 1867. Mr. Broadbent labored with undeviating regularity and faithfulness. He saw several of his sons enter the same sacred work. He wrote, The Missionary Martyr of Namagaland: Memorials of Rev. William Threlfall (2d ed. Lond. 1860, 18mo):—Sermon on the Sabbath Day:—Anti-Scriptural Marriages the Ruin of Souls and the Curse of the Church:—A Narrative of a Mission to the Baralongas (Lond. 1865, 12mo):—The Pious and Princely Shoemaker: An Account of Mr. Joseph Watkin (1852, 18mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 27; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, Oct. 1870, art. i; Osborn, Meth. Bibliog. s. v.

Broadbent, William F., D.D., a distinguished Southern Baptist minister, was born in Culpepper County, Va., April 30, 1801. He was ordained in April, 1824, and became pastor of the Church in Middleburg, Loudon Co. Besides serving, during a period of sixteen years, several churches from which he received little or no compensation, he had under his charge a large and prosperous school for young ladies. He removed to Lexington, Ky., in 1840, where he repeated his experiment of preaching and teaching, remaining about ten years. For two or three years from 1851 he acted as a financial agent to raise an endowment for Columbian College; and in 1855 became pastor of the Church in Fredericksburg, Va., where he also conducted a young ladies' school. In 1859 he was the financial agent, successfully prosecuting his work, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. A second time he entered upon his ministerial work in Fredericksburg, and remained at his post until the United States troops took possession of the city in 1863. For a time he was in prison at Washington, and on his release removed to Charlottesville, in which place he remained until 1868, when he returned to Fredericksburg, where he was engaged for several years in the benevolent work of securing an education for the children of deceased and disabled Confederate soldiers. So long as his strength permitted he continued to preach. He died in Fredericksburg, Sept. 8, 1876. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 137. (J. C. S.)

Brobst, Samuel K., a Lutheran minister, was born Nov. 16, 1822. He went to Washington, Pa., in 1837, to learn a trade, which he soon after abandoned to devote himself to study. In the fall of 1841 he attended the Allentown Academy, and taught school during the winter. Subsequently he was a student in Marshall College, Lancaster, and in Washington College, in western Pennsylvania. In Washington he preached in German, and taught that language, and was also an agent of the American Sunday-school Union to labor among the Germans. He was offered a German editorship by the Sunday-school Union, which he declined. On June 4, 1847, he was licensed in Philadelphia as a minister; but it was only during the last nine years of his life that he served as a pastor. For thirty years he was engaged principally as editor of German periodicals. His first venture was a Sunday-school paper, the Jugendfreund, which attained a wide circulation. In 1859 he founded the Lutherische Zeitschrift, which became a weekly quarto. In 1868 he began the publication of a monthly theological journal, called Theologische Monatshefte, which after six years was suspended for want of adequate support. Mr. Brobst was likewise the publisher of the Lutherischer Kalender. A Pennsylvania German by birth, he took a prominent part in the organization of the German Press Association of Pennsylvania, of which he was president from the beginning until his death, a period of fifteen years. He was also active in the founding and success of Muhlenberg College. Especially was he distinguished as a Sabbath-school worker and organizer. In furtherance of his publishing interests he established a printing-office and bookstore. In the discussion of the ecclesiastical matters that disturbed the Lutheran Church he took a prominent part, and became a zealous advocate of union. He died Dec. 23, 1876. See Fifty Years in the Lutheran Ministry, 1878, p. 226.

Brocard (Burchard, or rather Burckhardt), an early German traveller, was born in Westphalia or Strasburg, in the latter half of the 13th century. He entered the Dominican order, and was sent by his superiors in 1232 into the Levant, Armenia, and Egypt, passing ten years in the monasteries of Palestine and Mt. Sinai. On his return late in life (cir. 1283) he wrote an account of those parts, which contains notices of many places now utterly in ruins. It was first published under the title Prologus Terræ Sanctæ, by Luke Brandis in his Rudimentum Norvicorum (Lübeck, 1475, p. 164-188), and often later, usually as Descriptio Terræ Sanctæ; especially in Ugolino's Thesaurus, vol. vi, and at the end of Le Clerc's ed. of Eusebius's Onomasticon (see Tobler, Bibliogr. Geog. Palæst. p. 27). It was a favorite work in mediæval times, and was variously transcribed. Canisius has given, in the fourth volume of his Lectiones Antiquæ, an account of the Holy Land, founded upon that of Brocard. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brocchi, Giuseppe Maria, an Italian theologian, was born at Florence in 1687. He was prior of St. Maria-aux-Ormes, near the town of San Lorenzo, also rector of the Ecclesiastical Seminary, prothonotary apostolic, and a member of the Società Colombaria. He died June 8, 1751. He is the author of the lives of the Florentine saints, entitled Vite de' Santi e Beati Fiorentini (pt. ii, Florence, 1761, 4to). He also wrote the Life of Michele Flammini, abbot-general of the Vallombrosi (ibid. eod. 4to). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Brochard, Bonaventure, a French traveller, lived in the former half of the 16th century. He was a friar of the convent of Bernay, in Normandy, and accompanied Greffin Arlagart of Couteilles on a tour, which he himself describes in a work entitled Iherusalem et au Mont Sinaï, the MS. of which is in the National Library of Paris, No. 10,265. By some he has been confounded with Brocard (q. v.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brochard, Michel, a French scholar, was priest and professor in the college of Mazarin. He died in 1729. We are indebted to him for the Bibliotheca Fayana (published by Martin, Paris, 1725, with a catalogue of authors):—some editions of l'Imitation de Jésus-Christ:—of Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius (ibid. 1723):—of Horace (1728). He also aided in correcting the text of the work of Pogge, De Varietate Fortunæ (Paris, 1723). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Broche. (1) A spire. (2) The morse of a cope. (3) A leaden ornament, with the head of Becket, worn by pilgrims to Canterbury. See BROACH.

Brochmand, JESPER RASMUSSEN, doctor of theology and bishop of Zealand, was born Aug. 5, 1585, at Kjöge, in Zealand. He studied at Leyden, where Grotius and Salmasius were among his fellow-students. In 1606 he went to Franeker, where, although a foreigner, he was permitted to lecture on philosophy. His lectures are for the greater part printed in his Disputationes Variæ Philosophicæ (Franeker, 1607). From here he returned home, to take charge of the Latin school at Herlufsholm. Two years later he was called as professor pædagogicus to Copenhagen, and in 1615 he succeeded Hans Resen in the theological chair. But his stay here did not last long. King Christian IV appointed him tutor and educator of the crown-prince. In 1620 he was able to resume again his theological chair, and, having selected Luther as his pattern, Brochmand became the leader and defender of Lutheran orthodoxy. In 1638 he was appointed bishop of Zealand, and entered upon his episcopal duties in 1639. He introduced a great many reforms throughout the Church of Denmark, and died in 1652. His main work is Universe Theologiæ Systema (6th ed. 1658), which Tholuck highly esteemed. He also wrote Systema Theologicum Minus (1649):—In Jacobi Epistolæ Commentarius (1641):—Speciminis Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Exercitatio (1633):—Αἰρεσις ἐλεγχομένη, seu Vera de Hæresi Doctrina (1634):—Apologia Speculi Veritatis Brandenburgici Confutatio (1653, 4 vols.). See Vinding, Academia Hafniensis, p. 233-244; Zwerg, Hollandse Clerisei, p. 169-297; Petersen, Den Danske Litteraturs Historie, iii, 87-91; Tholuck, Lebenszeugen der lutherischen Kirche vor und während des 30jährigen Krieges (Berlin, 1859), p. 302-307; Michelsen, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. (2d ed.), s. v. Brock, Campbell, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Tennessee in 1827. He was converted in 1850; licensed to preach in 1851; and in 1852 entered the Wabash Conference of the United Brethren Church, wherein he filled various charges in the pastorate and presiding eldership up to 1869, when he joined the North Indiana Conference. In 1871 he retired to his farm in Boone County, where his health gradually failed until his decease, early in 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 60.

Brock, Hezekiah, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in 1820 in Barrington, N. H. He became a Christian in early life, and, removing to Dover, joined the First Free-will Baptist Church of that place. In a year or two after he began to preach in Raymond, Me., and subsequently in Kennebunk, where he was ordained. In the spring of 1846 he became a student in the Biblical school at Whitestown, N. Y. Finding his lungs in a weak state, he turned his attention to the study of medicine. He lived for a short time in Utica, and then came to Dover, N. H., where he died, Dec. 30, 1851. He is said to have been very lovely and amiable in his disposition, and very pathetic and winning as a preacher. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1853, p. 85, 86. (J. C. S.)

Brock, John, a Congregational minister, was born in Stradbroke, Suffolkshire, England, in 1620. At the age of seventeen he came with his parents to New England. In 1646 he graduated from Harvard College; for two years succeeding pursued his theological studies at the college, and began preaching in 1648. At first he ministered at Rowley, and afterwards at the Isle of Shoals. Subsequently he removed from the latter place, and in 1662 assumed the pastorate of the Church at Redding, where he died, June 18, 1688. He was especially distinguished for his faith and power in prayer, and was a very devoted minister of the Gospel. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 134.

Brock, John R., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated at Rutgers College in 1859, and at New Brunswick Seminary in 1862. He was licensed by the Classis of Passaic in the same year, and served as pastor of the Church at West New Hempstead from 1862 to 1866, and Spring Valley from 1866 to 1868. He was thereafter without charge until the time of his death, which occurred in 1872. He was a man who tried to serve his people, the Church, and his God faithfully. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 195.

Brock, William (1), D.D., an eminent English Baptist minister, was born at Honiton, Devonshire, Feb. 14, 1807. After serving as an apprentice for seven years to a watchmaker, he went to Hertford, where he was converted, and subsequently united with a Church in London. Soon after he entered upon a course of study at Stepney College, and before completing the full term of four years he accepted a call to a Church at Norwich, beginning his ministry there May 10, 1833. Here he remained about fifteen years, at the end of which period, at the earnest solicitation of his friend, Sir Morton Peto, he removed to London, where he became the pastor of the Church worshipping in Bloomsbury Chapel. For twenty-five years Dr. Brock ably and with great success discharged the duties of his sacred office, and was a trusted and honored leader in all the great enterprises of his denomination in England. Among the productions of his pen during this period was his Life of General Havelock. He resigned his pastorate on account of his health in 1872, and died Nov. 13, 1875. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 140. (J. C. S.)

Brock, William (2) an English Methodist preacher, was born at Northlew, Devon, in 1839. He was converted at Gunnislake during a revival, at the age of sixteen, joined the Bible Christians, and became a useful and acceptable local preacher. He entered the itinerant ministry in 1865, and consecrated all his powers of body and mind to the work of the ministry. He died Dec. 30, 1878. He was diligent, conscientious, faithful, an earnest preacher and devoted pastor.

Brocke, HEINRICH MATTHIAS VON, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 4, 1646, at Derenburg. He studied at Helmstädt and Jena, was in 1672 preacher at Hadmersleben, in 1675 pastor of the Church of the Holy Ghost at Magdeburg, in 1680 pastor of St. John's at Hildesheim, and in 1685 superintendent there, receiving at the same time the degree of doctor of divinity from the Jena University. In 1699 he was appointed general superintendent at Altenburg, and died Jan. 6, 1708. He wrote, Diapp. de Accidenti Prædicatorum et De Merito Christi Universalis:—De Propositione Fidei ex Mente Pontificiorum:—Judicium de Pietismo. See Kettner, Clerus Johanneus Magdeburgensis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brocken was the mountain of altars, the Olympus of the ancient Saxons.

Brockhaus, Friedrich Clemens, a Protestant theologian of Germany, a son of Hermann, was born at Dresden, Feb. 14, 1837. He studied at Jena and Leipzig, was in 1860 appointed catechist of St. Peter's at Leipsic, and in 1865 pastor of St. John's there. In 1867 he commenced his lectures at the University of Leipsic by publishing his Nicolaï Cusani de Conciliis Universalis Potestate Sententia Explicatur. In 1871 he was appointed professor extraordinarius, and died Nov. 10, 1877. Besides, he wrote Gregor von Heinburg (Leipsic, 1861):—Aurelius Prudentius Clemens in seiner Bedeutung für die Kirche seiner Zeit, with an appendix: die Uebersetzung des Gedichtes Apotheosis (ibid. 1872):—Letzte Predigt (published after his death, in 1878):—also Ausgewählte Predigten (1880). (B. P.)

Brockhaus, Hermann, a German Orientalist, was born at Amsterdam, Jan. 28, 1806. He studied at different universities, and after completing his studies spent many years at Copenhagen, Paris, London, and Oxford. In 1839 he was appointed professor at Jena, and in 1841 he was called to Leipsic, where he died, Jan. 5, 1877. He published in Sanscrit, with a German translation, the Kathā sarit Sāgara, a collection of legends of Somadeva (Leipsic, 1839–62):—an edition of Prabodha Candrodya, a comedy of Krishna Misra, together with the Indian Scholia (ibid. 1845):—Nashebi's Persian edition of the Seven Wise Men (ibid. eol.):—a critical edition of the poems of Hafiz (ibid. 1854–61, 3 vols.; 1863, new ed. in 1 vol.):—an edition of the Vendidad Sade, prepared after the lithographed editions published at Paris and Bombay, together with a word-book and a glossary of the Zend language (ibid. 1850). As one of the founders of the German Oriental Society, he edited its quarterly from 1852 to 1860, and from 1856 he edited the famous Allgemeine Encyclopädie of Ersch u. Gruber. He advocated the system now generally adopted of transcribing the Sanscrit and the other Oriental languages, as Persian, Arabic, etc., with Roman letters, on which see his Ueber den Druck sanskritischer Werke mit lateinischen Buchstaben (Leipsic, 1841) and Zeitschrift der deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft (ibid. 1863, vol. xvii). (B. P.)

Brocklehurst, William (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Hollingsclough, near Leek, Staffordshire, June 5, 1784. He united with the Church at the age of fourteen, entered the ministry in 1808, retired from its active duties to London in 1849, and died July 4, 1866. He was a plain, earnest preacher, considerate and faithful pastor, and was ever active, and often successful, in labor for the Lord. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1866, p. 37.

Brocklehurst, William (2), an English divine, was born in 1793. He was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, becoming B.A. in 1816, M.A. in 1819, and D.C.L. in 1845. He was advanced priest in 1816, appointed vicar of Owston in 1821, and archdeacon of Stowe in 1844. He died at Owston Ferry, Dec. 18, 1862. Dr. Brocklehurst was the author of five or six religious works, the most popular of which is The Crusade of Fidelity, also several valuable archaeological works. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1862, p. 695.

Brockmann, Johann Heinrich, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born March 4, 1767, at Liesborn, near Münster, and died Sept. 21, 1837, as doctor of theology, cathedral-dean, and preacher at Münster. He wrote, Pastoralanweisung zur Verwiltung der Seelsorge in der kath. Kirche, nach den Bedürfnissen unseres Zeitalters (Münster, 1836–38):—Homilien und Predigten auf alle Sonn- und Festtage des Kirchenjahrs (ibid. 1826–30). See Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 49, 146. (B. P.)

Brockunier, Samuel R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Huntingdon County, Pa., June 12, 1795. His father was raised a rigid Lutheran, experienced conversion, and joined the Methodists, for which he was expelled from home and disinherited. His mother was a devout Methodist, and dedicated him to the ministry at his birth. Samuel had the tender est care, and was surrounded by the most holy influences from infancy. He gave his heart to God in 1812, very reluctantly received license to preach, and in 1819 entered the Ohio Conference. The latter years of his life, from 1855, he spent as a superannuate. His life-record was distinguished for long, active, laborious service. He died at Bloomingdale, O., July 22, 1867. Mr. Brockunier was wise in council, earnest and pathetic in the pulpit, affectionate in the social circle, and an eminently successful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 110.

Brockway, Jesse, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Russellville, Brown Co., O., Feb. 28, 1822. He was converted at sixteen years of age, and in 1847 licensed to preach. He joined the Indiana Conference in 1850, was ordained deacon in 1851, and elder in 1854. In this Conference he served the following appointments: Sugar Creek, Mount Auburn, Southport, Moorefield, Patriot, Lawrenceburgh, Milford, West Point, Paris, Seymour, and Edinburgh. In 1863 he was transferred to Kansas Conference on account of his health. His appointments were: North Lawrence, state agent for the American Bible Society, Burlingame, Carbondale, and Scranton circuits. His health failing, he became a supernumerary in 1869, and was granted a superannuated relation in 1881. He died near Burlingame, March 17, 1881. Though not brilliant, he was an excellent preacher, faithful to his Church, cheerfully discharging his duties as an itinerant. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 70.

Brod, Abraham, for some time rabbi at Constantinople, who died at Jerusalem in 1710, is the author of ברכת אברהם, "the blessing of Abraham," or a Commentary on Genesis (Venice, 1696):—שאלות ותשובות, i. e. decisions, printed in פני משה of Moses Benveniste (q. v.). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 132; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brod, Abraham ben-Saul, a Jewish rabbi of Böhmisch-Brod, was for some time rabbi at Nicsolsburg and Prague. In 1679 he went to Metz, and afterwards to Frankfort, where he died, April 11, 1717. He wrote Novellas on several talmudic treatises; also פירושים, or Expositions on the Pentateuch, printed in the אסיפת חכמים of Israel ben-Isaac (Offenbach, 1722). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Schudt, Jüdische Denkwürdigkeiten, iv, 3, 81 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 132 sq. (B. P.)

Brodbridge, George, an English martyr, was one of five who were burned at Canterbury in 1555 for testifying for Jesus and the Gospel. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 383.

Brodtt, John Henry, a Presbyterian and Congregational minister, was born at Troy, N. Y., June 2, 1827. After pursuing a course at Troy Academy and at the Polytechnic Institute, he entered the Union Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1853. He was ordained at Troy as an evangelist in 1854, and in that year became acting-pastor of the Church at Columbia, Cal. A bronchial affection interfering with his work, he was for one year secretary of the Water Company at San Francisco, and afterwards edited The Pacific. From 1858 to 1862 he was acting-pastor of the Church at Petaluma; from 1862 to 1864 had charge of the Presbyterian Church at Marysville; for eight months of 1864 he preached in the Howard-street Church, San Francisco, of the same denomination; from 1865 to 1867 pastor at Salem, N. Y.; in Dec., 1867, he was chosen to serve the Park Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, remaining until the dissolution of the Church in Feb., 1869. In the same city he was installed pastor of the New England Congregational Church, Sept. 27, 1870, from which he was dismissed in Dec. 1872. He resided, without charge, at Dansville after this date, and died there, Sept. 8, 1875. See Cong. Quarterly, 1876, p. 421; Presbyterian, Oct. 2, 1875; Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 68.

Broeck, Barbara van den, a Flemish engraver, the daughter of Crispin, was born at Antwerp in 1560. She was quick, and handled her plates with great ability. The following are her principal religious works: The Holy Family, with Angels; Samson and Delilah; The Last Judgment. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Broeck, Crispin van den, a Flemish painter and engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1524, and studied under Francis Floris. He died in Holland, probably in 1575. The following are some of his best works: The Crucifixion; The Annunciation; The Adoration of the Shepherds; The Adoration of the Magi. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brogaidh, of Imleach - Brocadha, an Irish saint, commemorated July 9, is said to have been the son of Gollit-Ceileach, or Gallus, a Briton or Welshman, and of Tigrida, sister of St. Patrick. He and his brothers came with St. Patrick into Ireland, and labored with him to bring great stores of wheat into the heavenly garner. He was bishop or abbot of Imleach, in the barony of Castello, county Mayo, which from him got the name of Imleach-Brocadha.

Brogan (or Brocan) is the name of two Irish saints.

1. BROGAN CLOEN was the disciple of St. Ultan of Ardraccan, uncle of St. Brigida; he is said to have put into rhythmical form in Irish the accounts of St. Brigida's virtues and miracles which St. Ultan had gathered and placed in his hand. This Irish hymn Colgan has translated into Latin, and given in his Trius Thaumaturga as the "First Life of St. Brigida;" according to Colgan, reasoning from its own preface, it was composed about A.D. 525. But Lanigan (Eccles. Hist. Ir. i, 379) follows Ware in reckoning him among the writers of the 7th century. Colgan seems to identify him with Breacan of Rosluir, on account of residence and day of dedication.

2. BROGAN OF MAETHAIL-BROGAIN, commemorated July 8, is said to have been one of the sons of Gollit the Welshman, and of Tigrida, sister of St. Patrick, who accompanied their uncle into Ireland. He was bishop of Breghmagh or Maghbregbh, in Meath, among the Ui Tortain tribe, near Ardraccan, though Evinius also calls him presbyter. He founded the abbey of Mothell, county Waterford. In the calendars he is called "Brogan the scribe," and in the Four Masters, A.D. 448, we have in St. Patrick's household "Brogan the scribe of his school." In the Introduction of the Mart. Doneg. edited by Drs. Todd and Reeves, there is mentioned, among "the more famous books," "The Books of Brogan Scribhni" (p. xxxviii), and in the Book of Lecan "Priest Brogan" is one of St. Patrick's "two writers."

Brogden, WILLIAM, a missionary of the Church of England, was the son of a gentleman of the same name who lived in Calvert County, Md., on the Patuxent River, a merchant and large shipper of tobacco. The date of the son's birth is unknown, but he was ordained Aug. 6, 1735, as deacon, by the bishop of London. Soon after, he returned to America, and became incumbent of All-Hallows' Parish, in Arundel County, Md. In 1742 he purchased a farm of twelve hundred acres, near Annapolis, which he occupied while rector of the parish. In 1751 he became rector of Queen Ann's Parish, Prince George's Co., where he remained until his death, in 1770. His talents were of a high order. Several times he was a member of the Diocesan Convention. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 85.

Brogie, MAURICE JEAN MADELAINE DE, a French prelate, was born at the castle of Broglie, Sept. 5, 1766.

He emigrated to Poland during the French Revolution, and on his return to France, in 1803, he was made almoner of the emperor, and in 1805 bishop of Acqui, in Piedmont. He was banished for his opposition to the national council in 1811, but on the fall of Napoleon returned to his diocese. He was once more condemned for his political contumacy, and died in Paris, July 20, 1821. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brogni, GIOVANNI ALLARMET DE, a Roman prelate, was born at Brogni, Savoy, in 1342. From the station of a swineherd in youth he rose to the dignities of bishop of Viviers and of Ostia, archbishop of Arles, bishop of Geneva, and cardinal and chancellor of the Church of Rome. He devoted himself assiduously to the work of conciliation during the great schism which so long divided that Church. As senior cardinal he presided at the Council of Constance after the deposition of pope John XXIII at the sixth session, until the election of cardinal Colonna as pope Martin V at the forty-first. It was during this time that the trial of John Huss took place. Brogni showed him great kindness during the trial, but, as president of the council, had to pronounce sentence of death upon him. He died at Rome, Feb. 16, 1426. He founded the hospital of Annecy, and the college of St. Nicholas at Avignon. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brok, in Scandinavian mythology, was a dwarf, the brother of Sindri, both well skilled in working metals. The sons of Iwaldas, dwarfs likewise, had finished three great costly articles: golden hair, which, as soon as it touched the head of an Asa, would grow fast; the never-failing spear Gungnar, and the ship Skidbladner. Loke made a bet with Brok that the latter's brother could not make articles equally costly. The prize was Loke's head. Sindri began his work; he placed a boar's hide in the fire, and bade Brok blow until he returned; during Sindri's absence Loke came in the form of a hornet and stung, but Brok endured it until Sindri drew a golden boar from the fire, whose bristles shone in the dark, and which could travel faster over land and sea than the swiftest horse. Thereupon Sindri placed a piece of gold in the fire. Brok was told to blow again, and the hornet stung him still more, until Sindri brought out a golden ring, from which every ninth night eight equally costly rings sprang. Thereupon Brok began to blow again, but now Loke stung him on the eyelids, so that the blood streamed down his cheeks and he could not see any more. Then Sindri came and drew out a hammer, which never failed in hitting an object, and crushed whatever stood in its way, and always returned back to the hands of its owner. Now they proceeded with their treasures to the Asas, and Freir, Odin, and Thor were the judges. To the first was given the golden boar, to the second the ring, while to Thor was given the hammer. The latter was considered as the most costly of all, and the deities hoped for great good from the hammer at the battle of the world's-end. Brok now sought to cut off the head of Loke, but in an instant he was away, for he had on shoes which could travel in the air and on the water as well as on land.

Brokaw, ABRAM, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, graduated at Queens (now Rutgers) College in 1793. He studied theology under Dr. J. H. Livingston. He was pastor at Owasco, Cayuga Co., N. Y., 1796-1808; Ovid, Seneca Co., 1808-22, when he was suspended. About this time it seems this Church seceded, and he went with it. He maintained this position till his death, in 1846. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 197.

Bromfield, EDWARD, an English Congregational minister, was born in Coventry, Dec. 5, 1802. He joined the Church in his twenty-first year. He was a printer until 1837, when he resolved to enter the ministry, and in the following year entered Hackney College for better preparation. On leaving college he labored for some time at Needham Market, then was ordained as missionary in connection with the Surrey Mission, and settled as their agent at Elstead. Here he labored abundantly, and was greatly loved by his people. He died Aug. 12, 1859. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1860, p. 178.

Bromley, Henry, an English Congregational minister, was born at Islington Green, near London, Dec. 3, 1798. He joined the Church at Cambridge, received his theological training at Hoxton Academy, and first settled in the ministry at Appledore, Devonshire, in 1820. He afterwards preached nineteen years at Clavering, Essex, and a few years at Brighton, then retired to London, where he died, Feb. 6, 1878. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 303.

Bromley, Humphrey, a Universalist minister, was born in North Wales about 1796. He received his religious education in the Church of England, but joined the Wesleyans and began preaching in that connection at the age of sixteen. On entering into a discussion several years later on endless punishment, with a Unitarian minister, he was led to accept Unitarianism. He emigrated to America in 1833; settled first at Cleveland, O.; joined the Universalists; soon after removed to Norwalk, thence to Sandusky, and in 1837 to Republic, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying Dec. 13, 1876. See Universalist Register, 1878, p. 86.

Bromley, John, an English clergyman of the 17th century, was a native of Shropshire. Early in the reign of James II he was curate of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, London, but afterwards turned Roman Catholic, and was employed as a proof-reader in the king's printing-house. When obliged by the Revolution to quit this employment, he turned school-master, and afterwards travelled abroad as tutor to some young gentlemen. He died Jan. 10, 1717. His only published work is a translation of the Catechism of the Council of Trent (Lond. 1687). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bromley, Robert Anthony, B.D., an English divine, was born about 1735. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1775 he was presented to St. Mildred's, in the Poultry, with St. Nicholas Cole Abbey united. He was also lecturer of St. John's, Hackney, and chaplain to Mr. Sheriff Miles. He died Oct. 10, 1806. Mr. Bromley published a number of Sermons preached on special occasions (1770-90); and a Philosophical and Critical History of the Fine Arts, Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture (Lond. 1793-95, 2 vols. 4to). See (Lond.) Annual Register, p. 565; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brompton, John, was an English Cistercian monk, and abbot of Jorvaulx (or Jorevall), in Richmondshire. He appears to have flourished about 1198, if, indeed, he was the author of the Chronicon which is extant under his name, extending from 588 to 1198. Selden thinks it probable that he was not. The Chronicle is printed by Sir Roger Twysden, in the Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores Decem (London, 1652, p. 725 fol.).

Bromwell, Jacob L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Talbot County, Md., Aug. 1, 1792. He was converted in early life; licensed to exhort in 1815; to preach in 1816; and admitted into the Baltimore Conference in 1817. In 1826 he became superannuated, but became effective in 1829, and in the following year again superannuated, which relation he held to the close of his life. In 1831 he removed to the wild, uncultivated territory of Morgan County, Ind., where he preached as he was able in log-houses, school-houses, and at funerals all over the country. He died March 9, 1871. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 18.

Bron was bishop of Caisel-irrae, in Ui-Fiachrach-Muaidhe. Dr. Kelly (Cal. Ir. SS. 4) identifies his see as Kilasbuighrone, near Sligo, in Ireland. In Colgan he is "Episc. Bronus filius ignis, qui est in Caisel-irra, servus Dei, socius Sti. Patricii," but he can give no account of his receiving from Evinius the designation filius ignis, except that his father's name may have been Aidh (fire). The Four Masters give his death as having occurred June 8, 511, and to this O'Donovan adds a note on Cuil-irra, and traces, from the Annotation of Tirechan and the Book of Armagh, the wanderings of St. Patrick, till "crossing the Muaidh (Moy) at Bertriga (Bartragh), he raised a cross there, and proceeded thence to the mound of Kiabart, near which he built a church for his disciple, bishop Bronus, the son of Icnus." This is called the church of Cassel-irra in the Trip. Life of St. Patrick.

Bronach (or Bromada), virgin, is commemorated as an Irish saint, April 2. She was abbess of Glensiechis, otherwise called Glentegys, Clonfegys, and now Kilbroney, since the 14th century. She was called St. Bromana, and her baculus or crosier seems to have been a relic which was preserved with great veneration and emolument in the parish church of Kilbroney, which derived its name from her.

Bronk, Robert, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born at Coxsackie, Greene Co., N. Y., in 1789. He was the son of a Revolutionary patriot and statesman, who gave him a thorough education. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1810; at the New Brunswick Seminary in 1813, and was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick in the same year. He was pastor at Washington (now West Troy), Albany Co., N. Y., and Boght, Saratoga Co., from 1813 to 1822; Washington, alone, from 1823 to 1834. He died in 1837. He had not the finished graces of oratory, but he had the elements of a powerful preacher. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church in America (3d ed.), p. 197.

Bronkhorst, John van, a Dutch painter, was born at Utrecht in 1603, and studied under John Verburg. In the new church at Amsterdam, besides handsomely painting the windows, he executed three excellent pictures: The Triumph of David over Goliath; The Anointing of Saul; and Saul's Attempt to kill David. He died in 1680. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bronkhorst, Peter van, a Dutch painter, was born at Delft, May 16, 1588, and died June 22, 1661. In the council-chamber at Delft are two fine paintings by him, representing the Judgment of Solomon, and Christ Driving the Money-changers from the Temple. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bronscombe, Walter, an English prelate of the 13th century, son of a poor man of Exeter, raised himself by his own industry to the bishopric of Exeter, where he built and endowed a hospital for poor people, and also founded a college at Perin, Cornwall. He instituted an annual festival to the angel Gabriel, for meeting the expenses of which he left land—a festival which never appears to have been observed outside of his own diocese. He died in 1280. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i. 444.

Bronson, Abraham, a Protestant Episcopal minister, was born in Waterbury, Conn., April 11, 1778. He was educated at Cheshire Academy, Conn., and ordained deacon by bishop Jarvis, on Christmas-day, 1799. For two years he was assistant to Rev. Mr. Dehon, at Newport, R. I., when he was ordained presbyter, and removed to Manchester, Vt., where he remained thirty years. He went to Ohio in 1833; and two years after, settled in Peninsula, continuing there until 1846, when he supplied the parish at Wakeman, and others in its vicinity. He died at Franklin Mills, O., June 12, 1853. He was highly esteemed as an authority in regard to the history of his own Church. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1853, p. 463.

Bronson, Oliver, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Utica, N. Y., Jan. 9, 1826. He graduated at Union College, Schenectady, in 1843, and from the Theological Seminary at Auburn, in 1853. In 1854 he accepted a call from the Reformed Protestant (Dutch) Church at Kinderhook. In 1858 he was installed as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Janesville. He died Jan. 10, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 81.

Bronson, Samuel Jennings, a Baptist minister, was born in Danbury, Conn., in 1819. He united with the Church in 1837, took the full course of study in both departments in Madison University, graduating in 1846, and was ordained pastor of the Church in Millbury, Mass., Dec. 16 of the same year. Here he remained until 1854, when he went to Hyannis, and was pastor there till 1867, when he went to Winchester, from which place he returned to Millbury in 1870, and continued there till obliged to resign on account of ill-health. In 1874 he resumed ministerial and pastoral work in West Woodstock, Conn., where he died, Jan. 10, 1879. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 142. (J. C. S.)

Bronson, Tillotson, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born at Plymouth, Conn., in 1762. Under the Rev. John Trumbull, the Congregational minister of Watertown, he began his preparation for college, teaching a school, meantime, at Waterbury. In 1786 he graduated at Yale College, and was ordained deacon Sept. 21, 1787. The following October he was called to officiate in the churches of Stratford, Vt., and Hanover, N. H. He returned to Connecticut in 1788, and on February 25 was ordained priest in New London. In October he resigned his charge, and in 1792 went to Boston, supplying the place of Rev. William Montague, rector of Christ Church, during the latter's travels abroad. In 1793 he became rector of the churches at Hebron, Chatham, and Middle Haddam, in Connecticut. Two years thereafter he was called to the rectorship of St. John's Church, Waterbury, where he remained about ten years. Having been appointed to conduct the Churchman's Magazine, published at New Haven, he resigned his pastorate in 1805, and removed thither. The publishing office of the magazine was removed to New York after two or three years, and his connection therewith accordingly ceased. The Diocesan Convention of Connecticut elected him principal of the academy at Cheshire in the latter part of 1805. The Churchman's Magazine having been revived he had again undertaken to edit it, while at the same time performing his duties at the academy; but his health was now seriously impaired, and he declined a re-election as a member of the Standing Committee, a position which he had held for the twenty preceding years. He died at Cheshire, Sept. 6, 1826. Very often he had been a delegate to the General Convention; and he was a trustee of the General Theological Seminary and of Washington College. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 358.

Brontës, in Greek mythology, was a Cyclop, the son of Uranus and Earth. His brothers are called Arges and Steropes.

Brook, Benjamin, an English Congregational minister, was a native of Nether Thong, near Huddersfield, Yorkshire, became a member of the Independent Church at Holmfild, and entered Rotherham College in 1797. After the completion of his studies he became the first pastor of the Church at Tutbury, Staffordshire, in 1801, where he labored until 1830, when his health failed, and he resigned his charge. He afterwards removed to Birmingham, where he continued his studies into the history of Dissenters until his death, which occurred Jan. 5, 1848, in the seventy-third year of his age. He published, The History of the Lives of the Puritans (1813):—The History of Religious Liberty (1820):—and Memoirs of that Eminent Puritan, Thomas Cartwright (1845):—besides leaving the materials for A History of Puritans who Emigrated to New England, and a new edition of his Lives of the Puritans. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1848, p. 214; (Lond.) Evangelical Mag. 1851, p. 693.

Brook, Thomas, a Bible Christian minister, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1800. He grew up to be a very wicked boy: Reading carefully Baxter's Call to the Unconverted, he was convinced of sin, sought and found salvation. For sixteen years he was a very acceptable local preacher. He made it a point of conscience never to neglect an appointment. In 1835 his name appears in the Minutes as appointed to the Kilkhampton Circuit. During the twenty-five years of his itinerant ministry he filled fifteen appointments. At the Conference held at Exeter, in 1860, he became superannuated, and, settled at Crediton, in the Exeter Circuit. He took an active part in the cause of temperance, and was rendered very useful. He died Aug. 5, 1875. See Minutes of the Conference, 1876.

Brook, William, a minister of the Bible Christians, was born at Northlew, Devonshire, England, in 1839. At the age of sixteen, during a gracious revival, he was converted. He became a lay preacher in 1855, and entered the travelling ministry in 1865. In 1878 he was necessitated, on account of feeble health, to take a superannumerary relation. He died Dec. 30, 1878. His sermons were sound in doctrine, lucid in statement, impressive in delivery, and were proclaimed in demonstration of the spirit and of power. See Minutes of the Annual Conference, 1879.

Brooke, George Gibson, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Fauquier County, Va., about 1808. He was favored with the watchful care of a pious mother, who brought him to Christ in his youth. When about twenty years of age he was licensed to preach, and received into the Baltimore Conference, wherein he labored faithfully until his death, Dec. 8, 1878. Mr. Brooke served as chaplain in the Confederate army during the rebellion. His ministry was crowned with success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1879, p. 9.

Brooke, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Bilton, May 24, 1790, and died at Cheetnam Hill, July 25, 1881. His ministry extended over nearly sixty-nine years, the last thirty of which were spent in comparative retirement. The simplicity of his spirit and the purity of his life declared plainly that "the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1881, p. 53.

Brooke, John, a missionary of the Church of England, came to America in 1705 in the employ of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and was appointed to Elizabethtown, N. J., by lord Cornbury, governor of the province. Shortly after his arrival three churches were begun under his direction—St. John's, at Elizabethtown, St. Peter's, at Perth Amboy, and another at Freehold. At Piscataway his congregation had repaired a meeting-house, and were using it temporarily. At seven different stations, one of them fifty miles from his residence, he officiated as regularly as possible, and contributed to the feeble churches liberally from his own salary. He died suddenly in 1707 at Elizabethtown. He was an earnest, zealous, and self-sacrificing preacher, and the stability of several of these churches was largely owing to his effort. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 138.

Brooke, John Thomson, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was born in Frederick County, Md., in 1800. By birth and education he was a Romanist, and was at one time a professor in a Romish college. In 1825 he was ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church, and in 1829 became rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, D.C. He was rector of Christ Church, Cincinnati, O., in 1836, and was pastor of Ascension Church, Baltimore, in 1833. In the following year he accepted a professorship in Kenyon College, O.; but subsequently assumed the rectorship of Christ Church, Springfield, which position he held till his death, Aug. 17, 1861. Dr. Brooke was in doctrine a strict Calvinist. In some of his writings he maintained that slavery was taught in the Scriptures, and he defended the famous Dred Scott decision. He frequently contributed to the newspapers, and published some sermons and addresses. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1862, p. 557.

Brooke, Samuel, a missionary of the Church of England, had been preaching for some time in St. George's County, Md., under appointment by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; but in 1754 he was removed to the mission of New Castle, Del., where he ministered until his death, in 1756. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 165.

Brooke, Thomas, a Baptist minister, was born at Stockport, Cheshire, England, about 1780, and came to America in 1806. He was baptized by Rev. William Collier at Charlestown, Mass., and afterwards was ordained as pastor of the Baptist Church at West Creek, Cumberland Co., N. J. Having occupied this position for some time, he removed to Baltimore, Md., where, in addition to preaching, he had a school under his charge. His death took place at Baltimore, June 29, 1819. (J. C. S.)

Brookes, G., an English Baptist minister, was born in 1767, and became a Christian when quite young. When about thirty-five years of age he was called to the pastorate of the Church at Bewdley, in Worcestershire, and commenced his labors about 1802. This was the only Church over which he was ever settled, and he remained its pastor for nearly forty years. He died Feb. 11, 1844. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1844, p. 16. (J. C. S.)

Brookes, Thomas, an eminent English Independent divine, was chosen minister of St. Mary Magdalen about 1651, and ejected in 1662. He died in 1680. He wrote, Precious Remedies for Satan's Devices (1653; about sixty editions):—Heaven on Earth (1654):—The Mute Christian under the Smarting Rod (1660):—The Private Key of Heaven (1665):—Cabinet of Jewels (1669):—and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brookhouse, JOSEPH, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Mackworth, Derbyshire, in 1767. He commenced his ministry in 1795, and travelled twenty-four circuits. He became a superintendence in 1834, and settled at Brighton, afterwards (1844) in London, where he died Jan. 23, 1850. He was a man of unblemished character and fervent zeal. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1850.

Brooking, JAMES HARVEY, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Virginia, May 20, 1809. He studied law, and was licensed to practice; experienced religion in 1831; and in 1852 received license to preach, and entered the Kentucky Conference, wherein he labored until his decease, Sept. 20, 1865. Mr. Brooking was uniform in piety, and exemplary in life; he was modest, cultured, and laborious beyond his strength. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 66.

Brookins, CALVIN, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Fulton County, N. Y., Jan. 5, 1827. He was converted in 1841, and united with the Baptist Church, but at the end of a year changed his membership to the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1851 he was licensed to preach, and removed to De Kalb, Ill., in 1854. He joined the Rock River Conference in 1855, from which he received the following appointments: Grove Circuit, Richmond, Rochelle, Lee Centre, superannuate one year, De Kalb, Richmond, Woodstock, Polo, Fulton, Warren, and Yorkville. He again became superannuated in 1879, continuing in that relation until his death, which occurred Sept. 25, 1881. He was a good man, and a faithful and affectionate pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 331.

Brooks, Boswell, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Westmoreland, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1805. He graduated at Union College in 1828, and at Yale Divinity School in 1833; was licensed by the Association of the Western District of New Haven County, and ordained evangelist by the Presbytery of Kaskaskia, Sept. 15, 1833. He became supply pastor at Collinsville, Ill. (1833-34), and Akron, O.; principal of Cuyahoga Falls Institute, 1837-40; teacher at Lakeport, N. Y., 1840-41; supply pastor at Niagara and Pendleton, 1841-46; at Gosport, 1846-47; at Carlton and Kendall, 1848-53; and principal of academy at Lawrenceville, Pa., where he died, Feb. 2, 1854. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois.

Brooks, Charles, a Congregational minister, was born in Townsend, Mass., March 24, 1831. He was educated at Groton Academy, Yale College, and Yale Divinity School. He taught two years in Mississippi; was ordained over the Church in Byfield, Mass., in 1858; labored there five years; Wilmington, six months; Unionville, Conn., in 1864, but was taken away by death, June 11, 1866. Mr. Brooks was a good scholar, a consecrated Christian, and a model minister. See Cong. Quarterly, 1867, p. 39.

Brooks, Edward, a Congregational minister, was born at Medford, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1757; was ordained at North Yarmouth, Me., July 4, 1764; was dismissed in March, 1769; and died at Medford in 1781. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 558.

Brooks, Edward Flint, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Halifax, Vt., Sept. 27, 1812. He graduated at Washington College, Pa., in 1839; and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1842. He was ordained an evangelist by the Raritan Presbytery, Oct. 20, 1842. He served as stated supply at French Creek, Va., in 1843; at Riverhead, L. I., 1844-46. He was then pastor of a Congregational Church at West Woodstock, Conn., 1846-50; stated supply of Presbyterian Church at Manchester, N. J., in 1850; pastor of a Congregational Church at Gill, Mass., 1851-55; stated supply in Connecticut, in 1856; pastor at Mansfield, 1859-66; at Westminster, 1866-67; stated supply at Paris, N. Y., in 1868. He died at Elgin, Ill., Sept. 15, 1872. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 122.

Brooks, Elbridge Gerry, D.D., a Universalist minister, was born in Dover, N. H., July 29, 1816. He spent his boyhood in Portsmouth; acquired a good education, and began preaching at the age of nineteen. His fields of labor were Exeter, N. H.; Amesbury, Mass., where he was ordained in 1837; East Cambridge in 1838; Lowell, for one year; Bath, Me., in 1846; Lynn, Mass., in 1850; Sixth Universalist Church, New York, in 1859, where he remained until chosen, in 1867, general secretary of the United States Convention. In that office he travelled extensively, carrying life, energy, and courage wherever he went. In 1869 he accepted an invitation to the Church of the Messiah in Philadelphia, where he continued until his decease, April 8, 1878. Dr. Brooks was a strong man physically, mentally, and morally. He was energetic, careful, able; majestic in his bearing, and powerful in his appeals. By nature he was an ardent reformer, an uncompromising advocate of the Gospel and of freedom. He was a strong and vigorous writer, contributed frequently to his denominational periodicals, and published two works of great denominational value: Universalism in Life and Doctrine, and Our New Departure. See Universalist Register, 1879, p. 88.

Brooks, Frederick, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, entered the ministry about 1866, and became, in that year, rector of St. Paul's Church, Des Moines, Ia. The following year he became rector of St. Paul's Church, Cleveland, O., in which pastorate he remained until his death, Sept. 15, 1874, at the age of thirty-two years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 145.

Brooks (or Brookes), James (1), D.D., an English prelate, was master of Balliol College, Oxford, in 1547, vice-chancellor of the university in 1552, and became bishop of Gloucester in 1554. He died Sept. 7, 1558. His publications include a sermon and two orations. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brooks, James (2), an English Methodist preacher, was born in Kent in 1791. He joined the Bible Christians when they began their labors in that locality. He entered their ministry in 1825, and travelled with great acceptance in thirteen circuits, being superintendent of districts, treasurer of the missionary society, and, in 1838, president of the conference. He died March 6, 1854. He was a pious and devoted Christian.

Brooks, John, M.D., a Universalist minister, was born in Worcester, Mass., Jan. 12, 1783. He had very few early literary advantages, but received a strict Calvinistic training. He began school-teaching at the age of sixteen; pursued an academical and a medical course; and commenced the practice of medicine at the age of twenty-three. In 1822 he removed to Bernardston, Mass., where he continued to the close of his life, preaching until a difficulty in the throat compelled him to relinquish regular work, when he resumed the medical profession, and in it continued till his decease, Sept. 9, 1866. Dr. Brooks was an excellent citizen, a skilled physician, a practical, instructive, and able minister. See Universalist Register, 1867, p. 76.

Brooks, J. H., an English Baptist minister, was born at Berkhamstead, Hants Co., about 1795, and united with the Church in March, 1815. He immediately began to study earnestly. His Sabbaths were spent in village preaching, and in due time he completed a full course of study in the academy at Newport-Pagnell. He was pastor of the Church in West Haddon, Northamptonshire, from 1822 to 1827; then at Fenny Stratford, Buckinghamshire, from 1827 to 1835; next at Ridgemoor, Bedfordshire, from 1835 to 1851. For a short time he was in Buckingham. At the last he was laid aside by complete mental and bodily prostration. His final residence was in Banbury, where he died March 3, 1857. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1858. (J. C. S.)

Brooks, Ralph D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Springfield, Pa., April 11, 1825. He joined the Church at the age of thirteen; received license to exhort in 1848; and in 1850 was admitted into the East Genesee Conference, in the active ranks of which he served until his death, Jan. 9, 1859. Mr. Brooks was characterized by his deep and uniform piety, and was a very promising young preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1859, p. 207.

Brooks, William A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., July 7, 1810. He was converted at the age of twenty-one; licensed to exhort in 1836; and in 1838 entered the New Jersey Conference, in which he toiled zealously and successfully, in the pulpit, pastorate, and in the distribution of Bibles, until his death, Sept. 12, 1868. Mr. Brooks was a man of much prayer and great liberality; always cheerful and laborious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 63.

Broomfield, Robert W., an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Rochester in 1815. He was converted in youth, studied three years in the Abney House Theological Institution, was appointed to Wellingborough in 1824, and died at High Wycombe, Aug.

17, 1875. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1876, p. 12.

Broquard (or Bronquard), JACQUES, a French theologian, was born at Thionville about 1588. In 1608 he entered the Jesuit order and went to reside at Luxembourg. He died in 1660, leaving a translation in Latin of the Pédagogue Chrétien of the Jesuit Philip Oultremann of Valenciennes, a work the original edition of which appeared at Mons in 1641—also a translation in Latin of the work entitled Pensez y Bien, or, Moyen Assuré de se Sauver (Rouen, 1648):—a Latin translation of the Testament de l'Homme Chrétien of Antony Suquet:—and a translation of La Vraie Philosophie du Chrétien of Charles Musart. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brorda (also called Hildegis), was a Mercian ealdorman, whose death in 799 is recorded by Simeon of Durham. He attested the charters of Offa from 764 to 795, and, after the death of Offa, those of Ecgrith and Kenulf down to 798. He is probably the person who is mentioned in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle as a benefactor of Medeshamstede in 777, although the passage is an interpolation, and the monastery of which he was the patron was Woking, in Surrey. He was present at the Legatine Synod of 787.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Brorson, HANS ADOLF, a famous Danish hymn-writer, was born June 20, 1694. He studied at Copenhagen, and succeeded his father in the ministry. In 1729 he was called as third pastor to Tondern in Sleswick, and in 1741 he was made bishop of Ribe. In 1760 he was made doctor of divinity, and died June 3, 1764. Of his hymns, at least two hundred are translations from the German of Gerhard, Rist, Angelus Silesius, Laurenti, Frelinghausen, Richter and others. The best edition of his hymns is the one published by P. A. Arland (Copenhagen, 1867), under the title, Hans Adolf Brorsons Psalmer og aandelige Sange. See Daugaard, Bidrag til Karakteristik af Brorson som Embedsmand in Theolog. Tidsskrift, 1838, ii; Petersen, Dansk Literatur-historie, iv, 295 sq.; Michelsen, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. (2d ed.), s. v. (B. P.)

Brosse, La. See ANGE DE ST. JOSEPH.

Brossier, MARTINE, a French fanatic, was born in 1547, and was the daughter of a baker at Romorantin. She pretended to be possessed with spirits, and in that state inveighed against the edict of Nantes. Her imposture, however, was exposed by the bishop of Angers, who produced the same convulsions upon her nervous temperament by artificial excitants. She travelled about, first with her father, and afterwards with a certain abbé of St. Martin. She was repeatedly arrested, and was finally confined in a convent, where she died about the beginning of the 16th century. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brothénus, a Welsh Saint, was the founder of Llanfrothen, in Merionethshire, in the 6th century. Rees says his festival-day was Oct. 15, but the Acta Sanctorum (viii, 358) gives him under Oct. 18, in conjunction with the abbess Gwendolen (Gwyddelan), whose name is preserved at Llanwyddelan, in Montgomeryshire.

Brotherhood. The origin of fraternities in the Christian Church and world, whether clerical, lay, or mixed, is far from being satisfactorily ascertained. The formation of such associations was in direct opposition to the very impulse which produced monachism itself, and sent the solitary, as a "hermit," into the wilderness. Yet such fraternities were practically in existence in the Egyptian lauræ, when Serapion could rule over a thousand monks; they received their first written constitution from St. Basil (326-379). Muratori was the first to point out the Parabolani (q. v.) as a sort of religious fraternity, in opposition to various writers quoted by him, who had held that such fraternities date only from the 9th or even the 13th centuries. Muratori also suggests that the lecticarii or decani, who are mentioned in the laws of Justinian (43 and 59 Novella) as fulfilling certain functions at funerals, must have been a kind of religious fraternity. On the other hand, the old sodalitas appears to have become more and more discredited, since the 18th canon of the Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451) requires the cutting off of all clerics or monks forming "conspiracies and sodalitates."

In the 8th century we find a disposition on the part of the Church to confine the idea of fraternity to clerical and monastic use. In the Dialogue by Question and Answer on Church Government of archbishop Egbert of York (middle of the century), the terms frater and soror will be found applied both to clerics and monks or nuns, but never apparently to laymen. There is at the same time ground for surmising that the term "fraternity," which in the 12th and 13th centuries is used ordinarily as a synonym for "guild," was already current in the 8th or 9th to designate these bodies, the organization of which Dr. Brentano holds to have been complete among the Anglo-Saxons in the 8th century, and the bulk of which were of lay constitution, though usually of a more or less religious character. The connection between the two words is established in a somewhat singular manner. A Council of Nantes of very uncertain date, which has been placed by some as early as 658, by others as late as 800, has a canon which is repeated almost in the same terms in a capitulary of archbishop Hincmar of Rheims, of the year 852 or 858. But where the canon speaks of "those gatherings or confraternities which are termed consortia," the archbishop has "gatherings which are commonly called guilds or confraternities."

But the term "guild" itself was already in use to designate fraternities for mutual help before the days of Hincmar. We meet with it in a capitulary of Charlemagne's of the year 779, which bears "As touching the oaths mutually sworn by a guild, that no one presume to do so." It occurs in two other places in the capitularies. It is thus clear that the guilds of the latter half of the 8th century existed for purposes exactly the same as those which they fulfilled several centuries later. So far indeed as they were usually sanctioned by oath, they were obviously forbidden by the capitulary above quoted, as well as by several others against "conjurations" and conspiracies; the last (the Thionville Capitulary of 805) of a peculiarly ferocious character. The subject of religious or quasi-religious brotherhoods or fraternities in the early Church (apart from monastic ones) has been but imperfectly investigated as yet. Specific bodies are found apparently answering to the character, attached to particular churches, during the 8d, 4th, 5th, and 6th centuries. In the West, however, we seem first to discern them under the Teutonic shape of the guild, which in its freer forms was palpably the object of great jealousy to the political and spiritual despots of the Carlovingian æra.

BROTHERHOOD OF GOD, a Christian sect which arose in the 12th century, having for its chief object to restrain and abolish the right and exercise of private war. It was founded by a carpenter at Guienne, who pretended to have had special communication with Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary, and was received as a divinely inspired messenger.

Brothers, LAY. See LAY BROTHERS.

Brothwood, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Wellington, Shropshire, in 1792. He was converted in early life; entered the itinerant ministry in 1825, in which he labored in plainness of speech, sound doctrine, zeal and fidelity for thirty-two years, and for nearly sixteen years he discharged, as a supernumerary, the duties of preacher and pastor in the Mad-eley and other circuits. He died at Broseley, Madeley, April 7, 1873. He was sincere, upright, and affectionate. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1873, p. 28.

Broue, PIERRE DE LA, a French prelate and theologian, was born at Toulouse in 1643, and went to Paris in 1668, where he took his degree in theology. He was of an ancient parliamentary family, and he resigned poetry in order to devote his time to preaching, which he did with great success before Louis XIV, who made him bishop of Mirepoix. Being devoted to the conversion of the Protestants, he published six pastoral letters on the subject. He also corresponded with Bossuet concerning the most efficient means for the accomplishment of this end. The opposition excited by the bull Unigenitus claimed a large share of his attention. Broue died Sept. 20, 1720. He wrote, Catechisme pour l'Instruction de ses Diocésains:—Statuts Synodaux:—Oraison Funèbre d'Anne-Christine de Bavière (Paris, 1690):—Relation des Conférences tenues en 1716 à l'Archevêché de Paris et au Palais Royal, sur les Accommodements proposés dans l'Affaire de la Bulle Unigenitus; inserted in the Histoire du Livre des Réflexions Morales of the abbé Louail:—Défense de la Grâce efficace par elle-même, against Fénelon and P. Daniel. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brough, JOSEPH R., a minister of the Methodist New Connection, was born at Lane End, Staffordshire, in 1794. He was brought up religiously, converted in youth, and entered the ministry in 1816. After travelling in eight circuits, his health gave way at Sunderland, but he accepted another circuit at Dewsbury, where he became a supernumerary, and, after much suffering, died in peace, Oct. 9, 1825. See Minutes of the Conference.

Brougham, JOSEPH, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Burslem in 1788. He was converted in youth, commenced to preach in the itinerancy in 1811, and, after laboring with acceptance for some years, his health failed, and he retired from active work and settled in Burslem, where he died, March 24, 1836. He was pious, faithful, but naturally reserved. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1836.

Broughton, Job, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Coatsheath, England, July 15, 1791. He was educated at Lutterworth, was licensed by an association of Independents, and labored as a missionary for seventeen years. He came to America in 1829. In 1853 he was installed pastor of Greenland Church, Bloomingburg, O. He died Nov. 1, 1858. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 67.

Broughton, Thomas, A.M., a minister of the Church of England, and one of the number known as Oxford Methodists, was a member of Exeter College, Oxford, and joined the Methodists in 1732. After leaving the university, he first officiated at Cowley, near Uxbridge. In 1736 he became curate at the Tower of London, also preached every Tuesday afternoon to the prisoners in Ludgate prison, and read prayers every night to a religious society at Wapping. "By means of Whitefield, he was presented to St. Helen's, Bishopsgate Street Within; and, through faithfulness to his old Oxford friend, he lost it. The parishioners objected to Whitefield having the use of Broughton's pulpit. Broughton answered, 'Through Mr. Whitefield's influence I obtained the living of St. Helen's, and, if he insists upon it, he shall have my pulpit.' Whitefield did insist, and Broughton lost his lectureship." In 1741 he became lecturer of All-Hallows, Lombard Street. In 1743 he was appointed secretary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, which position he held until his death. He remained in the lectureship of All-Hallows for some years after beginning work for the society. After his labors at this place, he accepted the living of Wotton. He attended to both the duties of his parish and secretaryship, giving five hours each day, five days of the week, to the work of the society, and Saturday and Sunday were devoted to the interests of his parish. During his term of office Wales was first supplied with Bibles, in 1743; and the people of the Isle of Man in 1763 had the same book given to them for the first time, and in their native language. On Sunday morning, Dec. 21, 1777, in Hatton Garden, the "faithful secretary put on his ministerial robes, and, according to his wont, retired into his room till church-time. The bells were ringing, and he continued in his closet. They ceased, but he made no appearance. His friends entered, and found him on his knees—dead." He was a bold, fearless, zealous, faithful preacher—much like Wesley and Whitefield in these respects. Though he was associated with the Methodists at Oxford, he never accepted the doctrines which Wesley afterwards taught—justification by faith, sanctification, and the witness of the Spirit; on the contrary, he gave much opposition to the spreading of these views. See Tyerman, Oxford Methodists, p. 334.

Broughton, William G., D.D., a minister of the Church of England, was bishop of Sydney and metropolitan of Australia. After an absence from England of seventeen years, he returned to perfect a system of Church government for the colonies. In 1829, while chaplain of the Tower of London, he was offered the archdeaconry of New South Wales by the prime-minister. He had supervision over fourteen government chaplains in 1837. In the previous year he was ordained bishop, and in 1847 was made metropolitan. He organized a board of missions in 1850 for the spread of the Gospel in the islands of the Southern Pacific. He died in London, Feb. 20, 1853, aged sixty-three. His life was simple and devout. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1853, p. 158.

Brouner, JACOB H., a Baptist minister, was born in New York city, Jan. 1, 1791. He united with the First Baptist Church in 1806, was licensed when young, and for some time was associated with Rev. C. G. Sommers in missionary labors among the destitute of his native city. In 1812 he was ordained in the Tabernacle Church, New York; was pastor at Sing Sing for fourteen years; and then went in 1828 to New York, where for twenty years he was pastor of the North Baptist Church. During this time an attractive house of worship was built, and he baptized three hundred and thirty converts while at the North Church. He died in 1848. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 144. (J. C. S.)

Brousse, JACQUES, canon of St. Honoré at Paris, was a native of Auvergne, and a celebrated preacher. During the civil troubles of 1649, he remained firm to the king, and, in 1651, was deputed to Rome with M. de la Lane, on the subject of the Five Propositions. He died at Paris, Nov. 7, 1763, leaving Sermon sur la Grâce:—Lettre au Sujet de ce Sermon:—Requêtes et Mémoires au Sujet de l'Affaire des cinq Propositions de Jansénius:—Tableau de l'Homme juste:—Oraison Funèbre de Louis le Juste:—Vie du P. Ange de Joyeuse. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Browder, PETER C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Iredell County, N. C., Sept. 2, 1824. He was brought up piously; embraced religion in early life; received license to preach in 1850, and in 1851 joined the Louisville Conference. After a short and severe sickness, he died July 31, 1854. Mr. Browder was faithful, zealous, affectionate, and highly esteemed. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1854, p. 506.

Brower, Caspar, a German Jesuit and teacher of philosophy at Treves, was born in 1559 at Arnheim. For some time he was rector of the college at Fulda, and died June 2, 1617, at Treves. He wrote, Notæ in Venantium Fortunatum et Rabanum Maurum (Mayence, 1616):—Antiquitatum Fuldensium libri 4 (Antwerp, 1612):—Antiquitates et Annales Trevirenses, published by Jac. Masenius (Liege, 1670, 2 vols. fol.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 676, 794; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brower, Cornelius, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, was born in New York city in 1770. He graduated at Columbia College in 1792; studied theology under Dr. J. H. Livingston, and was licensed by the Classis of New York in 1793. He was pastor at Poughkeepsie and Stoutenburgh, 1794 to 1812; then supplied Hyde Park, 1812 to 1815. He next became professor in the high-school at Utica, and stated supply at Frankfort, 1815 to 1833. At this time he resided at Geneva, and did the work of an evangelist. He frequently supplied Arcadia, Gorham, and Tyre, from 1833 to 1845; and died in the last-named year. "Mr. Brower allowed no inclemency to prevent his filling his appointments." He was quiet, unobtrusive, and cheerful; a thorough classical scholar and mathematician; and a sound, extensive, and thorough Biblical student. He was, however, more desirous to be useful than popular. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 198.

Brower, Daniel (styled van Niedrik), a Reformed minister of Holland, was born at Yhorst in Upper Yssel. Two years after having completed his theological studies at Franeker, he went in 1651 to the East Indies with a view of preaching the Gospel to the heathen there. Having spent several years at Batavia and other places, he returned to his native country, and betook himself to the translation of the Bible into Malay. He commenced with the book of Genesis, which was printed in 1662. Five years later, in 1668, the entire New Test. was printed in Roman letters at Amsterdam; translated "with all care and fidelity out of the Greek, Latin, and Belgic languages." In consideration of his knowledge of the Malay, the East India Company induced him to go a second time to Batavia. He went to the East, and died there in 1672. Of his translation of the Old Test. only the book of Genesis was printed at Amsterdam in 1662, and again in 1687. See Allgemeines historisches Lexikon, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brower, Jacques de, a Flemish theologian, was a native of Hoochstraet. He was a Dominican, and taught philosophy and theology at Douay, and was from there sent to establish missions in Denmark. He also inspected those in Holland; and at the time of his death, which occurred at Antwerp, Nov. 4, 1637, he was prior of his convent and definitor of his province. He prepared a corrected edition of the commentaries of Dominique Soto upon the Physique d'Aristote (Douay, 1613). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brower, Kristoffel, a Dutch theologian, was born at Arnheim, in Guelders, about 1560. He became a Jesuit at Cologne in 1580, professor at Treves, and rector of the college of Fulda. He died at Treves, June 2, 1617, leaving Antiquitates Fuldenses (1612):—Historia Episcoporum Trevirensium (Cologne, 1626):—Scholiæ on the Poems of Rhabanus Maurus, etc. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Browmiller, BENNEVILLE, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Berks County, Pa., in 1824. He was converted in 1846, licensed to preach in 1848, and in 1849 entered the Ohio Conference, wherein he labored with zeal, fidelity, and remarkable success until his death, Sept. 16, 1856. Mr. Browmiller obtained a high rank as a minister. As a preacher he was clear, simple, pointed, and eloquent; affectionate, gentle, and engaging in his private life, and indefatigable in his pastoral work. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1856, p. 157.

Brown, Aaron, a Congregational minister, was born at Windsor, Conn., May 3, 1725. He graduated at Yale College in 1749, was ordained in 1754 at Killingly, and remained in charge there until his death, which occurred suddenly at Ashford, Sept. 12, 1773. Mr. Brown was a pious and excellent man. See Conn. Quarterly, 1861, p. 16; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 15.

Brown, Abraham Rezeau, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Lawrenceville, N. J., Sept. 30, 1808. He graduated from New Jersey College in 1825, and for a time studied medicine. From 1828 to 1830 he was tutor in New Jersey College. He pursued the study of theology in Princeton Theological Seminary for two years, and also studied in Yale Seminary. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, April, 1832, labored as a missionary at Morgantown, Va., from 1832 to 1833, and died at Lawrenceville, Sept. 9, 1833. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 75; Gen. Cat. of Yale Div. School, 1873, p. 12.

Brown, Absalom, a Methodist Episcopal minister, entered the itinerant ranks of the South Carolina Conference in 1828, and labored zealously until his death, in 1833. He was an humble, godly, able, and successful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 345.

Brown, Allen, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Providence, R. I., March 31, 1788. In early life he united with the Congregationalist Church at Providence, and soon after completed his school education. After having for some time been in successful business, he united with the First Baptist Church in his native city, and later went to Philadelphia, where, under the tuition of Rev. Dr. William Stoughton, he pursued a course of theological study. Returning to Providence for six years, he was pastor of the newly organized Third Baptist Church in that city. He then became a member of the Free-will Baptist Church at Olneyville, and was soon chosen chaplain of what is known as "The Dexter Asylum," continuing in that position for twenty years. He was a frequent contributor to the Morning Star. His death occurred in 1870. He left behind him the savor of a good name, and the example of a useful, exemplary life. See Barrett, Memoirs of Eminent Preachers, p. 223-229. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Alonzo, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Ossipee, N. H., May 25, 1826. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1850, and from 1853 to 1856 was a student in Union Theological Seminary. He was ordained Nov. 5, 1856; was pastor at Clifton (S. I.), N. Y., from 1856 to 1857; and from 1858 to 1873 was a teacher in New York city. He died there, in October, 1873. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 77.

Brown, Amelia, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Cirencester, England, in 1787. She was carefully educated and faithfully instructed in the Christian doctrines. Early in life she formed a strong attachment to the Scriptures, which increased as she advanced in years. She travelled through several of the English counties, exercising her gifts as a minister. She died Oct. 13, 1849. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1851, p. 9.

Brown, Amos, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Bristol, N. H., in 1800, and became a Christian at the age of twenty-seven. He united with the Church at Alexandria, and soon after began to speak in public as a minister, and was ordained to his work by his brethren. He labored with a good degree of success at Alexandria, Nashua, Orange, and other places. Not long previous to his death, he removed to Eaton, and took charge of the Church at that place, which was in a low, depressed condition. Here he labored with great fidelity and zeal. While thus engaged, he died suddenly, Dec. 7, 1867. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1869, p. 86. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Amos P., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Thornton, N. H., June 15, 1791. He was licensed to preach by the Plymouth Association, Jan. 24, 1816, and was ordained by a council at Campton, Jan. 1, 1817, pastor of the Congregational Church. From 1822 to 1834 he spent his time in western New York, and entered upon missionary labors in Missouri, June 18, 1834. He assisted in organizing a Church on Black River; became supply pastor of Jerseyville Church, Ill., in October, 1835, and so continued until 1838. In a few years he removed to Rushville, and labored in the ministry as his health allowed. He was one of the original members of the first Alton Presbytery, and removed his relation from that to the Presbytery of Peoria, April 20, 1850. He died May 16, 1859. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois.

Brown, Andrew Morton, LL.D., an English Congregational minister, was born in the parish of Loudoun, Ayrshire, Scotland, March 12, 1812. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, in the latter place having for his instructors Prof. Wilson ("Christopher North") and Dr. Chalmers. He was first engaged in mission work in London, but soon removed to Overton, Hampshire, to take charge of a small village church. In 1837 he removed to Poole, to become the co-pastor, with the Rev. Thomas Durant, of a large Church in that place. On Jan. 8, 1843, he settled as pastor of the Independent Church at Highbury Chapel, Cheltenham. Here he labored with eminent success both in religious and political work. He was regarded as the champion of liberal principles in Cheltenham. In 1854 he was elected chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. He died in the midst of his labors, July 17, 1879, having been absent from his pulpit but one Sunday. His literary works include contributions to the press of Cheltenham and London, and several volumes. Among them are, A Wreath around the Cross:—Salvation, and the Way to Secure it:—Evenings with the Prophets:—Leader of the Lollards:—Peden the Prophet:—The Life of the Rev. J. Rogers:— and, in conjunction with Dr. Ferguson, an edition of The Life and Labors of John Campbell, D.D. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 310.

Brown, Anthony, an English Congregational minister, was born in Bunhill Row, London, Sept. 7, 1783. He was for some time an occasional preacher, and finally settled at South Ockenden, where, and at Aveley, he labored faithfully in the Gospel for thirty-seven years. He died July 28, 1851. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1851, p. 212.

Brown, Arza, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Hampton, Mass., Aug. 13, 1792. He was early subject to religious impressions; experienced conversion in 1817; soon became class leader, exhorter, and local preacher; moved to Ohio in 1819, and in 1824 was received into the Ohio Conference. His itinerant labors covered a large territory, extending over nearly all of Ohio and southern Michigan. Failing health obliged him to become superannuate in 1855, which relation he sustained to the close of his life. In 1858 he removed to Chicago, and served West Indiana-street Church with great usefulness for three years. Beginning with 1861, he and his wife labored among the soldiers in the camps and hospitals at Natchez; after that, until 1868, among the freedmen in that city, as well as in Vicksburg and Baton Rouge. He died at Chicago, July 31, 1869. Mr. Brown was eminently practical and useful, gentle and affectionate. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 281.

Brown, B. F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a member of the Black River Conference, and died in 1867 or 1868. As to his personal character he was remarkable, and physically powerful and well-formed. The fires of love and zeal were far too fierce for the control of his will. He lived and died in raptures. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 118.

Brown, Benjamin Newton, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Martinsburg, Va., Dec. 19, 1808. He experienced conversion in 1824, soon after was licensed to exhort, then to preach, and in 1833 united with the Baltimore Conference. He died in Washington, D. C., Jan. 17, 1869. Mr. Brown's endowments were of a high order. He was strong in mind, diligent in study, earnest and impressive in manner, fearless in utterance; genial, witty, and even playful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 13.

Brown, Caleb, a Baptist minister, was born in Sudbury, Mass., Dec. 4, 1791. In early manhood he removed to Rockingham, Vt., where he united with that Church. He spent about two years at the theological institution in Hamilton, N. Y.; in 1829 became pastor of the Church in Wilton, N. H., and subsequently preached in Townsend, Winchester, and Westminster, Mass. For three years he was pastor in Scituate, then removed to Warner, N. H., and supplied churches in the vicinity. In 1842 he went to Weare, remaining there nearly three years, then returned to Warner and labored as before. In 1851 he became pastor of the Church at Conway. At the end of three years he took up his residence in Concord, where for four years he acted as chaplain in the state prison. He died at Concord, Oct. 30, 1875. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Chad, a Baptist minister, the ancestor of the well-known family which bears his name in Providence, R. I., was born in England about 1610. He came to America, it is supposed, in July, 1638. Sympathizing with Roger Williams in his views on civil and religious liberty, he fled from the colony of Massachusetts, and took up his residence in the newly planted town of Providence. In the early colonial times he was a man of no small influence in the community in which he lived. With four other citizens he was chosen to draw up "a plan of agreement for the peace and government of the colony." For several years this instrument constituted the only acknowledged constitution by which the colony was governed. By the records of the First Baptist Church in Providence, it appears that Mr. Brown was its first elder or regular minister, although for a short time Roger Williams preached for the Church. The Church for more than half a century had no meeting-house. The tradition is that they were wont "to assemble in a grove or orchard for public worship, and, when the weather would not permit this, in private houses." Mr. Brown's name has been made somewhat memorable in the ecclesiastical history of Rhode Island, from the position which he took in a controversy which seems to have greatly agitated the little state. He maintained very stoutly the obligation of the rite of "laying-on of hands" as necessary to constitute one a member of Christ's Church. This rite, however, has long since, except by a few Baptists of Rhode Island, ceased to be regarded as of divine authority. Mr. Brown died about 1665. His name and influence were transmitted through an honored posterity, which has made itself felt in many of the literary and benevolent organizations of its native state. See Guild, Life of Manning. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Charles, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in England in 1817. He early yielded himself to the Holy Spirit and his future work. It was not, however, until he was about forty years old that he ventured to address his friends in public. This long delay was owing to his high ideal of the Christian ministry. He realized fully the need of mental preparation, but pre-eminently above this he placed the spiritual. He died Jan. 1, 1864. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1865, p. 14.

Brown, Charles Eden, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Alexandria, Va., in 1815. He was converted while a boy, and entered the Baltimore Conference in 1837, in which he toiled faithfully until his death, July 13, 1846. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1846, p. 9.

Brown, Charles L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Campbell County, Va. He experienced conversion in 1868; was licensed to exhort and to preach in due time, and about 1872 entered the Missouri Conference, in which he labored faithfully two years, when sickness prostrated him, and after months of suffering he died, in 1874 or 1875. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 46.

Brown, Charles S., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Plattekill, Ulster Co., N. Y., Feb. 7, 1825. He inherited admirable natural qualities from exemplary Christian parents. His intention was to become a lawyer, and he determined to obtain a liberal education, which he began in New Paltz Academy, afterwards attending Amenia Seminary. Here he was converted, and, believing himself divinely called to preach, was more diligent than ever in his efforts to secure an education. Entering the Wesleyan University in 1845, in 1849 he graduated second in a class of thirty-one. He joined the New York Conference in 1850, where he continued an efficient and honored member until his death, Nov. 14, 1880. He was a sincere and upright man, the chief feature of his character being its high moral tone. His preaching was uniformly clear, forcible, and fervent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 84.

Brown, Charles Smith, a Universalist minister, was born in Oneida County, N. Y., March 20, 1804. He joined the Methodists at the age of fourteen; received a private theological training for the Universalist ministry, and in 1832 was ordained, and entered upon his work at South Oxford. He afterwards removed to Upper Lisle; then spent a few years in Pennsylvania; then in Oneida and Cortland counties, N. Y.; and finally settled at Cambridge, Ill., where he died, in May, 1870. Mr. Brown was a good, but not brilliant, preacher, and an exemplary Christian. See Universalist Register, 1871, p. 110.

Brown, Clark, A.M., a Congregational minister, was ordained pastor of the Church in Machias, Me., Oct. 7, 1795; dismissed Nov. 3, 1797; installed pastor in Brimfield, Mass., June 20, 1798; dismissed Nov. 2, 1803; and died several years after. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 485.

Brown, Cotton, a Congregational minister, was a native of Haverhill, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1743; was ordained pastor at Brookline, Oct. 26, 1748; and died April 13, 1751, aged twenty-five years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 73.

Brown, Daniel (1), a Free-will Baptist minister, was born July 16, 1813. He united with the Church in Haverhill, N. Y., in 1834. For six years he resided in Boston, N. Y., and in 1848 moved to Dayton, Cataugaus Co. He was ordained when forty-seven years of age, and labored chiefly in the Cataugaus and Erie quarterly meetings. "With a self-sacrificing spirit he labored earnestly and faithfully the most of the time for twenty years, receiving but little remuneration for preaching until the means he had accumulated previous to his entering the ministry were entirely used up." He died in Dayton, Aug. 5, 1882. See Morning Star, Sept. 27, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Daniel (2), a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Canada West, April 5, 1822. He was converted when eighteen years of age, and joined the Methodist Church. Subsequently he united with the Free-will Baptists, and was ordained in 1845. For several years, with a good degree of success, he labored in different places in Canada. He removed to the West, and died at Bruce, Mich., Aug. 3, 1869. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1871, p. 80, 81. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Daniel E., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, resided in Michigan in 1853, at about which time he entered the ministry. The following year he became rector at Litchfield, Conn.; in 1857 officiated at Milton; in 1858 was rector of Trinity Church, Troy, O., and at the same time of St. Paul's in Greenville. In 1860 he removed to Michigan, residing at Flint; in 1862 became rector of St. Paul's Church, East Saginaw; in 1864 was missionary in Genesee County, although still residing at Flint. In 1866 he removed to Ionia, having charge of two churches, viz. St. John's in Ionia and Trinity Church, Saranac; in 1867 was rector of the latter only. In 1870 he resided in Flint without charge, and continued so to do until his death, which occurred in 1873. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1874, p. 138.

Brown, David (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Scotland. On his arrival in America, he became a member of the Presbytery of New Castle, and took his place in the Synod of Philadelphia in May, 1748. He returned to Scotland during the year. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Brown, David (2), an English clergyman, was educated at Magdalen College, Cambridge. He became chaplain to the East India Company in 1794, and provost of the College of Fort William in 1800. He died in 1812. A volume of Memorial Sketches, with a selection of his sermons, appeared in 1816, edited by the Rev. Charles Simeon. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brown, David (3), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in the county of Down, Ireland, in 1760. He entered the itinerant connection in 1794; travelled nine years on Dutchess, Columbia, Croton, New Rochelle, Long Island, Redding, Litchfield, and Cambridge Circuits; and died Sept. 5, 1803. Mr. Brown was a man of unaffected piety, gentleness, and cheerfulness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1804, p. 117.

Brown, David (4), a Cherokee Indian who took special interest in the intellectual and spiritual improvement of his tribe, was born about the beginning of the present century. He received his education at a school established at Brainerd by Rev. Cyrus Kingsbury, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. At this school he became a decided Christian, and set out for Cornwall, Conn., to attend the Foreign Mission School, to fit himself for a preacher. He spent one year in the Andover Theological Seminary, to perfect himself in the work of preparation. In due time he returned to his own people, and devoted himself with great zeal to missionary work for several years. His death occurred in the spring of 1829. See Anderson's Memoir; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Brown, David (5), an English Congregational minister, was born in Forfar, Scotland, March 27, 1804. He was apprenticed to his father as a linen-weaver, but was more fond of books than the loom. He taught two years at King's Muir, and then several years in Forfar. He at first joined the Established Church, but in 1837 connected himself with the Congregational Church. Soon after this he studied at the universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh, with a view to the ministry, and then for several years supplied vacant churches and itinerated in various parts of the country. In 1846 he was ordained over the Church at Harray, Orkney, where he labored eight years, and then became pastor at Cullen, where he died, April, 1862. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 212.

Brown, Duncan, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Robinson County, N. C., Oct. 3, 1771. He received a good academical education, studied theology privately, and was licensed by Orange Presbytery in 1801. In 1802 he accepted a call to Hopewell Church, S. C., where he remained for ten years. During his latter years he had no charge. He died July 6, 1861. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 82.

Brown, Ebenezer, a Congregational minister, was born at Brimfield, Mass. He studied theology, and was first settled as pastor over the Congregational Church in the north parish of Wilbraham, March 3, 1819. He resigned this charge, July, 1827, and was installed three months later over the Congregational Church in Prescott, where he continued until March, 1835. He left this Church to accept a call to the Second Church in Hadley. In 1838 he went from this position to Illinois under a commission from the American Home Missionary Society, and settled first in Byron, Ogle Co. In November, 1843, he aided in forming the Congregational Church in Roscoe, and two months later assumed its pastoral charge. He died there, Feb. 13, 1872. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1870-80, sup.

Brown, Edward, an English Congregational minister, was born in Edinburgh, Aug. 21, 1797. In early manhood he removed to London, was there converted, and offered his services to the Irish Evangelical Society. He studied three years at their academy in Dublin, and in 1821 was given a charge at Kilmainham. Thence he removed to Limerick, where for six years he labored very abundantly as an assistant. Between 1830 and 1841 he preached successively at Birr, Newry, Carrickfergus, and Limerick, when he returned to England. He next preached three years in Lincoln, and then went to Leeds, where he became chaplain to the Cemetery, in which office he continued until his death, July 25, 1860. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1861, p. 205.

Brown, Edwin C., a Baptist minister, was born at New London, Conn., Nov. 28, 1807. He graduated at Madison University, N. Y., in 1838; was ordained immediately afterwards in Hudson; and began to preach as a missionary in Franklin, Mo. In consequence of his outspoken views on the subject of slavery, after a single year of service, he resigned; and, after supplying a pulpit at St. Louis for six months, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he remained five years. He filled an engagement at Galena for three months, and then accepted a call to Lonsdale, R. I. His other pastorates were at Port Richmond, Pa.; Beverly, N. J.; Wabash, Ind.; Bath and Westmoreland, N. Y.; and Oxford, Ill. In consequence of ill-health he retired from the pastorate, and continued his ministerial work only as a supply in places in Illinois. He died in Galva, Jan. 16, 1881. See Chicago Standard, Feb. 3, 1881; Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1881, p. 11. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Eleazar, a Baptist minister, pastor of the First Baptist Church of North Stonington, was ordained in 1770, and died June 20, 1795. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 109.

Brown, Eli H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Troupsburg, N. Y., in 1837. He received a godly training, joined the Church in his childhood, and in 1859 entered the East Genesee Conference. In 1862 sickness obliged him to become a supernummate, which relation he sustained to the time of his death, March 21, 1865. Mr. Brown was earnest, full of the Spirit and faith, and successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 241.

Brown, Elias P., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Strafford, Vt., April 17, 1792, and in early life became a Christian. Having been set apart to the work of the ministry, he labored for many years in his Master's cause. Later in life he removed to Amherst, O., where he continued to reside until his death, Aug. 29, 1869. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1869, p. 86. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Elijah, a Congregational minister, was a native of Waltham, Mass. He graduated at Harvard College in 1765; was ordained pastor of the Church in Sherburne, Nov. 28, 1770; and died Oct. 24, 1816, aged seventy-two years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 514.

Brown, Esek, a Baptist minister, was born at Warren, R. I., Sept. 17, 1787. He united with the Church in Hardwick, Mass., in 1809; was licensed by the Church in West Sutton, Feb. 20, 1814; and ordained pastor of the Church in Dudley, June 15, 1815. Here he remained till the fall of 1818, when he went to Lebanon, Conn., which was his residence during the remainder of his life. He died Sept. 11, 1833. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 144. (J. C. S.)

Brown, E. T., a Baptist minister, was born in Lancaster, Pa., March 22, 1818. While residing in Greensburg he was converted and joined a Methodist Church, and subsequently united with a Baptist Church in Virginia. In 1842 he was ordained, and was pastor of three churches successively in Ohio—Mount Vernon, Wooster, and Warren. In 1863 he was appointed chaplain in the Second Ohio Cavalry, and served till the close of the war. For some time he resided at Sedalia, Mo., where he accomplished much spiritual good among the people. He died June 9, 1879. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 144. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Fountain, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Tennessee about 1808. There he was converted, licensed to preach, in 1830 admitted into the Tennessee Conference, and immediately transferred to the Missouri Conference. In 1863 he was arrested by the Federal authorities and sent to Alton (Ill.) Penitentiary, where he remained until December, 1865. He reached the neighborhood of his home about Dec. 25, 1865, when he was suddenly attacked by disease, and in a few hours died. Mr. Brown was an earnest and faithful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 80.

Brown, Frank, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Warren County, Pa., Jan. 30, 1837. He was converted at fifteen; graduated at Allegheny College at eighteen; served four years as professor in the university at Athens, O., two years as superintendent of schools in Allegheny City, Pa., one year as tutor in Allegheny College, and in 1863 entered the Erie Conference. When the Conference was divided, he fell into the East Ohio. His appointments were, Delaware Grove, Sheakleyville, Conneautville, Girard, Bristol, Jefferson, Tidoute; Scoville Avenue, Cleveland; and New Philadelphia. At the close of this last pastorate ill-health compelled him to take a supernumerary relation, which he held until his death at Chautauqua, N. Y., Aug. 3, 1881. He lived a pure and blameless life, approaching the ideal as a minister of the Gospel. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 319.

Brown, Frederick H., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Stockbridge, Mass., Nov. 1, 1806. He united with the First Presbyterian Church in Auburn in 1826; was educated at Auburn Theological Seminary, N. Y. (1832-35); was licensed by Cayuga Presbytery in 1836, and installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Ludlowville, where he remained over a year. His subsequent fields of labor were Brownhelm, O. (six years), Medina (seven years), Cleveland (as chaplain, a year and a half), Youngstown (three years and a half), and finally as chaplain again until 1858. He died July 31, 1861. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 178; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Theol. Sem. 1883, p. 220.

Brown, Garrett Garney, a Congregational minister, was born at Bethlehem, Conn., in 1784. He prepared for college partly with a private instructor, and partly at Morris Academy, Litchfield; and entered college in the sophomore year. After graduating he taught in Milford, Conn., for one term, and then became a student in Andover Theological Seminary. He remained there until licensed to preach by the New Haven East Association in 1811. The next fifty years of his life were spent in the Southern and South-western States, where he taught in private families and in select schools; preaching also as opportunity offered, though not ordained. During these years he had no fixed residence, and scarcely remained for a year in any one place. In 1854 he visited the Sandwich Islands and opened a private school, but returned the next year to the South. After the war broke out he came back to his native town. The closing part of his life was spent in Woodbury, Conn., where he died, Oct. 1, 1878. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1871.

Brown, George (1), a Scottish prelate, was chancellor of Aberdeen, and rector of Tinningham in East Lothian, and was consecrated bishop of Dunkeld in 1484. He was witness to the charter of regality granted to the abbey of Paisley by king James IV, Aug. 19, 1488.

He died Jan. 12, 1515. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 91.

Brown, George (2), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born in 1750. He was converted at the age of twenty-two, entered the travelling connection in 1776, preached thirty years, and died in 1822. He lived as he preached. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1822.

Brown, George (3), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Halifax County, Va., about 1771. He experienced conversion in his twenty-first year, and, after discharging the duties of a local preacher for twelve years, was in 1818 admitted into the Kentucky Conference, wherein he served until his death, Dec. 12, 1823. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1825, p. 474; Meth. Magazine, viii, 166.

Brown, George (4), an English Baptist minister, was born in 1777. He seems to have commenced his ministry in Sadden, Lancashire, where he remained two years, and then removed to Kington, in Herefordshire, where he was pastor eight years. About 1822 he was invited to take charge of the Church in South Shields, Durham. Here he remained during the rest of his life. He is said to have experienced heavy trials, through all of which the Lord carried him. He died Aug. 26, 1842. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1843, p. 21. (J. C. S.)

Brown, George (5), a Methodist Protestant minister, was born in West Pennsylvania, Jan. 29, 1792. He was converted in 1813, began the Methodist Episcopal itinerant life in 1815, and after one year under the presiding elder, entered the Baltimore Conference, which then included West Pennsylvania. In 1825 he became a member of the Pittsburgh Conference, and so continued, filling some of its principal stations, and serving four years as presiding elder, until 1829, when he took a prominent part in the organization of the Methodist Protestant Church, and commenced his first pastorate in that body in the same year. In 1831 Mr. Brown was elected president of his Conference, and served in this relation three years. In 1838 he was placed in charge of the Ohio Circuit, in 1839 elected president of his Conference, in 1840 stationed at Pittsburgh, in 1842 again elected president, in 1845 appointed Conference missionary, in 1846 again president, and thus continued to vibrate between the presidency and pastoral office until 1860, when he was elected editor of the Western Methodist Protestant at Springfield, O., in which office he served two years, producing many useful theological and ecclesiastical articles. He then took a superannuated relation at his home in Springfield, where he died, Oct. 25, 1871. Mr. Brown was a prodigious worker, a finely educated man, and a devoted Christian. After retiring from the editorial service, he published his Recollections of Itinerant Life (8vo, 456 pages), and an autobiography of great interest, full of incident, and details of travel, Gospel labors, and experiences. See Bassett, Hist. of the Meth. Prot. Church, p. 369.

Brown, George F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New Jersey, March 18, 1809. He was converted at sixteen years of age, licensed to preach in 1828, and joined the Philadelphia Conference in 1829. He was a pastor nineteen years, a presiding elder fourteen years, chaplain of New Jersey state prison two years, and supernumerary eighteen years. In 1848, 1852, 1856, and 1860, he was a delegate to the General Conference. He died of paralysis, in Cincinnati, March 20, 1881. He was a man of excellent mind, fervent piety, and intense loyalty to the Church and his Master. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1882, p. 80.

Brown, George Jay, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Brainard, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1839. He was admitted to the bar in Albany, N. Y., at the age of twenty. Soon after he received a divine call, and commenced studying for the ministry. He prepared for college at Fort Edward Institute, and entered the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Conn., in 1865. While in college he supplied vacant pulpits as he had opportunity, and under the pressure of over-work his mind became deranged. After two years spent in an asylum reason was restored, and, returning to the university, he graduated with honor in 1873. Entering Drew Theological Seminary, he studied (1873-75), preached, and taught, gaining a reputation for critical scholarship, deep religious experience, and pulpit ability far beyond his years. He had joined the Troy Conference in 1868, and, after completing his education, he now occupied two of its most prominent appointments, Schenectady and State Street, Troy. At his second appointment symptoms of his former malady returned, and although he sought relief by rest and travel, reason again left her seat, and he was removed to the Utica Asylum, where he died, Dec. 2, 1880. To do the will of God was "his meat and drink." The Bible was "the man of his counsel." He possessed wonderful power of mental abstraction and concentration of thought. He could study anywhere. Although stricken down in middle life, he lived longer by living better than most men. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 93.

Brown, George L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore, Md., in January, 1809. He was converted in 1830, and in 1834 joined the Baltimore Conference, from which time, until 1841, he was, on account of ill-health, obliged to hold a supernumerary relation. He then assumed the active relation, and labored faithfully and successfully until his sudden death, in 1843. Mr. Brown possessed ordinary ministerial talents, deep piety, and much patience. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 412.

Brown, George R. (1), a native of Western Africa, became an assistant missionary of the Wesleyan Society in 1850. He died at Cape Coast, Aug. 17, 1854, aged forty-five years, and was followed to the grave by the governor and staff, with a multitude of people, making great lamentation. Mr. Brown was a man of excellent spirit and acceptable talents. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Brown, George R. (2), a Universalist minister, was born at Watertown, N. Y., Oct. 6, 1806. He removed with his parents to Peru, O., in 1823, where for some years he worked on the farm summers and attended the district school winters. He was ordained to the Universalist ministry in 1837, and labored in Northern Ohio and Indiana, and Southern Michigan, serving largely as a pioneer. He died May 9, 1873. Mr. Brown possessed a special gift as counsellor and comforter to the afflicted, was mighty in the Scriptures, a firm and zealous advocate of temperance, and his life was above reproach. See Universalist Register, 1874, p. 127.

Brown, Hartwell Harwell, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Virginia. He was well educated, experienced conversion in 1818, and later in the same year entered the Tennessee Conference. He soon rose to eminence, but after filling several of the first appointments of the Conference, located on his farm, and soon began merchandising. He possessed a large fortune, which soon was lost in business failures, and he was again brought into the active ranks of the ministry. For two or three years previous to his death he sustained a superannuated relation, and to a large degree became insane. He died in 1868. Mr. Brown was of robust form, had a fine voice, and an agreeable manner. In his better days his sermons were full of thought, and delivered with much power. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1868, p. 251.

Brown, Harvey, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New England in 1793. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812, experienced religion in 1820, and in 1829 joined the New York Conference. In 1851 and 1852 he labored in the Illinois Conference, in the following year located, and in 1866 re-entered the

New York Conference as a superannuate, and continued to sustain that relation until his death, in Harlem, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1870. Mr. Brown was a man of strong convictions, deep, positive, and unintermittent piety, and great faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 108.

Brown, Henry, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., Nov. 28, 1804. He received his early education at home, and graduated at Washington College, Va., in 1827. After leaving college he taught for a few months, and entered Princeton Theological Seminary, but in consequence of severe illness was obliged to leave. He next entered Union Seminary, but did not remain long, for the same cause. He was licensed by Lexington Presbytery, and ordained by the same an evangelist in 1831. He commenced his labors at Tygart's Valley, extending his missionary labors to Kanawha County, preaching at Beverly, Huttonville, Mingo Flats, and Woodstock. His next field of labor was Augusta County, and subsequently he was a supply at Briery Church, Prince Edward County. He then removed to Wilmington, N. C., where, and in neighboring churches, he labored with great success. In 1840 he returned to the valley of Virginia, supplied Black River and Rock Fish churches, and afterwards the Church of Harrisonburg. His first pastoral charge was Goshen Church at Crab Bottom, where he was installed, which relation was dissolved in 1857, and at the same time he was also pastor of Pisgah Church. Compelled to seek a milder climate, he removed to Alligator (now Lake City), Fla., where he was duly installed. He next labored as a missionary in the Cherokee Presbytery, residing at Lafayette, Ga. A sunstroke compelled him to lay aside work for a time. Returning to Virginia, he taught school for six months, and was afterwards missionary to the sick and wounded soldiers in the hospitals at Richmond, and for a while post-chaplain of the Confederate army. At the close of the war he made a pedestrian journey of two hundred miles in south-western Virginia, preaching nearly every day. For one year he supplied Lafayette and Harmony churches, Ala. They were twelve miles apart, and he visited them on foot, calling on every family on his way. He then went to Tennessee, and labored five years as an evangelist in Knoxville Presbytery. Another sunstroke led him again to Florida, where he preached at Pilatka, Enterprise, and Cedar Keys. He finally went to Marlin, Tex., where he died, Jan. 14, 1881. See Princeton Necrolog. Report, 1881, p. 25. (W. P. S.)

Brown, Henry Bell, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Chester-le-Street, Durham, June 8, 1808. He was converted in his thirteenth year, while at school at Houghton-le-Spring. In 1832 he received his first appointment. In 1846 he was laid aside by affliction. He died at Workington, Cumberland, Feb. 11, 1856. He was studious and devoted. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1856.

Brown, Henry C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Springfield, Bradford Co., Pa., Nov. 3, 1833. He grew up a wayward youth, though reared by Christian parents, but experienced conversion when about twenty, and in 1856 entered the East Genesee Conference. In the latter part of 1859 he was attacked by illness, became superannuated early next year, and died Sept. 22, 1860. Mr. Brown was an able minister, though only possessing a partial education. He was characterized by great earnestness, fidelity, and strong faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861, p. 140.

Brown, Horace, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Kennebec County, Me., Nov. 11, 1799. He removed to Indiana with his parents while quite young, joined the Church when about eighteen, and subsequently became a member of the Missouri Conference, and in it labored many years with great distinction. He died Jan. 1, 1872. Mr. Brown, in his ministerial and domestic life, was an exemplary man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 737.

Brown, Isaac, an English Wesleyan minister, whom Wesley was wont to call "Honest Isaac Brown," was born at Hawkesworth, near Otley. He commenced his ministry in 1760, and continued it until infirmities forced him to desist, in 1803. He settled at Pontefract, and died in 1815. He was a man of child-like innocence, was greatly beloved by John Wesley, and worked hard and long and well. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1815.

Brown, Jacob A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Morristown, N. J., Sept. 15, 1810. He became a Christian in early manhood, in due time was licensed to exhort and to preach, and in 1834 entered the Ohio Conference. On the formation of the North Ohio Conference he became a member of it. During his later years he sustained a superannuated relation, retired to Delaware, O., and engaged in mercantile business, where, by his integrity, fair dealing, and genuine piety, he won the high respect of all. He died Jan. 26, 1879. As a preacher Mr. Brown was clear, tender, and scriptural. He was an affectionate man and a faithful Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 39.

Brown, James (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Connecticut. He was licensed by Suffolk Presbytery, and was called to Bridgehampton, and ordained in June, 1748. The loss of health compelled him to lay aside his pastoral work in March, 1775, and he died April 22, 1788. He was a judicious, spiritual preacher, laborious and successful. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Brown, James (2), an English missionary in the province of Georgia during the latter part of the last century, published, The Restoration of All Things (1785):—and Civil Government (1792). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brown, James (3), a preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was born in April, 1828, at Rochester, Kent, of Wesleyan parents. He was converted under the ministry of Rev. Joseph New, who, when he went as a missionary to Africa, sent for his young friend as a teacher in the African school, and Brown soon became a school inspector there. His health failed, and he returned home, and travelled in six English circuits. He died Feb. 6, 1878. See Minutes of 22d Annual Association.

Brown, James Allen, D.D., LL.D., a Lutheran theologian, was born in Lancaster County, Pa. He was of Quaker descent, but reared under Presbyterian influences. In 1811 he entered the senior class of Pennsylvania College, from which he graduated in 1842. Having become acquainted with the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, he united with that body, and resolved to devote himself to the work of the ministry. He studied at Baltimore under Drs. J. G. Morris and B. Kurtz. Having completed his studies, he was licensed by the Maryland Synod, and became pastor of Luther Chapel in Baltimore. He subsequently was called to York, Pa., and from thence to Reading. In 1860 he was elected professor of theology of the Theological Seminary of the South, at Newberry, S. C. On the breaking-out of hostilities in 1861, he withdrew and returned to the North, and became chaplain of the hospital and military post established at York. In 1865 he was elected professor of theology of the Gettysburg Seminary, in which he labored with distinguished ability and success until December, 1879, when he was stricken with paralysis, which deprived him of his speech. He resigned his position in June, 1880, and died at Lancaster, June 19, 1882. (B. P.)

Brown, James Francis, a Congregational minister, was born in 1820, and graduated from Cambridge Theological School in 1848. In November of the same year he accepted a call from the First Congregational Church, West Cambridge, Mass., where he labored earnestly and successfully till his death, June 14, 1853. Mr. Brown was a sincere Christian man, full of kind sympathies, and eminently faithful in all the duties of his sacred office. See The Christian Examiner (Boston), 1853, p. 312.

Brown, James Willis, a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. Nathaniel Brown, was born in Fairview, Ind., in 1850. He joined the Church in 1859; was converted at his father's family altar a few years later; received license to exhort in 1869, to preach in 1870; and in the same year entered the North Indiana Conference. In 1872 he entered the North-western University to complete his education, but had studied but a short time when failing health obliged him to return home. He continued to preach until prostrated with consumption, of which he died, Sept. 21, 1873. Mr. Brown was possessed of a clear and logical mind, studious in habit, earnest as a speaker, warm in his attachments, cheerful in disposition, and devoted to his calling. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 53.

Brown, Jesse, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Amherst County, Va., July 17, 1782. He received a pious training; joined the Church in 1806; received license to preach in 1808; and in 1809 entered the North Carolina Conference, wherein he served until his death, Nov. 8, 1812. Mr. Brown's life was pious, zealous, and full of good works. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1813, p. 222.

Brown, John (1), an English martyr, was miserably treated because he rebuked the priest, and was burned at Ashford in 1517. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 181.

Brown, John (2), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Laleham, Middlesex, June 1, 1639. He was among the first who, in his native county, embraced the doctrines and followed the practices of the Friends. He became a member of the monthly meeting of Kingston-upon-Thames, where the meeting-house was built, and continued a member thereof forty-eight years. After he became a minister he "was very zealous, not fearing the trials and persecutions that came upon him." He was in prison at the time of the great fire in London in 1666, and was obliged to carry his bed out on his back when the prison was burned. He remained steadfast in the truth to the last, and died at the house of his son-in-law, in Blackman street, Southwark, May 6, 1723. See Piety Promoted, ii, 362. (J. C. S.)

Brown, John (3), was the first settled pastor of the first Church in New Jersey, founded at Middletown in 1688, and he gave the lot on which the first meeting-house in that place was built. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 12.

Brown, John (4), a minister of the Scotch Church at Rotterdam, died in 1679. He published, Christ the Way, the Truth, and the Life (1677):—Quakerism the Pathway to Paganism, in answer to R. Barclay's Apology (1678):—An Explanation of the Epistle to the Romans (1679). In theology he was a Calvinist of the old school, and a man of learning and piety. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brown, John (5), a Unitarian minister of Haverhill, Mass., was born in 1706, and died in 1752. He published a Sermon on the Death of Thomas Symmes (1726).

Brown, John (6), a Unitarian minister, was born at Haverhill, Mass., in 1724, and graduated at Harvard College in 1741. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Church in Cohasset, Sept. 2, 1747. He died Oct. 22, 1791. He published a sermon entitled, In what Sense the Heart is Deceitful. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 6.

Brown, John (7), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland in 1728. He graduated at Nassau Hall in 1749, was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery, and sent to the valley of Virginia. He received a call from Timber Ridge and Providence, and was ordained and installed Oct. 11, 1753. He resigned his charge after a pastorate of twenty-three years, and removed to Kentucky. He died in 1808. See Index to Princeton Review. (W. P. S.)

Brown, John (8), an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Helmsley Black-moor, Yorkshire, in 1782. He was converted in his sixteenth year, and, three years after, he left the farm for the ministry. He preached at Berwick-upon-Tweed, Howden (1803), Liverpool, Manchester, and Wakefield. While attending the Conference at Sheffield (1811), he was seized with catarrhal fever; this was aggravated by his journey, first to his native place, and then to London, to which city he was appointed by the Conference, so that he died soon after his arrival, Sept. 17, 1811. "In mental vigor, moral worth, studious diligence, ministerial ability and spiritual usefulness, he excelled most of his contemporaries." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1812; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1819, p. 241.

Brown, John (9) (of Ossawatimie), a fanatical reformer, was born at Torrington, Conn., May 9, 1800. He removed to Ohio in early youth, and became a tanner and currier. In 1839 he conceived the idea of liberating the southern slaves, and retained it during the rest of his life. In 1846 he removed to Springfield, Mass., and engaged in the wool trade, and afterwards visited Europe. In 1855 he emigrated to Kansas, where he took an active part in the anti-slavery struggle. In May, 1859, he called a secret convention of the friends of freedom, which met at Chatham, Canada, organized an invasion of Virginia for the purpose of liberating the slaves, and adopted a constitution. In July of that year he rented a farm-house about six miles from Harper's Ferry, and collected there a supply of pikes, guns, and munitions. On the night of Oct. 16, with the aid of about twenty men, he surprised Harper's Ferry, captured the arsenal and armory, and took over forty prisoners. About noon the next day his party was attacked and defeated by the Virginia militia, and himself wounded and taken prisoner. He was tried in November, and hung at Charlestown, Va., Dec. 2, 1859. He was a devout member of the Congregational Church, and a man of strict moral character, unflinching courage, and intense earnestness. He met his death with the composure of a hero. See Redpath, Life of Captain John Brown (1860); Webb, Life and Letters of Captain John Brown (Lond. 1861); Greeley, Amer. Conflict, vol. i.

Brown, John (10), an English Congregational minister, was born at Denny, Stirling, April 24, 1811. He was early converted, and began to labor in the Christian cause. In 1833 he entered Blackburn Academy, and in 1837 he became the pastor of the churches of Wirksworth and Middleton, in Derbyshire, where he remained nineteen years. In 1857, after a brief period of rest, he accepted the pastorate of the churches of Hambledon and Skirment, near Henley-on-Thames, where he continued for eleven years. In 1868 symptoms of failing health led him to remove into Shropshire, and after two years, the entire failure of his health induced him to retire to Matlock, where he died, March 22, 1880. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 359.

Brown, John (11), an English Wesleyan minister, father of Rev. John Brown, who began his ministry in 1822, commenced his long career in the sacred office in 1807. He preached in England until 1816, when he and James Catts were sent to commence a Wesleyan mission in Hayti, W. I., being the first Protestant missionaries to enter the French-speaking part of St. Domingo. After two years' effort they were compelled to leave Port au Prince in consequence of the riotous opposition of the natives, stimulated by the Roman Catholic priesthood, the feeble republican government being unable to afford them protection (this mission was re-established in 1834 by John Tindall). Resuming his labors at home, he was appointed to several of the most important circuits, until, through failing strength, he retired from the activities of the travelling ministry, and settled in Chelsea, London. He died Aug. 11, 1867, in his eighty-second year. Mr. Brown's habits were retiring, his spirit peaceful and benevolent, his pastorate vigilant and kind, his sermons instructive and serious. He was a sound theologian, an upright man, beloved by his brethren. A few of his sermons were published, and he translated a memoir from the French. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1868, p. 10.

Brown, John (12), an English Wesleyan missionary, received his first appointment in 1841 to St. Christopher, W. I., after having attended the theological institution. He labored successfully until removed by a short affliction to his eternal rest, Sept. 17, 1843, aged twenty-four years. He was distinguished for piety, love of souls, and discretion. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1844.

Brown, John C., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New Jersey, was born in New York city in 1828. He was ordained deacon in 1846; became rector of Christ Church, Walton, from 1847 to 1860; of St. Paul's, Trenton, from 1862 to 1877; and died in Trenton, March 28, 1877. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Brown, John D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Kishacoquillas Valley, Pa., Nov. 8, 1834, and was left dependent on his own resources very early in life by the decease of his father. After receiving a common-school education he studied at Tuscarora Academy and Jefferson College; and in 1859 entered the East Baltimore Conference. In 1861 he volunteered as a missionary to India, sailed in August of that year, and about one year after his arrival was preaching to that people in their native language. While in India his fields of labor were Moradabad, February to November, 1862; Shahjehanpore, December, 1862, to December, 1864; and Seetapoor, January, 1865, to 1870, when the failing health of his wife obliged him to return to America. While in Seetapoor Mr. Brown translated into the native language, Church Polity, by bishop Morris; Evidences of Christianity; Mitchell's Letters to Indian Youth; Whirlpool of Intemperance, and many valuable works. He was also the author and publisher of Inquirer after Truth, and many other valuable Sunday-school books. On his arrival home he immediately began a diligent representation, among various churches, of the foreign mission work. In 1871 he was given charge of First Church, Carlisle, Pa. At the end of the year, his wife's health having recovered, he sailed again for India. He first settled in Shahjehanpore, where he served as a member of the publishing committee in addition to teaching and preaching. Thence he went to Bareilly, where for nearly three years he devoted his time to ministerial duties, the translation of the Berean Sunday-school lessons, and devising Sunday-school picture-books for the natives. His health then becoming too feeble for the severity of the climate, he again returned to the home of his childhood in 1876. In 1877 he applied to his home Conference for work, and was appointed to traverse it as Sunday-school and tract agent. He made Harrisburg his home, and died there Feb. 17, 1878. Mr. Brown's love and zeal for the missionary cause were unbounded. He was a man of strong faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 36.

Brown, John Howe, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Kentucky, and spent the greater part of his ministerial life there. He was a pastor in Richmond, and afterwards in Lexington. In 1854 he was stated supply at Jacksonville, Ill.; in 1855 he removed to Springfield, where he ministered to the First and Second Presbyterian Churches. His last field of labor was in Chicago, where he spent two years, and died Feb. 23, 1872, aged seventy-seven years. He was a man of power in the pulpit. See (N. Y.) Presbyterian, March 9, 1872.

Brown, John M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Mayfield, N. Y., Aug. 12, 1835. He removed to Steuben County, Ind., about 1853; served as a soldier in the Federal army over three years; in 1870 began preaching, and at the close of that year entered the North Indiana Conference, wherein he labored with zeal and fidelity until his sudden death, Jan. 18, 1878. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 53.

Brown, John Newton, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at New London, Conn., June 29, 1803. When quite young his parents removed to Hudson, N. Y. He pursued his studies at the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution (now Madison University), and graduated with an honorable standing in 1823. Shortly afterwards he was settled as pastor of the Church in Buffalo, and then at Malden, Mass., and Exeter, N. H. In 1833 he took up his residence in Boston, in order to prepare his Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge. See DICTIONARIES, ECCLESIASTICAL. He returned to Exeter to resume the pastorate, and remained there until, in 1838, he was chosen professor of theology in the Literary and Theological Institution at New Hampton. This position he filled for six years with rare fidelity and success, until his health failed. He then took up his residence in Georgia, and at the end of a year was able to take the pastoral care of a Church in Lexington, Va. He was elected in 1849 editorial secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society. In connection with his duties, he also did a large amount of editorial work for the Christian Chronicle and the National Baptist. For many years he was engaged in the preparation of an elaborate history of the Baptist denomination, which he did not live to finish. He died at Germantown, Pa., May 15, 1868. See the National Baptist, May 17, 1868; Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, viii, 89. (J. C. S.)

Brown, John Snowden, an English Congregational minister, was born at Birmingham in 1831. His earliest religious experience was among the Wesleyan Methodists, and he spent some time in preaching under the direction of that denomination, particularly in Cornwall. He afterwards entered Western College, Plymouth, with the design of preparing himself to preach among the Congregationalists. In 1874 he accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Market Weighton, Yorkshire, where he labored with eminent success until his death, near the close of January, 1879. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 312.

Brown, John Walker, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born Aug. 21, 1814, in Schenectady, N. Y. At the age of fourteen he entered Union College, and graduated in 1832 with distinguished honor. In the following year he entered the General Theological Seminary, and, having completed his course, was ordained deacon in 1836, and immediately began his ministry at Astoria, L. I.; serving at the same time as assistant to Rev. Dr. Lyell of Christ Church, New York city. He was ordained priest in 1838, and in May of that year he established the Astoria Female Institute, with which he was connected for seven years, when he became editor of the Protestant Churchman. A bronchial affection became so threatening in the latter part of 1848 that he took a voyage to Europe. His editorial correspondence while abroad is written in his graceful and vigorous style. He reached Malta about the middle of March, and died there, April 9, 1849. He was singularly modest, and was a writer of no ordinary ability. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1849, p. 445; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 739.

Brown, Jonathan (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born near Stanhope, in Weardale, about 1750. He was converted at the age of twenty-two, and was admitted into the Connection in 1778. His first field was the Isle of Man; he labored six years in Ireland, and the rest of his ministerial life was spent in the northern part of England. He became a supernumerary in 1817, and died at Hull, Aug. 2, 1825. He labored on twenty-four circuits, on seventeen of which he gathered in many new members. He was diligent, mightily in earnest, and frequently spent whole nights in prayer. See Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1826, p. 505; Minutes of the British Conference, 1826.

Brown, Jonathan (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born at Pittsfield, N. H., in 1757. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1789; was ordained and installed as minister of the East parish in Londonderry in 1795; was dismissed at his own request in September, 1804; and died in the place where he had exercised his ministry, in February, 1838. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 411.

Brown, Jonathan (3), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Weardale, Sept. 26, 1785. He was converted at the age of sixteen, and in 1805 was appointed to the Inverness circuit. He labored in the itinerancy for thirteen years, one of his circuits being Keighley, in 1808, and his last, Salford. In 1818 he became a supernumerary, and settled in Bury. He died Dec. 14, 1819. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1820; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1820, p. 561 sq.

Brown, Jonathan (4), a Baptist minister, was born at Marblehead, Mass., Jan. 21, 1790. His early life was spent in hard struggles with poverty. At the age of twenty-eight he united with the Church, and soon yielded to a conviction that it was his duty to preach the Gospel. About 1827 he moved to Adams County, Ill., and was ordained in 1851. He was pastor of the churches in Centreville and Hodley Creek, in Brown Co. He found great delight in preaching as an evangelist among feeble churches and destitute neighborhoods, for which service he neither asked nor received compensation. In 1856 he removed to Quincy, where he died, March 25, 1875. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1875, p. 9, 10. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Joseph (1), an English Baptist minister, was born in Coventry, in June, 1730. He was educated under Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton, who appointed him as his assistant in his lectures on experimental philosophy. For all branches of natural sciences he had a special aptitude, and throughout life cultivated his taste for the mechanic arts. He afterwards became a Baptist and was ordained, his first settlement being at Downton, in Wiltshire, and his second at Fair Street, Horsley Down. After several removals he finally accepted a call to the Church at Deptford. For many years Mr. Brown was secretary to the General Assembly of the Baptists. He died May 21, 1803. See Wilson, Hist. of the Dissenting Churches, iv, 262, 263. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Joseph (2), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Lothersdale, West Riding, Yorkshire, in 1751. His occupation, for many years, was that of constructing dry stone fences. With his utmost efforts, he found it hard to earn enough to support his large family. In the thirty-first year of his age "he came forth in the ministry," and labored to the best of his ability, chiefly in his own immediate vicinity. In 1795 he was committed to York castle, and subsequently was thrown into prison because of his refusal to pay tithes for the support of the Established Church. He was discharged at the end of two years, and was able afterwards to comfort others in like circumstances "with the comfort wherewith he had been comforted of God." He died a peaceful death, June 28, 1803. See Piety Promoted, iii, 318-20. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Joseph (3), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Robeson County, N. C., Aug. 17, 1795. He was educated at Philadelphia, N. C., and at the Union Theological Seminary of Virginia, and was licensed by the Fayetteville Presbytery in 1830. In 1838 he was installed pastor of Hopewell Church, S. C., in Harmony Presbytery, and died there, May 19, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 67.

Brown, Joseph (4), a Congregational minister, was born in Chester, England, and preached in that country. After arriving in America, he was settled as pastor of the Second Church in Exeter, N. H., Nov. 20, 1792, and remained in that position until 1795. In January, 1796, he was installed pastor in Shapleigh, Me., and remained there until May, 1804. The following year he was installed pastor in Alfred, Nov. 13, and was dismissed in 1809. In the same year he was installed pastor at Deer Isle; and he died in September, 1819. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 211.

Brown, Joseph (5), an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1802. He was converted at the age of twenty, soon after became a zealous local preacher, and entered the itinerancy in 1828. He died Dec. 31, 1832. He was a young man of studious habits, modesty, piety, faithfulness in labor, and resignation in affliction. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1833.

Brown, Joseph (6), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., Sept. 24, 1809. He was licensed by Lexington Presbytery, Oct. 17, 1835; and ordained by the same at Augusta Church, Oct. 28, 1836. He graduated at Washington College in 1830, after which he spent two years in teaching; entered Princeton Seminary in 1832, and graduated in 1835. He accepted calls, Sept. 7, 1837, from the two churches Spring Creek and Oak Grove, and was installed as their pastor by the Presbytery of Greenbrier. Here he labored until 1847. This was his first and only pastorate. Most of his ministerial work was of a missionary character, usually in frontier settlements and among the colored population. He spent six years in preaching to the colored people in Mississippi. He taught in Little Levels Academy and Lewisburg Academy, and as assistant in a parochial school, Memphis, Tenn.; a grammar-school near Natchez, Miss.; and as principal of Locust-lawn School for Females. From 1868 to 1879 he resided in Florida at Clearwater Harbor, where he gradually gathered, watched over, and supplied the Andrews Memorial Church. He, in 1879, removed to Bryan, Tex., where he died, Feb. 14, 1880. Mr. Brown was a devout, self-sacrificing man, clear in his convictions and a thorough-going Presbyterian. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1880, p. 19.

Brown, Joseph (7), a Baptist minister, was born at Wickford, R. I., and graduated from Yale College in 1841. For some time he was a teacher in the Pittsburgh Female Seminary, and subsequently was ordained at Gallipolis, O., over a Church organized by himself. For ten years he had charge of a Church in Springfield, O., and in 1860 he became pastor of the Church in Terre Haute, Ind. He removed, in 1870, to Indianapolis, and for five years was the corresponding secretary of the Indiana State Convention. After a protracted illness, he died Aug. 11, 1878. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 146. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Joseph (8), a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Surry County, N. C., Aug. 2, 1772. In 1788, his father, colonel James Brown, attempted to move his family from North Carolina to the Cumberland country by boat. Young Joseph was in the company. The boat was attacked by Indians, his father was killed, he was taken prisoner, and it was determined to kill him also, but he was spared for the sake of an expected ransom. After remaining a captive eleven months an exchange of prisoners restored him to freedom. In 1794 he was guide to an expedition against the Indians, which resulted in the destruction of their towns. During the Creek War of 1812 he accompanied general Jackson as aide-de-camp and interpreter, with the rank of colonel. He subsequently had an opportunity to avenge his father's death by the capture of his murderer, Cuttey Otoy, but mercifully spared his life. In 1796, after the close of the Indian war in which he suffered his captivity, he settled on White's Creek, near Nashville, Tenn., and became a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church. Occasionally, through life, he had paroxysms of bodily jerking, while engaged in prayer—one of the remarkable phenomena of the revival of 1800, in which he was an active participant. In 1806 he settled on Lytle's Creek, Maury Co., Tenn. Until about 1823 he was a successful business man, but in that year became connected with the Elk Presbytery as a minister, and was a member of that body until 1835, when he assisted in the organization of the Richmond Presbytery. He travelled extensively throughout the Southern States, preaching the Gospel. He died Feb. 4, 1868. See Beard, Biographical Sketches, 2d series, p. 217.

Brown, Joseph A., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Bedford County, Va., July 27, 1807. He was converted at the age of twelve, and in 1830 admitted into the Virginia Conference. Loss of health obliged him to become superannuated in 1837. Six years later he again became effective, and labored for two years. He then became again superannuated, and remained such until his decease, Feb. 20, 1846. Mr. Brown was an excellent preacher, and highly successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1846, p. 71.

Brown, Joshua Rogers, a Congregational minister, was born at Stonington, Conn., June 14, 1812. He was converted in the great revival of 1831; graduated from Yale College, and studied theology at Yale and Andover, graduating at the latter seminary in 1841; and was ordained over the Second Congregational Church in Lebanon, Conn., in 1845, where he labored with universal acceptance for eight years. In 1854 he was installed pastor of the Church in East Longmeadow, Mass., where he remained until his death, Sept. 7, 1858. See Cong. Quarterly, 1859, p. 99.

Brown, Josiah H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1810. He began his itinerant career in 1832, in the Troy Conference, and continued eleven years, when he became superannuated, and established himself as physician at Sandy Hill, and there resided until his death, Jan. 7, 1865. Mr. Brown was ardent in temperament, excitable, warm and true in friendship, but often given to melancholy. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1856, p. 540.

Brown, J. Fearon, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Bald Eagle Township, Clinton Co., Pa., July 19, 1832. He was converted at thirteen. When quite young he entered Dickinson Seminary (Williamsport), and by farming and teaching, to obtain money, struggled hard for an education. In 1859 he joined the East Baltimore Conference. He served faithfully fourteen charges within its boundaries. He died at Montgomery, Pa., Dec. 8, 1880. He was a scriptural, practical, evangelical preacher, and a man of cheerful humor, pure life, and chaste conversation. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 77.

Brown (or Browne), Moses, an English clergyman, was born in 1703, and learned the trade of a pen-cutter. Early in life he distinguished himself by his poetical talents, and devoted many years to literary pursuits. In 1753 he took holy orders, and soon became vicar of Olney, in Buckinghamshire. Some time afterwards he was appointed vicar of Sutton, in Lincolnshire, and in 1763 he was elected chaplain of Morden College, Kent, where he died, Sept. 13, 1787. His publications include Poems on Various Subjects (1773):—Sunday Thoughts (1752):—Percy Lodge, a poem (1755):—Sermons (1754-65):—and other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. & v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, & v.

Brown, Nehemiah, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Canterbury, Conn., June 11, 1791. After leaving college he studied divinity. He was for a time principal of Clinton Academy, in East Hampton, L. I. He was ordained and installed eighth pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Huntington, Oct. 18, 1824. In consequence of failing health he resigned this charge, June 25, 1832, and removed to New York city. Here he was for several years principal of the Pickett School, and he afterwards taught a collegiate school in Washington, D. C., but returned to New York to pass his later years. He died Jan. 5, 1876. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1876.

Brown, Nicholas, Hon., an eminent merchant and philanthropist, was born in Providence, R. I., April 4, 1769. He was descended from Mr. Chad Brown, a companion of Roger Williams. At thirteen years of age he entered what was then Rhode Island College, graduated in 1786, and at once entered upon a mercantile career. Through a long life he was the far-seeing, large-hearted, benevolent merchant, forecasting results with great sagacity, and laying the foundation of institutions, the beneficent influences of which were to extend to coming ages. His private charities were unstinted. He did not make a public profession of religion, but the acts of his life furnished the best proof that he was a Christian at heart. At his own expense, he published some of the most impressive sermons of president Edwards, and several religious works of a practical character, for gratuitous distribution. He was a warm friend of the American Tract Society, and a liberal contributor to its funds so long as he lived. He united with some other gentlemen in procuring stereotype plates of Doddridge's Rise and Progress of Religion and Baxter's Saints' Rest, which were given to the society for their use in the publication of these excellent works. Mr. Brown was also one of the most munificent founders of the Providence Athenæum. His benefactions to the university which has since borne his name commenced in 1792 by his giving $500 towards the purchase of a law library. In 1804 he gave $5000 as a foundation for a professorship of oratory and belles-lettres. In 1822 he built at his own expense "Hope College," so named in honor of his sister, Mrs. Hope Ives. In 1835 he erected and presented to the corporation "Manning Hall," thus called to keep alive the memory of the first president of the college, Rev. Dr. James Manning. It is estimated that the value of all his gifts to the university could not have been less than $160,000. Mr. Brown died Sept. 27, 1841. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Obadiah B., a Baptist minister, was born in Newark, N. J., July 20, 1779. He was licensed in 1806, and first preached at Salem. In February, 1807, he removed to Washington city, and in May following was called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church there. During his stay in Washington he became chief clerk under the postmaster-general. He died May 2, 1852. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 538.

Brown, Oliver Eldridge, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Huntington, L. I., in 1813. He received a careful religious training from his devout widowed mother, experienced religion at the age of seventeen, graduated at Wesleyan University in 1839, and in 1844 entered the New York Conference, in the active ranks of which he continued until his death, July 28, 1857. Mr. Brown was distinguished for his consistent life, deep piety, and faithful ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 147.

Brown, Orsemus P., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1809. He was converted in 1830, licensed to preach in 1838, and in 1842 entered the Erie Conference. In 1855 he was transferred to the Wisconsin Conference, and died near Janesville, Jan. 24, 1857. Mr. Brown was true to his calling, indefatigable in labors, faithful in all his life-duties, a warm friend, and a devoted Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 375.

Brown, Paul R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Cornwall, N. Y., March 4, 1801. He was converted in early life. In 1828 he entered the New York Conference, and received for his first field of labor Delaware Circuit, having thirty-three appointments, and requiring four weeks' travel of two hundred and fifty miles to visit them. His subsequent stations were Jefferson, New York East, Newburgh, Middletown, and New Rochelle. In 1838 he was tried and severely censured for his abolition principles, and appointed junior preacher on Huntington Circuit. He afterwards served Redding, Stratford, and Hartford, Conn.; Williamsburgh, Green Street (N. Y. city), White Plains, Yonkers, Peekskill, and Pleasantville, N. Y.; in 1856, Monticello district; in 1860, Prattsville district; in 1864, New Paltz Landing, in 1865-66, Ellenville, in 1867-70, Rhinebeck district; in 1871-72, Tremont; and in 1873 he became superannuated. He died at Tarrytown, Oct. 1, 1879. Mr. Brown was a loyal, judicious, and kind presiding officer; a thoughtful, able, and effective preacher; an excellent pastor, and a devoted friend. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 43.

Brown, Peter (1), an Irishman, was bishop of Cork and Ross, to which sees he was promoted in 1709, and died Aug. 25, 1735. He left many works, among them A Reply to the Infidel Told (Dublin, 1697, 8vo):—On the Custom of Drinking to the Memory of the Dead, in reply to a divine who justified the practice (ibid. 1715, 12mo):—On the Evil of Drinking Healths (1716, 1722). He also wrote remarks on a work of the bishop of Raphoe, entitled A Clear and Easy Method, by means of which a man of moderate capacity may attain to a satisfactory knowledge of the things which belong to his eternal salvation (ibid. 1716). See Ware, Irish Bishops (ed. Harris).—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Brown, Peter (2), a colored Methodist Episcopal minister, was born a slave at Norfolk, Va., in 1821. He was taught to sing hymns by his first master, who was a minister; experienced conversion at the age of sixteen; was sold twice, and finally liberated by the declaration of emancipation; became a member of the Louisiana Conference, and in it labored faithfully and successfully for many years, dying at his post in 1879. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 8.

Brown, Philip P., a Baptist minister, was born at Bennington, Vt., Sept. 17, 1790. He was ordained Oct. 17, 1821, as pastor of the Church at Smithfield, N. Y., where he remained for more than eight years. His second pastorate was with the Church at Augusta, Oneida Co., where he had a most fruitful ministry for fifteen years. He was pastor of six different churches between the years 1830 and 1850. During all this period he assisted in revivals, and his labors were greatly blessed. He died Sept. 23, 1876. See (N. Y.) Examiner and Chronicle. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Richard (1), D.D., an English clergyman, was a canon of Christ Church, and became regius professor of Hebrew at Oxford University, Nov. 12, 1774. He died March 20, 1780. He published, Job's Expectation of a Resurrection (1747):—and The Case of Naaman Considered (1750). See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brown, Richard (2), D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Wellsburg, W. Va., Feb. 1, 1796. He graduated at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1822. He entered Princeton Seminary the same year, and graduated in 1826. During 1824-25 he was agent for the Western Missionary Society. He was licensed to preach Dec. 29, 1824, by the Washington Presbytery, and ordained by the same in 1827 at Wheeling, Va. His first settlement was over the united charge of Congress, Mount Hope, and Rehoboth; he afterwards changed to Jeromeville, O., where he was installed by the Presbytery of Richland in 1829. In 1832 he was made pastor of Three Springs Church, Va. In 1836 he was installed pastor at New Hagerstown, O., where he worked twenty-two years. He then went to Oak Ridge, and remained until 1861. In 1862 he returned to New Hagerstown, where he supplied different churches until his death. He made a missionary trip to the Indians at Maumee, and another along the New York and Pennsylvania line for the Ladies' Missionary Society of Princeton, N. J. He was appointed agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He died April 12, 1879. Dr. Brown led a blameless and consistent life. He was a model pastor, excellent in counsel, and fondly loved by all classes. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1880, p. 13.

Brown, Richard (3), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Friendship, Anne Arundel Co., Md., May 30, 1799. He experienced conversion when about nineteen, and was doing a flourishing mercantile business when he entered the itinerancy in 1827. His labors were confined to the Baltimore and East Baltimore Conferences. He died at his home in Howard County, Md., Aug. 5, 1859. Mr. Brown's ministry was solid, instructing, and soul-converting. He excelled as a manager of camp-meetings; was highly esteemed for his genial spirit, sincerity, and steadfastness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 21.

Brown, Robert Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Montreal, Canada, Dec. 13, 1830. He pursued his studies in Wilmington, Del., and in 1853 entered the Princeton Theological Seminary, where he remained two years. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Philadelphia in April, 1856. During the summer of that year he supplied the Second and Arch Street churches. In the same year he was received into the Presbytery of Chicago, and accepted a call to become pastor of the North Church in that city. This relation was dissolved July 21, 1857. Soon after he accepted a call to Hagerstown, Md., and was installed by the Presbytery of Carlisle, Oct. 17, 1858. His pastoral relation was dissolved in 1861, but he continued to labor at Hagerstown as a stated supply till 1862. He served from 1864 to 1868 the Church of Columbia, Pa. In 1870 he became pastor of Trinity Church, Philadelphia. In 1874-75 he supplied the Church at Smyrna, Del. He died Nov. 21, 1875. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1876, p. 32.

Brown, Rowland Hill, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania, was assistant minister of St. David's Church, Manayunk, Pa., in 1860. The following year he was rector of the Memorial Church of St. John, Ashland; in 1864 he was employed as a missionary at Lewisburg and Derry; the following year he was rector of three churches, viz., Trinity Church in Lewisburg, Christ Church in Milton, and St. James's in Anthony. In 1867 he was rector of St. John's Church in Salem, and Zion's Church in Stirling. He died at Salem, March 3, 1880, aged fifty-one years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1881, p. 172.

Brown, Samuel (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Bedford County, Va., Nov. 18, 1766. He was educated at Washington College; was licensed by the Hanover Presbytery in April, 1793, and labored as a missionary in Eastern Virginia until 1796, at which time he accepted a call to become the pastor of the Presbyterian congregation of New Providence. He here spent the remainder of his life as a faithful and zealous minister, and died in October, 1818. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 74.

Brown, Samuel (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1787 in Cheshire. He was converted in 1807; became a local preacher in 1809; was received by the Conference in 1816; labored in Sierra Leone from 1816 to 1819; in Nevis and Antigua, W. I., from 1819 to 1823; and in England from 1823 to 1851, when failing health compelled him to retire from the full work. In 1858 he returned, as a supernumerary, to the scene of his early labors in Sierra Leone, where he spent three useful years. He died in Liverpool, England, Oct. 5, 1861. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1862, p. 12.

Brown, Samuel (3), an English Congregational minister, was born at Taunton in 1792. He was converted when about twenty years old, at Bristol, whither he had removed and become engaged in a banking establishment. Mr. Brown's first and only charge was at Ashton, near Bristol, where he was ordained Jan. 28, 1827, and died June 16, 1862. He was eminent for his piety, charity, and soundness in faith. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 213.

Brown, Samuel (4), an English Congregational minister, was a descendant of one of the oldest Nonconformist families in the county of Cumberland. He was destined by his friends for mercantile life, but after his conversion at the age of twenty, he desired to become a missionary. He was, however, persuaded to study for the ministry at home, and spent four years at Highbury in that preparation. By invitation of the Irish Evangelical Society he took charge of the small Independent congregation at Tralee, Ireland, in December, 1843. He labored with true missionary zeal in this field until declining health forced him to relinquish his work. He returned to England, and died June 23, 1847. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1848, p. 214.

Brown, Samuel (5), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Monmouth County, N. J., May 12, 1806. He was early brought under the influence of the Friends, his parents probably being members of that society, which accounts for his life-long aversion to formality and display in religious services. He joined the Methodists in his fifteenth year; was licensed to preach in early manhood, and in 1841 entered the Ohio Conference. On the division of that conference in 1852 he became a member of the Cincinnati Conference, in which he continued to the close of his life. In 1868 he became superannuated, and settled on his farm in Miami County, where he remained until his death, Sept. 23, 1876. Mr. Brown's life was exemplary and abundantly successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 89.

Brown, Samuel (6), an English Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born at Newcastle-under-Lyme, Jan. 8, 1811. He was converted at the age of seventeen, began business in Guernsey, and entered the ministry in 1835; was very successful in the conversion of sinners; labored for souls night and day; rested for three years, 1866-69; finally retired in 1877; settled at Swaffham, and died Feb. 19, 1879. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 19.

Brown, Samuel Henry, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Virginia. He was the youngest son of Rev. J. B. Brown, D.D., of Charleston, Va. After receiving a preparatory education at home, Samuel was sent to Washington College, where he graduated in 1849. After teaching two years in a classical academy he entered Princeton Theological Seminary, where he remained until 1851, when, his health failing, he returned to Charleston and completed his theological course under the tuition of his father, and was licensed to preach by the Greenbrier Presbytery. He took a tour in the bounds of the Presbytery, visiting its vacant churches and mission-fields. He was called to supply the Church of New Providence, in the Lexington Presbytery, and in 1855 he was ordained and installed pastor of the united congregations of Frankford, Spring Creek and Anthony Creek, where he labored with great efficiency and success until his death at Frankford, Aug. 1, 1857. (W. P. S.)

Brown, Samuel Robbins, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Scantic parish, East Windsor, Conn., June 16, 1810. He entered Amherst College in 1828; graduated at Yale College in 1832; and then spent three years and a half as teacher in the New York Institute for the Deaf and Dumb. In 1835 he went to Columbia, S. C., and studied theology for two years in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary. Returning to New York, he finished his studies at the Union Seminary in 1838, and was accepted by the American Board as a foreign missionary. He was invited to go to China, in the service of the Morrison Education Society, as a teacher. He was ordained in October, 1838, at New York, and sailed the same month for his post. He taught in Macao till 1842, and then in Hong Kong until 1847, when he was obliged to return to America. For two years and a half, 1848-51, he had charge of an academy at Rome, N. Y. In 1851 he went to the outlet of Owasco lake, near Auburn, as pastor of a very feeble Reformed Dutch Church, where he remained eight years. Early in 1859 the Reformed Dutch Church's Board of Foreign Missions determined to send a mission to Japan, and Mr. Brown was appointed one of the missionaries. He sailed for China in April, and in November established himself in Japan, which continued to be his residence until 1879, with the exception of two years. Protracted illness obliged him to return to America. He died in Monson, Mass., June 20, 1880. To Dr. Brown's influence, by means of his pupils, much of the recent development of China is justly due. His work in Japan was even more strikingly useful, in connection with education and the study of the Japanese language and the translation of the Bible. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1880.

Brown, Samuel Watson, a Congregational minister, was born in Winchendon, Mass., April 7, 1828. He graduated at Yale College in 1850, and immediately began the study of law at Philadelphia, in the office of judge Mallory. To secure means to further prosecute his studies, he taught about a year in New Jersey, and for several years in Matagorda, Tex. In the spring of 1855 he returned to the North and resumed his law studies, but soon abandoned the profession. In the latter part of the same year he took a share in a store at Ludlow, Vt. He closed his business in 1858, and went to Chicago, entering the theological seminary there; but in the following year he began to study theology at the Andover Seminary. He was ordained Dec. 31, 1861, and became the stated supply of the Church at South Coventry for two and a half years ensuing. On June 29, 1864, he was installed pastor of the Church at Groton, Mass., and died there Nov. 9, 1866. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 45.

Brown, Simeon (1), a Baptist minister, was born at North Stonington, Conn., Jan. 31, 1722. He was converted under Whitefield's preaching in 1745, but left the "standing order," and became a Baptist in 1764. He assisted in the organization of the Second Baptist Church in North Stonington, in March, 1765, was ordained its pastor, and remained such for fifty years, having an assistant for a part of the time. He died Nov. 24, 1815. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 148. (J. C. S.)

Brown, Simeon (2), a Congregational minister, was born in Washington County, Pa., Nov. 25, 1808. From the time of his conversion, in his seventeenth year, his thoughts turned towards the ministry. He entered Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., in 1829; after a period of theological study, was licensed by the Presbytery of Richland, O.; and in June, 1835, was ordained and took charge of the Church in Harmony. Having labored here two years and a half, he accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Frederickstown, where he remained six years. In 1844 he became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Zanesville; and after six years of service he spent two years as the agent of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, residing meanwhile at Oxford. Then, for several years, he was stated supply of the Church at Pleasant Ridge, near Cincinnati. While pastor at Frederickstown, Mr.

Brown established a religious monthly, called the Calvinistic Monitor. After eight numbers were issued it became the Family Monitor, Rev. John A. Dunlap being associated with him in the editorship; and about a year later the name was again changed to The Presbyterian of the West, when Mr. Brown ceased to act as editor. In 1853 Rev. Willis Lord, D.D., and he became editors of the same paper, which was then published in Cincinnati, and for about eighteen months he fulfilled this duty in addition to his pastoral work. In 1857 he ministered to the Congregational Church at Lebanon, and organized the Congregational Church of Waynesville. From 1857 to 1863 he was, for the most part, in the employ of the Home Missionary Society, in southern and middle Ohio. He assumed charge of the Church at Ottumwa, Ia., in November, 1864, and at the end of his first year's pastorate this congregation dispensed with further missionary aid, and more than doubled its membership in two years. A controversy with some members of the Presbytery to which he belonged, in regard to the nature and extent of the Atonement, led him ultimately to the Congregational Church. He died in Ottumwa, Feb. 16, 1867. He was an early and efficient advocate of the temperance reform. See Cong. Quarterly, 1868, p. 47.

Brown, Stephen D., D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Swanton, Vt., Sept. 13, 1815. He was the son of Stephen S., one of the most eminent lawyers and jurists in the state, and grandson of Rev. Amasa Brown, who for more than forty years was pastor of the Baptist Church in Hartford, N. Y. Mr. Brown was naturally inclined to the practice of law. He received a thorough academic training; very early developed remarkable talents as a debater, and was admitted to practice at the bar in 1835. No young lawyer in Vermont made more rapid progress during the two following years, or bid more fairly for early eminence, than Stephen D. Brown. In 1837 he was led by his own convictions and the counsel of his pastor to devote his life to the ministry; received a license to exhort; immediately began to preach and study theology, and in that same year entered the Troy Conference. His conversion and consecration to the Methodist ministry marked an epoch in the history of Vermont Methodism. His high social position, ripe culture, fine talents, matchless eloquence, and fervent piety gave vast impetus to the cause of religion throughout the state. His first three years in the ministry were spent among minor appointments, after which he stood in the front rank and held the most important positions. In 1857 he was transferred to the New York Conference; was retransferred to the Troy Conference in 1862; and in 1865 was again returned to the New York Conference. He died at his residence in New York city, Feb. 19, 1875. No man of his time or conferences was more popular than Dr. Brown. He was remarkably punctual in his attendance on all the means of grace, thoroughly devoted to all the interests of the Church, a favorite among his brethren, full of charity and encouragement. He was also a powerful platform speaker, taking a prominent position in favor of temperance, and advocated strongly the anti-slavery cause. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 48; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, a. v.

Brown, Thaddeus Howe, a Congregational minister, was born at Billerica, Mass., June 17, 1838. He was left an orphan at the age of seven, and his home was thereafter with an aunt, at Andover, where he prepared for college at Phillips Academy. He graduated from Yale College in 1860, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1864, having spent one year during his course in Germany. Mr. Brown next preached for six months at Pittsford, Vt., and then became pastor at North Woodstock, Conn., where he was ordained April 11, 1866, and continued to work there until the close of his life, Oct. 19, 1868. See Cong. Quarterly, 1869, p. 291.

Brown, Theophilus Southwick, a Congregational minister, was born in Mendham, Mass., June 7, 1812. He began his ministry as a Reformed Methodist, and was subsequently pastor for thirteen years of the Old Spruce Church, South Middleborough; also preached at North Rochester, Myrickville, Wareham, and Carver. From 1854 to 1856 he was engaged in business in Ulster County, N. Y.; was similarly employed in Massachusetts until 1872, when he removed to Croton, Mich., where he died, May 20, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 24.

Brown, Thomas (1), an English martyr, was born in the parish of Histon, within the diocese of Ely. Because he was not prompt in his attendance at Church, he was apprehended and ordered to attend mass, which he refused to do, but instead would go into the woods, and there pray to God. For this he was brought before the bishop, and had all the articles of the Church read to him. When the bishop had finished reading, he asked Brown if he would return to the Romish Church and attend to all its services. He answered, no. He was then taken in haste to the place of execution and burned, Jan. 27, 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 746.

Brown, Thomas (2). See BROWNE, THOMAS.

Brown, Thomas (3), a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Barking, Essex, England. On Sept. 1, 1696, he arrived in America, being then quite young. His parents resided for some time in Philadelphia, Pa., and then removed to Plumstead. While residing here Thomas entered the ministry. Subsequently he returned to Philadelphia, entering into business so far as was necessary for a simple livelihood. In regard to his preaching it is said of him that, when he rose to speak, he pronounced a few words, and then stood for a long time silent, proceeding so very deliberately that strangers formed at first unfavorable surmises as to the result; but as he proceeded he frequently became eloquent. He was not, however, a learned man, and possessed no literary acquirements. Except attendance upon neighboring meetings, he travelled but little. During a long life, he continued to exercise his ministry in the vicinity of his home. See The Friend, viii, 278.

Brown, Thomas (4), a missionary of the Church of England, was the only child of the Rev. G. Brown of Oxford. He graduated at St. Alban's Hall; was ordained deacon, Sept. 23, 1754, and soon after came to America—with the Twenty-seventh Regiment, it is supposed, of which he was chaplain. This regiment participated in the reduction of Martinique, in February, 1762. Shortly after he must have resigned his commission. Having returned to England, he was ordained priest, and, July 8, 1764, was appointed missionary to North America. Until 1768 he was rector of St. Peter's Church, Albany, N. Y., when he went South, and, May 30, 1772, was appointed rector of Dorchester, Md., where he died, May 2, 1784, aged forty-nine years. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 135.

Brown, Thomas (5), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was converted at the age of twenty; entered the ministry in 1790; travelled nineteen circuits; became a supernumerary in 1820, residing first at Newry and afterwards at Belfast; and died June 22, 1844, aged eighty. His mental and moral character is highly spoken of. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1844.

Brown, Thomas (6), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Hunslet, Yorkshire, June 7, 1799. He was converted when fifteen; was accepted by the Conference in 1825; became a supernumerary in 1867; and died at Ripon, Feb. 25, 1875. He was kind to his colleagues, attentive and judicious in management, diligent in fulfilment of duties, and careful and impressive in preaching. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 22.

Brown, Thomas (7), a Baptist minister, was born at Newark, N. J., Nov. 1, 1779. He was brought up a Presbyterian, but early joined the Baptists, and was licensed to preach March 26, 1803. He taught school at Amboy, and studied theology. At this period he became greatly interested in foreign missions. A few months later he entered the academy at Pennek, Pa., where he spent two years, and then took charge of a church at Salem, where he was ordained in 1806. In 1808 he was called to preach at Scotch Plains, N. J., and in 1828 at Great Valley, Pa., where he died, Jan. 17, 1831. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 469.

Brown, T. J., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in South Carolina in 1791. He was left an orphan at the age of seven, but received the guardianship of a devout class-leader, and gave his heart to God in 1809. He was licensed to preach in 1819, and in 1822 entered the Tennessee Conference. In 1830 he located, and visited Indiana; in 1831 entered the Holston Conference; in 1832 was transferred to the Illinois Conference; and in 1833, on the formation of the Indiana Conference, became a member of it, and labored as health permitted to the close of his life, June 8, 1860. Mr. Brown was deeply devoted to the Church, and highly revered by all who knew him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 355.

Brown, Valentine, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1805. In 1839 he was received into the Troy Conference, and in its active ranks labored with zeal and fidelity until 1852, when failing health obliged him to become superannuate. He died Sept. 24, 1854. Mr. Brown was a good preacher, a faithful and affectionate pastor, and a truly pious and devout man. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1855, p. 540.

Brown, William, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born at Castlecaulfield, county Tyrone. At an early age he removed to Belfast, where he entered the Royal Academical Institution. He commenced his ministry in 1839, at Donaghadee, his first and last (1859) circuit. He died in Dungannon, June 16, 1860, aged forty-two. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1860.

Brown, William Colvin, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New Jersey, entered the ministry in 1854, and in 1857 was rector in Haverhill, Mass.; the next year was rector in Newport, R. I., having charge of Zion Church. In 1862 he was called to the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Milburn, N. J.; and in 1867 removed to Hanover. For several years thereafter he was not regularly employed in ministerial labor. In 1875 he went to Europe. He died at Jyringham, Mass., Sept. 8, 1880. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1881, p. 172.

Brown, William F., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in the northern part of England in 1818. He emigrated to New York city early in life; experienced religion there, and several years later moved to Mississippi, where he was licensed to preach in 1840, and in the same year entered the Mississippi Conference. On the division of that Conference in 1846 he became a member of the Louisiana Conference, and in it toiled zealously until his death, Aug. 30, 1848. Mr. Brown was a conscientious, irreproachable Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1849, p. 198.

Brown, William Lawson, M.A., an English Congregational minister, was born at Kilrenny, near Anstruther, on the east coast of Fifeshire, Scotland. He was educated at the school of St. Andrews, and the universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen. His first pastoral charge was at Lerwick, in Shetland, where he remained between two and three years from 1840. He then took charge of the Church at Liscard, in Cheshire, England, from which he removed to Bolton in 1845. Here he labored eight years, and, after a short stay at Lynn, in Norfolk, became the pastor at Totteridge chapel, where he remained twenty-three years. He resigned his charge in July, 1877, and retired to Lytham, near Preston, where he died, April 21, 1879. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 314.

Brown, William Martin, a Baptist minister, was born in Halifax County, Va., Aug. 18, 1794. He removed to Mercer County, Ky., in 1813, and in 1821 united with Bacon Creek Church, Hart Co., becoming its pastor in 1826. He continued to hold this relation for thirty-two years. He also, for a part of this time, had the pastoral care of the Knox Creek and South Fork churches. He travelled very extensively over that part of the state in which he lived, and under his auspices several churches were formed. He died June 3, 1861. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 148. (J. C. S.)

Brown, William R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Amsterdam, N. Y., March 7, 1828. He was converted in his fifteenth year; was licensed to exhort in 1848, to preach in 1849, and in 1850 entered the Troy Conference. His educational advantages had been very limited, but by persistent effort he acquired considerable literary distinction, and in his later years ranked among the ablest ministers of his conference. From 1868 he was subject to frequent attacks of hemorrhage of the lungs, disabling him much of the time for work, and eventually causing his death, June 8, 1871. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 43.

Brown, William Shrieve, an English Baptist minister, was born at Swaffham, Norfolk, Sept. 5, 1802. He gave his heart to God and was baptized July 21, 1822, and removed to Bury St. Edmunds in the autumn of 1825. He began to preach in 1833, and labored about two years at Bardwell, in Suffolk. He was recognised as pastor of the Church at Attleborough, Norfolk, Jan. 7, 1836, where he labored with great success for about thirty-eight years. He retired from the active work at the close of 1873, and died Jan. 13, 1874. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1875, p. 275.

Brown, W. G. E., an English Congregational minister, was born at Newbury, Nov. 8, 1806, of pious parents. He became a Sunday-school teacher at the age of sixteen; was educated at Christ Church school, and admitted into Church fellowship in 1834. He taught school at Woolhampton, Berkshire, between 1835 and 1845, and was pastor there at the same time. Thence he removed to Summertown, near Oxford, where he devoted himself entirely to the work of the ministry for three years, and then removed to Pheasant's Hill, near Henley. After ten years he entered upon his last charge, at Eversden, Cambridgeshire, where he labored sixteen years, and died, March 22, 1873. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 313.

Brown, Zina H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Jericho, Vt., Dec. 27, 1804. He was converted at the age of nineteen; licensed to exhort in 1840, to preach in 1843, and in 1846 entered the Troy Conference. In 1862 he accepted a superannuated relation, but continued to preach as health permitted to the close of his life, April 23, 1867. Mr. Brown was an old-time Methodist, a lover of its early peculiarities and institutions; open-hearted and honest; a bold denouncer of error, and a firm, able defender of truth. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 124.

Browne, Gardiner Shepard, M.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Alstead, N. H., Sept. 12, 1810. He prepared for college at the Kimball Union Academy, and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1834. During the two following years he was a teacher at Nashua, and then attended theological lectures at New Haven, Conn. From 1838 to 1844 he was pastor of the Church at Hinsdale, N. H. During the three succeeding years he was principal of the New England Institute, New York city. In 1847 he received his medical diploma from the New York University, and from 1851 until the close of his life he practiced medicine, for a time in New York, and afterwards in Hartford, Conn.

He became president of the Connecticut Homœopathic Society in 1865; and died in Chicago, Ill., Dec. 29, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 411.

Browne, George, an English Congregational minister, was born at Clapham, Feb. 14, 1790. He received a religious training, joined the Church at Hitchin in 1807, and in 1810 entered Rotherham College. During his college course he preached occasionally for the Congregational pastor at Hull, and at its close became his assistant. In 1818 he was ordained pastor at St. Albans, and after laboring here six years, he preached at Clapham until 1840. In 1833 he was appointed secretary of the Bible Society, and, the society requiring his undivided energies, he complied with its wishes in 1840 by resigning his pastoral charge, and continuing in its employ. In 1853 he removed to Tunbridge Wells. In 1854 he began writing the history of the Bible Society, and completed it in 1857. He resigned his office in 1859, and in 1862 removed to Weston-super-Mare, where he died, Sept. 5, 1868. Mr. Browne was remarkable for his gentlemanly and courteous bearing, his amiable and kind disposition, combined with great firmness of purpose. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1869, p. 239.

Browne, James, an English Congregational minister, was born March 5, 1781, in Russell Street, Rotherhithe. His parents gave him a respectable education, and apprenticed him to a tradesman in the borough of Southwark. He was received into the Church when seventeen years of age. In 1800 he removed to Shoreham, Sussex. Here he first opened a Sunday-school, and afterwards hired a granary, in which he commenced his ministry Nov. 16, 1800. A chapel, built chiefly through his exertions, was opened on Feb. 22, 1801; and in the following August he entered Hoxton Academy, where he remained till 1804. The pastor at Halesworth being temporarily laid aside, Mr. Browne left college to assist in the work, and continued there about a year and a half. He next went to assist Mr. Owen at Debenham, and afterwards supplied Steeple Bumpstead for a short time. He then went to Burnham, in Norfolk, where he laid the foundation of a chapel. In 1807 he accepted the pastorate at Bradfield; a chapel was opened in the adjoining town of North Walsham, Nov. 29, 1808, and in the following September he was ordained pastor. He continued to preach at both places till his death, April 26, 1857. He was a man of unblemished reputation, holy and devout; he was diligent, fervent, prudent, cheerful, and firm; he was loved by his people, and respected by the community. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1858, p. 193.

Browne, John R., an English Wesleyan minister, was converted in early life; entered the itinerancy in 1815; became a supernumerary at Chester in 1847; and died there, Feb. 2, 1848, aged fifty-one. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1848.

Browne, Joseph, D.D., an English divine and educator, was born at a place called the Tongue, in Watermillock, Cumberland, in 1700, and educated at Barton School, and at Queen's College, Oxford, where he took the degree of A.M., Nov. 4, 1724, and was chosen one of the chaplains of the college. In April, 1831, he was made a fellow of his college, and became a tutor of great eminence. He became rector of Bramshot, in Hampshire, May 1, 1746, and professor of natural philosophy in the university in 1747. While residing at Bramshot he was made chancellor and canon-residentary of Hereford. In 1756 Dr. Browne was chosen provost of Queen's College, and in 1759 vice-chancellor of the university; in which offices he remained until disabled by a stroke of the palsy, March 25, 1765. He died June 17, 1767. His only publication was an edition of Cardinal Barberini's Latin Poems (1726). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Browne, Mary Bowles, a minister of the Society of Friends in England and Ireland, was born in Norwich, Jan. 3, 1794. She was a cousin of the well-known writer, "Charlotte Elizabeth," whose companionship she enjoyed for many years of her youth. She quite early in life became a follower of Christ, and in 1835 joined the Friends. She was an earnest worker among the poor, especially those of the Hebrew nation, for whose spiritual welfare she labored in connection with the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. In 1846 she was recorded a minister by the Norwich Monthly Meeting. She travelled in Scotland, Ireland, and England, preaching an atoning Christ. She died Nov. 9, 1880, at Guildford. She was of an intensely sympathetic nature, very decided in her views, with great strength of will, often carrying out her convictions at the cost of much personal sacrifice. She was very fond of linguistic studies and history, and the sciences were of great interest to her. Her preaching was characterized by "great clearness, specially in exposition of doctrine." See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1882, p. 160.

Browne (or Brown), Thomas, D.D., a learned divine of the Anglican Church, was born in Middlesex in 1604. In 1620 he became a student at Christ Church, Oxford, and chaplain, in 1637, to archbishop Laud. Two years after he was made a canon of Windsor, and, eventually, rector of Oddington. He suffered much during the Rebellion, and was compelled to leave his country. At the Restoration he was admitted again to his preferments, and died at Windsor in 1673, leaving many works. See Walker, Sufferings of the Clergy, p. 93; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Browne, William, a minister of the Society of Friends in Great Britain, was born near Crediton, in Devonshire, in 1796. Through the influence of an older sister, who was a Wesleyan, he was led to Christ, and united with the Friends in 1823. He enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education, and during the years of his active business life was always a leader in the temperance and educational interests of the community. In 1827 he relinquished his business occupation, and opened a school, which was unsuccessful. He died in Torquay, Aug. 8, 1880. He never travelled as a minister, but exercised his gifts among the people with whom he happened to be living. His preaching was "usually clear and weighty in its character." See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1881, p. 4.

Brownell, James, an English Wesleyan minister, son of the following, was born in Tortola, W. I., Sept. 27, 1804. He was sent to the Woodhouse-grove School, near Leeds, in 1812, and after his pupilage remained there as a teacher until 1835, when he was ordained and sent by the British Conference to Derby. From the time of his ordination until his death at Todmorden, Nov. 23, 1868, he labored uninterruptedly. His preaching was characterized by research, clear thought, and fidelity. As a pastor he was greatly valued; his kindness and courtesy never failed, and his wise counsels, imparted with modesty, were highly prized by his colleagues. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1869, p. 14.

Brownell, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Altringham, Cheshire, Jan. 22, 1771. In 1795 he went as a missionary to the West Indies, and labored successfully on the islands of St. Kitts, Nevis, and Tortola; returning to England in 1806. Thereafter he travelled the Lynn, Yarmouth, Bedford, Bolton (1812), Holmfirth, Sheffield, Nottingham, and Newark Circuits. He died at Newark-upon-Trent, Sept. 24, 1821. Mr. Brownell was a faithful and devoted missionary and minister. See Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1823, i, 70; Minutes of the British Conference, 1822, p. 295.

Brownell, John B., a Wesleyan Methodist minister, son of the preceding, was born in St. Kitts, W. I.,

Oct. 29, 1802. He was converted at the Kingswood School, England; commenced his ministry in 1826; labored for five years in the West Indies, for five in Malta (1833 to 1838), then in the upper provinces of Canada, and finally in Bermuda (1846) and the lower provinces. He became a supernumerary in 1861, and died at Frederickton, N. B., March 27, 1864. His attainments in scholarship were respectable, and he was a good sermonizer. His piety was intelligent and decided. See Huestis, Memorials of Wesl. Meth. Preachers (Halifax, N. S., 1872), p. 28.

Brownell, Verannus, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Vermont, March 16, 1810. He was converted at the age of sixteen, and joined the Protestant Methodists, who licensed him to preach, and admitted him into the travelling connection. In 1841 he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church; he was admitted into the old Genesee Conference, and in it labored with marked ability and success as preacher until 1854; then two years held a superannuated relation, after which he spent another ten years in the active ranks. In 1872 he was again obliged to retire from the effective work. He died Dec. 11, 1874. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 136.

Brownfield, William, a Baptist minister, was born in 1773. He was converted and became a minister in early life. His life as a pastor was spent chiefly with the churches at Smithfield and Uniontown, Pa. He also organized a Church at Stewartstown. His travels, in his missionary tours, extended over several counties of Pennsylvania and sections of West Virginia and Ohio. He died Jan. 18, 1859. He was a sound divine, an able preacher, and a fearless advocate of the truth, and his efforts were greatly blessed. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 154. (J. C. S.)

Browning, George, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was in the ministry two and a half years; was a serious, devoted man; and died in peace in 1791 or 1792. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1792, p. 45.

Browning, Jacob, a Baptist minister, was born in North Carolina, Feb. 11, 1779, and at an early age removed to Tennessee. He was trained as a Presbyterian, but subsequently became a Baptist. From 1805 to 1824 he was "living epistle" in the association with which his Church was connected. In the latter year he emigrated to West Tennessee, taking up his residence in Benton County. At this time he commenced his labors of love in the wilds of the West, and planted many flourishing churches. From the Philadelphia Association he received a commission to act as their missionary through the region in which he lived. One of the churches which came under his special pastoral care was the Parish Church in Henry County, his last sermon being preached there. He died Aug. 12, 1841. See Borum, Sketches of Tennessee Ministers, p. 78, 79. (J. C. S.)

Browning, Thomas, a Universalist minister, was born in Rutland, Mass., March 2, 1787. He removed to Barre, Vt., with his parents at the age of eight, experienced religion among the Methodists, later became a Universalist, and in 1823 began to preach that faith. Hitherto he had been a farmer and mechanic, and had but a limited education; but by diligent and persevering study became well versed in the Scriptures, and received ordination in 1827 from the old Northern Vermont Association. He removed to Waterbury in 1832, and to Richmond in 1834, where he resided until his decease, March 12, 1875. Mr. Browning was genial, dignified, courteous; earnest, decided, and liberal. See Universalist Register, 1876, p. 115.

Brownlee, James, a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born at Torfoot, Avondale, Lanarkshire. He graduated at Edinburgh University, received a private theological education, and in 1798 was licensed to preach the Gospel. He was ordained pastor of the Church at Falkirk, May 20, 1799, where he labored until his death, May 24, 1821. Mr. Brownlee was an humble Christian, an affectionate friend, a devoted pastor, an earnest preacher, and a ripe scholar. See (N. Y.) Ref. Dutch Church Magazine, 1828-29, p. 353.

Brownlee, John, an English Congregational minister, was born in 1791. Having labored two years, first at Bethelsdrop, and afterwards at Somerset, he set sail in 1816 as missionary to Africa. Mr. Brownlee sought to form a mission-station on the banks of the Chumie, and in order to carry out this object was compelled to resign his connection with the London Missionary Society and become an agent of the government. In 1825 he accepted an invitation to commence a mission to the Kaffres, and once more became one of the society's agents. In January, 1826, he removed to Buffalo River, and formed a station at Tzatzoe's Kraal, the present King William's Town. In this sphere he labored upwards of forty years. He died Dec. 25, 1872. Mr. Brownlee was mild, peaceable, and loving; a man of great perseverance and faith. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 318.

Brownson, David, a Congregational minister, graduated at Yale College in 1762. He was ordained pastor of the Church at Oxford, Conn., in 1764, was dismissed in 1779, and died in 1806. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 468.

Brownson, Hector, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Vernon, Conn., Oct. 7, 1791. He belonged to a typical Puritan family, whose stern moral teachings were inwrought into his nature; experienced a genuine conversion when about twenty; enlisted in his country's service in 1812; was in several engagements, out of which he came with great credit and a lieutenant's command; and began preaching in 1825 under the auspices of the New England Conference. In 1838 he entered the service of the American Bible Society, in which he continued thirty-nine years, closing his labors and life April 30, 1877. Mr. Brownson was a happy, exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 47.

Brownson, Ira, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was received into the Genesee Conference in 1820, and labored with self-sacrificing devotion until his death at Granger, N. Y., June 27, 1843. He was abundantly useful as a Christian and minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 453.

Brownson, Orestes Augustus, LL.D., an eminent writer and lay theologian, was born at Stockbridge, Vt., Sept. 16, 1803. In consequence of his father's death and his mother's poverty, he was adopted at an early age by an old couple at Royaltown, who brought him up in the most rigid form of the New England orthodoxy of that period. The entire atmosphere of his youth was chilling to the last degree; and to a nature such as his—buoyant, impulsive, generous, and light-hearted—the memory of these early impressions and this cold and severe discipline hung darkly over him all his life, and had much to do, no doubt, with his later conversion to extreme and contrary principles, and his uncompromising warfare against Protestantism. In October, 1822, he united with the Presbyterian Church as one claiming divine authority, his deeply religious nature asking for guidance and help out of the darkness into which his questionings had led him; but the restraint under which he there found himself, and the surveillance to which he was subjected by a hard discipline, which has now largely passed away, at length induced him to break loose from what he came to consider an unwarrantable tyranny. In the rebound he became a Universalist, was accepted as a minister in that body, and at the age of twenty-two became editor of the Gospel Advocate. He was afterwards editor of the Philanthropist, a contributor to the Christian Examiner, the Democratic Review, and many other periodicals. In 1836, having advanced in his views to a grand theory of the Church of the future, "which would embody the most advanced ideas and sentiments of the race," he thought to prepare for it by organizing a "society for Christian union and progress" in Boston. "He was at this time full of enthusiasm of youth, with a magnificent physique, a powerful voice, unconquerable energy, fiery, fearless, and terribly in earnest. . . . While honestly preaching a religion of love of the race, he was overbearing in argument, arrogant in assertion, and crushing in denunciation, so that innumerable anecdotes were told of his impatience of contradiction" (N. Y. Catholic Almanac, 1877, p. 40). In 1838, while still preaching and writing for various periodicals, Dr. Brownson established a review of his own—the Boston Quarterly Review—which he continued for five years, and then merged it in the Democratic Review. He wrote powerfully upon almost every literary, political, and religious subject, making a profound impression upon his readers. He also advocated his radical, political, and religious views in lectures. On Oct. 20, 1844, Dr. Brownson was received into the Roman Catholic Church in Boston. He had become more and more rationalistic, and this sudden conversion occasioned much comment. He was accused of inexplicable inconsistency and contradiction, and it was attempted to break the force of his conversion by representing him as eccentric and variable. There was much, of course, in the previous history of Dr. Brownson to justify these charges—a man who had passed from Presbyterianism through various phases of liberal Christianity almost to the verge of atheism. But a profounder view of human nature and of the stirring history of the times will serve, we think, to justify Brownson from these charges. No one who read his essays or listened to him could doubt the honesty, the intense earnestness and conscientiousness with which he held and defended his opinions, whatever they might be. And now that, after study and struggles, he gave them over, and sought refuge to his disturbed mind in that Church which has so often proved a refuge—whether safe or not—to human questionings, doubts, and longings, and did so in the midst of derision and harsh accusations, it is not reasonable to suppose that this earnestness and conscientiousness was wanting here. Such changes and reactions are not infrequent in the history of the human mind. It must also be remembered that the English Catholic movement was then at its height, and the following year Newman himself received absolution. At any rate, Brownson became an enthusiastic advocate of the Roman Catholic Church, and so continued throughout the rest of his life. The same dogmatism and fervor he had previously manifested was now transferred to an uncompromising advocacy of his new-found faith, imbibed doubtless by the remembrances of his boyhood. In 1844 he changed the title of his review into that of Brownson's Quarterly Review, which he made the medium of his powerful pen. All sorts of questions were here discussed with a vigor acknowledged by all. In 1864, owing to impaired health, he discontinued it. He revived it in 1873, but finally gave it up in October, 1875, and went to live with his son in Detroit, Mich., where he died, April 17, 1876. According to Roman Catholic authorities, his wife (Miss Sallie Healy, of Eldridge, N. Y.), although not at that time a member of the Roman Catholic Church, was always a Catholic at heart, and her assent and encouragement had much to do with his avowing himself a Catholic.

Brownson's pen was never idle. Besides his Review and his contributions to the periodicals, he wrote, The Spirit-rapper, an investigation of the question of spiritualism;—The American Republic, of which he was an ardent defender, and gave a son to its defence, who was killed at the battle of Ream's Station, Va., in August, 1864;—Liberalism and the Church, in which he controverted the liberalists, although he was at one time—and when a Roman Catholic—a firm defender of the liberal section in the Roman Church. When the Syllabus of 1865 was published, he questioned its propriety and effect, but afterwards accepted and defended it in the Catholic World and Tablet. He also cordially accepted the definition of infallibility. His Review was the first American periodical reprinted in England, which was done for about twelve years. An edition of his works and essays, collected by his son, is proposed to be published in Detroit (1882). Lord Brougham is reported to have called Brownson one of the first thinkers and writers of the present age. With Görres, Rossi, De Maistre, Lamorcière, Montalembert, Dechamps, Lucas, Ward, Mallinkrodt, Maline, and others, Brownson has taken his place among the eminent laymen of this century in the Roman Catholic Church. Brownson also wrote Charles Edward; or, The Infidel Converted (1840):—The Convert; or, Leaves from my Experience (N. Y. 1857). He was a great admirer of the philosophy of M. Comte. Blakey, in his Hist. of the Philosophy of Mind, assigns Brownson a high place among the critics of mental philosophy. See Duyckinck, Cyclop. of Amer. Literature, ii, 144; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Appleton's Amer. Cyclop. s. v.

Browning, Edward, a preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was a Cornishman, born at Pencarrow, June 4, 1810. His father was a Methodist local preacher at Camelford for sixty years. Young Browning was converted at fifteen, went to London in 1832, and began to preach under the Rev. Dr. Joseph Beaumont. In 1850 he joined the Methodist Reformers, and entered the ministry in 1852. He labored in nine circuits with much success. At Stockton illness prostrated him, and he died May 30, 1875. See Minutes of the 19th Annual Assembly.

Bru, Moyses Vicente, a Spanish painter, was probably born at Valencia in 1682, and studied under Juan Conchillos. Before he was twenty-one he had painted several altar-pieces for the churches of Valencia, where he died soon after, in 1703. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruce, Andrew, a Scottish prelate, was archdeacon of St. Andrew's, after which he was preferred to the see of Dunkeld in 1679, but was deprived in 1686 for non-compliance with the measures of the court. In 1688 he was restored to the bishopric of Orkney. He died in March, 1700. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 229.

Bruce, A. W., a Universalist minister, was born at Bennington, Vt., in 1812. He was trained by the strictest sort of Methodist parents, became a Universalist in faith at the age of eighteen, studied medicine in early manhood, and after practicing it a few years entered the ministry of the Universalist Church. He was ordained in 1843, and labored in some of the Eastern States, in Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana. He died suddenly, Aug. 19, 1871. Mr. Bruce was an impressive and acceptable preacher. See Universalist Register, 1872, p. 152.

Bruce, James (1), a Scottish prelate, was the son of Sir Robert Bruce of Clackmannan, and was first rector of Kiltrenny, in Fife, about 1438. He was promoted to the see of Dunkeld, and consecrated in 1441. In 1444 he was made chancellor of the kingdom. He was translated to the see of Glasgow in 1446, but died before his consecration, in 1447. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 87.

Bruce, James (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Kelso, Roxburghshire, Jan. 23, 1804. As he approached his twentieth year he entered the Glasgow University, and on completing his course he was appointed tutor to a gentleman's sons in Scotland, and afterwards usher in a school at Hinckley, Leicestershire. There he was converted. In 1827 he entered Rotherham College. His first charge was at Lofthouse, in the North Riding of York. After this he preached twelve years at Houden, ten years at Bamford, a few years at Manchester, and then, resigning active ministerial labor, he lived a short time at Liverpool, next at Leamington, and finally removed to Cublington, where he died, Sept. 28, 1873. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 313.

Bruce, John, an English Congregational minister, was born at Great Grimby, July 7, 1782. At thirteen years of age he was apprenticed to a linendraper at Pontefract; when sixteen years old he wrote A Meditation on Death, published in the Evangelical Magazine; and when about eighteen he entered Homerton College. On leaving college he was ordained, and became assistant minister at Newington Chapel, Liverpool. In 1807 he accepted a call to Newport, Isle of Wight, and eventually removed to Liverpool, where he died in January, 1874. Mr. Bruce published, Twenty Sermons to Aid in Private and Family Devotions:—Dorcas; or, Female Christian Benevolence Exemplified:—The Abrahamic Covenant:—and various other minor treatises. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 319.

Bruce, John Helvey, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Montgomery County, Va., Feb. 2, 1817. He emigrated with his parents to Miami County, O., in early life; received a careful religious training; experienced conversion at the age of fifteen; soon after received license to exhort; was licensed to preach in 1835; and in 1836 joined the Indiana Conference, in which he labored with faithfulness and success until his decease, Aug. 23, 1854. Mr. Bruce was manly and courageous; sound and clear in theology; zealous and pathetic as a preacher; affectionate and devoted as a friend. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1854, p. 447.

Bruce, Joseph, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Springfield, Vt., in 1821. He was converted when about seventeen years of age, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church. For seventeen years (1840-57) he was a Methodist preacher. He then joined the Free-will Baptists, and was ordained a minister in that denomination in June, 1858. It is said that during the year following his baptism he preached more than three hundred sermons, travelling from place to place on foot. He died in Braintree, Vt., Dec. 16, 1860. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1862, p. 92. (J. C. S.)

Bruce, Michael, an Irish Presbyterian minister, was a descendant of Robert Bruce. He was ordained as one of the ministers of Edinburgh in 1657, and settled at Killinchy in October of the year following. A person "singularly gifted, truly zealous and faithful, but also peaceable and orderly in his temper and conversation with his brethren, . . . a very Nathaniel." He was very zealous in stirring up the people against prelacy; he was thought to have been connected with the Blood plot, though this was false; yet for his zeal he was obliged to fly to Scotland. Here he was taken prisoner and sent to London, and did not return to his congregation until after some years of absence. He afterwards became an Arian, and was known as a "non-subscriber." See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Bruce, Nathaniel F., M.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, was for many years chaplain of the state prison, Clinton, N. Y. He died in Dexter, Mich., Aug. 1, 1857. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1858, p. 96.

Bruce, Robert (1), D.D., an Associate minister, was born in the parish of Scone, Perth Co., Scotland, in 1776. He graduated at the university of Edinburgh in 1798, and in 1801 was admitted as a student of divinity by the Associate Presbytery of Perth, and for five years prosecuted his studies under the venerable professor A. Bruce. He was licensed by the Associate Presbytery of Perth in 1806, and was immediately sent by the Scottish Synod as a missionary to the United States. After travelling some years, he became pastor of the Associate congregation in Fort Pitt, now Pittsburgh. In 1820 he was chosen president of the Western University; here he served until 1843, when he resigned. After this he had an important agency in establishing another institution (Duquesne College), of which he became provost, and held the place till the close of his life, June 14, 1846. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 90.

Bruce, Robert (2), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born at Ballycastle, County Antrim, in 1785. In 1810 he was received into the ministry, and for forty-five years fulfilled his duties with unwearied zeal, courage, faithfulness, and success. He clearly apprehended and lucidly expounded the doctrines of Methodism, was well acquainted with its constitution and history, and well read in the general history of the Church. He was a man of unimpeachable integrity, firmness of purpose, and gentleness of spirit. He became a supernumerary in 1855, and died at his residence in Skibbereen, June 5, 1863. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1863, p. 25.

Bruce, Samuel, a Lutheran minister, was first connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In his nineteenth year he began to exhort, and subsequently became a local preacher. In 1863 he was ordained as a Lutheran minister by the Franckean Synod, and for nearly twenty years he served the congregation at South Worcester, N. Y. During the last four years of his life he was additionally employed as pastor at Centre Valley and Leesville. He died at South Worcester, April 21, 1881. See Lutheran Observer, May 6, 1881.

Bruce, William (1), an elder of the Wood Street congregation, Dublin, in 1750 founded the "Widow's Fund." From Reid's History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland we learn that he received a collegiate education, after which he engaged in business. Nine or ten years before his death, after having travelled somewhat in pursuit of intellectual improvement, he settled permanently in Dublin, "and distinguished himself as a most useful and public spirited citizen." In 1755 he died, in the fifty-fourth year of his age.

Bruce, William (2), D.D., an Irish Presbyterian minister, grandson of Rev. Michael Bruce, was born in 1758. Originally he was connected with the synod of Ulster, as minister of Lisburn. He was afterwards pastor of the Strand Street congregation, Dublin. In 1790 he settled in Belfast, as minister of the First Congregation. For more than thirty years he presided over the Belfast Academy. He died in 1841. See Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Bruch, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1791 at Zweibrücken. He studied at Strasburg, where he also occupied the theological chair for more than forty years, and died July 21, 1874. He was one of the founders, and president, of the Evangelical Society, also president of the board of directors of the Lutheran Church of Alsace. His theological position was that of a rationalist. He wrote, Lehrbuch der christlichen Sittenlehre (Strasburg, 1829):—Christliche Vorträge (ibid. 1838):—Études Philosophiques sur le Christianisme (Paris and Strasburg, 1839; Germ. transl. by Franz, Mannheim, 1847, new ed. 1850):—Die Lehre von den göttlichen Eigenschaften (Hamburg, 1842):—Betrachtungen über Christenthum und christlichen Glauben (Strasburg, 1845):—Weisheitslehre der Hebräer (ibid. 1851):—Das Gebet des Herrn (ibid. 1852):—Die protestantische Freiheit (ibid. 1857):—Die Lehre von der Präexistenz der menschlichen Seele (ibid. 1859). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 193 sq.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Gerold, Joh. Fr. Bruch (Strasburg, 1874). (B. P.)

Bruck, Mrs., a Reformation martyr, was a native of Germany, and for reading the Scriptures was buried alive, May 9, 1545. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 384.

Brück, Gregorius Heinse, a German jurist, was born at Brück, near Wittenberg, in 1484. He studied at Wittenberg and Frankfurt. In 1520 he was appointed chancellor by the elector Frederick. In this position he rendered great service to the Reformation and the development of the Evangelical Church, especially at the diet of Augsburg in 1530. He died at Jena, Feb. 15, 1557. See Kolde, in the Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie, 1874, p. 343-408; Muther, in Allgemeine deutsche Biographie, iii, 388 sq.; Plitt, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. (2d ed.) s. v. (B. P.)

Brück, Moses, a Jewish rabbi, who died at Szegeid, Hungary, in 1849, is the author of, Rabbinische Ceremonialgebräuche, in ihrer Entstehung und geschichtlichen Entwicklung dargestellt (Breslau, 1837):—Das mosaische Judenthum oder die Rückkehr zu demselben (Frankfort-on-the-Main, eod.):—Pharisäische Volksitten und Ritualien in ihrer Entstehung und Entwicklung (ibid. 1840). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 133; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 194. (B. P.)

Brucker, PHILIPPE ADAM, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born at Kùchberg, near Basle, June 20, 1677, and died in March, 1751. His principal works are, De Quarto Imperio a Daniele Descripto (Basle, 1692, 4to):—Pensées sur le Réunion des Églises Protestantes (Heidelberg, 1723, 4to). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruckner, JOHN, a Lutheran divine, who settled in England, was born on the island of Cadsand, near the Belgian frontier, Dec. 31, 1726, and was educated in theology chiefly at the university of Franeker, whence he passed to Leyden, and then obtained a pastorate. His literary acquirements were eminent; he read Hebrew and Greek; composed correctly; and preached with applause in four languages—Latin, Dutch, French, and English. In 1753 he accepted the position of French preacher to the Walloon Church of Norwich, England, where he continued fifty-one years. In 1766 he also became minister to the Dutch Church, but the duties soon became merely nominal. He died May 12, 1804. Bruckner published, Théorie du Système Animal (1767):—Criticisms on the Diversions of Purley (1790):—Thoughts on Public Worship (1792), and other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brudo, ABRAHAM, a Jewish commentator and rabbi at Constantinople, who died at Jerusalem in 1710, wrote a commentary on Genesis entitled, Birkath Abraham (ברכת אברהם), "the blessing of Abraham" (Venice, 1696). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruecker, PETER, a German Reformed minister, was born at Düsseldorf in Germany, and came to America in 1849 or 1850. He took a theological course at Mercersburg, Pa., and left soon after for the West. He was licensed to preach and ordained by the Tiffin Classical Synod of Ohio, in 1852. About the same time he took charge of a German congregation in Sandusky, where he labored about two years, when, Jan. 16, 1854, he died. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 498.

Bruel (Lat. Brulins), JOACHIM, a Flemish theologian of the Augustinian order, was born at Vorst, in Brabant. Having taught philosophy and theology he was twice elected provincial of his order in Flanders. He died June 29, 1653. Bruel wrote, Brevés Resolutiones Casuum apud Regulares Reservatorum (Cologne, 1640):—Les Confessions du Bienheureux P. Alphonse d'Arasco, traduites de l'Espagnol en Français (ibid. 1610):—Vita B. Joannis Chisii (Antwerp, 1645):—Historia Perucana Ordinis Eremitarum S. P. Augustini Libri Octodecim (ibid. 1651):—De Sequestratione Religiosorum (1653). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruen, Barnabas, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bottle Hill (now Madison), N. J. He graduated with the highest honors from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1816; proceeded to Newburgh, where he engaged in the work of teaching, devoting his leisure hours to theological study, with a view to the ministry, and in the year following was recalled to his alma mater as a tutor. On June 30, 1819, he was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Ogdensburg, to which he had been unanimously called. He died Nov. 18, 1820. Mr. Bruen was a man of deep piety, brilliant gifts, and of untiring devotion to duty. See The Christian Herald (N. Y.), 1820-21, p. 787.

Bruen, James McWhorter, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Newark, N. J., July 30, 1818. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1839, and from the Union Theological Seminary in 1842. He was ordained July 1, 1845, and became pastor of the Presbyterian Church of New Windsor, N. Y. His pastorate of three years in that Church (1845-48), and another of equal length in the Reformed Dutch Church at Clintonville, N. J. (1849-52), were his only terms of continuous ministry. For the last twenty-nine or thirty years of his life he resided in Irvington, N. J., where he led a quiet and scholarly life. He died at Clayton, in February, 1881. See Presbyterian, Feb. 12, 1881. (W. P. S.)

Brueys, David Augustin de, a French theologian, was born of Protestant parents at Aix in 1640. He was brought up for the bar, but after the death of his wife took orders. He died Nov. 25, 1723. He at first wrote against Bossuet's Exposition de la Doctrine de l'Eglise, but was afterwards converted by that prelate. He wrote, Examen des Raisons qui ont donné lieu à la Séparation des Protestants (1683):—Défense du Culte Extérieur de l'Eglise Catholique (Paris, 1685, 12mo):—Traité de l'Euchariste (ibid. 1686), where he endeavors to prove the Roman doctrine by truths admitted by both parties:—Traité de l'Eglise, ou l'on Montre que les Principes des Calvinistes se Contredisent (1687):—L'Histoire du Fanatisme de Nôtre Temps (1692):—Traité de la Sainte Messe (1700), etc. He also wrote many dramas. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruganza, Gaetano, an Italian theologian and scholar, was born at Mantua in 1732. He taught rhetoric and classics in several colleges, and philosophy at Perugia. Being a Jesuit, he retired to his native place during the time of the suppression of his order, and devoted himself to the performance of literary labor and of his priestly functions. He died about 1800. He wrote, De Modo Conscribendo Inscriptiones (Mantua, 1779):—La Poesia in Aiuto alla Prosa (ibid. 1781). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruges (satin), often spelled Bridges, the English mediæval form of the town of Bruges, is rich material of tissue from Flanders, used for vestments.

Brughach, an early Irish prelate, was bishop of Rath-mighe-Aenigh, a church situated in Tir-enna, in Tyrconnel, probably the church of Rath, near Manor Cunningham, County Donegal. But Dr. Reeves says (S. Adamnan, p. 192, n) it is what is now called Raymochy, in the barony of Raphoe. He is said to have been of the race of Colla da-Chrioch; and, perhaps, was the son of Sedna and disciple of St. Degaidh. His dedication is given on Nov. 1. He was consecrated by St. Patrick for Rath-Mugeonaich, and afterwards himself consecrated St. Cairpre (Nov. 11). But Lanigan (Eccl. Hist. Ireland, ii, 77, 79) points out that Brughach must have been bishop there after St. Bolcan, and the latter could scarcely have been a bishop till after St. Patrick's death.

Brughi, Giovanni Battista, an Italian painter, was a pupil of Gaulli, and painted in oil several fine pictures for the churches of Rome. He died about 1730. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Brugière, Pierre, a French theologian, was born at Thiers, Oct. 3, 1740. He became collegiate of that city, preacher successively at Clermont, Riom, Brionde, and (in 1768) at Paris, where he remained for ten years in the convent of St. Roch. He died in 1803, leaving several discourses and practical treatises, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brugieri, Giovanni Domenico, a Florentine painter, was born at Lucca in 1678, and first studied under Baldi, and afterwards Carlo Maratti. His works are to be seen in the Chapel of the Sacrament at the Servi, and in other edifices at Lucca. He died in 1744.

Brugman (or Brugmans), John, a Flemish preacher, was a member of the Franciscan order of the diocese of Cologne, and obtained a great reputation for his eloquence. He taught theology in the convent of St. Omer, was afterwards provincial, and died at Nimeguen in 1473. He wrote, Vita S. Lidwine Virginis (Schiedam, 1498). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruguier, Jean, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Nismes, and died at Geneva in 1634, leaving Discours sur le Chant des Psaumes (1663, 12mo), in which the writer asserts the propriety of singing the Psalms in public worship, a theory for which the book was condemned, and the author banished:—Réponse au Livre de M. Arnauld, etc. (Quevilly, 1673, 12mo), in defence of the Calvinists:—Idea Totius Philosophiæ, etc. (1676, 8vo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruguère du Gard, J. T., a French ecclesiastic, was born at Sommières, near Nismes, in 1765. He was educated at Brienne, and was vicar at St. Julien-du-Saut, near Sens, until 1792, when he went to Paris, married, and turned his attention to civil affairs. He died in 1834, leaving several works of a public character, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brühl, Moritz J. A., a Roman Catholic writer of Germany, was born of Jewish parentage, in 1819, at Düsseldorf. He studied at Heidelberg and Bonn, and for a time lived at London as a reporter of an English paper. After his return, in 1844, he joined the Church at Schwäbisch-Gmünd, and published his Selbstbekenntnisse eines Katechumen (Regensburg, 1844):—Kurze Denkschrift an alle akatholischen Christen, von einem kath. Neuchristen (Augsburg, 1844). Brühl died at Vienna, Jan. 13, 1877. Besides the two writings mentioned above, he published Geschichte der Gesellschaft Jesu (Würzburg, 1846):—Neueste Geschichte der Gesellschaft Jesu (Gleiwitz, 1847-48, 2 vols.):—Geheime Geschichte der Wahl Papst Clemens XIV und der Aufhebung des Jesuitenordens (Aachen, 1848):—Die Versammlung der deutschen Erzbischöfe und Bischöfe zu Würzburg (Würzburg, 1849):—Ueber den Charakter und wesentlichen Eigenschaften der Concorde (Schaffhausen, 1853):—Geschichte der kath. Literatur Deutschlands, vom XVII Jahrhundert bis zur Gegenwart (Wien, 1854; 2d ed. 1861):—Johann Michael Sailer (Aachen, 1855). (B. P.)

Brühn, David, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Memel, Sept. 30, 1727. He studied at Königsberg and Halle, was in 1750 con-rector at the Cölnische Gymnasium in Berlin, in 1752 preacher at the military school, in 1754 dean at St. Mary's, and in 1756 arch-dean. He died April 27, 1782. He is the author of some hymns, one of which has been translated into English:—Der du uns als Vater liebest, "Thou who lovest us as a father," in Sacred Hymns from the German, p. 30. See Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 231. (B. P.)

Bruin. See BRUYN.

Bruinsech, Cael (the slender), daughter of Crimthan, and virgin of Magh-trea, is commemorated as an Irish saint May 29. Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, 459, c. 10; 789, c. 1) suggests that this may be Bruinecha, a favorite disciple of St. Kieran's mother, Liadania (q. v.). But instead of being the daughter of Crimthan, some account her as one of the three sisters of St. Cronan, or Mochua of Balla (March 30), and thus belonging to a different race, while others identify her with St. Buriena, who went to Cornwall. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Brulca, in Thibetan mythology. The religion of the Lamaïtes teaches that before the existence of the earth, in the place which the latter now occupies there were sixteen places, which were inhabited by heavenly spirits. One of these places is called Brulca, and that because of the joy which the world had over the miracles there performed by the spirits.

Brulefer (or Brulifer), ÉTIENNE, a French ecclesiastic, was a native of Bretagne, a doctor of Paris, and a Minorite, who taught theology at Metz and Mentz, and died in 1483. He wrote, Reportata in D. Bonaventuræ Sententias (Basle, 1501; Venice, 1504; Paris, 1507: — De Sanctissima Trinitate: — De Paupertate Jesu Christi et Apostolorum (Paris, 1500); and a few minor works, for which see Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruley, PETER, a Reformation martyr, was a preacher in the French Church at Strasburg, who came down to visit the lower countries about Artois and Dornick in Flanders, where he preached the word of God to the people. Here he was taken and committed to prison, and while there wrote many beautiful letters to his friends. He remained in prison four months, and was then burned at Dornick in 1545. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 886.

Brulliard, PHILIBERT, a French prelate, was born at Dijon, Sept. 11, 1765. After having been curate of St. Étienne-du-Mont at Paris, he was nominated bishop of Grenoble Dec. 28, 1825, and was consecrated Aug. 6, 1826. He became involved in a dispute concerning the genuineness of certain alleged miracles among the shepherds of the Alps in 1846, and in consequence retired, Dec. 7, 1852, to become canon of the Imperial Chapel of St. Denis for the remainder of his days. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brumalia were heathen festivals among the ancient Romans, said to have been instituted by Romulus in honor of Bacchus. They were celebrated twice a year, on the twelfth day before the Kalends of March, and the eighteenth before the Kalends of November. Among the early Christians Brumalia were sometimes observed, according to Tertullian, who records it to their shame; but these are by some considered the celebration of the winter solstice, from bruma, winter. By the council of Trullo (A.D. 692) Christians were prohibited from attending the Brumalia on pain of excommunication.

Brumauld de Beauregard, JEAN, a French prelate, was born at Poitiers, Dec. 1, 1749. He was at first canon and grand-vicar of the diocese of Luconia. At the time of the revolution he went to England and interested himself in the success of the war of La Vendée. Having been arrested at various times, he at length returned to France and became rector of the cathedral of Poitiers in 1803, then bishop of Montauban at the second restoration. In 1839 he was appointed canon of St. Denis. He died Nov. 26, 1841. He wrote, Dissertation sur le Lieu où s'est donnée la Bataille de Vaulade, etc., où Clovis défait Alaric II, extracts of which are inserted in the Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de l'Ouest: — Notes sur les Evêques du Luçon, from Prêve of Vordrie down to Borellon. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brumwell, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1813. He was converted in early life, accepted by the Conference in 1838, sent to Hoxton Institution, received his last appointment (Morley) in 1873, and died March 28, 1875. He was affable, gentle, catholic, faithful to Methodist rules, and unremitting in his attention to all the obligations of his office. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 23.

Brundage, ABRAHAM, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Cornwall, Orange Co., N. Y., Jan. 19, 1820. He was converted at the age of thirteen; licensed to preach in 1850; and in 1852 entered the New York Conference, wherein he served diligently until 1863, when his health failed and his reason became impaired, making it necessary to send him to the Utica Insane Asylum, where in a few months he was restored. In 1866 he resumed his place in the effective ranks, but the labors of the pastorate were too severe for his nervous temperament, and he was obliged to retire from all active work. He died Nov. 22, 1868. Mr. Brundage was remarkable for his physical and mental ability, his cheerfulness, and his warm, frank spirit. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 91.

Brune, Etienne, a Reformation martyr, was a husbandman at Rutiers, in France. He was persecuted by Gaspar Augerius and by Domicellus, a Franciscan. He was burned at Planuoll in 1540. It is said that the wind rose and blew the fire so from him, as he stood exhorting the people, that he continued speaking for an hour unharmed, and they were obliged to build a new fire. But this did not burn him, so they seized a staff and thrust it through his entrails, and took his body and threw it down upon the coals, where it burned to ashes. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 898.

Brune, John H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Prussia, Oct. 19, 1834. He emigrated to America in early life; settled in Missouri, where he was converted; joined the South-west German Conference in 1858, and labored faithfully until his death, Oct. 9, 1867. Mr. Brune was known and beloved as a faithful Christian minister. He was meek and gentle in deportment, decided in principle, and deep and uniform in piety. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 265.

Brunelleschi, FILIPPO, an eminent Italian architect, was born at Florence in 1377. He was one of the first who revived the Greek practice of making the principles of geometry subservient to art, and was the first Florentine who discovered the method of bringing this to perfection, which, as Vasari says, "consisted in drawing it in outline by means of intersections, or squares." He conceived the idea of raising a cupola over the Church of Santa Maria del Fiore at Florence. He was employed by the duke Filippo Maria, and also made a number of important improvements in the cathedral. He executed a number of works for pope Eugenius IV in Rome, which gained him applause and honorable reward. He died in 1444. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bruner, ANTHONY C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was for thirteen years a faithful preacher in the Georgia Conference, and died in 1852 or 1853. Mr. Bruner's ministry was characterized by zeal, fidelity, and success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 469.

Brunet, a French theologian and scholar, lived in the latter half of the 18th century. He was doctor of theology and curate of Bernières, and wrote, Homélie pour tous les Dimanches, en Forme de Prônes (Paris, 1776): — Ode sur la Paix (ibid. 1788). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brunet, François Florentine, a French theologian, was born at Vitel, in Lorraine, and died at Paris, Sept. 15, 1806. He was a monk of the Mission congregation, and taught philosophy at Toul and Chalons-sur-Marne. He is best known by his learned Parallèle des Religions (Paris, 1792, 5 vols. 4to). He also wrote Du Zèle de la Foi dans les Femmes, et des heureux Effets qu'il peut produire dans l'Eglise, and other minor works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Brunet, Jean, a French theologian of the Dominican order, of the latter half of the 18th century, wrote, a translation of the Lettres de Milady Worthley Mon- taigu (Paris, 1763):—Abregé des Libertés de l'Eglise Gallicane, avec des Réflexions et des Preuves qui en démontrent la Pratique et la Justice (Geneva and Paris, 1765). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brunet, Jean Louis, a French writer, who was born at Arles in 1688, and died in 1747, was an advocate at Paris, and left several works on canon law, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brunetti, SEBASTIANO, an Italian painter, was born at Bologna about 1618, and studied under Lucio Massari and Guido. In Santa Maria Maggiore at Bologna is a picture by him of the Guardian Angel; in Santa Margherita, Mary Magdalene Praying in the Desert; and in San Giuseppe, a Holy Family. He died in 1649. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brunhild, in ancient German mythology, was a heroic maiden of daemonical power and courage, queen of Isenland. Brunhild-bed is the name of a mountain of stone in Hesse, similar to a grave, under which Brunhild is said to rest.

Bruni, Domenico, a reputable Italian painter of architecture and perspective, was born at Brescia in 1591, and studied under Sandrini. He painted several works for the churches and public edifices of Brescia, and died in 1666. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruni, Francesco, an Italian engraver, was born at Genoa about 1600. Among other plates there is one by him representing the Assumption of the Virgin, after Guido. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Bruni, Lucio, a painter of the Venetian school, lived at Vicenza in 1584. There is a small altar-piece by him in the Church of San Jacopo at Vicenza, representing the Marriage of St. Catherine. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruni, Orazio, an Italian engraver, was born at Sienna about 1630. The following are some of his principal plates: The Prodigal Son; The Golden Age; and a set of the Four Seasons. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Brünings, Christian, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Bremen, Jan. 16, 1702. He studied at Bremen and Heidelberg, was in 1725 rector of the gymnasium at Kreutznach, in 1734 pastor at Mannheim, and in 1740 professor of theology at Heidelberg, where he died, March 6, 1763. He wrote, Disputatio de Propitiatorio (Bremen, 1723):—De Ancora Sacra Meditatio ad Hebr. vi, 19 (ibid.):—De Liberis Abrahamo Excitandis ad Matt. iii, 9, in the Miscellan. Gröning. vol. ii:—Diss. de Cornu s. Galea Salutis ad Luc. i, 69 (Heidelberg, 1741):—Diss. I, II de Christo Triumphante ad Col. ii, 15; 2 Cor. ii, 14 (ibid. 1742):—Orat. Inaug. de Pallii Prophetici super Elisæum Infectione, dicta (ibid. 1741):—Præmæ Lineæ Studiû Homiletici (Frankfort, 1744):—Diss. de Agno Lucerna Hierosolyma Calestis ad Apoc. xxi, 23 (Heidelberg, 1747):—Tâ τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. e. Doctrina de Deo (Frankfort, 1755):—Theses Miscell. de Excommunicatione Judaica (1753):—Compendium Antiquitatum Hebraicarum (1763). pendiosus, in quo Recensentur Præcipue Theol. Doctores et Ecclesiæ Ministri, qui ab Anno 1500 usque 1615 in Germania Vixerunt:—Trostbüchlein wider alle leibliche und geistliche Noth. See Fischlin, Memoria theologorum württembergensium; Dietericus, De Annæbergu et Claris Viris Inde Oriundis; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brunn, Christopher, a son of Augustinus, studied at Tübingen, and accompanied prince Louis Frederic to France and England. After his return, he was made deacon of the cathedral-church at Stuttgard, was called in 1614 as superintendent to Leonberg, and died Dec. 20, 1617. See Fischlin, Memoria theologorum württembergensium; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brunn (Lat. Brunus), Conrad, was a canon of Augsburg, who died in 1563, leaving a Treatise on Ceremonies, in six books; another against the Centurians of Magdeburg; and a collection of treatises, De Hæreticis, De Seditiosis, De Legationibus, De Imaginibus, etc. (Mentz, 1561).

Brunn, Wilhelm Ludwig, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born March 15, 1768, at Zerbst, and died Jan. 2, 1807, as third pastor of the German Reformed Church at Magdeburg. He wrote, Disquisitio Historico-Critica de Indole, Ætate et usu Libri Apocryphi, Vulgo Inscripti: Evangelium Nicodemi (Berlin, 1794). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 276. (B. P.)

Brunne, ROBERT DE (or Robert Mannyng), a canon of the Gilbertine order, was born in the latter part of the 13th century, and received into the order of black canons at Brunne about 1288. He resided in the priory of Sempringham ten years, in the time of prior John of Camelton, and five years with John of Clyntone. In 1303 he began a metrical paraphrase of a French book, written by Robert Grosthead, bishop of Lincoln, called Manuel Pêché (Manuel des Pêchés), a treatise on the decalogue and the seven deadly sins, illustrated with many legendary stories. It was never printed, but is preserved in the Bodleian Library. His second and more important work was a metrical chronicle of England—the first part being a translation of Wace's Brut d'Angleterre, and the second from a French chronicle written by Peter de Langtoft. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Brunnemann, JEROME, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1563 at Cöln-on-the-Spree. He studied at Heidelberg and Strasburg, was in 1593 rector at Ruppin, in 1601 deacon of St. Peter's there, in 1631 provost, and died April 3, 1681. (B. P.)

Brunner, Christoph Andreas, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 5, 1657, at Schraplau, in Saxony. He studied at Leipsic, was in 1683 pastor at Köhra, in 1685 at Brandis, and died April 16, 1741. He wrote De Fato Theolog. Histor. (1704), to which he added in 1706 Addenda. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brunner, Johannes, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born in 1755 at Zurich, and died there April 2, 1820, as pastor of the hospital-church and professor of the school of art. He published Unterhaltungen in Predigten für Kranke, Arme, Schwermüthige und Trostbedürftige (Zurich, 1801, 1810, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 196. (B. P.)

Brunner, Johannes Casper, a Protestant theologian of Switzerland, was born at Zurich, Dec. 12, 1649. He studied under the famous Hottinger, at whose death he delivered an address. After having travelled through Germany, Holland, England, and France, he was in 1676 appointed pastor at Rorbach, in 1687 deacon of the large minster church of his native place, and died there as archdeacon in 1705. He wrote a commentary on Genesis and Exodus, which, however, has not been printed. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brunner, Martin (1), a German Reformed minister, was born in Philadelphia in 1797. He studied theology under the Rev. Samuel Helffenstein, D.D.; and was licensed by the Synod of the German Reformed Church which convened in New Holland, Pa., in 1816. He immediately entered upon his duties as minister of the Sunbury congregation. Here he labored twelve years, and then went to Lancaster city in 1832, and became pastor of the Reformed Church in that place. In this field he labored seven years and then resigned. From this time forward he was without any pastoral charge. He died in 1852. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 472.

Brunner, Martin (2), a Swedish theologian, was at first professor of Greek at Upsala, and died as doctor and professor of theology in 1679. He wrote De Sensu Locorum Scripturæ. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brunner, Philip Joseph, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born May 7, 1758, at Philippsburg; and died Nov. 2, 1829, as doctor of theology at Carlsruhe. He published, Predigten und kürzere Reden (Carlsruhe, 1816, 2 parts):—Gebete und Betrachtungen über die vorn. Wahrheiten und Pflichten (14th ed. Heilbronn, 1822):—Gebetbuch für aufgeklärte katholische Christen (14th ed. ibid. 1832). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 165, 346, 349. (B. P.)

Brunnholtz, Peter, a Lutheran minister, was born at Nubil, in the principality of Glucksburg, in the duchy of Schleswig. He was ordained April 12, 1744, by the consistorium at Wernigerode, and immediately started to America in answer to a call from Dr. Fanche of Halle. He arrived Jan. 26, 1745. He was appointed second minister in the churches in which Dr. Muhlenberg had hitherto labored alone—namely, Philadelphia, Germantown, Providence, and New Hanover. In 1751 he resigned his charge of the Germantown Church, and gave his whole time to the congregation in Philadelphia, where he continued until he died, July 7, 1758. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, i, 16; Evangelical Review, vii, 152.

Bruno (or Brunon), Saint (1), an Italian theologian, was born at Soleria, in the diocese of Asti, in Piedmont. He became canon of the cathedral, and was engaged in a lively controversy against Berenger at Rome, in 1077, before Gregory VII, who called him to the bishopric of Segni, in Campania. In 1104 he embraced the monastic life at Mt. Cassin, where he became priest in 1107. In the meantime he resumed his episcopal see at the solicitation of pope Pascal II and of the people of Segni. He died in 1123. His works were published at Venice in 1652, by D. Marchesi, dean of Mt. Cassin, and with the notes of P. Bruni at Rome, 1789-91. These works contained one hundred and forty-five sermons and homilies. He also wrote a commentary upon the Song of Songs:—treatises upon Zechariah:—letters to pope Pascal II and to the bishop of Porto:—Expositio de Consecratione Ecclesie, deque Vestimentis Episcopalis, in vol. xii of the Spicilegium of D'Achery. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Bruno (or Brunon), Saint (2), bishop of RODEZ, was of Italian origin, and was monk of St. Benedict. A zealous adherent of the Catholic faith, he went as a missionary to Prussia, where he suffered martyrdom in 1008. He wrote several remarkable treatises, among which are two books upon Genesis. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruno (or Brunon), Saint (3), bishop of WURTZBURG (Bruno Herbipolensis), was first cousin of the emperor Conrad II. His exemplary life entitled him to be numbered among the saints, and he became the special patron of eastern France. He died May 17, 1045. He wrote, Commentaria in Psalterium, et in Cantica tam Novi quam Veteris Testamenti; Item, in Orationem Dominicam, in Symbolum Apostolorum et Athanasii: which, being revised by J. Cochleus, are found in the Bibliotheca Patrum (Lyons, 1677), vol. xviii. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Cave, Historia Literaria Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum; Possevinus, Apparatus Sacer; Trithemius, De Scriptoribus Ecclesiasticis; Hendorich, Pandectæ Brandenburgicæ; Diestel, Geschichte des Alten Testaments in der christlichen Kirche (Jena, 1869), p. 166 sq. Bruno, Francesco, a painter born at Porto Maurizio, in the Genoese territory, in 1648, and studied under P. da Cortona. He executed some altar-pieces and other subjects for the churches of his native country. He died in 1726. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruno Herbipolensis. See BRUNO OF WURTZBURG.

Brunow, J. J. F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Elberfeld, Germany, March 13, 1833. He attained marked eminence as a student in his early days; fled his country's military discipline in his nineteenth year and emigrated to America; landed in New York; immediately set out for California, where he was converted, and began with fiery eloquence to proclaim the newly found Saviour. In 1856 he was transferred to the Texas Conference, where he labored faithfully until 1862, when he went to New York city, and served some time in the German mission of Newark, N. J. In 1866 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Second German Presbyterian Church of that city; served it three years, and then returned to the Methodist Episcopal Church and took charge of the First German Church in Philadelphia. About three years later he received a retransfer to the Texas Conference, wherein he taxed his strength too severely, and closed his life and labors Aug. 1, 1872. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 8.

Brunquell, Peter Pius, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born May 23, 1752, at Bamberg; and died there, as prior of the monastery of the Dominicans, Aug. 28, 1828. He wrote Historische, dogmatische und praktische Abhandlung über den Ablass (Bamberg, 1816). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 458. (B. P.)

Brunsmann, Johannes, a Lutheran theologian, was born Oct. 30, 1637, at Nidrosia, in Norway. He studied at Upsala and Copenhagen; and died in the latter place, July 25, 1707. He wrote, Phosphorus Apocalypticus:—De usu Accentuationis Ebr. in Cod. sacro contra Wasmuthum aliosque:—Ignoti Philalethis Schediasmatum Apocalypticorum lib. iii. See Steinschneider, Bibliographisches Handbuch, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brunswick-Lüneburg, Christian, duke of, bishop of Halberstadt, was born Sept. 10, 1599. He distinguished himself in the Thirty Years' War, and died of poison, June 9, 1626. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brunus, Vincentius, an Italian Jesuit of Rimini, studied philosophy and medicine at Padua, and practiced the latter for some time. Being of feeble constitution, he joined the order of the Jesuits, and died at Rome, as rector of a Jesuitical college, Aug. 13, 1594. He wrote, Vita, Passio et Resurrectio Domini:—De Sacramento Penitentiae:—Meditationes in Evangelia, etc. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Freheri, Theatrum Eruditorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Brusch (or Bruschel), Gaspar, a German writer, was born at Schlackenwald, in Bohemia, in August, 1518. Wolfgang, bishop of Salms, gave him a residence at Passau, where he devoted himself entirely to the ecclesiastical history of Germany. The first volume of his projected work, De Germaniæ Episcopatibus Epitome, which was never finished, was published at Nuremberg, 1549, 8vo; also, at Ingolstadt (1551 fol.), as Monasteriorum Germaniæ Præcipuorum Chronologia. He was murdered in 1559. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruse, GILES DE, an English prelate of the early part of the 13th century, son of William de Bruse, baron of Brecknock, was born at Brecknock, Wales. He became bishop of Hereford. In the civil wars he sided with the nobility against John, on which account he was banished, but returned and recovered the king's favor. The paternal inheritance devolved upon him, so he was at once bishop and baron. He died in 1216, and was buried in his cathedral, the belfry of which he probably built. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 515.

Brush, Abner, a Presbyterian minister, was a graduate of Princeton. He studied theology, and in 1758 was ordained by the Presbytery of New York, and installed as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, N. Y. Mr. Brush remained in this charge until 1766, in which year he died. See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Brush, George W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was converted while a student at Ohio Wesleyan University, and in 1849 entered the Ohio Conference, wherein he served faithfully to the close of his life, some time in 1867 or 1868. Mr. Brush was an admirable preacher, but, in the hour of mental depression, sought relief in death. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 254.

Brush, Jacob, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born on Long Island, Feb. 4, 1769. From 1785 to his death, his name is among the workers of the Methodist itinerancy. He exerted himself greatly in his preaching, and died Sept. 25, 1795. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1796, p. 66.

Brush, John C., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, studied theology under Dr. J. H. Livingston, and was licensed by the Classis of New York in 1793. He then became pastor of the Church at North and South Hampton, Bucks Co., Pa., 1794 to 1796. After leaving this church he accepted the churches at Dutch Creek Cross-roads, and Dover, Del., Presbyterian, where he remained from 1796. The time of his death is unknown. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 203.

Brush, William W., a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) Church, and a son of William Brush, was born at Guilford, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1843. He graduated at Rutgers College in 1862, New Brunswick Seminary in 1865, and was licensed by the Classis of Raritan in 1866. He was pastor at Farmer Village, 1866 to 1868; Marbletown, 1868 to 1872; Geneva, 1872 to 1878, when he died, March 31. He was deeply spiritual, and a friend of every good cause. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 204.

Bruslé de Monplainchamp, JAN, a Flemish biographer, lived in the early half of the 18th century. He was a native of Namur, and was canon of Brussels. He wrote a large number of works, among which we notice a history of Philippe Emmanuel de Lorraine:—of Jean d'Auriche:—of Emmanuel Philibert, duc de Savoie:—of Alexandre Farnese, duc de Parme:—and of the Archduke Albert. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brussel, PETER VAN, a theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1612. After having taught classics, rhetoric, and philosophy, he became missionary to the duchy of Berg, and died at Hildesheim, May 7, 1664. He published a work in German on Spiritual Resurrection, in opposition to the consistory of Duisburg (Cologne, 1664). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brusseri, FILIPPO, an Italian chronologist, a native of Savoy, lived in the early part of the 14th century. He wrote a history of the order of St. Francis, of which he was a member, entitled Sepulchrum Terræ Sanctæ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruté, SIMON WILLIAM GABRIEL, an eminent dignitary of the Roman Catholic Church in America, was born at Rennes, France, March 20, 1779, his father being superintendent of the royal domains in Brittany. He studied in the college of his native city until it was broken up by the Revolution. He graduated at the famous school of Paris with the highest honors, and immediately received an appointment to one of the government dispensaries; but he had resolved to enter the priesthood, and on leaving the medical school he entered the Seminary of St. Sulpice. Ordained in 1808, he became professor of theology in the seminary at Rennes. After his arrival in America, he taught philosophy for two years in the seminary at Baltimore, and was then sent to Emmitsburg to help father Dubois in the management of the College of Mount St. Mary. This struggling institution owed much to Bruté. His scholarship extended its studies, his organizing ability established the system upon which the college was conducted, while his gentle and devout life was an example to the young men under his charge. No one has exerted a more beneficial influence upon the Catholic religion than Bruté. His humility, piety, and learning made him a model of the Christian priest. At the same time he carried on missionary labors in the country around, sometimes walking fifty miles per day, and giving away in charity his last penny. In 1834 he was appointed first bishop of the new see of Vincennes, Ind., and consecrated at St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 28, 1834. The condition of his Church throughout that region was low indeed. There were only three priests in his diocese, and the episcopal residence consisted of one room and a closet. Bruté visited all the stations, wrote twice a month to all the priests, sought out Roman Catholic settlers, preached to the Indians, went to Europe and obtained twenty priests and seminarians for his diocese, contributed constantly to the Catholic periodicals, established a college, seminary, orphan asylum, and free school, and built churches. He wore himself out by such labors, and died June 26, 1839. A new edition of Memoirs of Bishop Bruté, edited by archbishop Bayley, and illustrated by sketches of drawings left by Bruté, was issued by the Catholic Publication Society (N. Y., 1876). See (N. Y.) Catholic Almanac, 1876, p. 72; De Courcy and Shea, Hist. of the Catholic Church in the United States, p. 105, 561; Clarke, Lives of Deceased Bishops of the Catholic Church in the United States, s. v.

Brutel de la Rivière, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Dutch Protestant theologian of French origin, was born at Montpellier in 1669, and died in August, 1742. He wrote an anonymous translation of L'Histoire des Juifs et des Peuples Voisins, of H. Prideaux (Amsterdam, 1728):—Sermons sur divers Textes de l'Écriture Sainte (ibid. 1746). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Brutus, PIETRO, an Italian prelate and theologian, a native of Venice, lived in the latter half of the 15th century. The efforts which he put forth for the conversion of the Jews gained for him the appointment of bishop of Cattaro in Dalmatia. Among his numerous works we notice Victoria contra Judæos (1489). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bruyas, JACQUES, a French Jesuit missionary, was born in 1637. He arrived in Canada in August, 1666, and began to labor in the interests of the Iroquois missions, which he greatly strengthened by his labors. He died at Sault St. Louis, Canada, June 15, 1712. He made a thorough study of the Mohawk language, and wrote several works on it. His Radical Words of the Mohawk Language was published in New York in 1862.

Brúyn (or Bruin), Abraham van, a Flemish engraver, was born at Antwerp about 1540. The following are some of his best works: Moses and the Burning Bush; The Four Evangelists; Philip Louis, Elector Palatine; Albert Frederick, Duke of Prussia. He died in 1598. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bruyn (or Bruin), Nicholas de, a French engraver, was born at Antwerp in 1570, and studied under his father, Abraham Bruyn. The following are some of his principal plates: Adam and Eve in Paradise; Adam and Eve Standing under the Tree of the Forbidden Fruit; David and Goliath; The Crucifixion; The Resurrection; St. Paul Preaching.

Bruyn, Walther van, a Dutch Protestant theologian, was born May 6, 1618, at Amersfoort. He studied at Utrecht, was in 1641 pastor at Hagestein, and in 1644 at Utrecht. In 1652 he was appointed professor of theology, was in 1653 made doctor of theology, and died July 7, 1653. He wrote, De Malo et eo quod Invitum, quodque Spontaneum est:—De Scriptura Novi Testamenti Adversus Episcopium:—Dissertatio Inauguralis de Duobus Fœderis Divinis:—Diss. II ad Historiam de Conceptione Christi. See Burmann, Trajectum Eruditum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bruys, François, a French writer, was born at Serrières, in the Mâconnois district, Feb. 7, 1708. He received his education among the monks of Cluny and the fathers of the Oratory of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-en-Forez. In 1727 he went to Geneva, and in the following year to the Hague, where he became a Protestant. In 1736 he returned to Paris, and having, in its turn, abjured Calvinism, he returned to his paternal faith, and died at Dijon, May 20, 1738. He wrote a Histoire des Papes (Hague, 1732-34, 5 vols. 4to). This work was written after he had become a Protestant, and is not thought well of by writers of either communion. See Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Bry (or Brie), Jean Théodore de, a Flemish engraver, the son and scholar of Théodore de Bry, was born at Liege in 1561, and assisted his father in many of his works. The following prints are by him: Portrait of Daniel Specklin; The Marriage of Rebecca; The Little Village Fair; The Fountain of Youth; The Triumph of Bacchus. He died in 1620 or 1623. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Bry (or Brie), Théodore de, an eminent Flemish engraver, was born at Liege in 1528. The following are some of his principal works: St. John in the Wilderness; A Dance of Men and Women Peasants; The Nine Muses. He died at Frankfort-on-the-Main in 1598. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bryan, Alfred M'Gready, D.D., a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Logan County, Ky., Aug. 19, 1805. He professed religion at the age of seventeen, and studied under Dr. William Price. The Logan Presbytery received him as a candidate for the ministry at Pilot Knob, April 2, 1823; he was licensed April 7, 1825, and ordained at Glasgow, Oct. 8, 1829. To the latter date he labored in different parts of Kentucky, and then was appointed to what was called the Mercer District, in the northern part of the same state. About 1830 he took charge of a congregation in Nashville, Tenn., where he remained about two years. Then, by appointment of the General Assembly, he went as a missionary to Western Pennsylvania, and after serving eighteen months as such took charge of a church in Pittsburgh, with which he was identified until the time of his death. In December, 1833, the congregation completed and occupied a house of worship on Smithfield street. When this became too small a larger church was built, and was dedicated in June, 1842. The great fire which visited Pittsburgh in 1845 partially disabled the congregation, and he visited Tennessee and Kentucky to raise money for its relief. He accepted a call to Memphis, Tenn., in 1856; but in 1859 returned to Pittsburgh as pastor of his former church. While conducting a meeting, by appointment of the presbytery, in Van Buren, Washington Co., Pa., he fell back unconscious, and died the following day, Jan. 22, 1861. See Beard, Biographical Sketches, 1st series, p. 292; Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 283.

Bryan, Andrew, a colored Baptist minister, was a slave belonging to the Hon. Jonathan Bryan, a distinguished patriot of the Revolution. Andrew founded the first colored Church in Savannah, Ga., and remained its pastor until his death, Oct. 6, 1812. He was very highly esteemed for his piety. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 259.

Bryan, James Madison, a colored Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in slavery in Newbern, N. C., June 1, 1817. He was sold in his twenty-second year to a wealthy planter on Bayou Lafourche, La., in whose family he became a great favorite, and received careful religious instruction. In due time he joined the Church, and became a useful preacher. He remained with his owners until 1865, when he entered the Mississippi Mission Conference, wherein he served faithfully until his death, Jan. 2, 1876. Mr. Bryan was an excellent man, a close student, a sound Methodist, and a diligent pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 12; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Bryan, Joseph Firth, an English Congregational minister, was born in Liverpool in 1812. As a child he was a Sunday-school scholar; as a young man, first a school-teacher, and then a pastor for several years at Ravenstonedale, Westmoreland, where his labors were abundant. In 1846 he undertook "A Ragged and Industrial School," which greatly flourished under his care. During his twenty-five years in the industrial school he did not relinquish the pulpit, but was a favorite supply. He died Dec. 11, 1871. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1873, p. 319.

Bryan, Samuel Clothier, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Shepton-Mellet, Somersetshire, in 1713. Here he lived sixty years, and resided in Glastonbury, in the same county, for the remainder of his life. In his youthful days he was somewhat wayward in his conduct, but the grace of God subdued his evil temper, and he became not only a worthy member of the society with which he connected himself, but an approved minister. He died Jan. 23, 1805. Mr. Bryan's preaching was plain, edifying, and scriptural, and confined chiefly within the limits of his own quarterly meeting. See Piety Promoted, iii, 346, 348. (J. C. S.)

Bryant, Alfred, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Springfield, Essex Co., N. J., March 12, 1807. He commenced his preparatory studies in the Academy at Princeton, continued them in the Manual Labor Institute at Germantown, Pa., and then for two years at Elizabeth, N. J.; entered Princeton Seminary in the fall of 1831, and spent three years; was licensed by the Presbytery of Elizabethtown, Oct. 9, 1834, and ordained by the Presbytery of St. Joseph at South Bend, Ind., April 14, 1836. Soon after completing his seminary course at Princeton, Mr. Bryant went to the West, and labored at South Bend nearly eight years (1835-43), preached also extensively through all the northern counties of Indiana and of south-western Michigan, and aided in securing the erection of at least three Presbyterian churches. His next field was Edwardsburg, Mich., where, as a missionary, he preached from 1843 to 1848. He was pastor at Niles from 1848 to 1863, having accomplished the erection of the present large church in that place. He was then missionary and stated supply at North Lansing from 1863 to 1870, preaching also in many neighboring places. He was pastor of the Second Church of North Lansing from 1870 to 1874. From 1874 to 1877 he was in very infirm health, but so far recovered that he served the Church at Dublin, afterwards that at Delhi, and then at Holt, until 1880. He died at Lansing, June 2, 1881. With one exception he never labored for any length of time in a place without building a church edifice. He was instrumental in gathering and organizing a large number of congregations. See Neurological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1882, p. 26.

Bryant, Andrew, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Mercer County, Ky., Sept. 23, 1813. He joined the Church in 1833, was licensed to exhort in 1835, to preach in 1837, and in 1866 entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1869, on the formation of the Lexington Conference, he became a member of it, and in its active ranks labored with great success. He died Sept. 14, 1870. Mr. Bryant was a man of considerable ability, an impressive speaker, and a genial, generous Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1871, p. 16.

Bryant, George H., an English Methodist minister, was born in Cornwall. He was educated at the Wesleyan Training College, Westminster. He entered the ministry in Newfoundland in 1873, was stationed three years at Green Harbor, and then sent to Old Perlican, where he died, Sept. 16, 1879, while yet young in the work. His fidelity and zeal were not without fruit. See The Wesleyan, Oct. 3, 1879.

Bryant, Hilliard, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Connecticut, for many years was rector of St. Peter's Church, Cheshire, but removed from that place in 1866, to become pastor of St. Peter's Church, Hebron, and died there Sept. 11, 1880, aged seventy-two years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1881, p. 172.

Bryant, H. D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pennsylvania. In 1863 he entered the California Conference, and in it served the Church as faithfully as his health would permit until his death, in May, 1877. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 101.

Bryant, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at St. Agnes, Cornwall. He joined the Methodist Church in 1799, and the Conference in 1809. He died at Exeter, July 3, 1825. For a eulogy of his character see Minutes of the British Conference, 1825, p. 8.

Bryant, Lemuel, a Unitarian minister, was born at Scituate, Mass., in 1722, and was a graduate of Harvard in 1739. He was ordained at Quincy Dec. 4, 1745, and was dismissed Oct. 22, 1753. He died at Scituate, Oct. 1, 1754. Mr. Bryant published several single sermons. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 6.

Bryant, O. W., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at New Vineyard, Me., March 9, 1815. He was converted at the age of nineteen, moved to Illinois in 1836, and united with the Baptist Church at Lamoille, Bureau Co., and subsequently with the Free-will Baptist Church near his residence. Shortly after this he took up his residence at Four Mile Grove, which was his home till death. Of the Church, which was established mainly through his efforts, in this place, he was ordained pastor in August, 1859. Besides performing his ministerial work, he filled many offices of trust in the county, and was once a member of the state legislature. He died Aug. 2, 1882. See Morning Star, Sept. 20, 1882. (J. C. S.)

Bryant, Robert, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Diss, Norfolk, in 1788. His ministry commenced in 1814; he retired from its activities in 1848, and died Dec. 1, 1857. Although he was subjected to painful mental depression throughout life, many were turned to the Lord under his ministry. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1858.

Bryant, Samuel S., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born Aug. 4, 1809. He was converted in 1828, and joined the North Carolina Conference in 1832. In 1834 he was ordained deacon, and in 1836 elder. From 1837 to 1839 he was agent for Greensboro' Female Collegiate Institute, and from 1840 to 1844 he was presiding elder of Danville district. In 1867 he became a member of the South-west Missouri Conference. He was presiding elder of Kansas City district from 1869 to 1873, and in 1877 was appointed pastor in Kansas City. At the end of two years his health failed, and in 1879 he was granted a supernumerary relation. He was for a number of years an officer of Central College, and in 1878 was a delegate to the General Conference. His death occurred Dec. 28, 1880. He was an able preacher, and always acceptable to the people he served. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1880, p. 223.

Bryant, William Cullen, an eminent journalist and poet, was born at Cummington, Mass., Nov. 3, 1794. When he was but ten years of age he translated from several of the Latin poets with so much accuracy and beauty that his translations were deemed worthy of publication. The Embargo, a political satire, written when he was thirteen years old, was printed in Boston in 1808. Pursuing his studies at Williams College for two years, he was especially distinguished for his attainments in the classics and belles-lettres. When but eighteen years of age (1815) he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of his profession in Plainfield, Mass., from which he shortly removed to Great Barrington. It was at this period of his life that he wrote his Thanatopsis, and published it in the North American Review in 1816—one of the most remarkable poems in the English language, glowing with the spirit of natural religion, and pervaded with the most devout reverence for the invisible Creator of the universe. Four years afterwards (1821) he delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society, at the Commencement of Harvard University, his celebrated poem, The Ages, which, with some other of his poems made up a volume, which was published the same year. Having devoted ten years to the practice of his profession, he decided to retire from the bar and enter upon a kind of work more congenial to his tastes. Accordingly he removed to New York in 1825, and became the editor of the New York Review, which was afterwards merged into the United States Review. His connection with The Evening Post (N. Y.) commenced in 1826, and continued until his death. A full edition of his works was brought out in 1832. This edition, with a flattering preface written by Washington Irving, was published in England not long after its appearance in this country. Carey & Hart, in 1846, published his complete poetical works, and subsequently Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. became his publishers. Mr. Bryant travelled extensively, both in the United States and in foreign countries. The results of his observations, both at home and abroad, he gave to the public through the columns of The Evening Post. The letters thus written were collected into book form, and are among the most interesting and instructive volumes of travel in the language. His love for the classics, which, amid the pressure of his professional duties, was never lost, showed itself in his elegant translation of the Iliad, which was published in 1870, and of the Odyssey, published in 1871. These translations are among the best that have been made into our language, of the epics of Homer.

Mr. Bryant has written some religious poetry which is worthy of mention in a work like this. As we have seen, at the very outset of his career, a devout, serious spirit inspired those great works of his genius which laid the foundation of his justly-earned fame. We find choice gems scattered through his works, which makes us feel that he was conscious of the purest thoughts and the most elevated emotions. Among these we may include the hymns bearing the titles, Blessed are they that Mourn; No Man Knoweth his Sepulchre; Hymn of the Waldenses; Song of the Stars; A Forest Hymn; Hymn of the City; The Love of God; A Hymn of the Sea; The Mother's Hymn; He hath Put all Things under His Feet; and Receive thy Sight. One of his reviewers uses this language: "His poetry overflows with natural religion, with what Wordsworth calls the 'religion of the woods.'"

Mr. Bryant died at his beautiful country residence, near the village of Roslyn, Long Island (N. Y.), June 12, 1878. See Griswold, Poets and Poetry of America; Osgood, Address before the Goethe Society; Duyckinck, Cyclop. of Amer. Literature, i, 899 sq. For list of references to articles reviewing Bryant's works, see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (J. C. S.)

Bryant, William F., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was rector at different times at Locke's Mills, at Mullica Hill, and was assistant in the parish of the Church of the Atonement, Philadelphia; and finally assumed charge of Trinity Church, Covington, Ky. He died Aug. 21, 1856, in Jackson, Mich., aged thirty-three years. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1856, p. 464.

Bryce, John, a Baptist minister, was born in Goochland County, Va., May 31, 1784, being descended from a Scotch ancestry. He was reared in the Episcopal Church, of which his parents were strict members. His conversion took place at the age of twenty-one, and he joined a Baptist Church. By profession he was a lawyer. Having been ordained about the year 1806, he preached, as he had opportunity, in Richmond and Lynchburg. He was, for a time, master in chancery under judge Marshall. In 1810 he was called to be colleague-minister with the pastor of the First Baptist Church in Richmond, and for nearly twelve years he occupied this position. He afterwards was pastor in Fredericksburg and Alexandria. For a few years he resided in Georgetown, Ky., afterwards for ten years (1832-42) in Crawfordsville, Ind., and for a number of years in Shreveport, La. In all these places he accomplished much for the promotion of the prosperity of his denomination. His last residence was in Henderson, Ky., where he died, July 26, 1864. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 155. (J. C. S.)

Brychan, king of Brecknock, in the 5th century, is said to have been the father of twenty-four sons and twenty-five (or twenty-six) daughters, who are called "the third holy family of Britain." The fact is that Brecknock was at one time a great missionary centre, and numerous inscribed gravestones are still found there; and an incised cross at Llanspyddyd is still called Brychan's stone. The connecting various members of a tribe under the form of a genealogy is not uncommon, and the lists are valuable as showing the connection of the churches in South Wales and the opposite coast of Cornwall. The practice of making such lists prevailed in the latter section, where "Brychan's children" only means the devotees who came from Wales.

Brynhildur, in Norse mythology, was a captive maiden, the daughter of Budli. She was liberated by the mighty Sigurd, when asleep. Sigurd found the maiden extraordinarily beautiful, and fell in love with her. But in Gjuki's house, at which he stayed, he became inclined to forget her on drinking a magic drink, and married Gudrun, the daughter of Grimhild. Gunnar, the brother of Gudrun, desired to possess Brynhildur, but did not dare to fulfil a certain condition which she asked of him. He therefore persuaded the mighty Sigurd to fulfil the condition, disguised as Gunnar.

Brynhildur did not discover the deceit until, when bathing with Gudrun, she discovered that the latter had the ring which she supposed she had given to Gunnar, but which she gave to Sigurd, who gave it to his wife Gudrun. Her love now turned into hate, and she sought revenge for the deceit. She instigated Gunnar and Högni to murder Sigurd, and after killing herself she and Sigurd were burned on one funeral pile.

Bryson, Robert C., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Spring Hill, Pa., Dec. 3, 1828. He pursued his academical studies at Danville, McEwansville, and Lewisburg, and his theological at Princeton Seminary, where he graduated in 1855. He was licensed to preach in 1859, and was ordained and installed pastor of the Church at Ashland, Pa., by the Presbytery of Northumberland. In 1868 he was called to take charge of the Pine Grove Church, Pa., where he soon won the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. On every question of reform he took no equivocal position. He died at Pine Grove Mills, April 13, 1873. See Presbyterian, April 29, 1873. (W. P. S.)

Bryttannus, GUALO, a Welsh poet of the 12th century, was from his infancy devoted to the Muses. That he might serve them the better he retired from the world and became an anchorite—not for devotion, but for his fancy. He attacked the monks, whose covetousness, wantonness, and impostures were great temptations to the satirist. He did this with such cautiousness that he incurred no danger, in fact, was commended by John of Salisbury and others. He flourished in 1170, under Henry II. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 499.

Brzekek, BERNHARD DE, a Polish Dominican of Premislav, was at first regular canon of the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem, but joined his order when already advanced in years, and died about the year 1630. He wrote, Monomachia pro Defensione Fidei SS. Trinitatis (3 vols. fol.):—De Processione Spiritus S. a Filio:—De Militia Christiana:—De Alienatione Ariarum a Christianismo. Of these works only the first was published, of which also an edition in Polish was edited. See Echarl, De Scriptoribus Ordinis Dominicanorum: Staravolscii Scriptorum Poloniarum Centuria; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Buabin, in the mythology of the Tonkin-Chinese, is a deity who protects the dwellings of men. He is worshipped especially by those engaged in building houses.

Buadmaelus, an Irish saint, is given as one of the disciples of St. Patrick. When the latter was passing through Connaught, it is said that one called Bandmal died and was buried in the place where a church was built, and took the name of Kill-Bandmael, which was a Patrician Church. Among the disciples of St. Benignus are included Buedanus and Buadmaelus.

Buaidhbheo, an Irish saint, is given by Mart. Doneg. on November 17, as being the same with Aenghus of Cillmor, of Airthir Fine, of the race of Irial. Colgan (Life of Olcan, February 20) says that Colladius, who gave St. Patrick a site for his church, had five of his children noted for sanctity, e. g., St. Buabeo, etc. In Dr. Reeve's Eccles. Antiq. Down and Connor, mention is made of Buaidh Beo, son of Lughath.

Buan, a Welsh saint, the founder of Bodfuan, Carnarvonshire, in the 6th century. His festival was held Aug. 4. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 280.

Buatan, an Irish saint of Ethais-cruimm, is commemorated January 24. Thus he is designated in the Mart. Doneg., but that of Tallaght has "Batani Methais Truim," which Kelly, Calendar of Irish Saints, 44, identifies as Mostrim. Colgan (Tr. Thum. p.

377, note) calls him "Baitanus de Eathin Cruim, 25 Januarii."

Buatè, in Persian mythology, is one of the evil deys who were formed by Ahriman to oppose the creations of light, produced by Ormuzd. He causes contagious diseases.

Bubast, in Egyptian mythology, is synonymous with the Grecian Arlenis and the Roman Diana, being the daughter of Osiris and Isis, who are the same with Bacchus and Ceres among the Greeks and Romans. She is also the sister of Horus, who corresponds to the Greek Apollo. Isis gave her with Horus to Buto (Greek Latona) for protection from the evil god Typhon, the persecutor of Osiris and his generation. As to the signification of her name little is known. She appears to have been a goddess of the moon or births. But she was a highly honored goddess. In the city Bubastis she had a temple whose halls contained six immense statues, and furnished a place of worship for the innumerable throngs of people who yearly came up or down the Nile to join in the celebration of her joyous festival. The cat, the hieroglyphic symbol of the moon, was sacred to the goddess. In the city Bubastis was the place for collecting mummies of cats. These animals, after death, were brought to the temple in great solemnity, and there embalmed. See PASHU.

Bubier, GEORGE BURDEN, an English Congregational minister, was born at Reading, Feb. 2, 1823. He lost both his parents while still a boy, joined the Church in 1841, and soon after entered Homerton College. In 1844 he was ordained pastor at Orsett, Essex. Between 1846 and 1864 he labored successively at Brixton, Cambridge, and at Hope Chapel, Salford. He then accepted an invitation to the chair of theology and philosophy in Spring Hill College, in conjunction with the pastorate of Acock's Green Congregational Church. Here he died, March 19, 1869. Mr. Bubier's literary powers were of an unusual order, thus ranking him high as an instructor; yet he gloried, above all things, in his office as an ambassador for Christ. For about fifteen years he had the management of the literary department of the Nonconformist, and in his hands that journal maintained a high reputation as an organ of free and appreciative criticism. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1870, p. 279.

Buboldi, JOHN NICHOLAS, historian and bishop of Sagone, Corsica, lived in the 15th century. He is the author of a work entitled De Origine et Rebus gestis Turcarum (Naples, 1496); republished in the Historie Turcarum by Chalcacondyle (Paris, 1650). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bubōna, in Roman mythology, was a goddess who was said to protect the herds, especially oxen.

Bucelin, Gabriel, a German Benedictine and historian, was born at Diessenhofen, near Torgau, and died in the abbey of Weingarten, Wurtemberg, in 1691. He was prior of the convents at Feldkirch and Rheintal, and wrote a large number of works, among which we find Nucleus Historie Universalis (1654-58);—Annales Benedictini (Augsburg, 1656, fol.);—Aquila Imperii Benedictina (Venice, 1651);—Menolog. Benedictinum (Feldkirch, 1655, fol.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 7, 10, 711; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bucelin, Jean, a French historian and Jesuit, was born at Cambray in 1571, and died in 1629. He wrote Gallo-Flandria Sacra et Profana (Douay, 1625). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bucer, GERSON, a Dutch theologian, was born in the latter part of the 17th century at Veere, where he also was settled as minister and spent his life. He was well versed in Hebrew, and also in Church government, upon which he wrote a volume, De Gubernatione Ecclesie, in opposition to Dorman, a famous English divine. This book drew upon him the hatred of James I, but found so much favor at home that it went very soon to a fourth edition. He died in 1631. He was one of the company appointed by the Synod of Dort for the translation of the Old Test. for the famous Stuatenbijbel, or States' Bible. (B. P.)

Buchan, DAVID, a Baptist editor, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, March 3, 1807. He was educated for the legal profession, but gave it up; came to Canada in 1834, and settled near the town of Paris, where, through his efforts, a Baptist Church was formed. In 1849 he removed to Toronto, and started a weekly Baptist newspaper, The Pioneer. Subsequently he was appointed government bursar of Toronto University and colleges, and held this position till his death. He was active in all denominational matters, and, at the time of his death, was president for the third time of the Home Mission Convention of Ontario. He died Oct. 17, 1877. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 1293. (J. C. S.)

Buchanan, George, an associate Reformed minister, was born about 1783 at "the Barrens of York." He graduated at Dickinson College in 1805, and shortly after entered the Theological Seminary of the Associate Reformed Church in the city of New York. Having completed this course, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, December, 1809. In 1810 he preached in the old court-house in Pittsburgh, and labored in the vacancies of the Monongahela Presbytery till April, 1811. Soon after he accepted a call to Steubenville, O., in which charge he labored for about forty-four years, until his death, Oct. 14, 1855. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iv, 138.

Buchanan, John, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born near Dumfries, Scotland, in 1748. Having graduated at the University of Edinburgh, he studied law with a view to practicing in his native country; but, having gone to Richmond, Va., with his eldest brother, James, a merchant, he conceived an aversion to that profession. After studying theology he returned to Great Britain, and in 1775 received orders in the Church of England. Then he went back to Virginia, preaching occasionally, and for a time was employed as a family teacher. In 1780 he took charge of Lexington parish; and in 1785 became assistant minister to the Rev. Miles Selden, rector of St. John's Church, Henries Parish, Va. When Mr. Selden died, Mr. Buchanan succeeded to the rectorship. About the year 1790 he began to preach at the capitol in Richmond. After the burning of the Richmond Theatre, in 1812, the Monumental Church was built, to the rectorship of which bishop Richard C. Moore was invited, and upon the duties of which he entered in 1814. Dr. Buchanan became a sort of assistant to the bishop, and served the new church during bishop Moore's diocesan visitations; but he still retained his office as rector of St. John's, assisted by Rev. William H. Hart of New York. He died in Richmond, Dec. 19, 1822. As a preacher his manner was dignified, but lacked animation; but the chief attribute of his character was his benevolence. Possessed of large means, he ministered most liberally to the wants of the poor. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 324.

Buchanan, John Junkin, an Associate Reformed minister, was born at Steubenville, O., Jan. 24, 1817. He graduated at Franklin College, New Athens, in 1838, studied theology in the Associate Reformed Seminary of Allegheny City, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Steubenville in 1841. The next year he served two congregations in Beaver County, Pa., and was ordained by the Presbytery of Monongahela. After a few years he was obliged, from failing health, to give up his charge. In June, 1852, he left the congregations then under his care and retired to recruit himself, but he died July 27 of the following year. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iv, 139.

Buchanan, Joseph H., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington County, Pa., Sept. 22, 1833.

He was educated at Muskingum College, O.; was ordained by the Muskingum Presbytery in 1862, became pastor at Thornville, O., and died at Rushville, Sept. 6, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 258.

Buchanan, Robert, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Stirling, Scotland, Aug. 15, 1802. He graduated at the Edinburgh College, and was ordained to the Gospel ministry in 1827. After three brief settlements in country parishes, he was called to Glasgow, where his ministry was eminently successful, and where he was largely interested and successful in promoting measures for the amelioration of the condition of the poor, which Chalmers had inaugurated and personally carried forward with success at Edinburgh. He was moderator of the Free Church General Assembly in 1860. He was one of the foremost leaders of the movement in the disruption of the Church of Scotland, being engaged, not only in counsel at home, but in watching and shaping events in the British Parliament, and in ministerial circles in London. More than once, when the British government was appealed to by the Church of Scotland—over which it claimed to exercise authority—for protection in the exercise of her spiritual rights and independence, and when great anxiety was felt lest heavier bonds should be placed upon her instead of those which already bound her being loosed, Dr. Buchanan was selected by his brethren as one of a deputation to visit London to enlighten cabinet ministers and leading members of the Lords and Commons in the great principles which had already been worked out in regard to the freedom of the Church. He was chosen historian of the movement for disruption, and he prepared a faithful record of the times, which was printed under the title of Ten Years' Conflict (Edinburgh, 1849, 2 vols. 8vo), and which is the standard history of the measures which led to the disruption. His health giving way under his many and arduous labors, he went to Rome, in hope that the milder climate of Italy would be beneficial, but his constitution was too far undermined to recover. Sleeping peacefully in his bed one morning, without any premonition, he was called away to his rest, in 1878. (W. P. S.)

Buchel, JAN VAN, a Belgian bishop, was born at Tournay. He was first instructor in a school, then canon of St. Quentin and dean of Notre Dame, and finally bishop in 1262. He was exceedingly jealous of his episcopal prerogatives, yet nevertheless bore the reputation of being virtuous and a great lover of the arts. He died at Tournay in 1266. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buchenröder, MICHAEL, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who died at Heldburg, July 13, 1682, wrote, De Duabis alis Gog et Magog:—Vaticinia de Irruptione Gog et Magog in Monte Israel, Horumque Finiuli Excidio. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bucher, Egidius, a Belgian Jesuit, was born in 1576, joined the order in 1598, became its rector, and died at Dornach, March 8, 1665. He wrote, Disput. Historica de Primis Tugurorum seu Leodiensium Episcopis:—Chronographia Historiæ Leodiensis:—Belgium Romanum Ecclesiasticum et Civile:—Doctrina Temporis. See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Acta Eruditorum Latina; Papadolph Historia Gymnasii Paluvini; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bucher, George B., an English Congregational minister, was born in London in 1812. He made a profession of religion at an early age, went to Canada when eighteen, and in 1836 entered the ministry as a missionary of the Methodist body in Upper Canada. In 1854 he transferred his relations to the Congregationalists, and in the following year settled at Granby, where he died, Aug. 31, 1866. Mr. Bucher was zealous and faithful to the full extent of his physical ability. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1867, p. 278.

Bucher, John Conrad, a minister of the Reformed (Dutch) and German Reformed Churches, was born in Switzerland, June 10, 1730. He came to America in 1755 as a military officer—the British, from policy, choosing German officers for German troops—and was ordained in 1762. He was pastor at Carlisle, Pa., in 1763–68; also at Middletown, 1765–68; Hummelstown, 1765–67; Falling Spring, 1765–68; and at Lebanon, etc., 1768–80, where he suddenly died, Aug. 15, 1780. He was remarkable for having acquired a rich flow of language and unprecedented copiousness and energy of thought, which rendered him useful, and attracted the attention of all who heard him. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church (3d ed.), p. 204; Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, ii, 109.

Bucher, Jordan, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, who died March 18, 1870, was the author of Leben Jesu (Stuttgart, 1857, 2 vols.):—Die heiligen Schriften des Neuen Testaments nach den besten katholischen älteren und neuern Schriftauslegern praktisch erklärt (Schaffhausen, 1855–66, 4 vols., comprising only the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles):—Chronologie des Neuen Testaments. Mit geschichtlichen, exegetischen u. synoptischen Erörterungen (Augsburg, 1865). (B. P.)

Bucher, Samuel Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Sept. 16, 1692, at Rengersdorf, in Lusatia. He studied at Wittenberg, and was appointed professor of antiquities there. In 1726 he was made rector of the public school, but in 1728 he accepted an appointment at Zittau, where he died, May 12, 1765. He wrote, Disp. de Velato Hebræorum Synæco (Wittenberg, 1715):—Disp. de Concluso Hebræorum Synæco (ibid. 1716):—De Occulta Hebræorum Sponsa (ibid. eod.):—Antiquitates de Velatis Hebræorum et Græcorum Fæminis (1717):—Tractatus de Conclusis Hebræorum Fæminis (eod.):—Antiquitates Passionales (1721):—Grammatica Hebræa (1722):—Antiquitates Selectæ in Universum Scripturam (vol. i. 1723):—Philosophia prima s. Metaphysica Dogmatica (eod.):—The-saurus Orientis (Frankfort, 1725):—Antiquitates Biblicæ ex Novo Testamento Selectæ, Consuetudines, Ritus, Formulas Veterum Examinantes (Wittenberg, 1729). See Steinschneider, Bibliographisches Handbuch, p. 27, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Buchfelder, ERNST WILHELM, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born June 5, 1645, at Bentheim, and first studied law. In 1669 he attended the preaching of Theodor Under-Eyck, court-preacher to the landgrave Hedwig Sophia of Hesse-Cassel, who impressed him so deeply that, although twenty-four years of age, he betook himself to the study of theology. For this purpose he went to Utrecht. Having finished his studies, he went to Bremen, where he remained two years, regularly attending the sermons and devotional exercises of Under-Eyck, who, since 1670, was pastor of St. Martin's. In 1678 he received his first appointment as preacher in Glückstadt, in Holstein, and in the following year he was elected president of the Latin school at Emden, in East Friesland. In 1684 he was called to Bidingen, and in 1688 to Emden, where he died, March 8, 1711. He is the author of only one hymn, which may be regarded as a jewel of the Reformed hymnology: Erleucht mich, Herr, mein Licht (Engl. transl. in Mill's Horæ Germ. p. 39, "Impart, O Lord, my light"). See Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, vi, 14 sq. (B. P.)

Büchner, GOTTFRIED, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1701 at Riedersdorf. He studied at Jena, and died as rector at Querfurt in 1780. He is best known as the author of Bibliche Real- und Verbal-Hand-Concordanz (15th ed. Brunswick, 1877). He also published a number of homiletical works. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bucholtz, Andreas Henricus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 25, 1607, at Schöningen. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1632 co-rector in his native city, in 1634 at Rostock, in 1636 at Helmstädt, and in 1637 rector of the gymnasium at Lemgov. In 1639 he went to Rinteln, where he lectured on philosophy. In 1645 he was made professor of theology, and in 1647 he accepted a call to Brunswick. In 1663 he was appointed first court-preacher and superintendent at Wolfenbüttel, and he died May 20, 1671. He wrote, Philosophia Practica:—Tractatus Theologicus de Ecclesie Romanæ Pontifici Subjecta Indulgentiis:—Haus-Andachten, etc. See Witte, Memoriae Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bucholtz, Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Hamburg, where he also was appointed deacon of St. Nicholas in 1653, and died Jan. 16, 1660, is the author of a Commentary on the Book of Ecclesiastes, which he published in rhyme. See Moller, Cimbria Literata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bucholtz, ABRAHAM, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Schönau, in Saxony, Sept. 28, 1529. He studied at Frankfurt and Wittenberg, was in 1556 rector at Grünberg, in Silesia, and then pastor at Sprottau, Crossen, and Freystadt. He died June 14, 1584. He wrote, Isagoge Chronologica ab Initio Mundi ad Exilium Israelitarum in Babylone:—De Annorum serie in Sacris Bibliis:—De Idea boni Pastoris. See Adam, Vita Eruditorum; Freheri Theatrum Eruditorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Buck, Benjamin, a Baptist minister, was born in Maine in 1768. His early associations were with the Congregationalists, but he united with the Baptists in 1800. He was ordained in 1817, at which time he became pastor of the churches at Orland and Bucksport. The following year he removed to Eastport, where he remained about one year, and then became pastor of the Church at Machias Port, where he continued from 1819 to 1825. He was called to Sullivan in 1826, where he remained about three years. After brief settlements in two or three places, he took charge of the Church at Harrington in 1833, remaining there till 1840. He retired in 1843 from the active duties of the ministry, and died Dec. 10, 1844. Mr. Buck was a good representative of a class of Baptist ministers in Maine who, without much scholarly education, did much in laying the foundations of what have since become strong and efficient churches. See Millett, Hist. of the Baptists of Maine, p. 437. (J. C. S.)

Buck, Johann Christian, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 11, 1672, at Gräfenheichen, near Wittenberg. He studied at Wittenberg and Leipsic, was in 1700 preacher, and in 1712 superintendent at Torgau; in 1715 he was made doctor of theology, and in 1723 first court-preacher at Dresden, where he died, Oct. 19. He wrote De ἀρχοντομαχία Circa Sacra, de ποδολατρεία Romanæ Pontificiis; de anno Hebræorum Jubilæo. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Ranft, Leben der chursächsischen Gottesgelehrten; Gleich, Annales Ecclesiastici. (B. P.)

Buck, John de, a Reformation martyr, was burned for reading the Scriptures, May 10, 1545, at Gaunt, in Germany. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 384.

Buck, Minerson Erastus, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Missouri, graduated at Nashotah Theological Seminary (Wis.), and was ordained in 1874. From 1874 to 1876 he was rector of Trinity Church, Three Rivers, Mich.; and from 1876 until the close of his life had charge of St. Luke's Church, Kansas City, Mo. He died Jan. 20, 1879. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1880, p. 170.

Buck, William Calmes, a Baptist minister, was born in what is now Warren County, Va., Aug. 23, 1790. He was ordained in 1812, served as a lieutenant in the United States army during the war of that year, lived in Union County, Ky., a number of years, having the pastoral charge of several churches, and moved to Louisville in 1836, where he became pastor of the First Church. While living there he was, for most of the time, editor of the Baptist Banner and Western Pioneer. For three years (1851-54) he was secretary of the Bible Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, and pastor in Columbus, Miss., for three years (1854-57). After preaching for a short time in one or two other places, he removed to Marion, Ala., and after being engaged for a year or two in editorial work, he labored as a missionary in the Confederate army. In 1866 he removed to Texas, and died at Waco, May 18, 1872. Among his published writings are The Baptist Hymn-book, The Philosophy of Religion, and The Science of Life. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 156, 157. (J. C. S.)

Buck, William Foster, an English Congregational minister, was born at Chatham in 1802. He was converted in youth, and received his ministerial preparation at Hoxton College. He went, in 1827, to Burton-on-Trent, where he preached sixteen months, and then became co-pastor at Canterbury. In 1830 Mr. Buck removed to Harleston, Norfolk, and after laboring here eight years, he preached at Burton-on-Trent nine years, and then removed to Ross, where he remained until his death, Sept. 1, 1867. Mr. Buck was an affectionate and sympathizing pastor, as well as a faithful and devoted minister. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 356.

Buckbridge (Buckeridge or Buckridge), JOHN, an English prelate of the first part of the seventeenth century, was born at Draycott, near Marlborough, Wiltshire. He was educated under Mullcaster, in Merchant Taylors' School, and at St. John's College, Oxford, where, from a fellow, he became doctor of divinity and president (1605). He afterwards succeeded Lancelot Andrews in the vicarage of St. Giles, Cripplegate. On June 6, 1611, Buckbridge was consecrated bishop of Rochester, and afterwards set forth a learned book in opposition to John Fisher, De Potestate Papæ in Temporalibus (Lond. 1614). He was transferred to the bishopric of Ely in 1626, died May 23, 1631, and was buried in the parish church of Bromley, Kent. Bishop Buckbridge also published Sermons (1618), etc. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 327.

Bucker, GEORGE, an English martyr, was apprehended by the inquisitors appointed under the Six-Articles Act, and taken to London, where he was sent to prison, and remained two years in a filthy room hardly large enough for him to stand in. He was declared a heretic, and for this cause was burned in 1544. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, v, 520.

Buckingham, Daniel, a Congregational minister, graduated at Yale College in 1735; was ordained pastor of the Church at Green Farms, Conn., March 19, 1742, and died in May, 1766. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 648.

Buckingham, John of, an early English prelate, was born in the town so named in Bucks County. He was educated in the university of Oxford, and although slandered for want of learning, was a great disputant and well-studied scholar, as his works declare. He was made bishop of Lincoln, where several contests between him and pope Boniface IX took place, and the latter in revenge removed him from Lincoln to Lichfield, "that is, from the hall into the kitchen," says Fuller. He resigned the episcopacy in 1397, and lived and died in private at Canterbury. He indented with the prior and convent of Canterbury to build him a chantry-chapel near his sepulchre, which Fuller found not performed. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 196.

Buckingham, Stephen, a Congregational minister, son of the following, graduated at Harvard College in 1693; began preaching in Norwalk, Conn., in 1695; was ordained pastor there Nov. 17, 1697; resigned his charge on account of a disagreement with his parish, Feb. 24, 1727, and died in 1746. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 261.

Buckingham, Thomas (1), a Congregational minister, was a native of Wales. He emigrated to America and settled in Milton, Conn.; was ordained pastor of the Church in Saybrook in 1669 or 1670; was one of the founders and trustees of the institution that afterwards became Yale College; was moderator of the Synod of 1708 that produced the Saybrook Platform, and died in 1709. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 260.

Buckingham, Thomas (2), a Congregational minister, son of the foregoing, was born in 1679. He graduated at Harvard College in 1690, was ordained pastor of the Second Church, Hartford, Conn., and died Nov. 19, 1731. He published an election sermon. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 260.

Buckland, Rabbi Joseph Wales, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Deerfield, Oneida Co., N. Y., Dec. 16, 1829. His father was a Baptist minister. The son was a graduate, with valedictory honors, at Madison University in the class of 1849. His taste for historical studies was developed and matured in the excellent private library of Rev. W. R. Williams, D.D., of New York. His theological studies were pursued at the Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., where he graduated in 1855. On June 21 of the same year he was ordained pastor of the Olive Branch Baptist Church, in Madison Street, N. Y., where he remained but a short time. After serving the Church in Sing Sing for a time (1857-64), he returned, in 1865, to New York, and for five years was pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church in Twenty-third Street. In 1867 he became professor of ecclesiastical history in the Rochester Theological Seminary, and labored with the most untiring industry until his physical energies broke down, and he died Jan. 30, 1877. See (N. Y.) Examiner and Chronicle. (J. C. S.)

Buckland, Ralph, an English divine, was born at West Harptree in Somersetshire, about 1564, and was educated at Magdalen College, Oxford. In 1579 he apostatized to the Romish Church, and, after acting as a missionary in various parts, died in 1611. He published, among other works, a translation of some Lives of the Saints from Surius, and a Dissuasive from Attending Protestant Places of Worship, etc.

Buckler, Benjamin, D.D., a learned English clergyman and antiquary, was born in 1716, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated as master of arts in 1739. He afterwards became a fellow of All-Souls' College, and there took his degrees in divinity. In 1755 he was presented to the vicarage of Cumnor in Berkshire, and was also rector of Frilsham, in the same county. He died in December, 1780. For an account of his publications, see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.

Buckley, James (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Crampton, near Oldham, Lancashire, Dec. 20, 1770. His parents were members of the Established Church. He united with the Methodist Church in 1785, commenced his ministry in 1791, took an active part in forming the first Wesleyan Missionary Auxiliary Society, was elected Secretary of Home Missions in 1814, became a supernumerary at Llanelly, Wales, in 1832, and died while attending the Centenary Conference at Liverpool, Aug. 24, 1839. Buckley was much esteemed by his brethren. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1842; Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1842, p. 265.

Buckley, James (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Mossley, Lancashire, Jan. 27, 1796. He was brought up in the Church of England. In 1819 he was converted at the Independent Chapel in Cricket's-lane, Ashton-under-Lyne, became a Sunday-school teacher, and began preaching at mission stations in the neighboring villages. In 1821 he entered Idle Academy, Yorkshire, and in 1825 was ordained pastor at Thirsk, in the North Riding. He accepted a call to Penniston, in the West Riding, in 1837, and in 1851 removed to Horbury, near Wakefield. Mr. Buckley's last charge was at Stockport, which he accepted in 1854. Here he died, March 18, 1873. His character was marked by conscientiousness and intensity. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 815.

Buckley, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in England in 1805. He emigrated to America in 1827; settled in Bloomfield, Essex Co., N. J.; joined the Church in 1828; studied during 1830 for the Wesleyan Academy, Wilbraham; received license to preach in 1831; and in the same year entered the Philadelphia Conference. In 1838 he became superannuated; and in 1840 engaged in business in Bridgeton, N. J., where he died, June 28, 1842. Mr. Buckley possessed more than ordinary ability as a preacher, a well-disciplined mind, and a remarkable aptness in putting the truth. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 355, 414.

Buckminster, Joseph, a Congregational minister, was born in 1720, settled as minister of Rutland, Mass., and died in 1792. He published several Sermons.

Buckner, John, LL.D., an English prelate, became prebendary of Chichester in 1768, archdeacon in 1792, and was consecrated bishop of that see March 4, 1798. He died May 2, 1824, aged ninety. He published Sermons (1798-1812):—and a Charge (1797). See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Buckpitt, James, an English Congregational minister, was born at Trowbridge, March 9, 1800. He embraced religion in early manhood; joined the Independent Church; and in 1825 entered Hackney College for a ministerial preparation. His first charge was at Burwell, Cambridgeshire. In 1839 he removed to Castle Donington, Leicestershire, and three years later took his last charge at Torrington, North Devon, where he died, March 19, 1866. Mr. Buckpitt's perception of evangelical truth was clear; his grasp of it was strong; and his enunciation of it from the pulpit was vigorous and earnest. He was indifferent to nothing with which human interests were bound up. In private life he was genial, hospitable, and hearty. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1867, p. 274.

Bucolus, bishop of Smyrna, consecrated by St. John, is commemorated as "Holy Father," Feb. 6, in the Byzantine calendar.

Buda, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Budense). Buda, or Ofen, is the capital of Lower Hungary, on the west bank of the Danube.

I. A council was held here Sept. 14, 1279, by Philip, bishop of Fermo, legate of the holy see. Sixty-nine canons were published, containing much the same regulations as others drawn up about that time, and showing that the churches of Hungary and Poland were in great disorder.

Eight of these canons relate to the dress and conduct of the clergy.

The ninth forbids the clergy to sentence any one to corporal punishment, or to be present at the trial of capital cases.

The thirteenth relates to the proper reverence to be observed during divine service; orders all clerks, whenever they pass the altar, the image of the Virgin, or the crucifix, and whenever they enter the choir for the holy office, to bow their heads; also forbids priests to sing the hours without their surplices.

The sixteenth orders that all beneficed clergymen, having the care of souls, shall reside and discharge their duties in person, and not by a curate.

The nineteenth relates to the attendance of all persons who have been cited at synods, and the proper vestments of the prelates present there.

The twenty-second declares that it is not to be suffered that any one should serve at the altar or read the epistle without a surplice and cassock.

The twenty-eighth declares that those persons only are to be admitted to preach who have either the pope's or the bishop's license. Also treats of questors.

The fifty-eighth excommunicated those secular powers which forbade appeals to the holy see.

It is also ordered that all the faithful should hear divine service, and especially mass, every Sunday and holy-day in their own parish, and should not wander to any other Church. See Labbe, Concil. xi, 1071.

II. In 1309 cardinal Gentili held a council at Buda.

Budd, Peter, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Devonport, Nov. 29, 1809. He was brought to God in youth through the instrumentality of his sister, entered the ministry in 1835, and died on his last circuit (Kingswood) Feb. 9, 1878. Of transparent honor and fidelity, he was full of Christian kindness and courtesy. His mind was carefully disciplined and stored with knowledge, and his delight was with the Puritan divines. His sermons were vigorous, apt, evangelical. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1878, p. 32.

Budd, Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at New Mills, Burlington County, N. J., Feb. 19, 1783. He experienced religion about 1800, and in 1803 entered the Philadelphia Conference, in which he did zealous and faithful work until his death, July 10, 1811. Mr. Budd was a young man of good natural abilities, which he had carefully cultured, and deservedly highly esteemed wherever known. He was a stranger to dissimulation, and open-hearted and devout. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1811, p. 192.

Buddha, LIVING, a term applied to certain saints among the Mongol Tartars in Thibet, who are believed to have passed through various stages of being, and supposed to be fitted to preside over a Lamasery (q. v.). He is also called a Chaberon, and such superiors are in large numbers, and placed at the head of the most important religious establishments. He may commence his career with only a few disciples, but, as his reputation grows, the number of his followers increases, and his temple becomes the resort of many pilgrims and devout persons. See Huc, Travels in Tartary, Thibet, and China. See LAMASISM.

Buddha-Vishnu, the ninth Avatar (q. v.) or incarnation of Vishnu (q. v.). He is to be carefully distinguished from Gotama Buddha, the originator of Buddhism (q. v.).

Budé, GUILLAUME, a French scholar, was born in Paris in 1467. Being librarian of Francis I, he used his influence for a more liberal science independent of scholasticism. He was a secret adherent of the Reformation, and even before Luther he had written against the corruption of the clergy and papacy, and of the necessity of a reformation. In his work De transitu Hellenismi ad Christianismum (libri tres ad Franciscum regem, Paris, 1535), he pointed out that the true wisdom is not found in the knowledge of ancient classics, but in the practice of the teachings of Christ. He died Aug. 23, 1540, having expressly declined in his testament all honors of the Catholic Church at his funeral, since he regarded them as "an imitation of heathen customs." Some years after his death, his widow, together with his sons, joined the Reformed Church, and, in order to avoid persecution, they went to Geneva. One of his sons, Louis, was appointed there professor of Oriental languages, and published a French translation of the Psalms (Geneva, 1551), Proverbs, and some other parts of the Old Test. (Lyons, 1558). Another of his sons, Jean, rendered very important services to the Protestant cantons of Switzerland, in his capacity as ambassador of the Geneva council. In connection with Ch. de Jonvilliers, he collected a portion of Calvin's lectures on the prophets, and published them in French. Guillaume Budé's works were published at Basle in 1557, 4 vols. See Rebité, G. Budé (Paris, 1846); Schmidt in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Budge is fur of kids, employed in trimming ecclesiastical robes.

Budgie, JOHN, a minister of the Society of Friends. XL—22 was born in 1787, near London. In his early life he was a member of the Wesleyan Society. He joined the Society of Friends about 1810, and was for many years a useful minister. In 1845 he visited the Scilly Islands, and two years later accompanied E. O. Tregelles to Norway and Sweden. He took great interest in the education of the poor. He died July 17, 1864. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1865, p. 36.

Büdinger, Moses, a German Jewish teacher, who died at Cassel, Jan. 31, 1841, is the author of אם למקראת Lehrbuch der hebr. Sprache (Metz, 1816): הנהיג ללמוד, or Auszug aus dem Lehrbuche der hebr. Sprache (ibid. eod.). He also edited the Jewish ritual for the festivals, with a grammatical commentary in Hebrew (ibid. 1817), and the penitential prayers, with a commentary (ibid. 1822). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 135; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 27, No. 298, 299; Benjacob, Ozar Ha-Sepharim, or Thesaurus Librorum Hebraicorum, i, 39, No. 750; 195, No. 718; ii, 319, No. 966; 420, No. 356. (B. P.)

Büdinger, Moses Mardochoi, Ph.D., a German Jewish writer, was born Jan. 20, 1784, at Mardorf, near Marburg. For twelve years he acted as teacher at different places of his native country, and, after having enlarged his knowledge, he went in 1815 to Marburg, where he attended theological and philosophical lectures. From Marburg he went to Cassel, and from thence to Stuttgart, to return again to Cassel in 1825, where he was appointed inspector and instructor of the newly opened teachers' seminary. He died Jan. 31, 1841. Büdinger is the author of religious discourses, which he delivered on Sabbath days; besides he published a number of school-books, very valuable in his day. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 136; Kayserling, Bibliothek jüdischer Kanzelredner, i, 406 sq.; Steinheim, M. M. Büdinger, Lebensbeschreibung (Altona, 1844). (B. P.)

Budington, WILLIAM IVES, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in New Haven, Conn., April 21, 1815. After graduating at Yale College in 1834, he taught in the academy in New Canaan for nearly a year, and then began a three years' course in the Yale Divinity School. The year 1838-39 he spent as a resident licentiate in the Andover Theological Seminary. He was ordained pastor of the First Church (Congregational) in Charlestown Mass., April 22, 1840. He resigned this charge in 1854, and assumed the pastoral care of the Western Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, Pa. In 1855 he was installed over the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church in Brooklyn, N. Y. He resigned his pastoral office, Dec. 22, 1878, and died in Brooklyn, Nov. 29, 1879. He was a beloved and efficient pastor, and a noble Christian. He published, in 1845, an admirably written history of the First Church in Charlestown; also several sermons and review articles. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1880.

Budiya (A descripti (glebe)) is the name of the fifth great caste of the Medes. It was composed of serfs, and was the Budii of the Greek historians.

Budjintaja, in Slavonic mythology, was a goddess of the Poles and Kassubes, who protected sleeping persons from danger.

Budnæans, a sect of Socinians (q. v.) which arose in the 16th century, headed by Simon Budnæus (q. v.).

Budocus, Saint, an abbot and confessor of the 6th century, is said to have succeeded Maglorius in the see of Dol, Brittany. The parish of St. Budock is just west of Falmouth, and his feast-day was Dec. 8. The Close Rolls, i, 498, 522, mention a church of St. Budock, in Oxford.

Budsado is the name given in Japan to Gotama Buddha (q. v.), who is worshipped in that empire also.

Budsdoists are the Japanese worshippers of Buddha. See BUDDHISM.

Buée, PIERRE LOUIS, a French theologian, brother of Adrien Quentin, the scholar and mathematician, was born Sept. 5, 1740. He took refuge in England during the Revolution, and on his return to France, in 1802, he became canon of the metropolis. He died in Paris, June 28, 1827. He wrote, Eulogie Paschale (Paris, 1792): — Obstacle à ma Conversion Constitutionnelle (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buel, RUFUS F., a Baptist minister, was born in the state of New York in 1813. He received his education at the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution and at the Theological Seminary at Andover, where he graduated in 1840. Having accepted an appointment from the American Baptist Missionary Union, he was ordained Jan. 23, 1841, and sailed in the spring of the same year for Greece. Here, for several years, Mr. Buel and his accomplished wife endeavored to preach the Gospel and discharge their missionary duties, in the face of great discouragement. The mission was abandoned in 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Buel returned to America, and for several years kept a private school for the instruction of young ladies, in Providence, R. I., and subsequently in Washington, D. C. Mr. Buel held an appointment in the internal revenue office from 1865 until his death, Feb. 20, 1866. He was a scholar of more than ordinary attainments, and took special interest in the critical study of the Holy Scriptures. He wrote a Life of Washington in modern Greek. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. vi, 557. (J. C. S.)

Buffalo, SACRIFICE OF THE, a sacred rite among the Malayan Mohammedans in the Strait of Malacca. After death the animal is flayed and divided into two parts. One half is distributed among the inhabitants of the mukim, or parish, which consists of thirty-four houses; the other half is divided among the officials of the mosque. On religious occasions buffaloes are always sacrificed on Friday, Monday, or Thursday. They are also sacrificed at weddings, births, and circumcisions of wealthy persons; at the Chukur-unak, or the ceremony of shaving the heads of children; and when going to war.

Buffard, GABRIEL CHARLES, a French canonist, was born at Caen in 1688, in the university of which place he afterwards taught theology. Being obliged to vacate his chair because of his devotion to the doctrine of Jansenius, he retired to Paris, where he was detained for a time in the Bastille. He died at Paris, Dec. 3, 1763. He wrote, Défense de la Déclaration de l'Assemblée du Clergé de 1682, translated from the Latin of Bossuet (Paris, 1735): — Essai de Dissertation pour Faire Voir l'Inutilité des Nouveaux Formulaires (ibid. 1738). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bug (or Bog) is a river flowing into the Black Sea, which was once an object of devotion among the Russians, and one of the consecrated localities of their worship.

Bugenhagen, Andreas Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born April 25, 1685, at Zerbst. He studied at different universities, was in 1710 preacher at Lepta, in the principality of Zerbst, in 1719 deacon, in 1724 pastor at his native place, and died Dec. 18, 1742. He wrote Diss. de Hermeneutica Sacra. See Neubauer, Nachricht von jetzlebenden Gottesgelehrten; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bugenhagen, Johann, son of the famous theologian of the same name, was professor of Oriental languages at Wittenberg during the lifetime of his father. In 1570 he was made doctor of theology, and soon afterwards professor of theology and preacher at the castle-church. In 1575 he was appointed superintendent there, and provost at Kemberg, where he died in 1592. He wrote Consilia Theologica. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bugga (or Bucga) is the name of two English saints.

1. A nun, daughter of the abbess Duanna, to whom

Oshere gave lands on the river Tillath to found a monastery. She appears to have been married, and had a daughter, Hrotwari, who succeeded to the monastery by her grandmother's gift, under her mother's guardianship. Bugga refused to surrender the monastery when Hrotwari became of age, and was only dislodged by decree of a council in 736 (or 737). See Haddan and Stubbs, iii, 337.

2. Called also Eadburga (or Heaburga), the third abbess of Minster, in Thanet, who appears to have been a daughter of an abbess, Eangyth. She is recorded to have rebuilt the monastery of St. Mildred, but she is best known from the letters of Boniface. Between 719 and 722 her mother writes to Boniface stating that she had been prevented from making a pilgrimage to Rome by the infancy of her daughter. A little later Bugga herself writes to him; and in another letter, of much later date, Boniface addresses her as abbess, and congratulates her on having found a resting-place in Rome, whither she seems to have gone after she entered upon her abbacy. Finally, archbishop Bregwin, writing to Lullus (between 759 and 765), mentions that Bugga died Dec. 27. Elmham (ed. Hardwick, p. 220) dates her death in 754, but this seems too early.

Bughelcundee Version. See HINDUWEE DIALECTS; VERSIONS.

Bugia is an Italian term for a metal candlestick to contain a wax taper, held during divine service by an attendant on bishops and other persons of ecclesiastical dignity, both as a sign of distinction, and also in order to throw additional light upon the book from which they read.

Bugiardini, GIULIANO, a Florentine historical and portrait painter, was born in 1481, and studied under Bertoldo, a sculptor, and M. Angelo. In Florence he painted many Madonnas and Holy Families; also a picture in the Church of San Francesco, at Bologna, representing the Marriage of St. Catherine. He died in 1556. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bugis and Macassar Versions. Among the various dialects which prevail in the large island of Celebes are the Bugis and Macassar, which are spoken the most; indeed, the Bugis may be said to be the chief language of the people of Celebes. About 1810, the late Dr. Leyden, with the help of some learned natives, had commenced a translation of the Scriptures into both these dialects, but he only lived to complete a version of the Gospel of St. Mark in each dialect. His MSS. were presented to the Calcutta Bible Committee, but were never printed. In 1840, Dr. B. F. Matthes, subdirector of the Mission-house at Rotterdam, was sent by the Netherlands Society to Celebes, to study these dialects, with a view of preparing versions of the Bible for these long-neglected people. In 1873 the Gospels of Mark, Luke, and John, and the Acts of the Apostles were published in both dialects by the Netherlands Bible Society, and these are at present the only parts which are extant. See Bible of Every Land, p. 374. (B. P.)

Buglio, LUIGI, an Italian missionary of the Jesuit order, was born at Palermo, Jan. 26, 1606. Being destined by the superiors of his order for the Eastern missions, he departed for Japan, but the ports being closed to missionaries, he passed on to China, where he remained, laboring for the conversion of the Chinese, forty-five years, and was able to speak the Chinese language with great fluency. He died at Pekin, Oct. 7, 1682. He composed a large number of works in the Chinese language, and also translated and published in Pekin several religious manuals. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bugnot, LOUIS GABRIEL, a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, was born of a noble family in Champagne, at St. Dizier, about the beginning of the 17th century. He took the vows at Rheims, March 22, 1636, and died Sept. 21, 1673, leaving Vita et Regula St. Benedicti Curminibus Expressæ (Paris, 1662, 12mo):—Sacra Elogia SS. Ordinis S. Bened., also in verse (1663). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bugri. See CATHARI.

Buhon, Gaspard, a French theologian of the Jesuit order, nephew of Louis Buhon, taught theology at Besançon, and afterwards philosophy at Lyons. He died June 5, 1726. He wrote A Course of Philosophy, in Latin (Lyons, 1723). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buhon, Louis, a French preacher of the Dominican order, was born about 1640 at Quinzey, in Burgundy. He was noted for his talents as a preacher, and was the last Inquisitor of the Faith in the county of Burgundy. He died about 1700. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buhrman, ALFRED, a Lutheran minister, was born in Frederick County, Md., in 1826. In 1846 he entered the Baltimore Methodist Episcopal Conference, and preached three years. On account of impaired health he ceased active ministerial labor for a time, and was employed in teaching school about eighteen months. Then he preached at various places in Maryland and Virginia, but again taught school in 1862. The following year he entered the Melancthon Synod, and became pastor of the Lutheran congregations at Sharpsburg and Pleasant Valley. In 1864 he began preaching at Waynesborough, Pa., and remained in that charge seven years. For two and a half years, from 1871, he was pastor at Milton, and for two years, from September, 1873, he labored at Lovettsville, Va. His health failing in 1875, he removed to a farm near Newtown, where, however, he continued to preach until his death, March 23, 1877. Mr. Buhrman was a man of fine intellectual powers and marked oratorical ability. See Lutheran Observer, April 6, 1877.

Buhy, FELIX, a French theologian of the order of Carmelites, was born at Lyons in 1634. He was the first who dared to sustain the ten articles of doctrine published in 1682 by the clergy of France upon the nature and extent of the ecclesiastical power. He died in 1687. His principal work is Abrégé des Conciles Généraux (Paris, 1699), which was very highly esteemed. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bull, BERNARDO, a Spanish Benedictine, the first missionary to America, was a native of Catalonia. He was appointed by the pope vicar-apostolic to the New World in 1493, and accompanied Columbus on his second voyage, taking with him several priests. On account of differences of opinion between him and Columbus as to the treatment of the natives, he returned to Spain in 1495, and took an active part in the persecutions waged against the great discoverer. He afterwards became abbot of the convent of Cuxa, where he died in 1520. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buisseret (or Busseret), FRANÇOIS, a Flemish theologian and historian, was born in 1549 at Mons, in Hainault. He was successively official, archdeacon, and grand-vicar of Cambray, bishop of Namur in 1602, and archbishop of Cambray in 1614. He died in 1615. He wrote, Histoire d'une Religieuse de Mons Possédée (1585):—Histoire du Concile Provincial de Mons (1586):—La Vie de Sainte-Marie d'Oigine (1608). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buisson, Eugène, a French Protestant theologian, who died at St. Étienne, Oct. 22, 1881, as honorary president of the consistory of Lyons, is the author of several works, which have also been translated into German. His best-known work in Germany is Der Mensch, die Familie und die Gesellschaft in ihren Verhältnissen zur sittlichen Entwicklung der Menschheit

(Basle, 1859, 8 pts.). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 200. (B. P.)

Buisson (Lat. Bubus), Jean du, a Flemish theologian, was born about 1536. He became successively professor in the University of Louvain and chancellor of the University of Douay. He died April 15, 1598, having bequeathed all his property to poor students. He wrote Harmonia Evangelica (Rome, 1576; Liege, 1693). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buist, Edward Tongé, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Charleston, S. C., March 1, 1809. He was prepared for college at the Charleston College, and entered the College of South Carolina, but did not graduate there. He entered Princeton Seminary in the fall of 1828, and remained over three years. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Feb. 8, 1832, and was ordained by the Charleston Union Presbytery, Jan. 10, 1833. In 1838 he began to supply the Nazareth Church, S. C. From 1841 to 1857 he seems to have served for different terms the Nazareth, Mount Tabor, and Fairview churches in that vicinity. In 1857 he became president of the Female College at Laurens Court-house. He remained there until June, 1861. In that year he accepted a call to become pastor of the Washington Street Church, in Greenville, and was installed May 4, 1862. He died Nov. 10, 1877. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1878, p. 20.

Buist, George, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, in 1770. He was distinguished for his scholarship while connected with the Edinburgh College, especially in the department of Grecian literature. On the recommendation of Dr. Robertson and Dr. Blair he was called to take charge of the Presbyterian Church in Charleston, S. C. He entered upon the duties of his office in June, 1793, and subsequently received an appointment as principal of the Charleston College. He died in the midst of his usefulness, Aug. 31, 1808. As a preacher he enjoyed a fine reputation. Among the productions of his pen were various articles prepared by him for the British Encyclopedia, an abridgment of Hume's History of England for schools, a version of the Psalms, etc. Two volumes of his sermons were published in 1809. See Sketch prefixed to his Sermons; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Buite, Sainl. See BOETHIUS.

Bukentop, HENRI DE, a popish controversial writer and professor at Louvain, died there in 1716. His most remarkable publication is his Lux de Luce (4to). In the first book he treats of the antiquity of the Vulgate; in the second, of the various readings; in the third, he compares the Sixtine and Clementine editions. See Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Buktè is the name applied to a Lama [see LAMATISM], who professes to work miracles, particularly to cut himself open, take out his entrails, place them before him, and then resume his former condition as if nothing had happened. This spectacle, so revolting to the spectators, is very common in the Lamaseries of Tartary. The regular Lamas disclaim all connection with spectacles of this sort, and they are only enacted by lay Lamas of indifferent character and of little esteem among their brethren. Other pretended miracles of lesser fame are frequently performed. See Huc, Travels in Tartary, Thibet, and China; Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Bulæus, CHRISTOPHER, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Ketschberg, near Dresden, Nov. 4, 1602. He studied at Leipsic and Wittenberg, was in 1635 preacher at Mutzschen, and afterwards superintendent and assessor of the consistory at Wurtzen. In 1657 he was called to Dresden as superior counsellor of consistory, pastor, and superintendent, and died there Sept. 8, 1677. He wrote, Schedrasmata in Valerium

Flaccum; Censura Historiæ, quam Joh. Hoferus de sua ad Religionem Papisticam Defectione Perscripsit. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Schlegel, Leben der dresdnischen superintendenden. (B. P.)

Bulfinger, GEORG BERNARD, a German theologian and naturalist, was born in 1693. He was professor of theology at Tübingen, and died in 1750. He wrote, Specimen Doctrinæ Veterum Sinarum mor. et Polit. (Frankfort, 1724):—De Tracheis Plantarum ex Melone Observatio, in the memoirs of the Academy of Sciences of St. Petersburg. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bulgarian Version of the Scriptures. This is in the vernacular of the Bulgarians, "a race, next to the Huns, the most terrible and most hateful to the invaded Europeans, and known in the West as early as the reign of Theodoric the Ostrogoth. Either mingling with, or bordering upon, the Slavonians, they spread over a large tract of territory, from the shores of the Palus Mæotis and the Euxine, along the course of the Lower Danube" (Milman, Latin Christianity, ii, 418). Towards the close of the 7th century they attacked and conquered the division of the Slavs settled in Mœsia, and, in the first instance, gave their own name to the tribes they had subdued. In the course of two centuries, however, having adopted the language and manners of the Slavonians, the conquerors became identified with their subjects (Krasinski, Lectures on Slavonia, 1851, p. 20, note). Referring to the article Bulgaria in this Cyclopædia, we will state that the Bulgarian, together with the Russian and the Illyrian, belongs to the Eastern branch of the Slavonic languages, properly so called. "The most ancient document of this Eastern branch is the so-called ecclesiastical Slavonic, i. e. the ancient Bulgarian, into which Cyrillus and Methodius translated the Bible in the middle of the 9th century. This is still the authorized version of the Bible for the whole Slavonic race, and to the student of the Slavonic languages it is what Gothic is to the student of German. The modern Bulgarian, on the contrary, as far as grammatical forms are concerned, is the most reduced among the Slavonic languages" (Müller, Science of Language, i, 205), yet it was not till after the commencement of the operations of Bible Societies that any successful effort was made to produce a Bulgarian version of the Scriptures. See Bible of Every Land, p. 307.

A translation was commenced in 1820, at the suggestion of Dr. Pinkerton. An archimandrite, named Theodosios, who had been recommended by the Greek patriarch of Constantinople as the person best qualified for such a work, was appointed to prepare this version, which he completed in 1821. The work was forwarded to St. Petersburg for publication, and the Gospel of St. Matthew left the press in that city during the year 1822. This translation proved, however, to have been very inaccurately executed, and, as the Russian Bible Society was shortly afterwards suspended, the continuation of the work was given up.

In 1827 another translation of the New Test. was completed by Sapounoff, with the design of publishing an edition on his own account at the press of the metropolitan of Bucharest. In consequence of his limited means only the four Gospels were published, but they were received with much favor by the people. This induced the British and Foreign Bible Society to make arrangements, through their agent, Mr. Barker, to print an edition of the entire version; but owing to some difficulties, an entirely new translation was commenced in 1836 by Mr. Barker, which was completed at the press in Smyrna in 1840. The success which accompanied this publication induced the British and Foreign Bible Society to proceed with the translation of the Old Test., which was announced as completed in 1858, some parts of the Old Test. having been published in the meantime. Although the interest of the Bulgarians themselves in the Scriptures was very great, one of the new-papers having made the statement that "it is the study of the Bible which makes a nation great," and recommended the study of the Scriptures throughout the country, yet it was not till 1864 that an entire Bible was given to that people, the printing having been done at Constantinople. In the annual report for the year 1860, the Rev. S. B. Bergne communicates the following, which we subjoin:

"It appears that there is some difference between the Macedonian, or Western, and the Eastern dialects of the Bulgarian. Formerly the Western dialect was in the ascendant, but latterly it is becoming superseded by the Eastern. There is a review and several newspapers published in Bulgaria; these adopt the Eastern dialect: and there is every probability that, in a short time, it will push out the Western dialect so far as the literary character of the language is concerned. Our New Test. is in the Western dialect; the translation was made twenty years since at Smyrna, by a monk of the name of Neophytus, and was carefully examined by a bishop. It was printed for the first time in 1840. Poor Photinoff, of whose character every one speaks in the highest terms, was engaged with Dr. Riggs in the translation of the Old Test., and in the early part of the work favored the Western dialect; but in correcting the work, as well as in the latter portion of the translation, he adopted the Eastern dialect; and Dr. Riggs feels assured that if his life had been spared he would have followed this course throughout the whole translation. Either dialect can be read in all parts of the country, but as the Macedonian is going into disuse, so far as literature is concerned, it would be extremely undesirable that it should be adopted in the Scriptures. Photinoff was very anxious to complete the work, and persevered in it, in spite of every remonstrance, almost to the day of his death. The present reviser, who succeeded Photinoff, and is a good scholar, follows the Eastern dialect. The revision of the Old Test. has proceeded as far as the Pentateuch; and Dr. Riggs is now desirous of going to press with as little delay as possible. Separate books of the Old Test. have already been printed; but instead of fixing on detached books, it is recommended that the whole of the Old Test. should be printed consecutively, say, in three parts—the first portion containing the Pentateuch, the second closing with the historical books or Job, and the third including the rest. Small editions, perhaps one thousand copies, are proposed. These copies will be placed in the hands of competent judges for remarks and criticisms, and by the time the last part is printed the necessary materials will be possessed for commencing the edition of the Bible in one volume. Dr. Riggs states that some slight changes will be desirable in the New Test., to bring the dialect into strict conformity with that adopted in the Old Test."

When the Old Test. was finally published, in September, 1863, the Rev. Dr. Riggs of the American Board, and the Rev. Albert L. Long of the Methodist Episcopal Church, aided by two native literati, Costovich and Slaveikoff, undertook the revision of what may be esteemed a new version of the New Test. in Eastern Bulgarian. This revision they accomplished about the close of 1864, and two editions, one of ten thousand copies (32mo), at the joint expense of the British and Foreign and American Bible Societies, and another, with references, of five thousand copies (12mo), at the sole expense of the British and Foreign Bible Society, were published in 1865. In 1874 a new and slightly revised edition of the Bulgarian Bible, in one volume, edited by the Rev. Dr. A. L. Long, was published at Constantinople. Up to March 31, 1883, the British and Foreign Bible Society disposed of 162,235 copies of the Scriptures, either as a whole or in parts. (B. P.)

Bulgin, SAMUEL, an English Baptist minister, was born at Atworth, near Melksham, Wiltshire, March 23, 1780. After his conversion he removed to Bath and united with a Church of the countess of Huntington's connection, and became a zealous preacher. In 1804, having joined a Baptist Church, he engaged in ministerial work for several years, and was ordained pastor of the Church at Poole, June 22, 1808, where he remained forty-six years, during which time one hundred and eighty-three persons were added to his Church. In 1853 he resigned, and preaching occasionally, as opportunity presented, he was engaged in his loved vocation until the last. His death occurred at Swanton, whither he had gone to fulfil an engagement, June 24, 1854. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1856, p. 45. (J. C. S.)

Bulkeley, John, a Congregational minister, grandson of Peter Bulkeley, was first minister of Colchester, Conn., and died in 1731. He published an Election Sermon (1713):—An Inquiry into the Right of the Aboriginal Natives to the Lands of America (1724):—and a Tract on Infant Baptism (1729). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bulkeley, Lancelot, D.D., an Irish prelate, was a native of Beaumaris, and acquired an education at Brazenose College, Oxford, into which he was admitted a commoner in 1587. He took the degree of A.M. at St. Edmund's Hall in November, 1593, and immediately afterwards was ordained deacon by the bishop of Bangor. He was promoted to the see of Dublin, and consecrated at Drogheda, in St. Peter's Church, Oct. 3, 1619, by Christopher, archbishop of Armagh. In 1623 he revived the controversy concerning the primacy with Dr. Hampton. In 1635 Bulkeley had a confirmation from the king to him and his successors of all former grants, liberties, and privileges belonging to the see. In June, 1646, this prelate was one of the council who signed and issued the proclamation confirmatory of the peace concluded in that month between the marquis of Ormonde and the Roman Catholics. In 1647, on the surrender of Dublin to the commissioners of the Parliament, one of their first acts was to prohibit the use of the book of Common Prayer, and require the Directory for Worship to be adopted in all the churches of the city. The clergy of the Established Church protested against this order, and presented a remonstrance, but without success. The Directory was adopted throughout the city, and the book of Common Prayer only continued to be used in the chapel of Trinity College. In 1649 archbishop Bulkeley preached his farewell sermon to his clergy, and the Common Prayer was read by William Pilsworth, minister; but for doing so the usurping powers visited them with severe punishment, committing the archbishop and all the others present to prison. At the close of the year 1649 an act was passed by the English Parliament for the encouragement and increase of learning, and the true knowledge and worship of God, and the advancement of the Protestant religion in Ireland. Spent with grief for the calamities of his Church, Dr. Bulkeley died at Tallagh, Sept. 8, 1650. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 258.

Bulkeley, Peter, a Congregational minister, was born at Odell, Bedfordshire, England, Jan. 31, 1582. He was the son of the Rev. Dr. Edward Bulkeley, author of a supplement to Fox's Book of Martyrs. Peter, when about sixteen years old, was admitted to St. John's College, Cambridge, and was subsequently, after acquiring his education there, chosen a fellow. He succeeded to the large estate of his father, and also succeeded him in the ministry at Odell, as a clergyman of the Established Church. But he did not long continue to conform to the ceremonies of that Church, although, through the favor of the bishop of Lincoln, he remained unmolested for twenty-one years; when the matter was brought to the notice of archbishop Laud, he silenced him immediately. In 1635, having sold his estate, he crossed the ocean; and after remaining several months at Cambridge, Mass., he entered the wilderness in 1636, and began the settlement of a place which he called Concord (now in Massachusetts). On July 15, 1636, he organized a church there; the next year John Jones was its pastor, and he was its teacher. In bestowing farms upon his servants he expended a large fortune. He continued to preach until a short time before his death, which occurred at Concord, March 9, 1659. A library was established at Harvard College, in part, at least, by contributions from Mr. Bulkeley's. In 1646 he published a work in London entitled The Gospel Covenant; or, The Covenant of Grace Opened. It passed through several editions. It is composed of sermons preached at Concord from Zech. ix, 11. The book was held in high estimation. Mr. Bulkeley was distinguished as a scholar, and wrote Latin with great ease and elegance. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 51.

Bulkey, ARTHUR, an English prelate of the 16th century, was born either in Cheshire or (more probably) in Anglesea. He was educated doctor of laws, but had wholly forgotten the chapter "De Sacrilegio," for he spoiled the bishopric of Bangor, to which he was preferred, and sold the five bells. He occupied the see fourteen years, was suddenly deprived of his sight, and died in 1555. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 509.

Bull, THE GOLDEN (also called Bulla Carolina), was an ordinance made by the emperor Charles IV at the Diet of Nuremberg, in January, 1356. It is so named because it was sealed with a golden seal, attached to cords of yellow and red silk. It contains thirty chapters on the form and ceremonies of electing the emperor; the number, functions, and rights of the electors; and all that belongs to the government of the empire.

Bull, SINGLE (OR SEMI). Between the time of the pope's election and coronation, the bulla or seal attached to a document issued by him has an impression on one side only—viz., the effigies of Sts. Peter and Paul, the reverse being without any stamp. This is called a single or semi bull. After consecration the name of the pope and the date of his reign are stamped on the reverse; this makes the double bulla.

Bull UNAM SANCTAM. See UNAM SANCTAM.

Bull, Edward, a Congregational minister, was born at Saybrook, Conn., Nov. 26, 1791. After graduation he was teacher of the Grammar-school at New London for two years, and tutor in Yale College for five years. He studied theology with private instructors. He was ordained Sept. 29, 1825, pastor of the Congregational Church at Lebanon, and dismissed in 1837. The rest of his life was spent in Cheshire, where he taught a few pupils. He died April 25, 1869. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1869.

Bull, John Wesley, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore County, Md., Sept. 6, 1819. He was early in life the subject of religious impressions, at the age of nineteen gave himself to God, and in 1843 entered the Baltimore Conference. He held a supernumerary relation between 1854 and 1866, when he joined the Church South; labored three years in that body, and became a supernumerary, which relation he held to the close of his life, in Alexandria, Va., Dec. 25, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1874, p. 4.

Bull, Levi, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who died at Marsh, Chester Co., Pa., Aug. 2, 1859, aged seventy-eight years, was for many years a prominent minister in his diocese; but, unhappily, his vigorous intellect became disordered, and for a long time before his death he was unable to fulfil his duties as a pastor. He was at one time rector of St. Mary's, St. Andrew's, and St. Mark's churches in Chester County; then of St. Thomas's, in Berks County; then of Bangor Church, in Lancaster County. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 534.

Bull, Mitchell B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a native of Ireland. Some time after his arrival in America he experienced conversion, and in 1803 entered the New York Conference. After sustaining an effective and useful relation for eight years ill-health compelled him to retire from active service. He died in 1857 or 1858. Mr. Bull was a man of sterling integrity and an able and earnest preacher. His love for the Church was made manifest in his bequeathing nine thousand dollars to her various institutions. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 99.

Bull, Nehemiah, a Congregational minister, was born on Long Island, N. Y. He graduated at Yale College in 1723, was ordained at Westfield, Mass., in 1726, and died in 1740. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 207.

Bull, Norris, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Harwinton, Litchfield Co., Conn., Oct. 24, 1790. He entered Yale College when he was in his nineteenth year. During his college course he was noted for sobriety and diligence. He became a student in Princeton Theological Seminary in 1816, and was licensed to preach by the Columbia Presbytery in 1818. Soon afterwards he went to the western part of New York state, and labored as a missionary until 1821. In 1822 he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at Geneseo, where he continued to labor earnestly and effectively until 1833, when he became pastor at Wyoming, and in 1836 at Clarkson. He died at Lewiston, Dec. 7, 1847. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 617.

Bull, Ralph, a Presbyterian minister, was born near Scotchtown, N. Y., Dec. 10, 1812. His early studies were pursued at Scotchtown, and afterwards at Goshen and Newburgh. He spent two years (1826-28) in Yale College, one in the College of New Jersey, and one (1829-30) in Princeton Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Second Presbytery of Long Island, after which he acceptably supplied various pulpits of the Presbytery in connection with his work as a teacher. In the fall of 1836 he became pastor of the Church at Milford, Pa. In the fall of 1839 he removed to Darien, Ga., where he took charge of an academy and also preached. His last field of labor was Westtown. He died June 2, 1877. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1878, p. 27.

Bull, Thomas Palmer, an English Congregational minister, was born July 15, 1772, at Newport Pagnel, where he also labored until his death, March 17, 1859. He was carefully trained and educated by his father, Rev. William Bull, joined the Church, and eventually became joint-tutor in the Academy and co-pastor in the ministry with his father, and finally, sole pastor. As a preacher Mr. Bull's characteristics were simplicity, affection, earnestness, and pathos; as a teacher he was very learned and devoted. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1860, p. 179.

Bull, William H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Chester County, Pa., Nov. 24, 1807. He received an early religious training, but did not embrace Christ until his twenty-ninth year, and in 1827 entered the Philadelphia Conference. Early in 1836 severe illness compelled him to become a superannuate. He died on July 19 of the same year. Mr. Bull was a superior preacher, systematic, clear, warm, energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1837, p. 491.

Bulla (boule, a bullet) is a seal made of two circular pieces of lead, and attached to papal documents, which at length took the same name. Ecclesiastical seals were usually oval until the 14th and 15th centuries, when they became circular; and up to the 13th century the seal was suspended by silk threads or a slip of parchment, but was then attached to the document.

Bullard, Edwin Buxton, a Baptist missionary, was born at Shrewsbury, Vt., Sept. 12, 1813. He pursued his collegiate studies at the Hamilton Literary Institution, N. Y., and his theological studies one year (1840-41) at Newton, Mass. He was ordained at Middletown, Vt., July 9, 1840. After leaving Newton he was for a short time pastor of the Church at Foxborough, Mass. He received his appointment as a missionary from the Missionary Union, March 27, 1843, sailed from Charlestown Nov. 18 of the same year, and arrived at Maulmain April 6, 1844. He was appointed to labor among the Karens at Dong-vahn and its vicinity. He devoted four years to the faithful discharge of his duties, until his death, April 5, 1848. See The Missionary Jubilee, p. 241. (J. C. S.)

Bullard, Mulfred, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Stockbridge, Vt., June 6, 1808. He embraced religion at the age of fifteen, and after serving the Church some time as a local preacher entered the Vermont Conference about 1846, in which he served twenty-three years. He died at Lancaster, N. H., May 30, 1872. Mr. Bullard was a man of sanguine temperament, well calculated to win souls. He was a good preacher, excelled in social meetings, and was a powerful man in prayer. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 65.

Bullard, Ward, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Massena, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1810. He removed with his parents in 1813 to a farm in New Haven, Vt., where much of his youth was spent in severe manual labor. He joined the Church at the age of sixteen, only attended school winters previous to his seventeenth year, graduated at Middlebury College in 1833, and taught school some years in the state of Georgia, where he entered the itinerancy. He was for one year connected with the Alabama Conference. Owing to sickness and repugnance to slavery he returned North in the spring of 1838 and united with the Troy Conference, took appointments the next four years, then taught school a few years, and again received appointments until 1854, when he inherited his father's farm at New Haven, and thereafter made it his home. He held a supernumerary relation, and only preached occasionally. He died May 21, 1879. Mr. Bullard was a man of untarnished Christian character, an able instructor, and an acceptable preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 33.

Buller, William, D.D., an English prelate, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where he became A.M. in 1759. Thence he removed to Christ Church, where he took his theological degrees in 1781. He was appointed dean of Exeter, and dean of Canterbury, in which latter office he was installed June 22, 1790. On Dec. 2, 1793, he was consecrated to the bishopric of Exeter, which he held until his death, Dec. 12, 1796. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1796, p. 67.

Bullet, Jean Baptiste, a French scholar, who was born in 1699, and died at Besançon in 1775, was (from 1728) professor and afterwards dean of the university in that city. He left several works, among them Histoire de l'Établissement du Christianisme (1764, 4to), taken entirely from pagan and Jewish writers:—L'Existence de Dieu Démontrée par la Nature (2 vols. 8vo):—Réponses Critiques:—De Apostolica Eccl. Gallic. Origine (1752, 8vo). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bullet, Pierre, a reputable French architect, was born about 1645. He studied under François Blondel, and erected a number of structures in Paris, among others the Porte St. Denis. He also designed and executed in 1674 the triumphal arch called the Porte St. Martin. He erected the Church of the Jacobins in Paris, and published several good works on architecture in 1688 and 1696. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bullions, Alexander, an Associate minister, was born at Auchtergaven, Scotland, in February, 1779. He resolved, when quite young, to be a preacher. He entered the University of Edinburgh in 1798. Here he remained four years, then studied theology for five years under the Rev. Archibald Bruce of Whitburn, and was licensed by the Associate Presbytery of Perth. In 1806 he came to America, and landed at New York, where he remained some time, and then removed to Albany; from here he went to Cambridge, N. Y., and took charge of a congregation, with which he continued until the close of his life, June 26, 1857. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, iii, 44.

Bullions, Alexander Blyth, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Argyle, N. Y., May 13, 1822. He graduated at Union College in 1842, and spent over two years in the study of theology at Princeton Seminary. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Long Island Nov. 5, 1846, was pastor at East Hampton, L. I., from 1846 to 1848, at Waterford from 1848 to 1853, and tutor in Europe from 1853 to 1856. He was professor of languages at Carroll College, Wis., from 1858 to 1859; editor of the Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa., from 1860 to 1861; stated supply of the Congregational Church at Sharon, Conn., in 1865, and pastor from 1868 to 1879. He afterwards resided at Lansingburgh, N. Y., and died there, May 16, 1882. See N. Y. Observer, May 23, 1882; Presbyterian, May 27, 1882; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Seminary, 1881, p. 135.

Bullions, David G., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cambridge, N. Y., June 24, 1817. He was educated at Union College, N. Y., and studied theology in the seminary of the Presbyterian Church, Cannonsburg, Pa. In 1842 he was ordained by the Cambridge Presbytery, and stationed at West Milton, N. Y., where he labored till his death in 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1866, p. 96.

Bulliond, Pierre, a French magistrate and writer, father of Symphorien, was procureur-général of the parliament of Dombes, and procureur-du-roi in the presidial court of Lyons. He died at Paris in 1596, and left, La Fleur des Explications Anciennes et Nouvelles sur les 4 Évangélistes (Lyons, 1596, 1698, 4to). See London, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bulliond, Symphorien, a French prelate, was born at Lyons in 1480. He was successively bishop of Glandève, of Bazas, and of Soissons. In 1509 Louis XII made him governor of Milan, and afterwards sent him as ambassador to Rome. He assisted at the councils of Pisa and of Lateran, and took part in other important affairs. He was a skilful negotiator, a lover of the sciences, and a patron of the learned. He died Jan. 5, 1533. He wrote Statuta Synodalia (Paris, 1532). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bullivant, William J., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in London. He entered the ministry in 1832, became a supernumerary in 1867, resided at Sheffnal, Wellington, and Salop, and died very suddenly, Aug. 2, 1869, while the Conference was in session at Hull. He was an earnest laborer, a genial and profitable pastor. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1869, p. 29.

Bulloc, George, a Roman Catholic professor of theology at Antwerp, where he died about the year 1580, in the monastery of St. Michael, is the author of Economia Methodica Concordantiarum Scripture Sancte (Antwerp, 1572 fol.). See Pitseus, in Relatt. Historicis de Rebus Anglicis, i, 773; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Bulloch, Adam D., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in 1807. He became a Christian in 1822. For the purpose of fitting himself for the ministry, he went to the Baptist Institution at Hamilton, N. Y. After completing his studies he was engaged in teaching for a few years. He was ordained at Ames, N. Y., in 1841. He remained as pastor of the Church in Ames, interesting himself not only in his pastoral work, but also in the religious and benevolent enterprises of the day. His death occurred April 14, 1848. See Morning Star, 1848. (J. C. S.)

Bulloch, Christopher, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Scituate, R. I., in 1761. He joined the Six-principle Baptist Church when a youth. Subsequently he removed to Royalston, Mass., and connected himself with a Calvinist Baptist Church. Having removed to Fitchburg, he connected himself with a Free-will Baptist Church, and after a time was ordaind to the work of the ministry. In 1814 he removed to Limington, Me., where his labors were greatly blessed. His last residence was in Parsonfield, in which place, and the surrounding towns, he preached with great acceptance. He died in the spring of 1825. See Morning Star, xix, 16. (J. C. S.)

Bullock, Daniel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1806. He was converted at the age of twenty-one; and in 1834 entered the New York Conference, wherein his appointments were as follows: in 1834, Windham and Prattsville; in 1835, Lee, Lenox, and Hopbrook; in 1836, Lenox; in 1837, Middletown; in 1838, Charlotte; in 1839-40, Deposit; in 1841-42, Jefferson; in 1843, Middletown; in 1844-45, Charlotte. In 1846 he removed within the bounds of the Wyoming Conference, then held a supernumerary relation, engaged in business for some time, and was afterwards employed by the presiding elder two years at Triangle, three at Coventry, two at King's Settlement, and two at North Norwich, N. Y., where he died, Aug. 31, 1879. Mr. Bullock was a great revivalist, a man of much prayer, and a powerful exhorter. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 43.

Bullock, George, an English Congregational minister, was born in Northamptonshire, March 31, 1810. He was piously trained from infancy, joined the Church at the age of twenty-three, and in 1852 entered the London city mission, in the service of which he labored three years. He next preached ten or eleven years at Weldon, Northamptonshire, and nine months at Caergwile, Flintshire. Then, for the sake of his health, he removed to Wellingborough, where he died, May 31, 1867. Mr. Bullock was not regularly educated for the ministry, though trained at the Lewisham School. He possessed considerable natural qualifications for the work, in soundness and clearness of judgment, the energy of his character, the kindness of his disposition, the simplicity and ardor of his personal piety, as well as his familiarity with the Scriptures. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 257.

Bullock, Henry, D.D., an English divine and scholar, a friend of Erasmus, was a native of Berkshire. He was educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, where he took his master's degree, and became a fellow in 1507. He was vice-chancellor of the university in 1524-25. He was a man of acknowledged abilities, and was chosen by cardinal Wolsey to answer Luther. Wolsey also made him his chaplain. In 1513 he read mathematical lectures at Cambridge; and was one of the twelve preachers sent out by the university in 1515. Tanner places his death in 1526, but Dodd says he was living in 1530. He wrote, De Captivitate Babylonica contra Lutherum:—Epistolæ et Orationes:—De Serpentina Sicutulonis (1521):—Oratio Coram Archiepiscopo Eboracensis (eod.). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bullom Version of the Scriptures. The Bullom is a dialect of the Mandingo language, and is spoken around Sierra Leone, on the western coast of Africa. A translation of the Gospel according to St. Matthew was made into their language by the Rev. G. R. Nylander, of the Church Missionary Society, and an edition was printed by that society in 1815. No further attempts have since been made to furnish the Bulloms with the Scriptures in their native tongue. See Bible of Every Land, p. 409; for the study of the language, see Nylander, Grammar, Vocabulary, and Spelling-book of the Bullom Language (Lond. 1814). (B. P.)

Bull's Eye is the circular window in the west front of early Italian churches, which became the rose of the Gothic period.

Bulmer, Agnes, a Christian poetess, the daughter of Mr. Edward Collinson, was born in London, Aug. 31, 1775. In 1789 Wesley admitted her into the Methodist Society, and she became a member of Hester Ann Rogers's class; in 1793 she was married to Joseph Bulmer of London; she became the intimate friend of Drs. Adam Clarke and Jabez Bunting; and on Aug. 30, 1836, she died, in the Isle of Wight, and was buried in the catacombs underneath City-road Chapel, London. In 1825, while travelling in a coach, she wrote the fine hymn, "Thou who hast in Zion laid," first sung at the laying of the foundation-stone of the Methodist chapel in Oxford-road and Ancoats-lane, Manchester, and published in the Supplement to the Wesleyan Hymn-book (1830). She was an extensive contributor to the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine and Youth's Instructor. Her more ambitious publications are, The Messiah's Kingdom; a Poem (Lond. 1800), highly praised by James Montgomery and others:—Memoirs of Mrs. Mortimer:—Scripture Histories (3 vols. 18mo):—Select Letters and Poems, with Memoir by W. M. Bunting (12mo, posthumous). See Memoir, by Anne R. Collinson; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 498, and Wesleyan Hymn-book and its Associations, p. 373; Memoir, by Mrs. Rowley (Dr. Clarke's daughter), in Wesl. Meth. Magazine, October, 1840, p. 801.

Bulmer, George, an English Congregational minister, was educated at Cotton End, leaving there in 1841. He excelled in the study of Hebrew. He became pastor of the Church at Overton; was appointed afternoon preacher at City-road, London; and pastor at Witney, from which he retired on account of failing health. He died Nov. 30, 1879. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 360.

Bulmer, John, an English Congregational minister, was born in Yorkshire in 1784. He was converted early in life, and when quite a young man entered Rotherham College as a student for the ministry. After passing his course of study he preached successively at Haverfordwest, Rangely, Staffordshire, Bristol, Newbury, in Berkshire, and Langrove, where he died, Nov. 26, 1857. Mr. Bulmer was a diligent student through life, a faithful preacher, and an industrious writer, publishing several works, and writing for periodicals. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1859, p. 193.

Bulotu, a word used to denote the invisible world among the inhabitants of the Tonga Islands. It was supposed to be peopled with the spirits of departed chiefs and great persons of both sexes; and it was to these chiefly that worship was paid and sacrifices were offered. These spirits in Bulotu were thought to act as intercessors with the superior gods, who could not be approached by men except in this way; and to revisit the earth in the form of birds or fishes. The souls of chiefs were all supposed to go straight to Bulotu after death; but there was no certainty as to the fate of the common people, who, indeed, were scarcely thought to have souls. See Mariner, Account of the Natives of the Tonga Islands (Lond. 1817).

Bulteau, Louis, a French writer, was born at Rouen in 1625. Having filled the office of secretary to the king for fourteen years, he retired into the abbey of Jumièges, in Normandy, and thence to the abbey of St. Germain des Prés, in Paris. He died in Paris, April 13, 1693, leaving Défense des Sentiments de Lactance sur l'Usure (1671):—Essai de l'Histoire Monastique d'Occident (1680):—L'Ordre de Saint-Benoît d'Occident (1684), and some minor works. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buluh-batang, a species of bamboo which grows in Sumatra, and which is supposed by many of the natives to be the habitation of numberless good and evil supernatural beings. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Bumby, JOHN H., an English Wesleyan missionary, was born at Thirsk, Yorkshire, Nov. 7, 1808. He was converted at the age of fifteen, entered the ministry in 1830, travelled until 1838, when he went to New Zealand district. His energetic career there soon closed. On returning in a frail canoe from the southern stations of his district to the principal, at the Hokianga, and when crossing the Bay of Thames, the boat was accidentally upset, and Mr. Bumby and twelve natives were drowned, June 26, 1840. He was the first missionary to die in New Zealand. Bumby possessed sincere piety and intellectual powers of a high order. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1841; Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Meth. iii, 385, 447; also Life of Bumby, by Rev. Alfred Barrett (Lond. 1853, 12mo).

Bumpass, SIDNEY D., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Person County, N. C., Dec. 25, 1808. He was carefully trained by a pious mother; received a good education; experienced religion in 1834; was licensed to exhort in 1835, to preach in 1836; and in 1837 was admitted into the Virginia Conference. He afterwards became a member of the North Carolina Conference, in the active ranks of which he died, Dec. 12, 1851. Mr. Bumpass was characterized by energy and deep piety. He wrote and published pamphlets on the Evils of Intemperance, The True View of Baptism, and on Family Worship. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1852, p. 398; Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vii, 814.

Bumstead, Daniel, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born in Colchester, Essex, in 1742. He was called out by Wesley in 1762, and travelled the Sussex Round, Birstall, Leeds, Sheffield, and London circuits. In 1775 he, with Nicholas Manners, desisted from the work, his health being broken down by excessive toil. Thereafter he kept a wine-store in Bishopsgate Street, and was a useful member of City-road Chapel. He died in 1797. He was a man of piety, zealous in his ministry, and successful. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.; Stevenson, City Road Chapel, p. 426.

Bumstead, James, an English Wesleyan minister, brother of Rev. John Bumstead, was born in 1786. He commenced his itinerancy in 1807, travelled twenty-three circuits, became a supernumerary at Louth in 1843, and died there after two days' illness, June 26, 1851. His life was one of devotion and piety. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851.

Bumstead, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Suffolk, Jan. 7, 1778. He was converted after he was twenty, under the preaching of William Timperley. He commenced his ministry in 1804, labored long and faithfully, was laid aside by paralysis for seven years, and died July 9, 1855. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1855.

Bunch, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Charleston district, S. C. He was converted in his seventeenth year, and two years later entered the South Carolina Conference. After laboring with much zeal and success for eight years he located, but continued to preach, as health permitted, until 1829, when he again entered the active ranks. The last year of his life was spent as a missionary on Cooper River. He died Sept. 7, 1838. Mr. Bunch was studious, humble, energetic, and exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1839, p. 664.

Bunch, Reddick, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, belonged to the South Carolina Conference, in which he had labored two years, and had just entered upon the mission-field, when he died in great peace, Feb. 14, 1851. He was devout and useful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1851, p. 351.

Bundeesh is the name of a Pehlevi translation of a lost Zendic work upon the Creation, one of the sacred books of the Parsees.

Bunderen (Lat. Bunderius), JAN, a Flemish theologian of the Dominican order, was born at Ghent in 1481. He was preacher and inquisitor of the faith in the diocese of Tournay, and died at Ghent, June 8, 1557. He wrote, Compendium Dissidii Quorundam Hæreticorum atque Theologorum (Paris, 1540, 1543, 1545); republished under the title, Compendium Concertationis Hujus Sæculi Sapientium (ibid. 1549; Venice, 1552; Antwerp, 1555); under the title, Compendium Rerum Theologicarum (Antwerp, 1562; Paris, 1574, 1577):—Delectio Nugarum Lutheri (Louvain, 1551):—De Vero Christi Baptismo contra Mennonem Anabaptistarum Principem (ibid. 1553; Paris, 1574):—Scutum Fidei (Ghent, 1556; Antwerp, 1569, 1574). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bundock, MARY, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Manningtree, Essex, in 1695, and from her youth was religiously inclined. When she was about thirty years old she felt herself called to the ministry, and continued to labor therein for many years, both at home and abroad, frequently travelling in different parts of the nation in the service of truth. She died at Colchester, October 8, 1778. See Piety Promoted, iii, 110. (J. C. S.)

Bundus (Βοῦνδος), a Manichæan sectary, who added some doctrines of his own, and taught them at Rome during the reign of Diocletian, and afterwards in Persia. He held that God had made war with the evil principle and conquered it; and that men ought to worship the conqueror.

Bundy, Benjamin, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in New York in 1796. He was among the early itinerants and evangelists of his denomination, being a co-worker with Rev. John Burrell and others, who did so much in laying the foundations of the denomination in America. He died in Parishville, N. Y., Aug. 25, 1870. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1871, p. 82. (J. C. S.)

Bundy, Richard, D.D., an English clergyman, was installed a prebendary of Westminster Oct. 2, 1732, and died about 1739. He published Apparatus Bibliæ, or an introduction to the Holy Scriptures, from the French of Père Lamy (1723):—Sermons (1740, 2 vols.):—Sixteen Sermons (1750). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bunel, JACQUES, an eminent French painter, was born at Blois in 1558, studied at Rome under Federigo Zuccherò, and died about 1620. He was appointed one of the painters to the king, and executed some very important work for the palaces. Among his best works is a fine picture of the Descent of the Holy Ghost, and above all his celebrated picture of the Assumption of the Virgin, in the church of the Feuillants. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bungener, FÉLIX, a French Protestant theologian, was born at Marseilles, Sept. 29, 1814. From 1832 to 1838 he studied theology at Geneva, and was ordained in the latter year. In 1843 he was placed at the head of the Genevan college, which position he occupied till 1848. He then retired from public activity, occupying himself mostly with writing in behalf of the Evangelical Church, and died June 14, 1874. He is best known as the author of Histoire du Concile de Trente (1847, 2 vols.; Eng. transl. by J. McClintock, New York, 1855; Germ. transl., Stuttgart, 1861):—Rome et la Bible, Manuel du Controversiste Évangélique (1859):—Rome et la Cœur Humain, Études sur le Catholicisme (1861):—Pape et Concile au xix^e Siècle (1870):—Rome et le Vrai (1873):—Saint Paul, sa Vie, son Œuvre, et ses Épîtres (1867):—Calvin, sa Vie, son Œuvre, ses Écrits (1863):—Souvenirs de Noël (1859):—Christ et le Siècle (1856). A volume of Sermons were published after his death, in 1875. See Gaberel, Félix Bungener, in the Étrennes Religieuses (1875); Bouvier, in Lichtenberger's Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 201. (B. P.)

XL.—22*

Bünger, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a Lutheran minister, was born at Etzdorf, near Leipsic, in 1810. He prepared himself for the ministry at Leipsic, and came to America in 1839, with the Saxonian colony which emigrated in that year, and settled first in Perry County, Mo. The year after he went to St. Louis, became teacher at the Holy Trinity Church School, afterwards assistant to its pastor, and in 1848 pastor of the Immanuel Church, which position he held until his death, Jan. 26, 1882. Pastor Bünger was for many years president of the Western District of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri. He was also the founder and president of the Lutheran Hospital and Asylum of St. Louis, president of the Orphan Asylum at Des Peres, and for a long time a member of the Board of Supervisors of the Concordia College. His chief interest, besides his clerical work, centred in educational purposes, and the number of young men whom he prepared for the higher classes of the college was very great. He was of almost unbounded liberality towards the poor, and of ardent zeal in the cause of religion and humanity. (B. P.)

Bungeroth, J. A., a Lutheran minister, received a university education in Germany; arrived in America about 1861; resided for some time in Jersey City, N. J., and died May 28, 1866, aged thirty-five years. See Lutheran Observer, July 6, 1866.

Bunker, Benjamin, a Congregational minister, was born in 1635. He graduated at Harvard College in 1658; was ordained at Malden, Mass., Dec. 9, 1663; and died in February, 1670. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 144.

Bunker, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Shaftsbury, Vt., June 11, 1807. He removed with his parents to Morrow County, O., in 1815; experienced conversion in 1842; and in 1846 entered the North Ohio Conference, and in it labored, as his health permitted, until his sudden death, June 18, 1849. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1849, p. 369.

Bunn, HENRY, a Baptist minister, was born in Nash County, N. C., Dec. 18, 1795. In 1817 he moved to Twiggs County, Ga., where he spent the rest of his days. Being prospered in the secular pursuits in which, for a number of years, he was engaged, he was able to gratify his benevolent desires to promote the interests of God and humanity. After occupying positions of civil trust for several years, he made an open profession of his faith, and united with the Church in 1837. In 1851 he was ordained to the work of the ministry, and for a time was pastor of the Richland Church. For many years he was moderator of the Ebenezer Association, also a trustee of Mercer University, and a member of the Executive Committee of the Georgia Baptist Convention. He held a very high place in the respect and affection of his brethren and the community at large. His death took place Sept. 23, 1878. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 159. (J. C. S.)

Bunney, FRANCIS, an English ecclesiastic, younger brother of Edmund, was born in Buckinghamshire in 1543. He was educated at Oxford; was a popular preacher; and became successively prebendary of Durham (1572), archdeacon of Northumberland (1573), and rector of Ryton, in Durham (1578). He died April 16, 1617. He was an admirer of Calvin, and a strenuous opponent of Rome. He wrote three tracts against cardinal Bellarmine and popery; also an exposition of Rom. iii, 28; and on justification by faith (Lond. 1616, 4to).

Buno (or Bunon), JOHANN, a German Protestant philologist and theologian, was born in 1617 at Frankenburg, in Hesse. In 1653 he became rector of the school of St. Michael at Lunenburg, professor of history and geography in 1660, and of theology in 1672. He died in 1697. He wrote an abridgment of the great work of Cluver, entitled Cluverii Italia, Sicilia, et Ger- mania Contracta (Wolfenbüttel, 1663). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bunter, JOHN, an English Congregational minister, was born at West Monkton, near Taunton, Aug. 18, 1792. He received a religious training, joined the Church early in life, and was educated for the ministry at Iloxton College, entering in September, 1820. He settled at Finch- ingfield, Essex, on completing his course, and labored there eight years, when a severe affection of the eyes compelled him to resign. After a rest of two or three years, he resumed the ministerial office at Croydon; but his affliction again caused his resignation in 1840. His labors after this were only occasional. He died Sept. 29, 1870. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 306.

Bünting, Heinrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born in 1545 at Hanover. He studied at Wittenberg, was in 1571 pastor at Grunow, and in 1591 superintendent at Gosslar. On account of his holding the doctrine of ubiquity, he was deposed of his office and went to Hanover, where he died, Dec. 30, 1606. He wrote Itinerarium Biblicum (Magdeburg, 1597, 1718):—Harmonia Evangelistarum (Helmstädt, 1583):—De Monetis et Mensuris S. Scripturæ:—Vita Johannis Baptistæ. See Heineccius, Antiquitates Goslar; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 136; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bunting, James, M.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Baltimore in 1814, of pious Methodist parents. He was converted when but ten years of age. Having received the best possible educational privileges, which his natural talents and remarkable memory enabled him to improve, he was for four years instructor in the grammar-school of Dickinson College. He also studied medicine. In 1842 he joined the Baltimore Conference, but was obliged by failing health to take a supernumerary relation in 1849. He returned to active work, but in 1860 he became superannuated, in which relation he remained until his death, in St. Mary's County, Md., June 24, 1880. Had his health equalled his zeal, he would have taken high rank as a pulpit orator. His love for souls consumed him. Everywhere he went he had revivals, some of great extent, and all with abiding results. He was a man of great social attractiveness and sparkling wit, of general information, conscientious integrity, and untiring in visiting the sick. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 72.

Bunting, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Uttoxeter, June 21, 1835. He was pious from his youth. In 1856 he was sent to the Didsbury Theological Institution, where his sterling excellence, his rare gifts, his manly strength of character, united with great gentleness, endeared him to all. With the exception of three years in the Oxford-place Circuit, Leeds, the whole of his ministerial life was spent in Lancashire. At the Conference of 1875 he was appointed to Haslingden, where he died, Dec. 15, 1875. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1876, p. 18.

Bunting, William MacIardie, an English Wesleyan minister, son of Rev. Dr. Jabez Bunting, was born in Manchester, November, 1805. He was educated at the Woodhouse Grove School and at St. Saviour's Grammar-school, Southwark, London. He was converted in his seventeenth year; entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1824; battled all his life against ill-health and a weak constitution; spent seventeen years usefully as a supernumerary; and died at Highgate, Kentish-town, London, Nov. 9 (13), 1866. He was a man of large and varied attainments, of refined taste, and of a genial and sympathetic temper. As a preacher he ranked deservedly high, though he preached too long and his delivery was lacking in physical energy. His generosity to the poor was constant and large.

Bunting's hymns and poems are marked by exquisite tenderness, a catholic spirit, and a fervent, enlightened piety. From 1820 to 1840 he published, in the Wes- leyan Methodist Magazine, some of as beautiful gems of sacred fugitive poetry as were ever penned; his name disguised under the sobriquet "Alec." About forty of Bunting's hymns are found in Leifchild's collection of Original Hymns, and some of them appear in most of the hymnals, especially "My God, how often hath thine ear." Bunting also published Love made Perfect; or, Memorials of Mrs. Elizabeth Pickford (1859):—Select Letters of Mrs. Agnes Bulmer, with Introduction and Notes (Lond. 1842, 12mo):—Notes in Stevenson's Wesleyan Hymn-book and its Associations (ibid. 1870).

Buonarrotti. See MICHAEL ANGELO.

Buonconsigli, GIOVANNI, an Italian painter, lived at Venice about 1500, and executed a picture for the Church of San Cosimo in that city, representing the Virgin and Infant, with Saints; dated 1497. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buoni, Buono de', a reputable Italian painter, flourished at Naples about 1430, and studied under Colantonio del Fiore. He painted many pictures for the Neapolitan churches, the best of which is St. Francis Receiving the Stigmata, in the Church of the Restituta. He died about 1465. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buoni, Silvestro de', an Italian historical painter, the son and scholar of Buono Buoni, was born at Naples about 1420, and studied also under Antonio Solario. Among his best works is the Assumption, in the Church of San Pietro Martire; and the principal altar-piece in the Restituta, representing the Virgin and Infant, with Saints. He died in 1480. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buono, BARTOLOMEO, a reputable Italian architect and sculptor, was born at Bergamo about 1450. In 1495 he erected the Church of San Roch at Venice. In 1510 he restored, with great skill, the upper part of the grand campanile of St. Mark. As a sculptor, he executed the fine statue of St. Roch, in the church of that saint, and three small statues which adorn the great altar of the Church of San Geminiano. He died in 1529. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buralti, CARLO, a Roman architect, lived in the early part of the 18th century. Under Clement XII he constructed the Church of Gesu Bambino, which was completed by Fuga. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burbank, David, LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Deerfield, N. H., Oct. 10, 1810. He fitted for college at the academy in New Hampton, and graduated at Brown University in 1837. He studied at the Newton Theological Institution for a short time, and then was a teacher for several years in Wrentham, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; Eldridge, Monroe, Brockport, N. Y., and some other places. He was ordained as pastor of the Church in Delavan, Wis., in April, 1862. He died in Chicago, Ill., April 26, 1865. See General Catalogue of Newton Theological Institution, p. 22. (J. C. S.)

Burbank, John Felch, a Baptist minister, was born December, 1811. He studied at Waterville College, and graduated at Columbian College, Washington, D.C., in 1837. He then studied for three years at the Newton Institution, and was ordained at Taunton, Mass., Feb. 3, 1840, where he was pastor one year, and then removed to Webster, and was pastor three years, 1843 to 1846. On resigning at Webster, he removed to Worcester, but did not take another pastorate. While in Worcester he filled several municipal offices, and for a time was president of the common-council. He died there, Nov. 23, 1853. (J. C. S.)

Burbank, Moses, a Baptist minister, was born at Campton, N. H., Oct. 2, 1811. He pursued his preparatory studies at the New Hampton Institution, and was a graduate of Waterville College, Me., in 1836. For several years he devoted himself to teaching—in Hampton Falls, N. H., 1836 to 1838; in Kentucky, 1838 to 1845. He had charge of a private school in Newton, Mass., from 1854 to 1862; he was principal of an academy in Ludlow, Vt., where, at the close of his term of service, he established a paper, in connection with a partner, called the Black River Gazette, of which he was the editor. Mr. Burbank was a licensed preacher, but was never ordained. His death occurred March 11, 1867. (J. C. S.)

Burbank, Samuel, a Baptist minister, was born at Brentwood, N. H., June 17, 1792. When Samuel was a child his father removed to Newfield, and became a person of some prominence in town affairs. Samuel early developed a great thirst for knowledge. While teaching in Newfield he became a Christian, and was baptized Sept. 16, 1814; just two years afterwards he was ordained as pastor of the Church in Newfield, and held this position for several years. He travelled a part of the time as a minister of the Free-will Baptists, in different sections of New England and Canada. For a number of years he published the Free-will Baptist Register, before the establishment of the Morning Star. When the latter paper was started, he removed to Limerick, Me., having been appointed agent and junior editor of that periodical. While thus occupied he preached constantly. Upon the removal of the paper to Dover, N. H., after it had been under his charge for seven years, Mr. Burbank devoted a portion of his time to secular pursuits, filling for eight consecutive years the office of county treasurer for York County, Me. In all matters pertaining to the prosperity of his denomination he was interested, and labored abundantly to elevate it in all worthy ways. After a life of great usefulness he died, Sept. 24, 1845. See Barrett, Memoirs of Eminent Preachers, p. 118-124. (J. C. S.)

Burbeck, Edward, a Wesleyan preacher, was admitted on trial by the English Conference in 1783. His last circuit was Inverness, Scotland, where he died in the dawn of his usefulness, in 1788. Dr. George Smith (Hist. of Wesleyan Methodism, i, 540, 541) mentions a curious circumstance connected with one of his journeys. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Burch, Chancy, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Warren, N. Y., in 1803. He was converted in early life at Westfield, and commenced preaching in North East, Pa., being ordained about 1856. His longest pastorate was with the Church at North East. His other pastorates were, Waterford one year, French Creek one year, and Greenfield, four miles from North East, a number of years. He died at Greenfield, March 21, 1878. He is said to have been a man of more than ordinary ability, of most worthy Christian integrity and character, possessing a very kind and feeling heart, coupled with deep piety. See Morning Star, Dec. 11, 1878. (J. C. S.)

Burch (or Burcht), François van der, a celebrated French prelate, was born at Gand, July 26, 1567. He was of a noble family, and one which added much to the literature of the 16th century. From the bishopric of Gand he was called, June 14, 1615, to the see of Cambrai. He was a prelate of great activity, rare piety, and large benevolence, and was the founder of several institutions for the instruction of poor children, one of the most important of which is known in Cambresis under the name of St. Agnes, where the children of Catholic parents are taken care of. He also founded the Dominicale, a similar institution, and to him was given the title of "Père des Pauvres." He died at Mons, May 23, 1644. Some of the pastoral letters of Van der Burch have been published. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burch, James K., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Robeson County, N. C., Aug. 7, 1795. He received his classical education at Philadelphia, N. C., and his theological at Union Seminary, Va. In 1830 he was licensed by Fayetteville Presbytery, and stationed at Laurel Hill, N. C. In 1838 he accepted a call to Hopewell Church, S. C., where he labored for twenty years. He died in 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 67.

Burchan is the name of the idols of the Calmuck Tartars, who are said to number one hundred and eight. Most of their gods are supposed to have been spiritual, but created, beings, who, after passing through all the different degrees of transmigration, have at last raised themselves to the dignity of divine beings by great deeds and extreme sufferings.

Burchard (1), a German prelate, was a monk of Lobe, who became, in 996, bishop of Worms. He attended the Council of Seligenstadt in 1022. For many years he dwelt in a cell about two miles from Worms, where, with the assistance of Olbertus of Gemblours, he compiled his great work, the Decretorum Volumen, a collection of canons, decretals, etc. (Cologne, 1548, fol.; Paris, 1549, 8vo).

Burchard (or Bouchard, Lat. Burcardus or Brocardus) (2), a German prelate and canonist, was born in Hesse. He attached himself to the archbishop of Mayence, and became preceptor of Conrad, called le Salique. In 1006 Ordo III appointed him bishop of Worms. This prelate was not less noted for his profound knowledge of science than for his charity and exemplary life. He died in 1026. His principal work is Magnum Volumen Canonum (Cologne, 1548). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burchard (3), a German prelate, lived about the middle of the 11th century. Henry IV, emperor of Germany, made him bishop of Halberstadt in 1060, and in the following year sent him to reconcile certain differences which existed between Alexander II and Honorius II. Burchard, without regard to the wishes of his sovereign, decided in favor of Alexander, and on his return to Germany took sides with the enemies of Henry IV, and waged a hard battle against him. But he suffered reverses, and fled into Hungary and died. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burchard (4) was a French ascetic theologian. Under the direction of St. Bernard he went to Clairvaux. In 1136 he was made abbot of Balerno, in Burgundy, and was finally transferred to the abbey of Bellevaux, where he died, April 19, 1162. He wrote a letter to Nicolas, monk of Clairvaux, which was published in the Bibliotheca Maxima Patrum (xxi, 523), also an appendix to the Life of St. Bernard, in the edition given by Mabillon (vol. ii). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burchard (5), abbot of Ursperg, in the 13th century, who died in 1226, is the author of that part of the famous Chronicle of Ursperg which contains the history of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and the princes of his house.

Burchard, Ely, a Presbyterian minister, was born at West Springfield, Mass., April 24, 1788. He graduated at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., in 1811. In 1827 he was a member of the Oneida Presbytery. Much of his life he was without a ministerial charge. He died Feb. 4, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 284.

Burchard, Jedediah, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Norwich, Conn., in 1790. His parents moved to Utica, N. Y., where he entered the store of Mr. Lynot Bloodgood, and was taken with him to Albany, where he became converted, and soon after began preparing for the ministry. He then went to live at Sackett's Harbor, continued his studies there, and began in small neighborhoods the work of an evangelist, to which his subsequent ministry was largely devoted. Licensed and ordained by the Black River Association, he joined the Presbytery of Watertown in 1825, and was actively engaged in revivals of religion in Jefferson and St. Lawrence counties, and occasionally elsewhere. In 1828 he organized Fayette Street Church, Utica, and served it for a time. Though afterwards a pastor or stated supply for short periods of the Chatham Street Chapel, New York city, and Adams, N. Y., his professional life was mainly spent in special meetings in central and western New York, in Canada, and New England. He was constitutionally eccentric. See Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 279.

Burchard, Johann (1), a German prelate, was born at Strasburg in the 15th century. He became clerk of the pontifical ceremonies in 1483, afterwards bishop of Città di Castello, and died May 6, 1505. He is the author of Diurnum, or journal of pope Alexander VI, which is curious, but has never yet been published entire; excerpts from it were published by Leibnitz under the title, Specimen Historiæ Arcanæ S. Anecdota de Vita Alexandri VI; it was published in a more complete form by Eckhard, in his Corpus Historicum. Burchard also wrote Ordo pro Informatione Sacerdotum (Rome, 1509), and aided in the correction of the Liber Pontificalis (ibid. 1497, fol.). See Biog. Universelle, vi, 287; Ughelli, Italia Sacra; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Burchard, Johann (2), a Danish theologian, who died June 4, 1643, as bishop of Ripen and doctor of theology, is the author of Oratio de Immanuele Jesu Christo Σεαφώρως, and Disputatio de Hæresi. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Burchard, Matthias, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Kiel, Aug. 22, 1619. He studied at Rostock and Kiel, was in the latter place appointed Jeacon, and afterwards pastor primarius. He died suddenly, Aug. 29, 1679. See Moller, Cimbria Litterata; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Burchard, Mauritius, a German theologian, who died as doctor and professor of theology, and archdeacon of St. Thomas at Leipsic, July 16, 1637, is the author of Propugnaculum Christianorum:—Duodecimum pro Augustana Confessione:—De Peccato Originis. See Witte, Diarium Biographicum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Burchardt, Francis, a Lutheran theologian of Löwenberg, in Silesia, was pastor at Riesenburg, which place he had to leave on account of the Osiantrian controversies in 1554. In 1555 he went to Dantzic, where he became pastor of St. Mary's, and in 1560 he went to Thoren as pastor and professor of Hebrew at the gymnasium there. Differences between his colleagues obliged him to return to Dantzic, where he died in 1590. He wrote, De Sacramento Corporis et Sanguinis:—De Libertate Variarum Religionum, etc. He was very bitter against non-Lutherans. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Burchell, Thomas, an English Baptist missionary, was born in 1800. After the completion of his preparatory studies he was set apart to his work, Oct. 13, 1823, and soon after sailed for Jamaica. It was decided to establish a station at Montego Bay. On Feb. 29, 1824, he formed a Church, which grew to a membership of sixteen hundred persons. His constant and severe labors exhausted his strength, and he revisited his own country. On his return to Jamaica, in the early part of 1832, he found his part of the country in a state of insurrection. Charges were brought against him of having fostered the rising of the slaves. His chapel was levelled to the ground, several magistrates being present and abetting. He himself was thrown into jail. When his trial came on he was acquitted, but was advised to leave the island. After an absence of several months, he returned to Jamaica in 1834, and was received by his friends with intense joy. A still better chapel was erected, in which he continued to minister until 1843, when, prostrated by his arduous labors, he left Montego Bay, and took charge of a much smaller station at Mount Carey. It soon became evident that he must again have entire relaxation from his work, and he once more returned to England, where he died, London, April 16, 1846. See (Lond.) Baptist Magazine, 1846, p. 369, 370. (J. C. S.)

Burckhard, Johann Gottlieb, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 29, 1736, at Eisleben. For some time he was preacher of St. Thomas's at Leipsic, and afterwards preacher of the German Savoy Church in London. He died Aug. 29, 1800. He wrote, Vollständige Geschichte der Methodisten in England (Nuremberg, 1795):—Predigten zur Beglückung der Menschen im Gesellschaftlichen Leben (Halle, 1793-94, 2 vols.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 831; ii, 204. (B. P.)

Bürde, Samuel Gottlieb, a German hymn-writer, was born at Breslau, Dec. 7, 1753. He studied law at Halle, but after his father's death was appointed to several government offices, and at length became secretary to the board of finances at Berlin, where he died, April 28, 1831. He is the author of about a hundred hymns, two of which were translated into English—viz., Steil und dornig ist der Pfad ("Steep and thorny is the way," in Cox's Hymns from the German, p. 175), and Wann der Herr einst die Gefangenen ("When the Lord recalls the banished," in Lyra Germanica, ii, 292). See Koch, Gesh. der deutschen Kirchenliedes, xvii, 319 sq.; Jördeus, Lexikon deutscher Dichter u. Prosaisten (Leipsic, 1806), vol. i. (B. P.)

Burder, Henry Forster, D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Coventry, Nov. 27, 1783. He became a devoted Christian at the age of ten, received his preliminary education at Coventry and Homerton, and his ministerial training at Hoxton College and at the University of Glasgow. On returning home, Mr. Burder became a tutor at Wymondley for a year; then copastor at Thomas Square, Hackney; and, on the death of his senior, he succeeded to the sole pastorate. While at Hackney he was chosen to fill the chair of philosophy and mathematics at Hoxton and Highbury colleges, which he occupied from 1807 to 1829, when he resigned the professorship. In his seventieth year he retired to Hatcham, near Peckham, where he died, Dec. 29, 1864. The high regard cherished towards Dr. Burder by the people of Hackney was manifested in their presenting him with a purse of £1000 when he relinquished his ministry with them. This money he applied to the founding of the "Henry Forster Burder Scholarship" of New College, value £30 per annum, and tenable for three years. Dr. Burder published, Lectures on the Pleasures of Religion (1823, 8vo):—Lectures on the Essentials of Religion (1825, 8vo):—Mental Discipline (5th ed. Lond. 1846, 8vo), to which is appended an Address on Pulpit Eloquence, by the Rev. Justin Edwards:—also some other works. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 239; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burder, John, M.A., an English Congregational minister, brother of the foregoing, was born at Coventry, April 2, 1785. His early education was at Hackney, and his ministerial at Hoxton College and the University of Glasgow. He preached his first sermon at Stroud in December of that year, was ordained pastor at that place in 1811, and there labored until 1843, when he retired to Clifton, Bristol, where he died, May 17, 1867. Mr. Burder was an excellent scholar, well-read in general literature and biblical criticism, and was familiar with the Hebrew and Greek text of the Scriptures. His ministry was distinctly evangelical. Conscious sincerity gave him an almost indomitable energy, and he seemed to breathe the same spirit into others. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 257.

Burder, Samuel, D.D., a minister of the Church of England, who died as pastor of Christ Church at London, Nov. 21, 1836, is the author of The Scripture Expositor: a New Commentary, Crit. and Prac., on the Holy Bible (Lond, 1809):—Oriental Literature applied to the Illustration of the Sacred Scriptures, especially with reference to Antiquities, Traditions, Manners, etc. (ibid. 1822, 2 vols.):—Oriental Customs; or, An Illustration of the Holy Scriptures by an Explanatory Application of the Customs and Manners of the Eastern Nations, and especially of the Jews, etc. (ibid. 1839, and later). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 135, 188; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (B. P.)

Burdett, CHENEY, an English Baptist minister, was born at Naseby, Northamptonshire, in 1785. He was converted at an early age, and united with the Church at Guilsborough. His ministerial preparation was made under the tuition of Rev. Mr. Sutcliffe of Olney. After serving for a year the Church of Sutton-in-the-Elms, Leicestershire, he was invited to become the pastor. Accordingly he was ordained, and served the Church until within a few weeks of his death, which took place at Thorpe, Essex, Sept. 2, 1852. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1853, p. 42. (J. C. S.)

Burdick, David M., a Baptist minister, was born at Newport, R. I., Sept. 5, 1805. In early manhood he left his calling as a mechanic, and having pursued a course of study in the Theological Seminary at Hamilton, N. Y., he graduated in August, 1839. He was ordained, Jan. 9, 1840, pastor of the Baptist Church at Arkwright and Fiskeville, R. I. Here he remained a year and a half. He was subsequently pastor at Rehoboth, Marshpee, and Catuit Port, all in Massachusetts. For three years (1850–53) he had charge of the Baptist Church at Tiverton, R. I., and for about a year and a half he preached to the churches at Lime Rock, Smithfield, and Albion. He died at Lime Rock, April 28, 1855. See Rev. Dr. H. Jackson's Funeral Discourse. (J. C. S.)

Burdick, James Ross, a Baptist minister, was born at Leyden, Mass., June 29, 1796. He graduated at Brown University in 1822, and for a time afterwards was the assistant of Rev. Dr. Benedict, while the latter was getting ready for the press his History of all Religions. Mr. Burdick was ordained as an evangelist in 1826. In 1832 he was settled as pastor of the Baptist Church at Ithaca, N. Y., and subsequently pastor at Owego, Lisle, and Tioga; and at Canton, Pa. Ill-health obliged him to retire from the active duties of the ministry for some ten years. He was able to preach more or less during the latter part of his life. He died at Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1867. (J. C. S.)

Burdigalense Concilium. See BORDEAUX, COUNCIL OF.

Burditt, THOMAS, A.M., an English Baptist minister, was born at Leicester, March 8, 1811. He was converted at the age of eighteen, and in 1836 entered Stepney College. He left college in 1840 for his first pastoral charge at Long Sutton. While here he edited for a time the Baptist Record, a monthly periodical of much ability. In 1845 he removed to Zion Chapel, Cambridge, and a few years afterwards succeeded the Rev. N. Haycroft at Saffron Walden. The most fruitful period of his ministry was at Haverfordwest, whither he removed in 1853 to assume the double function of classical tutor in the college and copastor of the Baptist Church at Bethesda. Here he spent thirteen years of earnest and useful labor, when he removed to South Parade Chapel, Tenby, where the chapel soon became too small for the rapidly increasing congregation, and had to be enlarged at two or three different times. In 1871 Mr. Burditt went on a visit to his sons, who had settled in America, and sent over his resignation to Tenby, at the same time accepting a charge at Pine Grove, Nova Scotia. He soon returned to England, however, and again took up his residence at Tenby, ministering occasionally to the Church at Manorbier. In 1875 he accepted the pastorate of Cragg Chapel, Rawdon, where he labored about five years. He announced his resignation early in February, 1881, but before the time of its taking effect had arrived he died, Feb. 20, 1882. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1882, p. 296.

Burdsall, JOHN, an English Wesleyan minister, was a native of York. He was converted in early life, was received into the ministry in 1796, when twenty-one years of age, became a supernumerary in 1837 in his native city, established there a theological class for local preachers, and died in York, Feb. 7, 1861, in his eighty-sixth year. Burdsall possessed a mind of fine quality, of acuteness and balance. He was a self-taught scholar, a great reader, especially in theology. His sermons were sound expositions enforced by pointed application, fluently delivered. He was inclined to mathematics and metaphysics. He wrote, Memoirs of R. Burdsall, of York, his father (3d ed. Thetford, 1823, 12mo):—The Sinner's Tears, and Devout Breathings after God (revised and edited from Rev. Thomas Fettiplace, 18mo):—Memoirs and Remains of Rev. J. Strawe (1842, 12mo):—Sermon on Rom. viii, 2, in Sermons on Important Subjects (Lond. 1832). In 1841 Burdsall published in London, in three vols. 12mo, the complete works of "the polemic divine," Rev. Daniel Isaac. See Smith, Hist. of Wesl. Meth. iii, 505, 506; Minutes of the British Conference, 1861, p. 14; Osborne, Meth. Bibl.; Everett, Wesleyan Centenary Takings, i, 299, sketch 22. Burdsall was implicated in the writing of the celebrated Fly-sheets, and was reproved by the Conference, his age saving him from expulsion.

Burē was, in Scandinavian mythology, the first man, whose three grandchildren, Odin, Wile, and We, killed Ymir, the frost-giant, from whose body they made the earth. See YMIR.

Buren, JAMES PASCAL, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born and educated in Missouri. He was a member of the Arkansas Conference, and filled acceptably five different appointments. He died April 30, 1861, in his twenty-fifth year. Mr. Buren was energetic, practical, prudent, affable, and true. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 5.

Burg, Franz Josef von, a German theologian, leader of the Ultramontanists in Baden, was born March 23, 1803, at Zell-on-the-Harnersbach. He studied at Freiburg, Heidelberg, and Göttingen, and commenced his lectures at Freiburg in 1829, where he was also made professor extraordinarius in 1833, and in 1836 professor extraordinarius of the law-faculty. In 1837 he was elected member of the House of Representatives. The liberalism which he at first espoused he soon exchanged for ultramontanism, and in a short time he became the leader of the clerical party. In 1874 he was elected member of the German Parliament, and died Feb. 1, 1878, at Freiburg. He published, Ueber den Einfluss des Christenthums auf Recht und Staat (Freiburg, 1841):—Die Methodologie des Kirchenrechts (ibid. 1842):—Der Unterschied der protestantischen und katholischen Universitäten Deutschlands (ibid. 1846):—Die Gemeinsamkeit der Rechte und der Interessen des Katholizismus (Schaffhausen, 1847–1850, 2 vols.):—Der Orden der barmherzigen Schwestern (ibid. 1847):—Die Katho- liche Politik von Donoso Cortes (Paderborn, 1850):—Geschichte der Bedrückung der kath. Kirche in England (Schaffhausen, 1851):—Urkundliche Geschichte des National- und Territorialkirchentums in der kath. Kirche Deutschlands (ibid. 1851):—Die freie kath. Universität Deutschlands (ibid. 1851):—Die Gesellschaft Jesu, ihr Zweck, ihre Satzungen, Geschichte, Aufgabe und Stellung in der Gegenwart (Mayence, 1853, 1854, 2 vols.; new ed. 1863):—Der heil. Thomas, Erzbischof von Canterbury (ibid. 1855):—Winfried-Bonifacius, published after his death (Gratz, 1880). (B. P.)

Burg, Johann Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born May 13, 1689, at Breslau. He studied at Leipzig, and in 1711 took the degree of bachelor of theology in his native city. In 1713 he was appointed pastor of Trinity Church, and he died June 4, 1766, as professor of theology and superintendent of the Evangelical churches and schools. He published, Diss. Sistens analysis Logicam Epistolæ Pauli ad Ephesios, etc. (Leipsic, 1708):—Diss. de Adoratione et Glorificatione Spiritus S. contra G. Whistonum (ibid. 1711):—Summarische Wiederholung und Erläuterung des Grundes und der Ordnung des Heils (Breslau, 1737):—Sammlung geistlicher Reden (ibid. 1750–56, 6 parts). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 166, 874; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 206 sq. (B. P.)

Burgar, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in London, May 11, 1787. He was converted in 1806, and was ordained in 1813 as a foreign missionary. He labored in Jamaica, W. I., until his death, Aug. 1, 1816. His acquirements were considerable, and his labors crowned with success. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1817; Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1820, p. 641, 721.

Burgate, William, a Reformation martyr, was a native of Spain, and a true believer in the Scriptures. He was apprehended, and condemned to be burned Nov. 2, 1558. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 516.

Burge, Hartwell T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Virginia, Dec. 23, 1805. He removed to Kentucky in 1819; experienced religion in 1838; soon after received license to preach, and in 1845 entered the Louisville Conference of the Church South. On the opening of the rebellion he entered the Union army as chaplain of one of the Kentucky regiments. Two years later he received a commission as colonel, and with his regiment spent much time in suppressing guerillas in Kentucky. His active part in overcoming the rebellion made it impossible for him to obtain support in the ministry in that state, after the war, and he removed to Indiana and united with the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1876 he became superannuated and retired to Patoka, Ind., where in the following year his robust constitution gave way under the burden of years and cares; in August he became insane, and on the 20th of that month died. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 95.

Burge, Lemuel, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Litchfield, Conn., in 1787. He was educated at the Episcopal Academy at Cheshire, and subsequently studied under bishop Griswold of Rhode Island; was ordained deacon in 1820, and afterwards priest. His only cure was that of the "Old Narragansett Church" at Wickford, R. I. In 1855 he removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., with impaired health, officiating occasionally as his strength permitted. He died in that city, Sept. 10, 1864. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. Oct. 1864, p. 485.

Burgensis, Paulus. See PAULUS BURGENSIS.

Burges, Jean, a French martyr, was a merchant in Paris; was condemned for declaiming against the mass and other popish ceremonies, and had his tongue bored through, and a hot iron rod tied or bored through one of his cheeks. He was burned at Paris in 1533. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 396.

Burges, Mark, an English martyr, was master of an English ship, called the Minion, and was burned at Lisbon, Portugal, in 1560, because of his faith in Christ and his abhorrence of the mass. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 516.

Burgess, Alvin, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Booneville, N. Y., May 10, 1820. He removed to Bainbridge, O., with his parents, in 1833; received an early religious training; experienced religion in 1839; was licensed to preach in 1840, and admitted into the Erie Conference, in which he labored with much acceptability to the close of his life, Oct. 22, 1872. Mr. Burgess was a man of energy and great faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 85.

Burgess, Benedict, a Methodist minister, was born in Maryland, May 18, 1784. After his conversion he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. On March 6, 1807, he was received into the Baltimore Conference. In 1809 he was ordained deacon, and in 1810 he located. He labored as a local preacher until 1828. He became associated with the Methodist Protestant Church, and was one of the founders of the Virginia Conference. Three times he was elected president of that body. As a preacher of the Gospel he was very successful in winning souls to Christ. He died in Virginia, Oct. 25, 1848. See Colhouer, Founders of the M. P. Church, p. 360.

Burgess, Cornelius, D.D., an English Nonconformist divine, was entered at Oxford in 1611. On receiving orders he was presented to the rectory of St. Magnus, London-bridge, and received the living of Watford, in Hertfordshire, in 1618. He was one of the chaplains in ordinary to Charles I., in the beginning of his reign, but afterwards became an adherent to the principles which resulted in the overthrow of that monarch. He became lecturer in St. Paul's, with a salary of four hundred pounds and the dean's house for a residence; but at the restoration he lost all his property, and died in extreme poverty, June 9, 1665. His writings were few and of no present importance. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Alibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burgess, Ebenezer, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Wareham, Mass., April 1, 1790. He sprang from a Puritan stock, his ancestors being among the early settlers of Sandwich, Mass. He graduated from Brown University in 1809, and on leaving college had charge, for two years, of the Latin School connected with the university, and for some time was a tutor in the college. He commenced the study of theology in 1812, with Rev. Dr. Emmons of Franklin, Mass., and completed his course of study at Andover. On leaving the seminary, in 1815, he became professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in the University of Vermont, which office he held for two years, and then resigned to accept an appointment from the American Colonization Society, by whom he was sent to the west coast of Africa, on a mission of inquiry, being accompanied by Samuel J. Mills. The result of this mission was the commencement of what has since become the republic of Liberia. Upon his return he devoted another year to theological study under the Rev. Dr. E. D. Griffin, then a pastor in Newark, N. J. His ordination took place March 14, 1821, and he became pastor of the First Congregational Church in Dedham, Mass., where he remained until his death, Dec. 5, 1870. He published a few occasional discourses, a volume entitled The Dedham Pulpit, and another on The Burgess Genealogy. (J. C. S.)

Burgess, Harrison, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Maryland, Feb. 22, 1828. He emigrated with his parents to Ohio in his childhood; was converted in his twentieth year, and at the same time removed to Indiana; was soon after licensed to preach; and in 1850 entered the North Indiana Conference. After filling three appointments ill-health necessitated his taking a local relation, which he held three years;

then, in 1859, he united with the North-western Indiana Conference, and was appointed to Covington circuit, where he labored but a week or two when he was attacked with consumption, which terminated his life, Dec. 7, 1859. Mr. Burgess was devout and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 356.

Burgess, James, an English Congregational minister, was born March 25, 1768, at Upper East Smithfield. He early knew what it was to enjoy communion with God. While still young he preached in London and adjacent villages in connection with the Itinerant Society of London. In June, 1814, he became pastor at Great Shelford, a village near Cambridge, where he preached with great success for nine years. On July 6, 1823, he opened a place for divine worship at Little Shelford, Cambridgeshire. A church was formed here Oct. 13, 1823, over which he was ordained Dec. 16 of the same year. He died Feb. 21, 1853. As a preacher he was faithful and eloquent; he gave exceedingly lucid views of the doctrines of Scripture. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1854, p. 219, 220.

Burgess, John (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Grainthorpe, near Louth, Lincolnshire, in 1801. He was piously trained by Methodist parents, and was converted when fifteen years of age. In 1824 he received his first appointment (Ipswich), and he continued to labor until he was cut off in the midst of his years and usefulness, at Lynn, Nov. 1, 1846. He was a diligent student, a sound theologian, an instructive preacher. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1846.

Burgess, John (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Peckforton, Cheshire, in 1823. He was converted at the age of sixteen; was educated at Cheshunt College, and settled as pastor at Long Melford, Suffolk, in 1848, where he labored until his death, which occurred at Hammersmith, Feb. 21, 1868. His gentle manner, amiable disposition, his meekness, his unmistakable piety and devotion to God, endeared him to all, and brought many to Christ. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1869, p. 239.

Burgess, Joseph (1), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Thurles, County Tipperary, Ireland, Aug. 4, 1757. He received a careful training by his father, who belonged to a regiment of horse. Joseph himself joined the regiment at an early age, and was successively trumpeter, paymaster's clerk, quartermaster (1780), and paymaster. His army associations led him into vice and dissipation until 1779, when he was converted under the ministry of William Boothby. Wesley, Burgess's personal acquaintance, received him into the itinerancy in 1790, and appointed him to Liverpool. He thenceforth labored with faithfulness and diligence, chiefly in the counties of Devon and Cornwall, until 1832, when he became a supernumerary at Plymouth. He died March 24, 1839. He was a man of exalted piety and unwearied generosity, tender, studious, and courteous. Besides contributions to the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, and other periodicals, Burgess published Remarks on the Sacrificial Death of Christ (Penzance, 1826, republished in London). See Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1840, p. 537 sq.; Minutes of the British Conference, 1839; Memoirs of Burgess, by his son, Rev. W. P. Burgess (Lond. 18mo).

Burgess, Joseph (2), an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Northwich, Cheshire, in 1795. He was received into the ministry in 1812; preached thirty-nine years in the active work; resided at Warrington; and died June 2, 1859. "A contented, thankful, and cheerful spirit diffused its influence around his path. He pursued an undeviating course of well-doing." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1859, p. 260.

Burgess, Nathan B., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born Sept. 14, 1771, at Woodbury, Conn. He received his education in the Episcopal Academy at Cheshire; was ordained deacon in 1801, and took priest's orders in the following year. Among his parishes were Guilford, Glastenbury, and Poquetanock. In 1835 he removed to the diocese of Western New York, where he served several parishes. He died Feb. 20, 1854, at Utica, N. Y. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev., 1854, p. 438.

Burgess, Richard, B.D., a minister of the Church of England, who died in April, 1881, at Brighton, at the age of eighty-four, was for some time English chaplain in Rome, and in 1836 was appointed to the rectory of Upper Chelsea. Here he labored for a period of thirty-three years, and during that time he was appointed to a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral, and was also made rural dean of Chelsea. In 1869 he was presented to the valuable crown living of Horningsworth and Ekworth, near Bury St. Edmunds, which he resigned some time before his death. Mr. Burgess took great interest in antiquarian and archaeological studies, and also in the question of education. For many years the reports of the Foreign Aid Society were from his pen. He promoted the interests of continental Protestantism, more especially in connection with members of the Church of England. Among many of the Evangelical churches he was long regarded as a spiritual father; and once, across the Channel, he had no hesitation in donning the robe of a pastor of the Reformed Church, and conducting divine service in a Presbyterian pulpit. He published, The Topography and Antiquities of Rome (1831):—Greece and the Levant (1835). (B. P.)

Burgess, R. W., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, labored some time in the South Carolina Conference, and in 1859 entered the Florida Conference. In 1862 he enlisted as a private soldier in the Confederate army, and fought during the campaign of that year in Virginia. In 1863 he resumed his ministerial labors in the Florida Conference, and continued laborious until his death in 1864. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1864, p. 522.

Burgess, William Pennington, A.M., an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Liverpool, Dec. 3, 1790, being the son of Rev. Joseph Burgess. He was educated at Kingswood School (1799-1803); was classical instructor in Pocock's Academy in Bristol (1803-11); became private tutor; was received into the ministry in 1842, and labored for forty-two years, chiefly in the west of England; became a supernumerary at Plymouth in 1856; and died July 23, 1868. Mr. Burgess was gifted with superior endowments, an insatiable thirst for knowledge, and untiring industry. He was a solid scholar. Catholicity of principle, inflexible truthfulness, open-handed beneficence, a warm heart, under a cold exterior, and a profound humility, were traits of this useful minister. He published Sermons on the Doctrine, Experience, and Practice of Primitive Christianity (Lond. 1824, 1830; 3d ed. 1836, 12mo):—Essays on the Principles and Doctrines of Christianity:—Wesleyan Hymnology (2d ed. Lond. 1846, 18mo—valuable):—Memoirs of Joseph Burgess (1853) —Occasional Sermons. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1868, p. 37; Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1873, p. 481, 577; Everett, Wesleyan Centenary Takings, i, 47; Osborn, Wesl. Bibliog.

Burghill (or Burbill), ROBERT, an English clergyman, was born at Dymock, Gloucestershire, in 1572, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow in 1584. He received the living of Northwold, in Norfolk, and became a prebendary of Hereford in 1604. He died in 1641. He published, Invitatorius Panegyricus, ad Regem Optimum de Elizabethæ nuper Reginae Posteriore ad Oxoniæ Adventu, etc. (1603):—De Potestate Regia et Usurpatione Papali, etc. (1613):—and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s.v.

Burgkmaier, HANS, a German painter and engraver, was born at Augsburg in 1472, and probably studied under Dürer. He died in 1559. Several of his pictures are preserved at Augsburg. His principal work is Joseph and Potiphar's Wife; besides several saints.

Burgmann, JOHANN CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran doctor and professor of theology of Germany, was born at Rostock, where he also studied, as well as in Jena and Wittenberg. In 1724 he was appointed pastor of the Holy Ghost Church in his native place; in 1726 he was made doctor of theology; in 1735, professor of theology; in 1754, senior of the theological faculty; and, in 1760, director of the ministerium and senior of the academy. He died Feb. 15, 1775. He was a voluminous writer. See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 767; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Burgoon, CHARLES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was a native of Maryland. In 1790 he entered the itinerancy, and in the latter part of 1800 died. Mr. Burgoon was a man subject to dejection of spirit, and affliction of mind as well as body. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1801, p. 97.

Burgos, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Burgense). Burgos is the capital of Old Castile, in Spain. Two councils were held here.

I. Held in 1080 (according to others in 1076) by cardinal Richard, legate. In this council the Roman office was substituted for the Gothic ritual hitherto in use. See Labbe, Concil. x, 1815.

II. Held in 1136, by Guy, cardinal and legate, who was sent into Spain to facilitate the introduction of the Roman office, and to effect a reconciliation between the kings of Navarre and Castile, who were at war.

Burgos, Juan Bautista, a Spanish theologian, was a native of Valence, and a monk of the order of St. Augustine. Being sent to the Council of Trent in 1562, he there delivered a remarkable discourse, On the Four Means of Extirpating Heresies. He afterwards taught theology in his native place. His sermons were published at Louvain in 1567. He died in 1574. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burgos, Pablo de, a Spanish prelate, was born in Burgos in 1553. He was a Jew, and was afterwards converted to Christianity, baptized, and then took the name of Pablo de Santa Maria. At the death of his wife he entered the order and became bishop of Cartagena, then of Burgos. King Henry II chose him as preceptor of his son John. He died Aug. 29, 1435. He wrote some important additions to the Postils of Nicolas de Lyra, and a treatise entitled, Scrutinium Scripturarum (1591). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burhans, DANIEL, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Sherman, Conn., July 7, 1763. His father served as an officer for seven years in the old French war, at the close of which he settled at Sherman. Daniel's only opportunity for study was about three months of the year, in a district-school, but he prosecuted his studies vigorously and prepared himself for college. About 1783 he began to teach in the public-school at Lanesborough, Mass., and here he was converted. His friends erected for him a large brick school-house; he built a comfortable residence and abandoned the ministry, towards which he had been looking previous to this time. In the absence of the rector of St. Luke's, at Lanesborough, he sometimes officiated as lay-reader until 1791, when he began the study of theology. Two years thereafter he was ordained deacon, and, the rector of St. Luke's having died, the care of the two churches in that parish devolved upon Mr. Burhans, who, nevertheless, still retained his school. Resolutely entering upon his work, he soon organized two other churches—one at Lenox, Mass., and the other at New Lebanon, N. Y. His health failing, he dismissed his school and devoted himself entirely to his clerical duties. In 1794 he received priest's orders at New Haven, and labored six years at Lanesborough and the adjacent region. In 1799 he became pastor at Newtown, Conn., a pastorate which continued thirty-one years. Resigning his charge in 1830, he officiated for one year at Woodbury, Roxbury, and Bethlehem; and in the fall of 1831 took charge of the parish of St. Peter's, Plymouth, Mass., where he remained six years. After this he officiated at Oxford and Zoar, but in 1844 he was compelled, by increasing bodily infirmities, to close his ministry, after which he removed to Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He died there, Dec. 30, 1853, being at the time the oldest minister of his communion in the United States. Dr. Burhans had great knowledge of human nature; and his mental energy, keen discernment, and profound sagacity supplied, in some measure, his want of scholastic culture. From 1804 to 1826 he was elected continuously a delegate to the General Convention. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 410; Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1854, p. 151.

Buri, in Norse mythology. The cow Audhumla, who came from the Ginnungagap (chaos) immediately after the great giant Ymer, licked the salted earth, and on the first day there came up human hair, on the second a head projected, and on the third a god, Buri, came forth, beautiful, large, strong, and vigorous. He begat Bör. The latter produced Odin, Wile, and We.

Burian, Saint. See BURIENA.

Buridan, JEAN, a famous French nominalist of the 14th century, was born at Béthune, in Artois. In 1310 he went to Paris, where he attached himself to the famous Occam (q. v.). In 1327 he was rector of the Paris University, and was one of the delegates who went to the pope at Avignon. After the ascendancy of the realists over the nominalists, he went to Vienna, where he died after 1358. Buridan was one of the most vigorous adherents to the principles of his teacher Occam, which he carried in all its conclusions. His main works are Summa seu Summula de Dialectica et Compendium Logice (Paris, 1500, 1516, 1578; Oxford, 1637, 1640, 1641). See Buleus, Hist. Univ. Paris, vol. iv; Fabricius, Bibl. Lat. Med. Ævi; Hauréau, Philos. Sco-lust. ii, 483; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Buriena (or Burian), Saint, one of the Irish ascetics (said to have been the daughter of a king) who settled in the wild Land's End district, Cornwall, in the 6th century. In honor of her relics king Athelstan built a college within sight of the Scilly rocks, with a church which enjoyed the privilege of sanctuary (see Butler, June 5). The two churches which have always been connected with St. Buriena are those of St. Senanus and St. Levanus, also from Ireland. St. Buriena's day is May 29 or June 19 (register of St. Buriena), or June 4 (Butler), or May 1. The parish feast is on the nearest Sunday to old May-day. The martyrologium of the Church of Exeter placed it on May 1.

Burini, GIOVANNI ANTONIO, a reputable Italian historical painter, was born at Bologna in 1640, and died about 1730. He studied under Domenico Canuti, and painted a number of pictures for the churches of Bologna, among which are The Crucifixion, in San Tommaso del Mercato; the Martyrdom of St. Catherine, in Santa Caterina de Saragozza; David with the Head of Goliath, in the sacristy of San Salvatore. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burk, Johann Christian Friedrich, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born in 1800. From 1849 till 1873 he was pastor at Echterdingen, in Württemberg. In that year he retired from the ministry, and lived with his son at Lichtenstern, where he died, Nov. 23, 1880. He published, Dr. Johann Albrecht Bengels Leben und Wirken (2d ed. Stuttgart, 1832); Beicht- und Abendmahlsbüchlein (5th ed. 1846); —Was wollen die Pietisten? (ibid. 1836):—Evangelische Pastoraltheologie in Beispielen (1838-39, 2 vols.):—Der wahre evangelische Glaubensweg (2d ed. 1843):—Spiegel edler Pfaffenfrauen (2d ed. 1854). From 1830 till 1869 he edited the Christenbote, a religious Sunday paper. See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 205; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 273, 858; ii, 122, 327. (B. P.)

Burk, John, a Baptist minister, was born in Virginia, Nov. 13, 1806, and removed to Salem, Tenn., where he united with the Church in May, 1833. He was licensed to preach in May, 1844, and ordained one year after. He was much occupied with labors as an itinerant evangelist in lower Tennessee, a successful revivalist, and wonderfully gifted in exhortation and prayer. As an evidence of the place he held in the regards of his brethren, it may be mentioned that for many years he was moderator of Ocoee Association. During the late war he went to Texas after his daughter-in-law. On his return home, on board of a steamer, he took the cholera, and was put off on the bank of the Red River, where he died and was buried, Jan. 29, 1863. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Ministers, p. 46. (J. C. S.)

Burk, J. R., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Cooper County, Mo., in 1821. He was converted in 1838, licensed to exhort in 1845, to preach in 1846, and soon after joined the Missouri Conference. After travelling several circuits acceptably, he went to Texas, and joined the East Texas Conference, in which he did noble work until his death, Aug. 7, 1869. Mr. Burk was an excellent man and a good preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1869, p. 381.

Burk, Philip David, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born July 26, 1714, at Neuffen. He studied at Tübingen, was in 1742 pastor at Boelheim, and in 1750 at Hedelfingen, near Stuttgart. In 1758 he was appointed superintendent at Markt-Gröningen, and in 1766 he was called for the same position to Kirchheim, where he died, March 22, 1770. He is the author of Gnomon in Duodecim Prophetas Minores (Heilbronn, 1753), with a Preface by his father-in-law, the famous J. A. Bengel:—Gnomon Psalmorum (Stuttgart, 1760):—Evangelischer Fingerzeig auf den wahren Verstand und heilsamen Gebrauch der gewöhnlichen Sonn-Fest- und Feiertäglichen Evangelien, etc. (Leipzig and Tübingen, 1760-67, 7 vols.):—Die Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und deren Gewissheit im Herzen und Gewissen des Sünders, etc. (Stuttgart, 1763-65, 7 pts.). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 99; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 208 sq. (B. P.)

Burke, Abel Benjamin, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Woodstock, Conn., Feb. 13, 1816. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1838, began his studies in theology at Union Theological Seminary in 1839, and graduated in 1842. He served as stated supply at Jacksonville, Fla., from 1842 to 1846; taught at Alexandria, Ga., from 1846 to 1847; and died there, May 11, 1847. See Gen. Cat. of the Union Theol. Seminary, p. 23.

Burke, John, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Long Island, was chaplain in the United States Army in Louisiana in 1853, and was removed to Fort Washita, Ind. Ter., the next year; in 1864 he was chaplain at Fort Hamilton, N. Y.; in 1870 he resided at Tarrytown, having retired from his chaplaincy in the army. He died Dec. 24, 1873. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1875, p. 144.

Burke, Richard, an English Wesleyan preacher, commenced his ministry in 1765, and died in 1778. "He was made perfect through sufferings. He united the wisdom of age with the simplicity of childhood." "Sunday, Feb. 15, 1778: I buried the remains of Richard Burke, a faithful laborer in our Lord's vineyard. A more unblameable character I have hardly known. He never gave me occasion to find fault with him in anything. He was a man of unwearied diligence and patience, and his works do follow him" (Wesley, Journal). See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Burke, William, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was born in Virginia, Jan. 13, 1770. He was converted when about twenty, and soon after began his ministry. He was sent to Kentucky as a pioneer in 1790, where he endured privations and faced dangers that baffle description, with the fortitude and bravery of a martyr, sacrificing one of the best constitutions ever given to man. Thousands were brought to Christ by his unflagging zeal and devotion. He departed this life in the triumphs of faith, Dec. 4, 1855. Mr. Burke was an intellectual giant, thoroughly consecrated. The people where he labored vied with each other in doing him honor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1856, p. 655.

Burkett, Jacob, a minister of the Evangelical Association, was born in Lebanon, Pa., Nov. 14, 1805. In early life he was converted to God. He was received on probation into the East Pennsylvania Conference in 1831, and two years afterwards, on account of bodily infirmities, was necessitated to take a location. In 1839 he applied again to Conference, and was accepted. The missionary society of the Evangelical Association had been organized the previous year, and he was one of the first four missionaries sent out by this society. The field assigned him was among the Germans in New York city. He reached his mission May 3, 1839, and on the 12th preached his first sermon in the city, to seven attentive hearers. He labored in this mission for two years. In 1841 his field of labor was Reading, Pa. At the close of this year he was necessitated to locate because of ill-health. In 1844 he resumed his ministerial labors and was stationed at Buffalo, N. Y.; in 1845 had charge of Lake Circuit, in New York state; in 1846 joined the Ohio Conference, and was stationed at Dayton; in 1847-48 at Erie, Pa.; in 1849, Greenville Circuit; in 1850-51 he travelled Canton Circuit, and in 1852 Wayne; in 1853 labored on Liverpool Circuit; in 1854-55 on Canton Mission; Tuscarawas, 1856; Lake, 1857; Lancaster, 1858; Greensburg, 1859; Tuscarawas, again, 1860; Seneca, 1861; Crawford, 1862; and Marion Circuit, 1863. His health having failed, the Conference granted him a supernumerary relation, which he held until his death, which occurred near Greensburg, O., Jan. 11, 1881. He was a patient, enduring, zealous, and successful minister of our Lord Jesus Christ. See Evangelical Messenger, Feb. 1, 1881.

Burkett, M. H. B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Virginia, Jan. 11, 1811. He received a careful religious training, joined the Church in his youth, and in 1845, on the organization of the Church South, his residence being within its bounds, he was licensed to preach by it, and in its local ministry served until the beginning of the rebellion, when his strong Union sentiments necessitated his leaving his home. He went to Kentucky, and was appointed chaplain of the 23d Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers. In 1864 he entered the Kentucky Conference, and on the organization of the Holston Conference in 1865 was transferred to it. He died Nov. 12, 1875. No man of his time did more for the cause of education in East Tennessee than Mr. Burkett. He was kind, generous, and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 140.

Burkholder, Jacob, a clergyman of the German Reformed Church, was born in Bedford County, Pa., Aug. 29, 1823. In his youth he learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until he entered the ministry. In 1847 he joined the Reformed Church, and two years later began his studies for the ministry. In 1856 he removed to Illinois, where he continued to study, and in 1862 was licensed to preach. His health failing, he removed to Huntington, Ind., but in 1869 accepted a call to Union Charge, De Kalb Co., Ind., and was ordained. After one year he became pastor of West Jefferson Charge, Williams Co., O., where he remained one year, and also took charge of some congregations in Miami and Kosciusko counties, Ind., and in their midst ended his labors, Aug. 17, 1875. He was a fervent, zealous laborer. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, v, 187.

Burks, NAPOLEON W., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Greensboro, Ky., Oct. 8, 1809. He embraced religion in Texas in 1843, was licensed to preach in 1844, and in 1845 joined the East Texas Conference. He continued to fill the appointments assigned him as circuit and station preacher, presiding elder and president of Fowler Institute, until 1871, when he became superannuated, a relation which he held to the close of his life, Oct. 15, 1873. Mr. Burks was a man of fair literary attainments, an excellent and useful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 894.

Burlamaqui, FABRICE, a Swiss pastor and scholar, was born at Geneva in 1626. He served successively the Church of Geneva and that of Grenoble. He was well versed in Oriental languages and literature. He died in Geneva in 1693. He wrote several anonymous theological works: Sermon fait au Jour du Jeûne Célébre par les Eglises Réformées du Dauphiné (Geneva, 1664);—Catechisme sur les Controverses avec l'Eglise Romaine (1668);—Synopsis Theologicæ et Speciatim Economiæ Fœderum Dei (ibid. 1678);—Considérations Servant de Réponse au Cardinal Spinola, in French and Latin (ibid. 1680). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Burleson, RICHARD BYRD, LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born near Decatur, Ala., about 1820. He united with the Church in 1839; spent three years in Nashville University, Tenn.; was licensed by the first Baptist Church in Nashville in 1841, and ordained as pastor of the Church in Athens, Ala., in November, 1842; remained there till 1845, and then was transferred to the Church at Tusculumbia, where he continued till 1849, when he became president of Moulton Female Institute. In 1855 he removed to Austin, Tex., where he was pastor, and also had charge of a select female school. He was chosen professor of natural philosophy in Baylor University in 1857, and vice-president and professor of natural science in Waco University in 1861, with which institution he was connected eighteen years. He died at Waco, Dec. 21, 1879. He is said to have been "a preacher of distinguished ability, and a teacher eminently qualified for his work." See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 163. (J. C. S.)

Burlet, STEPHEN, a German martyr, was burned at Arras in 1534 for reading the Scriptures. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 397.

Burley, James, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Leeds, Yorkshire. He was converted in youth; admitted into the travelling connection in 1796; travelled twenty-three circuits; became a supernumerary at Wells in 1833; and died Nov. 12, 1846. He was much esteemed.

Burley, Walter, an early English secular priest, or probably a Franciscan monk, was born in 1275. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and afterwards studied at Paris. On his return to England he dissented from Duns Scotus. He was preceptor to king Edward III about 1337. He wrote Commentaries on the Sentences, and a large number of philosophical treatises, only a part of which have been published. See Mosheim, Hist. of the Church, bk. iii, cent. xiv, pt. ii, ch. ii.

Burlingame, Arnold G., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Norwich, N. Y., Aug. 27, 1808. He was converted in 1825; made a class-leader at the age of nineteen; licensed to exhort in 1833, to preach in 1834, and in 1836 entered the Oneida Conference. After serving the Church twenty-two years, failing health necessitated his superannuation, and he removed west and located within the bounds of the Rock River Conference, wherein, whenever able, he served as supply until 1868, when he was called to the charge of the Southern Tier Orphan Asylum, Elmira, N. Y., which position he held until his death, in 1871 or 1872. He was a most excellent man and a useful preacher. Over fifteen hundred were brought to Christ through his labors. He was characterized by amiability, prudence, and inflexible integrity. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 53.

Burlingame, James, a minister of the so-called Christian denomination, was born at Sterling, Conn., May 13, 1794. His opportunities for acquiring an education were of a limited character. When he reached the age of seventeen he was converted, and when twenty-one began to preach. About the time of his baptism, in 1812, a Church had been formed in the west section of the town of Coventry, R. I., where there had been no religious reformation for thirty years. To this Church, after it had passed through various fortunes, Mr. Burlingame was called to be pastor in 1824, having been ordained April 1, 1821. His ministry with this Church continued for half a century. He died at the residence of his son, in Boston, Aug. 20, 1881. During his long ministry he performed a large amount of itinerant labor, his parish including a hundred square miles. He had a large frame and great physical endurance. He also travelled and preached through all the New England States, more or less in the Middle States, and made two preaching tours through Ohio, the early days of the anti-slavery movement he went to Virginia and the Carolinas for the double purpose of visiting the churches and learning for himself the condition of the slaves. His record as an advocate of temperance is worthy of honorable mention. See Providence Journal, Oct. 4, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Burlingame, Masey Whipple, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Gloucester, R. I., May 4, 1805. When very young he united with the Church in his native town. His education he acquired at Killingly, Conn., and Wilbraham, Mass. In May, 1828, he was licensed, and he was ordained in 1829. With his early labors as a preacher he combined teaching. Most of his life was spent in the neighborhood of Gloucester. In 1830 he became pastor of the Church in Blackstone (Waterford), Mass., where he remained sixteen years. He was subsequently pastor for brief periods in several churches in the western part of Rhode Island, all in the vicinity of his native place; also of churches in New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. From 1844 to 1859 he was a corporator of the Free-will Baptist Printing Establishment, the publishing-house of the denomination. His death occurred at Georgiaville, R. I., March 4, 1879. See R. I. Biographical Cyclop. p. 335. (J. C. S.)

Burlingame, Waterman, a Baptist minister, was born in Pitcher, N. Y., in 1805. He pursued his studies at the Hamilton Literary and Theological Institution, and graduated at the Newton Theological Institution in 1836. He was ordained pastor of the Baptist Church in Hingham, Mass., Sept. 29, 1836, where he remained three years; was pastor of the Church at Mendon, N. Y., four years; and was in Buffalo four years. He died in Baltimore, Md., Feb. 11, 1868. (J. C. S.)

Burlingham, Charles D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Greenfield, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1810. He emigrated to the western part of the state with his parents when quite young; had very limited educational advantages, yet prepared himself for school-teaching, and while employed in that profession at Portageville in 1831 he experienced religion. In 1840 he entered the Genesee (now Western New York) Conference, in which he continued with zeal and fidelity to the day of his death, Sept. 30, 1874. Mr. Burlingham was a man of superior talents, culture and piety; an able writer and preacher, an excellent pastor, and an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1875, p. 159.

Burlingham, Richard, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in 1779. He labored as a minister for nearly thirty years, and was much beloved and highly esteemed by all who knew him. He died Oct. 11, 1840. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1841, p. 10.

Burlingame, Charles, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in West Greenwich, R. I., in 1801. He removed with his parents to Willett, N. Y., in 1809; was converted in 1822; began exhorting in 1826; received license to preach in 1828; was ordained local deacon in 1834; and in 1836 entered the Oneida Conference. In 1842 he was obliged to relinquish active work because of hemorrhage of the lungs, and he died May 30, 1843. Mr. Burlingame was the means of bringing hundreds into the Church. His character was exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 452.

Burls, Robert, an English Congregational minister, was born at Thorney, Herts, Oct. 8, 1792; and through the teaching and example of his wise and pious mother was early brought to Christ. He received his collegiate training at Wymondley College, and in 1820 was ordained pastor at Maldon, Essex, where he labored until his death, June 8, 1866. Mr. Burls was intellectually independent, religiously conservative, essentially evangelical, and thoroughly practical. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1867, p. 275.

Burlugay, Jean, a French priest and doctor in theology, was born at Paris in 1624. He died in 1702, having edited the Breviary of Sens, published in 1702. He also assisted Tillemont in the composition of his Mémoires pour l'Histoire Ecclésiastique.

Burmese Version of the Scriptures. The Burmese, it has been conjectured, was originally a dialect of the Chinese family of languages, and was moulded into its present form by admixture with the Pali. It numbers many dialects, some say, as many as eighteen. The first attempt to procure a complete version in this language was made by the Baptist missionaries at Serampore. About the year 1807 Felix Carey, the son of Dr. Carey, settled as a missionary in Burmah; and, in conjunction with Mr. Chater, he produced a translation of two or three of the Gospels. In 1815 the Gospel of St. Matthew was printed by them in Serampore; but this version proved very imperfect. In 1816 Dr. Adoniram Judson, in connection with Mr. Hough, recommenced the version; and in 1817 the Gospel of St. Matthew was printed at Rangoon, as introductory to the entire New Test. The first complete version of the New Test. was issued from the press in December, 1832; and in 1834 Dr. Judson completed the translation of the Old Test. (a second edition of which appeared in 1840). In 1837 a second and much-improved edition of the New Test. was printed by the American Baptist missionaries established at Maulmein. The language has been treated by Judson, Burmese and English Dictionary (Maulmein, 1826, 1832), also Grammar of the Burmese Language (Rangoon, 1866); Latter, Burmese Grammar (Calcutta, 1845). See Bible of Every Land, p. 7 sq. (B. P.)

Burnaby, Thomas, A.M., an English divine, was born in 1761. He graduated from the university of Cambridge in 1784, eventually became vicar of St. Margaret's, Leicester, and rector of Misterton, and was also one of the magistrates of the county. He died, after a short illness, Feb. 1, 1830. Mr. Burnaby was highly esteemed and beloved by all who knew him. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, March, 1830, p. 197.

Burnap, Jacob, a Congregational minister, was born in Reading, Mass., Nov. 2, 1748, and graduated from Harvard College in 1770. Having pursued his theological studies under the direction of Rev. Thomas Haven, of Reading, he was ordained pastor of the church in Merrimac, N. H., Oct. 14, 1772. His ministry extended over a period of nearly fifty years, and closed with his death, Dec. 26, 1821. He published a number of Discourses on various topics, especially the Election Sermon for 1801, a Thanksgiving Sermon, 1811, and a Sermon on the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Landing of the Pilgrims, Dec. 20, 1820. See Farmer, Collect. ii, 76-79; Allen, Amer. Biog. (J. C. S.)

Burnell, Robert, an English prelate of the 13th century, son of lord Robert Burnell, of Acton-Burnell Castle, Shropshire, was by Edward I preferred bishop of Bath and Wells, and treasurer, and then chancellor of England. He was well versed in Welsh affairs; and that he might the more effectually attend to them, caused the court of chancery to be kept at Bristol. He acquired great wealth, wherewith he rebuilt his paternal castle. He also built (for his successors in the bishopric) the Hall at Wells. He died in Scotland, where he was attending to some business of the king, and was buried in his own cathedral, in 1292. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 57.

Burnet, Alexander, a Scottish prelate, was a parochial minister, of the family of Barns, born in 1614, and became chaplain to the great earl of Traquair. He had a rectory in Kent; but was expelled from it, upon the score of loyalty, in 1650. After this he went to England and served king Charles II, becoming chaplain to general Rutherford, earl of Teviot. He was made bishop of Aberdeen in 1662, and in 1663 was translated to the see of St. Andrews, where he died, Aug. 22, 1684. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 42.

Burnet, Eleazar, a Presbyterian minister, graduated at Princeton College in 1799. He was licensed by the presbytery of New York in 1804; was ordained and installed at Newburgh Nov. 20, 1805; and died at New Brunswick, N. J., Nov. 22, 1806. Mr. Burnet was distinguished for a quiet, amiable, and devout spirit. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 396; Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Burnet, Gilbert (1), an English clergyman, son of bishop Gilbert Burnet, was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and at Leyden. He became chaplain to George I, and died early in life, about 1720. His literary works embrace an abridgment of his father's History of the Reformation (1719):—The Generation of the Son of God (1720):—and some controversial pieces and contributions to various periodicals. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burnet, Gilbert (2), an English clergyman, was born about 1698; became vicar of Coggeshall, Essex, then minister of St. James's, Clerkenwell; and died in 1746. He abridged the Boyle Lectures (3 vols. fol.) to 4 vols. 8vo (Lond. 1737), and published Practical Sermons (ibid. 1747, 2 vols.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burnet, John (1), a Scotch Baptist minister, was born at Annan, on the borders of Scotland, Jan. 19, 1778. Early in life he became a member of the Independent Church in Blackburn, in which place he resided; not long after he joined the Baptist Church in Preston. He removed to Lytham in 1819. For several years before this he had preached, more or less, in villages; and now became pastor of the Church in his new home. This position he occupied thirty-one years. His death took place Jan. 11, 1850. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1850, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Burnet, John (2), a young Methodist preacher of Ireland, joined the Conference in 1787, and died the next year. See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Burnet, John (3), an English Congregational minister, was born in Perth, Scotland, April 13, 1789, of Highland ancestry. He received his early education in the high-school in that city; and was remarkable for physical energy and vigor, great independence of character, and a thirst for knowledge on every subject within his reach. He was converted early in life. In 1815 he left Perth and went to Dublin; thence he proceeded to Cork, where he labored fifteen years in the interest of the Irish Evangelical Society. In 1830 he became pastor of the Church in Camberwell, where he continued till his death, June 10, 1862. Mr. Burnet was a thoroughly devoted minister, a very popular platform speaker, and a powerful advocate of the civil and religious liberties of the people. While in Ireland, he published the substance of some lectures on The Deity of Christ, and a tract on The Authority of Pastors in the Church, with Remarks on the Office of Deacons. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1863, p. 214.

Burnet, Mathias, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, studied theology with Dr. Witherspoon, and was ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Jamaica, L. I., by the presbytery of New York, in April, 1775. Here he exercised his ministry during the whole of the Revolutionary War. He left Jamaica in 1785, and was settled over a Congregational Church in Norwalk, Conn., where he remained until his death, June 30, 1806. He published an Election Sermon, 1803, and two Sermons, one in the second and the other in the third volume of the American Preacher (1791). See Alexander, Princeton College in the 18th Century.

Burnet, Thomas, D.D., an English clergyman, was educated at Oxford, and became rector of West Kingston, Wilts, and prebendary of Sarum. He died in 1750, leaving, among other works, an answer to Tindal's Christianity as Old as the Creation. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burnett, George, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pittsylvania County, Va., Dec. 8, 1789. He received an early religious training; experienced conversion in his youth; and in 1817 entered the Virginia Conference, wherein he labored faithfully until his death, Sept. 15, 1819. Mr. Burnett led an exemplary life, and died triumphantly. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1820, p. 342.

Burnett, Hiram, a Baptist minister, was born in Georgia, Feb. 19, 1799. His parents moved, when he was ten years of age, to Winchester, O., where he spent a few years. His conversion took place in early manhood, and he was ordained in 1832. For four years he was pastor of the Church in Bethel, O., from which place he removed to Winchester, where, finding a new church, he built up a strong religious society. He performed much missionary work in Scioto, Highland, and Pike counties, preaching the Gospel in schoolhouses, private houses, and out of doors, his labors being greatly blessed. In the fall of 1842 he removed to Mt. Pleasant, Ia., when its population was only about three hundred. In due time a Baptist Church was formed, of which he was the pastor for twelve years. A part of this time he preached to Pisgah Church, in Des Moines Co. He also organized the Church at Jefferson. Subsequently he aided in the establishment of several other churches. He continued to serve his Master down to the close of his long life, his death occurring at Mt. Pleasant, Jan. 8, 1881. He was everywhere known by the affectionate appellation of "Father Burnett;" and was, in all the vicinity in which he lived, regarded with great love and respect. See Chicago Standard, Feb. 3, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Burney, Charles, Jr., D.D., LL.D., an English clergyman, was born at Lynn, Norfolk, in 1757, and educated at the Charterhouse and at Caius College, Cambridge. He was for some time engaged in an academy at Ilhigate, and afterwards became assistant to Dr. Rose at Chiswick. From 1783 to 1800 he was a contributor of classical articles to the Monthly Review; and for two or three years was editor of the London Magazine. He died in 1817. His published works are of interest, chiefly to the literary critic. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burney, Richard, an English clergyman of the 17th century, and rector of St. Peter's, Canterbury, published a work on The Restoration of King Charles II. in eight sermons (Lond. 1660). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burnham, Abraham, a Congregational minister, was born at Dunbarton, N. H., April 9, 1829. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1852; and taught in the academies at Haverhill, N. H., Danvers, Mass., Newmarket, and Durham, N. H. In 1857 he graduated from Andover Theological Seminary; was ordained pastor Sept. 30, 1857, at East Haverhill, Mass., remaining until May, 1865; from August, 1865, to April, 1872, was acting pastor in Hookset, N. H.; from 1872 to 1878, preached in East Concord; and from 1878 ministered in West Stewartstown until his death, March 18, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 13.

Burnham, Amos Wood, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Dunbarton, N. H., Aug. 1, 1791. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1815, and from the Theological Seminary at Andover in 1818. He was the first principal of the Blanchard Academy at Pembroke, N. H. In 1821 he was ordained pastor of the First Congregational Church in Rindge, the first and the only place in which he preached as pastor, and the official relation was dissolved at his own urgent request at the close of the forty-sixth year of his ministry. He died at Keene, April 9, 1871. As a scholar he was accurate, and his style, whether in speech or in print, was a model of purity and precision. As a preacher, he was earnest, logical, and simple. His sermons were instructive and systematically arranged. See Cong. Quarterly, 1871, p. 443.

Burnham, Asa, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born Aug. 9, 1789. He was converted at fifteen, and commenced his labors as a preacher in New Hampshire in 1809. After preaching in various places until 1820, he settled in Sebec, Me., where he resided for twenty years, and saw several revivals of religion during his ministry in that place. His next settlement was in Montville, where he remained some four years, at the end of which period he removed to Garland. While residing here with a widowed daughter, he preached half the time in Exeter. His service continued some three years. His death, which was very sudden, took place at Garland, Aug. 9, 1852. It is said of him that, "amid the defections, delusions, and secessions around him, he was unmoved as a rock. His sermons were instructive and practical, and few men possessed a more untarnished character." See Free-will Baptist Register, 1854, p. 81, 82. (J. C. S.)

Burnham, Edwin Otway, a Congregational minister, was born at Ghent, Ky., in 1824. He graduated at Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1852, and was a student at Union Theological Seminary for three years. From 1855 to 1856 he was a teacher at Pennington, N. J. In 1858 he was ordained, after having been stated supply at Columbus, Iowa, in 1856, and at Wilton, Minn., in 1857. At Tivoli he also served as stated supply. From 1871 to 1873 he was an invalid, in California. He died at Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 1, 1873. See Gen. Cat. of Union Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 74.

Burnham, Jesse, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Lee, N. H., in 1777. He was converted in early life, and in 1806 moved into the forests of Maine, and, seeing the spiritual destitution which everywhere prevailed, he felt impressed that it was his duty to preach the Gospel to the people. For many years he labored as an evangelist, like John the Baptist, "crying in the wilderness." In 1841 he removed to the West, and continued to perform the kind of work for which he seems to have been raised up by Providence, on the prairies of Illinois and Wisconsin. The first year of his labors there, with the assistance of a brother in the ministry, he organized the first quarterly meeting of his denomination in Wisconsin. After a long life of devotion to his work, he died in Janesville, Dec. 5, 1863. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1864, p. 91. (J. C. S.)

Burnham, Samuel, a Congregational layman and editor, was born at Rindge, N. H., Feb. 21, 1833. His father was Rev. Amos W. Burnham, minister at Rindge from youth to old age. Samuel was educated at New Ipswich and Francistown, and entered Williams College in 1851. On account of impaired health, he was compelled to retire in his junior year, and it was not until 1868 that he recovered. On leaving college, he went South; returned to Rindge, where he taught for a time, and then assumed charge of the high-school in Amherst. Soon relinquishing this post, he went to Boston in 1857, and was engaged in literary occupations. He died in Cambridge, Mass., June 22, 1873. As a writer he developed some poetic power, but perhaps excelled in critical analysis. He assisted in the preparation for the press of Gen. Wm. H. Sumner's History of East Boston. Among other works of this nature, he prepared the sketches of Gov. Andrew and Charles Sumner for the work entitled Massachusetts in the War, and also various articles for Appleton's Cyclopædia. His last labor, probably, was the supervision of the publication of Sumner's Speeches, under the direction of Sumner himself. His chief literary work was in connection with various periodicals. At the time of his death he was one of the editors of the Congregational Quarterly, and for a year and a half was connected editorially with the Congregationalist. After leaving this journal, he was engaged on the Watchman and Reflector as its literary editor. He was distinguished for his accurate literary taste, which he exhibited in his published criticisms. See Cong. Quarterly, 1874, p. 2.

Burnier, Louis, a Swiss Protestant theologian, was born at Lutry, Jan. 27, 1795. Having completed his theological course at Lausanne, he was ordained in 1807. He preached at several places in the canton of Vaud. During the first years of his ministry the separation in the national Church took place, and although he regretted this very much, yet he extended the hand of fellowship to his dissenting brethren, and labored with them in the translation of the New Test. and in other missionary works. He founded the Revue Britannique Religieuse and the Discussion Publique sur la Liberté Religieuse et le Gouvernement de l'Eglise, in which he wrote in defense of liberty and equality of religious exercises. He also agitated the question of having the ecclesiastical ordinances revised on the basis of allowing the laity to participate in ecclesiastical affairs. In 1839 the Swiss Confession was abolished, and in 1841 Burnier resigned his pastorate. In 1845 he became one of the first founders of the Free Church, and he died Jan. 14, 1873. He wrote, Études Élémentaires et Progressives de la Parole de Dieu (2d ed. Paris, 1862, 4 vols.):—Instructions et Exhortations Pastorales (Lausanne, 1843):—Esquisses Évangéliques (1858, 3 vols.):—Histoire Littéraire de l'Éducation (1864, 2 vols.). His main work, however, is La Version du N. T. dite de Lausanne, son Histoire et ses Critiques (1866):—Le Mots du N. T. (1871). See Chrétien Évangélique, 1873, p. 313-323, 563-565; Ruffet, in Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Burning AS A PUNISHMENT. The rabbins assert that burning among the Jews consisted in pouring melted lead down the throat; and Lewis, in his Origines Hebræiques, gives the following account of the process: "They set the malefactor in dung up to the knees, and then tied a towel about his neck, which was drawn by the two witnesses till they made his mouth gape, into which they poured melted lead down his throat, which consumed the bowels." Such a cruel mode of execution is at variance with the humane usages of the Hebrews. The practice of burning alive, however, by throwing the criminal into a furnace of fire, is well known to have been common among Oriental nations; and a remarkable example is given in the case of the three companions of Daniel. Another instance is referred to in Jer. xxix, 22. The same barbarity appears to have been not uncommon in the East as late as the 17th century. The Romans inflicted the punishment of burning upon the early Christians in various forms. See NERO. Sometimes they were fixed to a stake over a slow fire, until the flesh was consumed from the bones; at other times they were clothed in coats fitted close to the person, besmeared with pitch, sulphur, wax, or some other inflammable substance, and being fastened to a stake, with a cord tied round the chin to keep the head in an erect position, fire was applied, and the martyr expired amid the flames. Another form of this horrid punishment, especially in papal times, was to fix the Christian, in a sitting posture, on an iron chair red-hot from a furnace, and so constructed that its arms enclosed the body of the victim. On other occasions the chair was gradually heated by a slow fire kept burning beneath it. See PERSECUTIONS.

Burning of Widows is a strange and horrible custom among the inhabitants of India, which has only been forbidden by the English law since 1827, but has never been entirely rooted out. It is contended that the custom was instituted upon the poisoning of a Brahmin by his wife, wherefore all wives must follow their husbands into the grave. It is not at all probable, however, that so small an affair should be the cause for so atrocious a practice. To sacrifice one's self is, in the religion of India, the highest attainable merit which a member, no longer of profit or advantage to men, can acquire. Now, the widow is such a disadvantageous person; inasmuch as for marriage, maidenhood of the bride is an essential condition; and as a widow is unable to marry again, she is unprofitable as far as the increase of the race goes, and she is, further, a burden to her family. Her sacrifice of herself, however, is not strictly required, provided any one is found willing to marry her. Time has made this custom sacred, so that a woman refusing to follow her husband to the grave is despised, cast out of society, and driven into the woods, where she may repent of her sin, by continually drinking out of the skull of her departed husband, and, further, by eating everything, even the most abominable food, which may be thrown to her. See SUTTEE.

Burnouf, Eugène, a French Orientalist, was born at Paris, April 8, 1801, and died May 28, 1852. Through his researches he greatly promoted the knowledge of ancient religions in the first half of our century. In his Essai sur le Pâli ou Langue Sacrée de la Presqu'île au Delà du Gange (1826), he showed, in a most complete and definite manner, that this language, which was regarded as sacred among the Buddhists of Ceylon, Burmah, Siam, etc., was nothing but an offshoot of the Sanscrit. His greatest work, however, was his deciphering of the Zend language (Commentaire sur le Yagna, 1833). His other great work is his Introduction à l'Histoire du Bouddhisme Indien (1844). See Notice sur les Travaux de M. Eugène Burnouf, in Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire's Introduction au Bouddhisme (Paris, 1876); Verne, in Lichtenberger's Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. (B. P.)

Burns, David, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ferrisburgh, Vt., July 1, 1819. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and in 1833 entered the Ohio Conference. In 1836, on the formation of the Michigan Conference, he became a member of it. In 1842 he located for a better literary preparation, and in 1845 resumed his place in the active ranks. He died July 28, 1877. Mr. Burns possessed a muscular, robust frame, which in his young manhood he had developed at his occupation as blacksmith. He also had high intellectual endowments. He was naturally cheerful, thoroughly pious, and energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 105.

Burns, David E., a Baptist minister, was born near Evansville, Ind., in 1822, and spent the younger part of his life in a region about as wild as any portion of the West. His father died when he was young, and the care of the family devolved largely on him. Of course, his early education was greatly neglected. When he was twenty years of age he was converted, and thenceforward his life was completely changed. He began at once to preach, and his early efforts were wonderfully effective. Soon he was set apart to the work of the ministry, and became pastor of the Church in Henderson, Ky., then of the Church in Russellville, from which place he went to Paducah, where he remained three years, the most popular preacher in all that region. In 1850 he became pastor of the Beal Street Church in Memphis, Tenn., the same popularity following him, as also in his next pastorate in Jackson, Miss. For several years he had charge of the Church in Canton, and was also the owner of a valuable plantation near that place. The war swept away all his property. In 1866 he was called to the Coliseum Place Church in New Orleans, from which place he went back to his former church in Memphis, where he died in November, 1870. See Borum, Sketches of Tennessee Ministers, p. 31-40. (J. C. S.)

Burns, Islay, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was a native of Scotland. He became the successor of McCheney at St. Peter's, Dundee, and was, a few years afterwards, translated to the professorship of theology in Glasgow Free College. He died at Hillhead, Glasgow, May 20, 1872. See Presbyterianism, June 15, 1872.

Burns, Jabez, a Baptist minister, was born in Oldham, Lancashire, England, Dec. 18, 1805. He was educated at Chester and Orlham, joined the Methodist New Connection early in life, and in 1830 became minister of the United Christian Church at Perth. In 1835 he went to London and took charge of the General Baptist congregation in New Church Street. He was one of the earliest members of the Evangelical Alliance, taking his place in the first conferences held in Liverpool, London, Edinburgh, and Birmingham. In 1847 he was appointed by the Annual Association of General Baptists one of the deputation to the Triennial Conference of the Free-will Baptists in the United States. He died in London, Jan. 28, 1876. Mr. Burns was the author of Marriage Gift Book;—Life of Mrs. Fletcher;—Tracts and Small Treatises on Baptism;—The Pulpit Cyclopædia;—Hints to Church-members;—and A Few Words to Religious Inquirers. Also, for some time previous to his death, he had been editor of the Temperance Journal and the Preacher's Magazine. See Appleton's Annual Cyclopædia, 1876, p. 630.

Burns, James D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born at Edinburgh in 1823, and educated there. In 1845 he became pastor at Dunblane, but in 1847 went to the Madeiras for his health, and preached there until 1853, when he returned and settled in Hampstead. He died in 1864, leaving several poems.

Burns, Jeremiah, a Baptist minister, was born in South Carolina, Oct. 19, 1779. He united with the Church in 1802, and was ordained not long after. Much of his early life as a preacher was given to itinerant work. After laboring more than twenty-five years in South Carolina and Alabama, he moved in 1831 to Fayette County, Tenn. He interested himself in ministerial education, and took a prominent part in the establishment of an education society which was formed in Brownsville, Tenn., in 1835. He is represented as having been an able preacher, with a sweet, musical voice, and could not be excelled as an exhorter. He died near Germantown, Shelby Co., Tenn., January, 1861. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Ministers, p. 95-98. (J. C. S.)

Burns, Robert, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in South Carolina, April 10, 1794. He spent his youth in Warren County, O.; acquired a substantial education by diligent personal effort; experienced religion in his seventeenth year; immediately began exercising his gifts in singing, praying, and exhorting; received license to preach in his twenty-second year; and soon after was sent to labor on Paint Creek Circuit, where he began his active, useful itinerant life. In 1824 he went into the wilderness of Indiana, and proclaimed salvation in the log cabins to a people hungry for the Gospel. In 1826 he was admitted into the Illinois Conference, wherein he continued to labor with great zeal and fidelity until his strong constitution gave way, and in 1848 he was obliged to become superannuate, which relation he held until his death, Oct. 2, 1877. As a preacher, Mr. Burns was clear, pointed, and successful; as a Christian, thoroughly consecrated. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 53.

Burns, Silas, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Fairmont, Va., Jan. 3, 1828. He joined the Church in 1848, and in 1851 entered the West Virginia Conference, in which he served with zeal and fidelity to the close of his life, Dec. 25, 1854. Mr. Burns was exemplary in his piety alike at home and abroad; in the pulpit, clear, practical, and remarkably zealous. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1855, p. 569.

Burns, William Chalmers, A.M., a missionary to China from the English Presbyterian Church, was born in Scotland in 1815. He was converted at the age of seventeen; studied at the Universities of Aberdeen and Glasgow; and in 1839 entered upon his ministry at Dundee, where he wielded an influence over the masses unparalleled since the days of Whitefield and Wesley. In 1841 and 1842 he served the Church in Edinburgh; afterwards spent two years travelling and preaching in British North America, and on returning offered himself to the Free Church Mission for India, but they not being able to send him he embarked for China under the auspices of the English Presbyterian Church, in 1847. Soon he became entirely familiar with the Chinese language. Mr. Burns labored six years in China before he had a single convert to Christianity. But in 1854 a new era dawned upon his career. Great interest was awakened in the neighborhood of Amoy, and from thence much success attended his labors. In 1859 he removed to Fuh-Chow; four years later to Peking, and in 1867 to Nieu Chwang, on the confines of Manchooia, where at the close of the year he was seized with fever, which soon terminated his valuable life. Mr. Burns was an unmarried missionary, a man of one object, the salvation of his fellow-men. See Christian Observer, Aug. 1870, p. 601; and Memoir by Rev. Islay Burns (Lond. 1870).

Burns, William Hamilton, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Stirlingshire, Scotland, July 15, 1779. He was educated in the University of Edinburgh. In 1799 he was licensed by the Strainraer Presbytery, and stationed at Dun, where he discharged his duties faithfully for twenty-one years. In 1820 he was called to the parish of Kilsyth. He died May 8, 1859. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1860, p. 263.

Burnyeat, John, an eminent English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Crabtreebeck, in the parish of Loweswater, Cumberland, about 1630. He was brought to embrace the views of the Friends in 1655, through the labors of George Fox, and at once began to be persecuted on account of his religious opinions. For four years he lived in comparative seclusion, attending to his secular business and making himself useful in the meetings of Friends. He visited several villages, and, entering on the Sabbath, during divine service, what he calls "bell-house," "worship-house," "steeple-house," etc., he interrupted the services with his "testimony." He was finally arrested and thrown into the common jail in Carlisle, where he was a pris-over twenty-three weeks. Soon after being released, he made a religious tour through some parts of Scotland, and the next year, 1659, through Ireland, having for his companion Robert Lodge, an English minister. At Londonderry he was driven out of the city, by the mayor's orders. During this trip, which lasted a year, he was several times in prison. Early in 1662 he left his home to go to London, to consult George Fox and some of the elders as to whether it was his duty to go to America. On his way back from London he was arrested at Ripon for refusing to take the oath of allegiance and supremacy; as he could not conscientiously take any oath. His imprisonment continued for fourteen weeks. After his return home, he remained there for most of the time until July, 1664, when he embarked at Galway for Barbadoes, where he remained three or four months, and then took ship for Maryland, landing there in February, 1665. He remained in America for about two years, travelling extensively, and visiting the churches of his denomination in different sections of the country. He spent the summer of that year in Barbadoes, and returned home in the fall. His ministry for the next few years was exercised in various parts of Great Britain. In 1670, in company with William Simpson, he again crossed the ocean, and, having spent six months in Barbadoes, he sailed for America, and arrived in New York Feb. 27, 1671. After spending some time in New England, he visited the middle and southern sections of the country. During a part of this tour he had for his companion George Fox. He returned to Ireland in 1673. From this date to the close of his life he was engaged in his ministerial work, often amid severe hardships and trials. His death took place July 11, 1790. A large number of his epistles, etc., may be found in the Life of John Burnyeat, in Friends' Library, xi, 119, 188, 345-430. 875. (J. C. S.)

Buronzo del Signore, CARLO LUDOVICO, an Italian prelate, was born at Vercelli, Oct. 23, 1731. He studied at Turin, and was made, at the age of twenty-one, a canon of the Church of Vercelli. Three years after he became vicar-general of the diocese. He was elevated to the see of Aquis in 1784, in 1791 was translated to Novarra, and in 1797 to the archbishopric of Turin. He resigned his see and retired to Vercelli, where he died, Oct. 22, 1806. He edited the works of Atto, bishop of Vercelli in the 10th century, with a preface and commentary, entitled Attonis S. Vercellensis Eccl. Ep. Opera, etc. (Vercelli, 1768, fol.). See Biog. Universelle, vi, 342; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Burpee, RICHARD, a Baptist minister, was born in York County, N. B. He was for a short time pastor at St. Andrew's; graduated at Acadia College in 1844, and in 1845 went out to Burmah under the auspices of the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. His health soon became so enfeebled that he returned home in January, 1850. He proceeded to Florida, where he died, Feb. 25, 1853. He was the first missionary sent by the Baptists from the maritime provinces to the foreign field. See Bill, Hist. of Baptists in the Maritime Provinces, p. 277-280.

Burpo, THOMAS, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in North Carolina, Sept. 7, 1804. He was converted in 1820; and in 1823 entered the Tennessee Conference, and was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. After filling various appointments with success his health failed, and in 1837 he located. In 1847 he was admitted into the Alabama Conference, and continued efficient until his decease, in January, 1856. Mr. Burpo was an unpretending, modest, Christian gentleman, faithful in all the relations of life, and full of the Holy Spirit. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1856, p. 707.

Burr, Bradley L., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Liberty, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1817. He was considered an upright, moral youth in early life; experienced conversion in 1839; immediately began exercising his gifts in prayer and exhortation; but meeting discouragements, his zeal abated and he became a backslider. In 1840 he was reclaimed, and licensed to exhort. In 1847 he received license to preach, and in 1851 entered the New York Conference, and in it labored until his last sickness, which soon terminated in his death, Nov. 16, 1858. Mr. Burr possessed a limited education, but a naturally good mind; was indefatigable in labor, emphatically a revivalist, and a great builder-up of the Church. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1859, p. 151.

Burr, Erastus Hamilton, a Baptist minister, was born at Preble, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1820, and was a graduate from Madison University in 1849. He pursued his theological studies at the Rochester Seminary, where he graduated in 1851. His ordination took place at Massillon, O., Jan. 7, 1852, where he was pastor in 1851 and 1852. His next pastorate was at Durhamville, N. Y., until 1854. He died at Homer, March 11, 1857. See Gen. Cat. of Rochester Theol. Sem. p. 7. (J. C. S.)

Burr, Isaac, a Congregational minister, was born in 1698. He graduated at Yale College in 1717; was ordained minister of the Church in Worcester, Mass., Oct. 13, 1725; was dismissed by an ecclesiastical council in November, 1744; then removed to Windsor, Vt.; and died in 1751. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 424.

Burr, Jonathan Kelsey, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Middletown, Conn., Sept. 21, 1825. He was converted when but thirteen years old, and in 1845 graduated from Wesleyan University at Middletown. After his graduation, he taught for a time in the Adelpian Academy, Mass., and in 1846 became a student in Union Theological Seminary in New York city. In 1847 he preached on Clinton Circuit, N. J., and in 1848 was received on trial in New Jersey Conference, and appointed junior preacher on the Rome and Wantage Circuit. His subsequent appointments were as follows: 1849-50, Milford, Pa.; 1851-52, Orange, N. J.; 1853-54, Union and Burlington; 1855-56, Hoboken; 1857-58, Union Street, Trenton. In 1858 he was transferred to Newark Conference, and stationed at Clinton Street, Newark; 1860-61, Orange (second time); 1862-63, Market Street, Paterson; 1864-66, Hoboken (second time); 1867-69, Central Church, Newark; 1870-72, Morristown; 1873, Hoboken (third time); 1874-76, Madison; 1877-78, Montclair. He was a member of the General Conference of 1872; was for a short time professor of Hebrew in Drew Theological Seminary, though at the same time retaining his pastoral connection with Central Church, Newark; and was a member of the American Committee on the Revised New Test., attending its meetings faithfully, and doing his full share of the work even after sickness had made its inroads upon him. In 1873 he became very ill, but still resisted the steady encroachments of disease, retaining an effective relation to Conference until 1879, when he became supernumerary. For nine years he struggled heroically against the approach of death, not that he feared to die, but because he wished to live to continue his life-work for the Church. So persistent was he in his labor, that even after his health failed he supervised the passage through the press of his Commentary on the Book of Job. He died in Trenton, April 24, 1882. He was an excellent preacher, an admirable pastor, and a perfect gentleman. His reading was extensive and accurate, and his Christian character lovely. See (N. Y.) Christian Advocate, June 1, 1882; Alumni Record of West. Univ. s. a. 1845.

Burrell, John Ilgen, a Lutheran minister, was born in Centre County, Pa. (near Bellefonte), Feb. 5, 1829. He entered the preparatory department Pennsylvania College in 1849, and graduated in 1855. For two years he was principal of an academy in Aaronsburg, and then was appointed superintendent of schools for Centre County until 1860. For a time he taught in Bellefonte. Having studied law, he was admitted to the bar in 1858, and formed a partnership with Robert G. Durham. Turning to the ministry, he studied theology under Rev. D. Moser, of Pine Grove Mills, and was licensed to preach in 1860. During fifteen years following he was pastor of the Stone Church, Northampton County. After 1861 this church was known as St. Paul's. Mr. Burrell founded two churches—one at Martin's Creek, the other at Ackermansville. Though still pastor of St. Paul's, he organized, in 1869, a select classical school. From 1875 until his death he was pastor of St. Matthew's English Lutheran Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. From 1874 to 1877 he was a trustee of Pennsylvania College. He died Jan. 21, 1877. See Penn. Coll. Book, 1882, p. 247; Luth. Observer, Feb. 2, 1877.

Burrell, Samuel, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Edmonton, Middlesex, Aug. 7, 1820. He was converted at the age of seventeen; spent three years at the Richmond Theological Institution; was sent in 1846 to Jamaica; labored there for fourteen years; returned to England and proved himself, in several home circuits, a faithful minister. He died at Thetford, May 13, 1867. Mr. Burrell was of a kind and gentle spirit. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1867, p. 25.

Burriburri, among the negroes of New Guinea, is the name given to God, the Creator.

Burritt, Elihu (often styled "The Learned Blacksmith"), a distinguished philologist and philanthropist, was born at New Britain, Conn., Dec. 8, 1811. His father was a shoemaker, and had in all ten children, of whom Elihu was the youngest. He was sent to the public school, and, although apprenticed to a blacksmith, had already acquired a taste for reading in his brother's school. After ending his apprenticeship, he studied, and acquired something of Latin, French, and mathematics; but at the end of six months returned to the anvil and forge, learning the Greek grammar during the intervals of labor. He obtained some knowledge of Hebrew; and, to secure at once blacksmith's work and books, he removed to Worcester, Mass., where he studied and toiled intensely. A translation which he made from the German happening to fall under the eye of governor Everett, secured him public notice; and, though still working at his forge, he edited a monthly magazine (The Literary Gemini) for one year (1839). In 1840 he began to accept engagements as a lecturer. In the Eclectic Review he printed translations from the Icelandic Sagas, and papers from the Samaritan, Arabic, and Hebrew, while he went on adding to his stock of languages. Always interested in philanthropic and social reforms and progress, and particularly in the propagation of the principles of peace, Mr. Burritt began in 1844, at Worcester, the publication of a newspaper called The Christian Citizen. From the office of this journal he also issued a series of tracts, entitled Olive Leaves. He became very earnest in his devotion to the cause of peace, and devised a mutual system of addresses in its behalf between England and America. He also circulated among travellers a periodical tract, entitled The Bond of Brotherhood. In 1846 he was both proprietor and editor of The Peace Advocate. In the same year he went to England, where he was hospitably received by men of opinions similar to his own. He lectured, wrote for Douglas Jerrold's Weekly Newspaper, printed and circulated tracts, and in 1852 began the distribution of a series of "friendly addresses," from Englishmen, through different parts of France. In all the European Peace Congresses he took a prominent part. For several years he occupied the position of United States Consul at Birmingham. After a residence abroad of nearly twenty-five years, he returned to the United States. He always maintained his interest in the different matters to which he had devoted his life, and continued to write and lecture publicly upon them. He resided at New Britain until his death, March 6, 1879. Of his numerous writings and orations, many of them fugitively printed, we mention only, as published in book form, Sparks from the Anvil (1848):—Miscellaneous Writings (1850):—Olive Leaves (1853):—Thoughts and Things at Home and Abroad (1854):—A Walk from John O' Groats to Land's End (1855):—Lectures and Speeches (1869). His is another added to the names of those men of nature, energy, and irrepressible aspirations who have pursued knowledge and attained it under early difficulties. See N. Y. Tribune, March 7, 1869; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Dayckinck, Cyclop. of Amer. Literature, ii, 430.

Burroughs, Andrew R., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Stamford, N. Y., June 19, 1839, of pious parents, who gave him a careful religious training. He experienced conversion in 1857, and in 1863 joined the New York Conference. After serving seven different stations with acceptability he died, Nov. 28, 1877. Mr. Burroughs was a devoted Christian. His preaching ability was superior, and his daily life a living sermon to his people. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1878, p. 44.

Burroughs, Charles, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of New Hampshire, was born in Boston, Dec. 27, 1787. He was ordained priest in 1812, and was rector in Portsmouth, N. H., until about 1857; and still remained there, without regular charge, until 1864, when he removed to Massachusetts, but never resumed regular duty. He died March 5, 1868. He wrote Memoirs H. B. Morse (1829):—Poetry of Religion, etc. (1851). See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1869, p. 109; Drake, Dict. of Amer. Biog. s. v.

Burroughs, Eden, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Stratford, Conn., Jan. 19, 1738. He graduated at Yale College in 1757; was ordained at Killingly in 1760, where he was pastor for twelve years. From 1772 to 1809 he was in charge at East Hanover, N. H.; the following year he was pastor of the Dartmouth College Church; and at Hartford, Vt., from 1810 to the time of his death, May 22, 1813. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 90; Cong. Quarterly, 1860, p. 183.

Burroughs, Joseph, an English Baptist minister, was born in London, Jan. 1, 1685. His father was a respectable weaver in Spitalfields, who by his prudence and industry acquired considerable property, and was a layman of prominence in his denomination. Being in possession of ample means, he gave his son a liberal education, which was completed at the university of Leyden. In May, 1713, he was invited to become assistant minister in the Baptist Church in Paul's Alley, London; and on the death of his colleague, Rev. Richard Allen, was chosen his successor, being ordained May 1, 1717. Before the general prevalence of open-communion sentiments, now so largely held in England, Mr. Burroughs took the ground that "as no particular terms of Church communion are prescribed in the New Test., every Church must be at liberty to fix those terms which it may judge conducive to the main end and design of the Gospel, provided no attempt be made to impose them upon others." When he had served his Church forty years, he expressed a wish to be freed from ministerial and pastoral care; but his congregation preferred to secure for him a colleague, and his relation continued until his death, which occurred Nov. 23, 1761. Mr. Burroughs gave to the Christian world many productions from his pen, in the form of sermons, etc. Among these were, Thanksgiving for Victory (1713):—Against Popery (1735):—two Discourses on private institutions:—Concerning Baptism, etc. (1742):—a volume of Sermons, fourteen in number, on various subjects:—Day Thoughts, a poem in blank verse, written by way of animadversion upon some gloomy passages in Dr. Young's Night Thoughts. Mr. Burroughs belonged to that division of the English Baptists known as "General Baptists," because they hold to general in distinction from particular redemption. See Wilson, History of Dissenting Churches, iii, 249, 250. (J. C. S.)

Burroughs, William, a Congregational minister, was born in Boston, Mass., Feb. 1, 1823. After graduating he was for one year a member of the Yale Law School. He then pursued a course of theological study in the seminary of this college, and received license to preach, in 1846 for one year, and in 1847 for four years. His health was too feeble to permit him to discharge the duties of a clergyman, and he resumed the study of law in Philadelphia. In 1853 he was admitted to the bar; in 1855 he travelled extensively in Europe. He died in Germantown, Pa., March 24, 1861. In his last will he bequeathed to Yale College, for the benefit of the Theological Institution, the sum of $10,000, subject for a few years to a small annuity. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1861.

Burroughs, William Mills, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Mercer County, N. J., June 21, 1814. He was converted at Pennington, in his nineteenth year; began preaching in 1837; and in 1839 entered the New Jersey Conference. In 1856 he became a member of the Newark Conference, and in it labored to the close of his life, April 17, 1864. Mr. Burroughs was a true friend, a devoted pastor, and a solid, rather than brilliant, preacher. Without bigotry he was firm, a lover of peace, and a promoter of harmony. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 49.

Burrow, Reuben, D.D., a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Guilford County, N. C., in 1798. In 1806 his father removed to Tennessee. The Elk Presbytery received him as a candidate for the ministry at Mars Hill, Giles Co., in 1821. The following year he was sent as a missionary to Missouri, in which state, in 1823, he was licensed. That year he formed a circuit along White River, Ark., where he preached for some time. Subsequently he went to St. Michael, Mo. Returning to Tennessee he labored for twelve months on a circuit which extended through Giles, Maury, Bedford, and Lincoln counties. He was ordained at Shiloh, Tenn., April 24, 1824. In 1826 he was appointed by the synod as an agent to the Carolinas for the collection of funds to establish a college. In 1827 he returned home and surrendered his agency. The following year he resided near Pulaski, Giles Co. In 1831 he was sent as a missionary, in company with Robert Donnell, through East Tennessee, North Carolina, and Pennsylvania; in 1834 he spent about five months preaching in Missouri. He was again in North Carolina in 1847; after that he labored mostly in Tennessee and Mississippi until 1852, when he was appointed professor of Systematic Theology in Bethel College, at McMoresville, Tenn., taking charge of the congregation in that place, and remaining there until 1864. He died in Shelby County, Tenn., May 13, 1868. His eldest son, Rev. Aaron Burrow, died during the civil war. In 1845 Dr. Burrow published a small volume on baptism. He was an extensive contributor to the Theological Medium; wrote largely on doctrinal subjects, especially on sanctification. On three occasions he was moderator of the General Assembly—in 1836, 1840, and 1850. He was regarded as one of the strongest men in the pulpit that his Church ever produced. On the vexed question of baptism he had several public discussions with Baptist ministers in Tennessee and Mississippi. See Beard, Biographical Sketches, 2d series, p. 240.

Burrowes, Robert, D.D., an Irish clergyman, and dean of Cork, of the early part of this century, published a Sermon (1795):—Sermons on the First Lessons of the Sunday Morning Service, etc. (1817):—Twelve Discourses on the Liturgy of the Church of England (1834). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burrows, George, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born in Sligo. He was early converted; entered the ministry in 1809; retired after forty-one years of service; and died at Black Rock, near Dublin, Oct. 22, 1863, in his seventy-sixth year. He was a man of amiable disposition and of consistent piety. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1864, p. 27.

Burrows, George W., was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. After several years' service in the Kentucky Conference, he removed to Texas, where, in 1855, he was ordained elder in the Texas Conference. Four years later he became superannuated, which relation he sustained to the time of his decease, Aug. 4, 1861. He was a preacher of more than ordinary ability, a man of great affliction, and large faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1861, p. 349.

Burrows, James F., a Methodist Episcopal minister, born Feb. 10, 1826, was converted in 1843; professed conversion in 1845; spent one year at the Concord Biblical Institute; and in 1848 entered the Troy Conference. In 1851 he became a superannuate, which relation he sustained to the time of his death, April 2, 1852. Mr. Burrows was an esteemed Christian gentleman. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1852, p. 61.

Burrows, Joseph, an English Baptist minister, was born at Sutton Ashfield, Nottinghamshire. He joined an Independent Church in his youth, and was encouraged by his brethren to preach. Subsequently he united with the General Baptist Church in his native village, and for some years was its pastor. In 1831 he removed to Alreton, Derbyshire, in which, and the neighboring town of Ripley, he labored from 1831 to 1847. In 1849 he became pastor in Wolverhampton. In 1850 he removed to a village in Norfolk County, and continued his ministry until obliged to relinquish its duties on account of ill-health. He died at Wirksworth, April 20, 1857. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1858, p. 48. (J. C. S.)

Burrows, Martin, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Caistor, Lincolnshire, Feb. 24, 1818. He was converted when quite young; began to preach at eighteen; was accepted by the conference in 1838, and was twice appointed to Oldham. He died at his father's house in Rotherham, April 21, 1840. He was a pious and promising young man. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1840.

Burrows, Roswell, a Baptist minister, son of the following, was born at Fort Hill, in Groton, Conn., Sept. 2, 1768. He was ordained associate pastor with his father in August, 1806. Soon after he went on a missionary tour, which gave an impulse to the cause of missions in the churches. He served as pastor at Groton, Stonington, and Preston, and at Greenport, L. I. His sermons were Biblical and full of thought. He died May 28, 1837. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 169.

Burrows, Silas, a Baptist minister, was born at Fort Hill, in Groton, Conn., in 1741. He was ordained in 1765 pastor of a Church in Groton, and encountered much opposition from numerous sects in the vicinity. During the Revolutionary struggle he at once boldly espoused the cause of freedom. He lived to see his Church in a flourishing condition, and to witness the adoption of a constitution in Connecticut securing equal religious privileges to all, for which he earnestly labored. His ministry was favored with several remarkable revivals. He died in 1818. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 106; Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 169.

Burrows, Thomas, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Manchester, Aug. 29, 1807. He was converted in early life; entered the ministry in 1831; labored for fourteen years in Jamaica and other parts of the West Indies; thereafter he spent three years' service on Kingston Circuit; and then passed to a new sphere of labor in London, where he died, Aug. 17, 1874. He was a conscientious and good man, and labored earnestly for the salvation of souls. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 10.

Burrows, Walter, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Elizabeth, N. J., April 19, 1790. He was led to Christ in early manhood, through the labors of a pious sister; and in 1816 entered the Philadelphia Conference. He labored faithfully and zealously until 1853, when he was granted a supernumerary relation, which he held during life, though he continued to labor as health permitted in connection with the New Jersey and Newark Conferences. He died at Baskingridge, March 4, 1869. As a Christian, Mr. Burrows was joyous in his experience. As a minister, he was judicious, practical, and highly respected. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1869, p. 55.

Burrows, William, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Nottingham, Jan. 2, 1799. While a boy, he was convinced of sin by reading John Nelson's Journal, and soon afterwards he found peace through believing. He was a local preacher in his youth, and entered the itinerant ministry of the New Connection in 1823. He was a burning and a shining light in the Church, and travelled in fourteen of the best English circuits. He labored till his strength was utterly exhausted. For three years his sufferings were great, but he died in triumph at Sheffield, Dec. 4, 1852. See Minutes of the Conference.

Burruss, ELIJAH WILLIS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Madison County, Ky., April 17, 1817. He removed with his parents to Decatur County, Ind., in 1828; was admitted to Church membership in 1838; experienced conversion two years later; received license to exhort and to preach in 1841; and in 1845 entered the Indiana Conference. He labored with unflagging zeal and fidelity until three months previous to his decease, which occurred July 28, 1870. Mr. Burruss was remarkable for his faithfulness and cheerfulness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1870, p. 193.

Bursa, in Kalmuck mythology, is a deity said to possess the virtue of preserving beauty, and also of healing diseases. Usually its image is made of stone, and enclosed in a small case, which is hung about the neck. When a Kalmuck contracts a disease, he rubs some of this stone off, and mixes the dust with his food, which he then eats. The Lamas have sole right to sell these idols. They affirm that the stone came from the mountain on which Dalai Lama lives.

Burscher, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, a Protestant theologian of Germany, was born at Camenz, Feb. 16, 1732. He studied at Leipsic, where he was also appointed professor of philosophy in 1764. In 1768 he was made professor of theology, and in 1781 senior of the theological faculty. He died Sept. 10, 1805. He published, Introductio in Ezechielis Librum (Lips. 1755):—Versuch einer kurzen Erläuterung des Propheten Jeremiä (ibid. 1757):—Versuch einer Erläuterung der Propheten Hosea und Joel (ibid. 1758; 2d ed. 1762):—Diss. de Gaza Delicta Futura, ad Zeph. ii. 4 (ibid. 1768):—Christus Mosus et Pentateuchi Vindex (ibid. cod.):—Ecclesiae Doctrina de Deo Triuno, etc. (ibid. 1780). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 594, 597; Döring, Die gelehrten Theologen Deutschlands, i, 211 sq. (B. P.)

Burscough, WILLIAM, D.D., an Irish prelate, was consecrated bishop of Limerick in 1725, and died in 1755. He published a number of single sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burse was anciently a purse to hold that which was valuable; retained even now among the official insignia of the lord high chancellor of England.

The BURSAK of a convent was its treasurer.

In ecclesiastical phraseology, a burse is the receptacle for the corporal and chalice-cover. It is a square and flat box made of cardboard, covered with rich silk or cloth of gold, embroidered and studded with jewels, open on one side only, and placed over the chalice veil when the sacred vessels are carried to the altar by the celebrant.

Burt, David, a Congregational minister, was born at Monson, Mass., Aug. 2, 1822. After preliminary study in Wilbraham Academy, he entered Wesleyan University; but graduated at Oberlin College in 1848, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1851. On Nov. 5 of the latter year he was ordained pastor in Raymond, N. H., which position he retained until February, 1855. From January, 1856, to February, 1858, he was pastor in Rutland, Mass.; and from May, 1858, to August, 1866, he was acting-pastor in Winona, Minn. The two years following he was employed as superintendent of schools in Tennessee under the Freedmen's Bureau. The next year he was acting-pastor in Minneapolis; and from January to March, 1870, in New Braintree, Mass. After this, about five years, he was superintendent of schools in Winona County, Minn.; and state superintendent of public instruction afterwards, residing at Northfield. He died at St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 23, 1881. See Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 24.

Burt, Edmund, a Congregational minister, was born at Longmeadow, Mass., Nov. 11, 1803. He completed the course in the theological seminary at Gilmanston, N. H., in 1839, and two years after was ordained over the churches of Franconia and Bethlehem. He subsequently labored at Deering; Newfield, Boothbay, Gilead, Me.; Gorham, N. H.; and Stewartstown, Vt. His work was mostly missionary. He died at Gorham, July 14, 1864. Mr. Burt was a careful student of the Bible, and a faithful, instructive, and logical preacher. See Cong. Quarterly, 1864, p. 382.

Burt, Federal, a Congregational minister, was born in Southampton, Mass., in 1789. He graduated at Williams College in 1812; was ordained pastor in Durham, N. H., June 18, 1817; and died Feb. 29, 1829. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 468.

Burt, Nathaniel C., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Fairton, N. J., April 23, 1825. He was a graduate of the College of New Jersey in 1846, and of Princeton Seminary in 1850. His ministerial career began at Springfield, O. (1850-55). From this Church he was called to the pastorate of Franklin Street Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Md.; and in 1860 was called to the Seventh Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, O. During his pastorate in the latter Church he travelled for some time in Europe and the East, seeking the restoration of his health. He was elected president of Ohio Female College at Cincinnati, in 1868, but soon resolved to return to Europe. In 1870 he crossed the ocean, in order to superintend the education of young ladies from this country. He died at Rome, Italy, March 4, 1874. He was a man of fine scholarship and cultivated taste; being a correspondent of several American journals, especially the Presbyterian and the New York Evangelist. He published several volumes, entitled, Redemption's Dawn:—Hours Among the Gospels:—The Far East:—The Land and Its Story. See Presbyterian, April 4, 1874.

Burt, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Torpoint, Cornwall, April 17, 1792. He was converted at nineteen; received by the British Conference in 1816, and sent to British North America; preached at Fredericton, N. B., from 1817 to 1819; Horton, N. S., from 1819 to 1822; Newport, 1816 and 1822; Charlotte-town, P. E. I., from 1823 to 1826; Odell Town, Canada, from 1826 to 1828; returning to England in that year. After more than thirty years' efficient service in his native land, he retired to Plymouth, where he died, Sept. 15, 1870. Mr. Burt had a singularly simple, practical mind. From the most vigorous toil he never shrank. His wonderful punctuality, method, sense of duty, quiet resolve to do his best in everything, gave him the power of the man of genius. He was most exact and painstaking in study, fond of theology, had an immense fund of quiet humor, his face beamed with faith and trust and love to God and man, and hundreds were converted under his ministry. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1871, p. 12; Pope, in Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1872, p. 193.

Burtis, Arthur, D.D., a Presbyterian and (Dutch) Reformed minister, was born in the city of New York, Oct. 25, 1807. He graduated at Union College in 1827; studied theology at Princeton and Auburn Seminaries, graduating from the latter in 1833. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Geneva in 1833, and ordained in 1835. He was settled at Fort Plain Reformed Church in 1835, and subsequently at Little Falls Presbyterian Church, Binghamton, one year; Oxford, seven years; Vernon (N. J.), one year; and Buffalo from 1847 to 1857. He taught in Buffalo, and was district secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union from 1859 to 1863. In 1864 he accepted the professorship of Greek in Miami University, where he remained until his decease, March 23, 1867. Dr. Burtis was a thorough classical scholar, and, before entering upon his theological studies, had studied law with chancellor Kent. His learning was varied and profound, and in his professional chair, at a late period of life, he found his true place. His death was greatly lamented. See Corwin, Manual of the Ref. Church, s. v.; Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1867, p. 558. (W. J. R. T.)

Burton, Henry, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1787. In 1830 he entered the New York Conference, but in 1837 impaired health, induced by excessive labor, caused him to locate. He resumed his place in 1849, and continued zealous until 1858, when he became superannuated, which relation he held to his death, at Middletown, Conn., Sept. 25, 1878. Mr. Burton possessed a clear mind, a courageous heart, and a sound faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 32.

Burton, James, D.D., an English divine, was born in 1745, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, of which he became a fellow. He was presented to the rectory of Over-Warton, Oxfordshire, with the annexed perpetual curacy of Nether Warton, in 1771; to the vicarage of Little Berkhamstead, Herts, in 1789; to the incumbency of the first portion of Waddesdon, Bucks, in the same year; and was appointed canon of Christchurch, Oxford, in 1792. He was also chaplain in ordinary to the king, and for many years a magistrate of Oxfordshire. He died June 30, 1825. See (Lond.) Annual Register, 1825, p. 264.

Burton, James Daniel, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in Manchester, July 25, 1784, and commenced his itinerancy in Wakefield in 1805. He labored efficiently and zealously until 1814, when his health failed. He died at Liverpool after a tedious illness, which he bore with fortitude and resignation, March 29, 1817. He was a minister of much promise. See Wesl. Meth. Mag. 1817, p. 881.

Burton, John (1), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Dent, Yorkshire, in 1682. Early in life he became a Christian, and in due time gave evidence that he would be of service to the cause of Christ as a preacher of his Gospel. His labors extended over a wide field, embracing not only many sections of his native land, but reaching also to the American colonies. After a long life of unwearied service, he died March 23, 1769. See Piety Promoted, ii, 435, 436. (J. C. S.)

Burton, John (2), a Baptist minister, was born in England in 1760. He emigrated to Halifax, N. S., in 1792; and subsequently came to the United States, where he connected himself with a Baptist Church. Some time after this he returned to Halifax, and, being now an ordained minister, he administered the first baptism by immersion ever witnessed in that city. In 1795 he assisted in the organization of a church, and was its pastor till his death, Feb. 6, 1838. "He was a Christian gentleman, useful in the community in which he labored, and enjoying the love and respect of those around him." See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 170. (J. C. S.)

Burton, John Hill, historiographer royal for Scotland, was born April 22, 1809, at Aberdeen, where he was educated at the grammar-school, and afterwards at Marischal College. His father dying when he was a boy, he had his own way to make. He chose the legal profession, and was in 1831 admitted to the Scottish bar. He never got practice, but wrote two legal books, of value in their day; and he acquired a knowledge of the history of Scotch law which was useful when he afterwards wrote his History. Unable to support himself by his profession, he succeeded in doing so by the scarcely less arduous profession of letters. He began to write as early as 1833 for the Westminster, and afterwards for the Edinburgh and North British Reviews. In 1846 he published The Life and Correspondence of David Hume, and in 1847, Lives of Simon Lord Lovat, and Duncan Forbes of Culloden. His main work, however, was his History of Scotland (1853, 2 vols.), covering the period from the Revolution of 1688 to the extinction of the last Jacobite rebellion in 1748, and which he supplemented in 1867 to 1870 by seven volumes on the history of Scotland from Agricola's invasion to the Revolution of 1688. A second edition of the whole work, in eight volumes, was issued in 1873. "This," says a writer in the Academy, is beyond doubt the most, indeed, the only, complete history of that country; for no other historian has embraced the whole of the political existence of the Scottish nation down to the time when it finally merged in that of Great Britain." His last publication was, History of the Reign of Queen Anne (1880). Mr. Burton died Aug. 10, 1881, at Morton House, near Edinburgh. (B. P.)

Burton, J. E., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Nicholas County, Ky., in 1812. He removed to Monroe County, Ind., in 1821; joined the Church in his thirteenth year; was licensed to preach in his eighteenth year; removed to Missouri in 1850; and in 1851 was admitted into the Missouri Conference, where in he labored faithfully, with one year's exception as superannuate, to the time of his death, in 1866. Mr. Burton was a practical preacher of respectable talents, greatly beloved by those who knew him. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1866, p. 264.

Burton, Nicholas, a Spanish martyr, was a merchant dwelling in the parish of Little St. Bartholomew. He was put into prison in Cadiz for no assigned reason, and lay there in irons fourteen days. All this time he instructed the poor prisoners in the Scriptures. When the officers found out his course, they carried him in irons to Seville, into a still more dismal prison called Triana, where the fathers and friars proceeded against him secretly, according to their custom. On Dec. 20, 1558, he was taken to a place called the Auto, where his tongue was forced out of his mouth with a cloven stick fastened upon it, so he could not utter his faith to the people. As soon as the sentence was given, he was tied to a stake and burned. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 513.

Burton, Thomas Blount, an English Congregational minister, was born at Nottingham, March, 1787. He was left an orphan at the age of nine, and received his early education at Roggin, under the care of an aunt. While at school he was very reckless, but afterwards became a Christian, and joined the Methodist New Connection. In 1818 Mr. Burton joined the Independents at Castle Gate, where he preached till his death, Dec. 22, 1860. His preaching was marked by great simplicity and directness, and in character he was as much known and esteemed for his transparent uprightness as for his unfeigned humility. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1862, p. 225.

Burton, William (1), an English clergyman of the latter part of the 16th century, was minister of the cathedral church in Norwich. He published Catechisme (1591):—Seven Sermons (1592); and other sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Burton, William (2), a Baptist minister, was born at Margaree, Cape Breton. He united with the Church in 1826, and was ordained July 20, 1828. From 1830 to 1853 he was the colleague of Rev. Harris Harding, pastor of the Church in Yarmouth, and subsequently was pastor of churches in St. John, N. B., and Hantsport, N. S., where he died in 1867. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 170. (J. C. S.)

Burton, William H., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Mississippi, was rector of the Church at New Iberia, La., in 1853; the following year was rector in Franklin; in 1857, missionary at Bayou Sara, and remained in this work until the close of 1859. Subsequently, he acted as a general missionary in the neighborhood, having his residence at Centreville; and in 1865 he became officiating minister at Corinth, Miss. The following year he was rector of St. Jude's Church, in that place; and in 1867 rector of the Church of the Epiphany, near Port Gibson, Claiborne Co., Miss. He died Sept. 8, 1870. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1871, p. 118.

Burton, William Miller, A.M., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Winsted, Conn., in 1808. At an early age he evinced an extraordinary desire for knowledge. He entered the academy at Erie, Pa., whither his father had removed in 1812. At sixteen he was a teacher, in which profession he continued for several years. Graduating at the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., in 1834, he at once became a tutor, afterwards professor, in Alleghany College, Meadville, Pa.—a position which he occupied for several years. He was ordained deacon in 1840, and priest in 1841; and was settled one year as minister at Hollidaysburg, Pa.; four and a half years as rector of St. John's Church at Ohio City (now Cleveland), O.; seven years as rector of St. Peter's, Tecumseh, and St. John's, Clinton—a double parish in Michigan. He died at Tecumseh, Nov. 20, 1854. His preaching was distinguished for purity and elegance of diction. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1855, p. 159; Wesl. Univ. Alumni Record, 1882, p. 5.

Burtons were soothsayers of the ancient Prussians. They told fortunes from lots drawn.

Burt, John, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland, May 23, 1789. When a youth he was decoyed into a boat by a press-gang, and made to serve five years in the British navy. He was afterwards liberated through the interference of a British officer, when he returned to Scotland and devoted himself to literary studies. He taught school sixteen months in Kilmarnock, and went to Glasgow to attend lectures in the university. In 1817 he came to America, and joined the Sixth Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. Determined to elevate himself to the ministry, he entered Princeton Theological Seminary in 1822; and after remaining about a year, he was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and was ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Salem, N. J., in 1824. He remained pastor of this Church six years, when he became editor of the Presbyterian, Philadelphia. In 1833 he took charge of The Standard, a religious paper published in Cincinnati, O., and was (1835-1842) pastor of the Fifth Presbyterian Church of that city. He was elected a professor of Washington College, but declined to accept, and in 1842 took charge of the Church at Blackwoodtown, N. J., which he retained until 1859. He was for many years the translator of the French contributions to the Presbyterian. He died at Salem, March 24, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 124; Gen. Cat. of Princeton Sem. 1881, p. 38.

Burward, Anthony, an English martyr, was one of five who were burned at Canterbury in September, 1555, for the true testimony of Christ and his Gospel. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 383.

Burwash, Henry, an English prelate of the 14th century, was named from Burwash, Sussex. "He was of noble alliance, but, when this is said, all is said to his commendation, being otherwise neither good for Church nor state, sovereign nor subjects; covetous, ambitious, rebellious, injurious." He was recommended by his kinsman, Bartholomew de Badilismere, baron of Leeds, in Kent, to Edward II, who preferred him bishop of Lincoln. It was not long before he fell under the king's displeasure, his temporalities were seized, though afterwards, on his submission, restored. He retained his old grudge, and assisted the queen in the deposition of her husband. He was twice lord-treasurer, once chancellor, and once sent as ambassador to the duke of Bavaria. He died in 1340. The story goes that after his death he was condemned as viridis viridarius (a green forester), because in his lifetime he had enclosed other men's grounds into his park. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 248.

Burwell, W. F., a Baptist minister, was born in Pennsylvania in 1841. He was baptized at the age of fifteen, and united with the Monongahela Union Church. He was licensed to preach June 1, 1866. After preaching temporarily in several churches, he was ordained Aug. 5, 1867, as pastor of the Greensborough and Beulah churches. His connection with these continued for some time, and then he devoted himself to the Greensborough Church, being its pastor for five years. After his resignation, he was pastor or supply of the Goshen, Zoar, Forks of Cheat, and Monongahela Union churches—the latter as pastor, for four years. For one year he served as financial agent for Monongahela College. He died in Dunkard township, Greene Co., Pa., March 12, 1881. See National Baptist, March 24, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Bury, Richard, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the Diocese of Ohio, resided, in 1863, in Trenton, Mich. Thence, the next year, he removed to Grosse Isle, where he remained until 1864, and from thence to Cleveland, O., as rector of St. James's Church, remaining there until he died, July 21, 1875, aged eighty-three years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 149.

Bus, Balthasar de, a French ascetic theologian of the Jesuit order, nephew of César de Bus, was born in 1587, and died Dec. 21, 1657. He wrote, Préparation à la Mort (Lyons, 1648; Grenoble, 1660):—Motifs de Dévotion envers la Sainte-Vierge (Lyons, 1649):—Occupation Intérieure pour les deux Semaines de la Passion (1650):—Motifs de Contrition (1652):—Exercice de la Présence de Dieu (Chambery, 1669). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bus, César de, a French monk, was born at Cavaillon, Feb. 3, 1544, and died at Avignon, April 15, 1607. After having lived a life of dissipation, he joined the clergy and was made canon of Cavaillon. He founded, in 1592, the Congregation of the Priests of the Christian Doctrine, called "Doctrinaires," and of a similar one of the Ursulines, called "Filles de la Doctrine Chrétienne," who, like the former, had to teach. César de Bus is the author of Instructions Familiales (Paris, 1665). See Beauvais, Histoire de la Vie de César de Bus (Paris, 1645); Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bus (or Bos, or Van der Bosch), Cornelius, a Dutch engraver, was born at Bois-le-Duc about 1510, and visited Italy while young. The following is a list of some of his works: The Last Judgment; Lot and his Daughters; David and Uriah; Jesus Preaching to the Jews; Death Seizing a Monk; The Entombing of Christ. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Busca, Antonio, a Milanese painter, was born in 1625. He studied under Procaccini, and painted, in competition with that master, a picture of the Virgin, Mary Magdalene, and St. John, in the church of San Marco. He died in 1686. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Busca, Ignazio, an Italian prelate, was born at Milan in 1713. He was nuncio in the Netherlands before the insurrection of these provinces against Joseph II. On his return to Italy he was appointed governor of Rome; became cardinal in 1789; and obtained the confidence of Pius VI, who sent him to Milan to negotiate with Caccault, sent from France. He failed in this mission and returned to Rome, where he continued to perform important offices. Later he opposed the Concordat. He died in 1803. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Busch (Lat. Buschius), Hans (or Arnold), a Dutch theologian, was born in 1399 (or 1400) at Zwolle, in Overijssel. He studied theology at the monastery Windesheim, and was appointed canon in 1419 (or 1420). According to some authorities, he also became prior of Sulten, in the diocese of Hildesheim, in Saxony. He acquired a great renown through his indefatigable zeal, firmness, and tact, with which he reformed the monasteries in Frisia, Westphalia, and Saxony, in spite of the resistance of monks and nuns. He died in 1477 or 1479. He is the author of a chronicle of the monastery Windesheim, entitled De Viris Illustribus Ordinis sui et Monasterii Windesheimensis (2d ed. by H. Rosweydeus, Antwerp, 1628):—De Reformatione Monasteriorum Quorundam Suzoniæ, libri io (reprinted in Leibnizii Scriptt. Brunsvic. ii, 476 sq., 806 sq.). Both these were originally published at Antwerp in 1621. Trithemius mentions other works of this writer in MS. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Schlegel, Kirchen- und Reformationsgeschichte von Norddeutschland (Hanover, 1828); Klippel, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Busch, Peter, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 13, 1682, at Lübeck. He studied at Leipzig, and, after having acted as tutor in the families of several noblemen, he was, in 1717, appointed pastor at Orleben, near Helmstädt. In 1721 he was called to Hanover, where he died, May 3, 1744. He wrote treatises on several hymns, and composed more than sixty hymns, some of which are still in use. See Koch, Gesch. des deutschen Kirchenliedes, v, 662 sq. (B. P.)

Buschbeck, ERHARD CARL, a Reformed theologian of Germany, was born at Köthen, in Anhalt, in 1816. In 1845 he became preacher at the Reformed Church in Trieste, and in 1875 also superintendent of the Vienna Reformed diocese. He died Dec. 29, 1882. He wrote, Biblische Geschichten für Schule und Haus (Frankfurt, 1855):—Preghiere pur l'Uso Domestico de' Cristiani Eangelici Riformati (Trieste, 1858). In connection with Steinacker, he published Verfassungsentwurf für die evangelische Kirche Oesterreichs, etc. (ibid. 1850). See Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 208. (B. P.)

Büsching, ANTON FRIEDRICH, a German Protestant theologian and geographer of Germany, was born Sept. 27, 1724, at Stadthagen. He studied theology at Halle; in 1748 was called to Petersburg, as preceptor of prince Biren; in 1754 became professor of philosophy at Göttingen, but was afterwards silenced for alleged heterodoxy; in 1759 became ordinary professor there; in 1761 went to Petersburg, as director of the Protestant churches, but resigned in 1765, and went to Altona, and finally to Berlin, where he died, May 28, 1773, being doctor of theology, member of consistory, and rector of the Kölnische gymnasium. He wrote, among other works, Introductio Hist.-theol. in Epistolam Pauli ad Philippenses (Halle, 1746):—Gedanken von der Beschaffenheit und dem Vorzuge der bibl. dogmat. Theologie vor der scholastischen (Berlin, 1758):—De Procrastinatione Baptismi apud Veteres ejusque Causis (Halle, 1747):—Geschichte der evang. Gemeinden in Russland (Altona, 1764, 1767, 2 vols.):—Geschichte der jüdischen Religion (Berlin, 1779):—Vitringa's Auslegung der Weissagungen des Jesaias (Halle, 1749-51). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 67, 89, 147, 217, 234, 292, 631, 774, 835, 859; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 138; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bussee (Lat. Busseus, i. e. de Buys), Gerard, a Dutch theologian, was born about 1538. He was canon at Xanten, and distinguished himself as a preacher. He died in 1596. He wrote a Reply to Faccius Illyricus; also a catechism in Flemish. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bussee, Johannes (Hans Buys), a Dutch theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Nimeguen in 1547, and for a long time taught theology in Mayence, where he died, May 30, 1611. His principal works are, Disputatio Theologica de Jejunio:—De Descensu Christi ad Inferos:—Modus recte Meditandi de Rebus Divinis. He also translated several religious works from the Italian and Spanish, and wrote some in Latin. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Bussee, Peter, a Dutch theologian of the Jesuit order, brother of Johannes, was born about 1540. He was professor of Hebrew at Vienna, where he died in 1587. He wrote, Opus Catechisticum, sive Summa Doctrinæ Christianæ Petri Canisti (Cologne, 1577). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bussey, THOMAS H., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in the city of Washington in 1814. He received a religious training; experienced conversion in his eighteenth year; and entered the Baltimore Conference in 1837. He died April 19, 1856. Mr. Bussey was modest in manner, but strong in mind. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1857, p. 202.

Busfield, JOHN ATKINSON, D.D., an English clergyman, was born in 1775, and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge. He was rector of St. Michael's, Wood Street, London, and lecturer of St. Marylebone; and died in 1849. He published The Christian's Guide (1800):—Fast Sermon (1810):—Sermons on the Duties of the Christian Religion, the Lord's Prayer, and the Great Mystery (1826, 3 vols.). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bush, Alexander, a Baptist minister, was born at Lowville, Lewis Co., N. Y., Feb. 1, 1810. He united with the Church in 1827, and, after teaching for a time, pursued a course of study at Hamilton. He was ordained pastor of the Tyngham and Lee, Mass., Church, Oct. 17, 1838. He preached his last sermon July 30, 1842, and, after lingering a year or two in great physical suffering, he died June 17, 1844. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclopædia, p. 170, 171. (J. C. S.)

Bush, ALVA, LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born at Busti, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Jan. 25, 1830. He was fitted for college in Jamestown Academy, and was a graduate of Burlington University, Ia. In November, 1859, he was ordained pastor of the Church at Strawberry Point, afterwards in Fayette, and was for a short time an instructor in Upper Iowa University. In January, 1863, he came to Osage, and established the Cedar Valley Seminary, of which he was the principal for eighteen years. During eight of these years he was pastor of the Church in Osage, and subsequently his Sabbaths were largely devoted to work in the country districts, where he was much beloved. Decided although he was in his denominational views, we are told that "the bounds of no Church or creed could ever confine his sympathies or his activities. He belonged to all churches, and Christianity and humanity lost in his death a most efficient and unselfish worker." In the cause of higher education he took great interest, and was honored on account of that interest. He died July 1, 1881. See The Chicago Standard, July 14, 1881. (J. C. S.)

Bush, Charles, Jr., a Methodist Episcopal minist-

ter, son of Rev. Charles Bush, Sr., a worthy local preacher in the M. E. Church, was born at Naples, Ontario Co., N. Y., Jan. 23, 1819. He experienced conversion about 1844; entered the Western New York Conference, and in it served the Church zealously until his death, July 22, 1874. Mr. Bush was a plain, faithful, energetic, efficient Methodist preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 153.

Bush, Charles Peck, D.D., a Congregational and afterwards a Presbyterian minister, was born at Brighton, N. Y., Nov. 11, 1813. From 1837 to 1839 he was connected with the Yale Theological Seminary, but in the following year graduated at Union Theological Seminary. From Nov. 15, 1841, to Oct. 1, 1845, he was the ordained pastor of the Tenth Presbyterian Church, New York city. Sept. 1, 1846, he was installed pastor in Greenville, Norwich, Conn., from which he was dismissed Feb. 1, 1856. To his duties as acting pastor of the New England Church in Chicago, 1856, he added those of an editor. In January, 1857, he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Beloit, Wis., where he remained until Oct. 1, 1859. For three years he was district secretary, in New York, of the American Tract Society; from 1863 to 1871 he was district secretary of the A.B.C.F.M. at Rochester, N. Y.; subsequently held the same position in New York city, where he was also general agent until the time of his death, which occurred at Albany, Feb. 22, 1880. Among his published works are, Work for All:—Five Years in China, etc.;—Memoir of Samuel Huggins; etc. See Conc. Year-book, 1881, p. 18; N. Y. Observer, Feb. 26, 1880.

Bush, Leverett, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was for twenty-three years rector of St. Paul's Church, Oxford, N. Y., during which time he was distinguished for his zeal and urbanity. He relinquished his charge some time before his death, which occurred at Philippsville, Alleghany Co., Nov. 26, 1856. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1857, p. 143.

Bush (or Bushe), Paul, an English prelate, was born in 1490, and educated at Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1518. He afterwards became a brother of the order called Boni Homines, and, after studying some time among the friars of St. Austin (now Wadham College), he was elected provincial of his order at Edington, in Wiltshire, and canon residentiary of Sarum. On account of his great acquisitions in learning, Henry VIII made him his chaplain, and advanced him to the newly erected see of Bristol, to which he was consecrated June 25, 1542. On the accession of queen Mary he was deprived of his bishopric, and spent the remainder of his life in a private station at Bristol, where he died, Oct. 11, 1559. He wrote, Notes on the Psalms (Lond. 1525):—Treatise in Praise of the Crosse:—Answer to Certain Queries concerning the Abuses of the Mass:—Dialogues between Christ and the Virgin Mary:—Carmina Diversa; and other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Bush, Samuel, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Edgecomb, Me., April 15, 1797. From 1823 to 1827 he followed the sea, and in the latter year moved to Montville, Me. In 1835 he was converted, and in 1839 was licensed to preach by the Edgecomb Quarterly Meeting, and subsequently ordained in the Whitefield Church. He performed a large amount of evangelical labor in Clinton, Smithfield, Stark, Mercer, Belgrave, and other places in Maine, and was honored by his Master in his work. He died in Edgecomb, May 30, 1875. See Morning Star, Feb. 23, 1876. (J. C. S.)

Bush, Samuel Webster, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Virginia, July 10, 1806. He was brought up in Albany, as a member of the First Church, and with the advantages of the academy there. He read law at Lenox, Mass., and edited a newspaper; but some time after his admission to the bar he returned to the ministry, and he pursued theological study at Auburn Seminary, passing through the full course, 1836-39.

He exercised his ministry at Binghamton five years, Skaaneateles seven years, Norwich four years, Coopers-town seven years, and filled the chaplaincy of the Binghamton Inebriate Asylum for ten years, until his death, March 21, 1877. His appearance and manners as a gentleman, his good understanding and intelligence, his sincerity, his unflinching devotion to his calling, introduced him into cultured congregations, and made him acceptable and useful. See Presbyterianism in Central N. Y. p. 477; Gen. Cat. of Auburn Sem. 1883, p. 264.

Bushby, Christopher C., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Yorkshire, England, Jan. 1, 1839. He emigrated with his parents to Lafayette County, Wis., at the age of three; experienced religion in 1861; and in 1863 entered the West Wisconsin Conference. Subsequently he was transferred to the Rock River Conference. He died Nov. 18, 1876. Mr. Bushby manifested in his life geniality without rudeness, self-assertion without vanity, positiveness without dogmatism, and piety without cant. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 138.

Bushell, Robert, an English Methodist minister, was born at Chipping Norton, April 30, 1827. His parents were Wesleyans, and he had a godly training. As a Methodist Sunday-school scholar, he was noted for punctuality, regularity, and diligence—habits which never left him. At the age of thirteen a severe illness brought him near to death, and the effects of it made breathing difficult ever after. He gave his heart to God as a lad, soon after his recovery, and joined the Methodist Society. In 1848 he came to London, and became a local preacher under the Rev. Dr. Beaumont. In 1849, when three ministers were unjustly expelled from the Methodist Conference, Mr. Bushell joined himself to the Reformers, who adhered to the expelled ministers. In 1851 he became the minister of the Society of Methodist Reformers at Wisbeach, and remained there for seven happy and prosperous years. He afterwards travelled for five years each in two of the London circuits, and four years in Sheffield. No less than twelve hundred members were added to those three societies during his ministry. In 1869 he was appointed connectional secretary of the United Methodists (the union having taken place in 1857), and, filling that office for two years, the conference in 1871 unanimously elected him general missionary secretary, which position he filled with marked ability till 1881, when, through excessive labors and journeys on behalf of missions, his health gave way, and he was obliged to resign his office. He died in peace at Sheffield, Nov. 22, 1881. He was in labors most abundant.

Bushnell, Albert, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Rome, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1818. Having received a preparatory education, he entered, in 1840, Lane Theological Seminary, from which he regularly graduated. His enthusiasm for missions, especially to Africa, showed itself in the seminary, and he constructed a map of the "Dark Continent," with which he visited the churches in Southern Ohio, thrilling his hearers with his missionary appeals. On Nov. 5, 1843, he was licensed to preach, and ordained by the Presbytery of Cincinnati as a missionary to Africa. He and a fellow-graduate, John Milton Campbell, sailed for Africa, on Jan. 1, 1844. When near the end of their voyage they were both prostrated by the coast fever. On March 18 Campbell died, and was buried at Cape Palmas, but Bushnell was spared to be for thirty-six years the apostle of the Gaboon region. He was in some sense the father, and in every sense the hero, of Presbyterian missions in Africa. His visit to this country, and his appeals to the General Assembly in 1879 for a reinforcement of the mission, called forth expressions from that body of the high appreciation in which he and his work were held. On his return, he tarried three weeks at Madeira. But his heart was fixed on his beloved Africa, and he proceeded on his voyage, and in less than two weeks died, in sight of land, and was buried at Sierra Leone, Dec. 2, 1879. See N. Y. Presbyterian, Jan. 14, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Bushnell, Calvin, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Saybrook, Conn., in 1781. He graduated at Williams College, Mass., in 1809; studied theology under Dr. David Porter; was licensed by the Oneida Presbytery in 1812; labored as a domestic missionary in Western New York for nearly twenty years, and after 1835 in the West. He died at Lisbon, Ill., May 15, 1864. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1865, p. 159.

Bushnell, Harvey, a Congregational minister, was born at Saybrook, Conn., March 25, 1794. He studied theology with Rev. Dr. N. W. Taylor of New Haven, and others; was ordained pastor of the Second Church in Plymouth (South), Mass., Nov. 21, 1821, from which charge he was dismissed June 30, 1823; from 1824 to 1834 he was pastor in West Avon, Conn.; from January, 1835, to April, 1838, he was acting pastor in Hamburg Church, now Lyme First; then, until 1834, held the same position in the Union Congregational Church in Sullivan, N. Y. Subsequently he resided, without charge, in Old Saybrook, Fairhaven, and Winsted, Conn. He died at Saybrook, March 14, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 13.

Bushnell, Horace, D.D., LL.D., a distinguished Congregational minister, was born at Litchfield, Conn., April 14, 1802, and graduated from Yale College in 1827. After spending one year in the office of the New York Journal of Commerce, he studied law, and was at the same time tutor in Yale College from 1829 to 1831. He passed two years in the Yale Divinity School, and was ordained pastor of the North Church, Hartford, May 22, 1833. This was his only settlement, and continued until 1859, when he was dismissed. He died at Hartford, Feb. 17, 1876. During his ministry he became eminent not only for his ability as a preacher and a theologian, but also as a writer. Among the numerous productions of his pen were the following: Christian Nurture (1847; enlarged, 1860);—God in Christ (1849);—Christ in Theology (1851);—Sermons for the New Life (1858);—Nature and the Supernatural (ed.);—Work and Play (1864);—Christ and his Salvation (ed.);—The Vicarious Sacrifice (1865);—Moral Use of Dark Things (1868);—Woman Suffrage (1869);—Sermons on Living Subjects (1872);—Forgiveness and Law (1874). Dr. Bushnell occupies a position quite unique among American divines. By some of the leaders of his denomination he was regarded, at times, as being loose and heterodox in his views, and they refused to affiliate with him. As, however, his life passed away, he became more and more the object of sincere interest and Christian sympathy among all who came within the range of his influence. On account of the rare purity of his style, the elevation of his sentiments, and his remarkable knowledge of the windings and intricacies of human nature, he has made for himself a place of the highest rank among American writers. Whatever difference of opinion there may be about his peculiar theological views, there can be none about his intellectual ability, the charm of his conversational powers, and his wonderful gift as a writer. See Memoirs of H. Bushnell (N. Y. 1880); Cong. Quarterly, xix, 411; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v. (J. C. S.)

Bushnell, Jackson Jones, a Congregational minister, was born in Old Saybrook, Conn., Feb. 19, 1815. He graduated from Yale College in 1841, and entered Andover Theological Seminary in December, 1841; but, after a few months there, became a tutor in Western Reserve College, Ohio. After a tutorship of two years, during the latter of which he was licensed to preach, he was appointed financial agent of the college, and served in that relation, and as an agent of the Western College Society, until April, 1848. He was then appointed professor of mathematics and natural philosophy in Beloit College, Wis., and entered on his office as the pioneer instructor of the new institution. In 1858 he resigned, and devoted himself to business in Beloit; but in 1863 was reappointed, and continued in office until his death, March 8, 1873. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1873.

Bushnell, Jedediah, a Congregational minister, was born in Saybrook, Conn., Nov. 26, 1769. At the age of sixteen he was apprenticed to a shoemaker, and at twenty-one established himself in the business. Two years after, he was converted. After a preliminary course of study, he entered Williams College, from which he graduated in 1797. During his collegiate career he taught school. He studied theology under the Rev. Mr. Judson of Sheffield, Mass.; and, after receiving license to preach, he labored successfully in various places. He next entered the service of the Connecticut Missionary Society, laboring especially in Western New York and in Western Vermont during the first five years. On May 25, 1803, he was installed pastor in Cornwall, Vt. During his ministry in this place, which covered the period of thirty-three years, his church enjoyed fourteen revivals of religion. On May 25, 1836, he resigned his pastorate. For seven years he was employed in ministering to the neighboring churches. In 1843 he was disabled by an affection of the throat. He died May 25, 1836. He was one of the founders of the Vermont Missionary Society, and one of its Committee of Missions. For a considerable time he was a trustee of Middlebury College. He was one of the editors of a monthly magazine published in Middlebury, Vt., for several years, by the General Convention. This periodical was called The Advertiser. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 422.

Bushnell, Samuel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Massachusetts, Nov. 28, 1782. He was converted when about sixteen, and in 1810 entered the New York Conference, wherein he labored to the close of his life, Aug. 24, 1824. Mr. Bushnell was sound in mind, calm in temperament, prudent in business, deep in piety, and strong in faith. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1825, p. 476; Methodist Magazine, vii, 408.

Bushnell, Wells, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Hartford, Conn., April, 1799. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1823, and was two years a student in Princeton Theological Seminary. He was licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick in 1825. In 1826 he became a member of the Presbytery of Erie. He was pastor at Meadville, Pa., from 1826 to 1833, when, at his own request, the relation was dissolved, that he might go as a missionary to the Indians in the West. After spending one year there, ill-health compelled him to return East. For a time he supplied the First Presbyterian Church in Louisville, Ky. He then accepted a call to the congregation at Greensburg, Ind., in connection with one at Shelbyville, in the same state. After laboring here a year and a half, his health failed, and he returned to New Albany. Soon after this he went to Pittsburgh, Pa., for the purpose of rest and recruiting his health. While there he accepted an invitation to supply the churches of Gravel Run and Cambridge. In 1836 he went from the Presbytery of Erie to that of Indianapolis, and in 1838 was received again into the Presbytery of Erie. In April, 1839, he was dismissed to the Presbytery of Beaver, having accepted a call to the Church of New Castle, Pa. Here he labored fifteen and a half years with success. At this time he became dissatisfied with the position of the Church on the question of slavery; he accordingly severed his connection with the Beaver Presbytery, and united with the "Free Presbyterian Church." He then ministered to the congregations of Mount Jackson and New Bedford. He died at the former place, July 16, 1863. He was a successful minister; as a Christian, was esteemed sincere and zealous. See Hist. of the Presbytery of Erie.

Bushnell, William, a Congregational minister, was born at Saybrook (now Westbrook), Conn., April 14, 1801. After obtaining preliminary education at Kimball Union Academy, Meriden, N. H., he graduated from Yale College in 1828, and from the Theological Seminary in 1832. From Aug. 8, 1832, until April 8, 1835, he served the Church in North Killingly, now East Putnam, Conn. From October, 1835, until June, 1836, he was pastor in Whippany, N. J. From January 1838, to May, 1843, he preached in Beverly, Mass.; and from May, 1843, until December, 1846, he labored in Newton. During the succeeding eight years he was secretary of the American Seamen's Friend Society. In 1858 he received the degree of M.D. from Pennsylvania University, and practiced medicine until death, which occurred in East Boston, April 28, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 14; Obituary Record of Yale College, 1879.

Businck, LOUIS, a German wood engraver, lived at Minden about 1630. The following are some of his best prints: St. Peter Holding the Keys; St. John and St. Matthew; Judith with the Head of Holofernes; A Holy Family. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Buskagrius, JOHANNES PETRI, a Swedish scholar, was in 1661 professor of Oriental languages at Upsala, where he died in 1692. He wrote Disp. de Natura Mæore (Upsala, 1651):—Disp. de Usu et Necessitate Orientalium Linguarum (1654):—De Deorum Gentilium Origine et Cultu (1655). See Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 28; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Buskins (caligæ; anciently called campagi), are stockings of precious stuff—satin, cloth of gold, or silk embroidered—worn by bishops when celebrating, being the first vestment assumed; also by kings at their coronation, and on other solemn occasions. Anciently their use was confined to the bishop of Rome, but by the 9th century they were generally worn by all bishops. The buskins used at the coronation of king James II were made of cloth of tissue. Those belonging to bishop Waynflete, the founder of St. Mary Magdalen College, Oxford, are preserved in the library of that society.

Busmann, JOHANN EBERHARD, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Feb. 26, 1644, at Verden. He studied at Wittenberg and Helmstädt; was in 1678 licentiate, and in 1684 doctor and professor of theology; and in 1685 general superintendent at Helmstädt, where he died, May 18, 1692. He wrote, Disputationes de Fide Salvificæ seu Justificante:—De Schæol Hebræorum:—De Antiqua Hebræorum Literâ ab Ebra in Assyriacâ Mutatis:—De Apostasia Luciferi cum Angelis Svis. See Pippingii Memoriæ Theologorum; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 28; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Bussell, JOSEPH, an English Baptist minister, was born in Ross, Herefordshire, in 1815. He united with the Church in 1831, and began, while young, the work of village preaching. Having pursued a course of study in Bristol College, he became pastor of a Church in Modbury, in the south of Devon, and remained there about eleven years. His health failing, he returned to his native place, where he engaged in business with his brother, preaching as opportunity presented. He died Dec. 28, 1865. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1867, p. 131. (J. C. S.)

Bussero, GIUSEPPE LUIGI, an Italian theologian of the Carmelite order, was born at Milan in 1659, and died at Cremona in 1724, leaving Discorsi Sacri (Modena, 1693):—Lector Biblicus (Cremona, 1725; vol. i only was published posthumously). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bussey, AMOS, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Trumbull County, O., Nov. 20, 1806. He experienced religion; in 1833 was licensed to preach, and admitted into the Erie Conference. In 1837 he was transferred to the Indiana Conference; by its division, in 1852, he became a member of the South-eastern Indiana Conference; and in 1856 joined the Iowa Conference. In 1860 he became superannuated, and retired to Oskaloosa, where he remained to the close of his life, Jan. 18, 1865. Mr. Bussey was a faithful, laborious, able preacher; a tried friend, prudent counsellor, earnest Christian, and stanch Methodist. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 218.

Bussolari, GIACOMO DELI, an Italian preacher, was born in Pavia about the beginning of the 14th century. He early joined the Augustine order, and was sent to preach in Pavia in 1356, where he so severely inveighed against the prevailing vices of the city as to array against himself the hostility of the ruling family of Beccaria. He defended himself by force of arms for a while, but was finally overcome, and died in 1359 of injury by reason of imprisonment. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bussus, MATTEO. See BOSSIO.

Bustamante, Bartolomeo di, a Spanish theologian, was born at Lima, in Peru, in the 16th century. He was a Franciscan, and the author of a work entitled, Tratado de las Primicias del Piru en Santidad y Letras. See Biog. Universelle, vi, 378.

Bustamante (de la Camara), Juan, a Spanish theologian and naturalist, a native of Alcalá de Henares, lived in the first half of the 16th century. He studied in his native village, and then taught medicine and philosophy. He is known by a work entitled De Reptilibus vere Animantibus Sacræ Scripturæ (Alcalá, 1595, 2 vols. 4to; Lyons, 1620, 8vo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bustami was a Mohammedan mystic in the 9th century of our æra, who taught that the recognition of our personal existence was idolatry. He was a pantheist, and held that man is absorbed in God; and when he worships God he worships himself. See Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v.

Bustard, JOHN, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Sheffield, May 15, 1783. He was converted at the age of eighteen; was received into the travelling connection of preachers in 1807; retired to Sherborne in 1842; and died at Yeovil, Jan. 14, 1868. Bustard wrote biographies of Joseph (in verse), of Mary Ann Bustard, of Mildred, the Thanet Sunday-school teacher, of Lean, a young miner, of Miss H. M. Bingham and Mr. J. Bingham (1832, 12mo); revised and abridged Pierce's Sinner Impleaded in His Own Court, with a memoir of the author (1832, 16mo), and a volume of original poems—Scripture Themes in Rills and Streams (Bath, 12mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1868, p. 19; Osborne, Meth. Bibliog. p. 78, 215.

Busto (Lat. Bustius), BERNARDINO, an Italian preacher and theologian, belonged to the Franciscan order. He was a speaker of talent, and assisted in establishing the festival of the Holy Name of Jesus. He also wrote on this subject to pope Innocent VIII. He died about 1480. His complete works, among which are his sermons, were published under the title, Mariale, etc. (Milan, 1494; Strasburg, 1498, 1502; Brescia, 1588; Cologne, 1607). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buston (or Busten), THOMAS STEPHEN, an English missionary, was born in the county of Salisbury in 1549. After having studied at Rome, he became a Jesuit, and was sent into the East Indies, where he became rector of a college in the island of Salceter, where he remained forty years. He died at Goa in 1619, leaving in Portuguese some linguistic works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Bustos (y Viana), LUIZ F., a Spanish writer, was born at Granada in 1690. He was made, in 1756, by king Ferdinand VI., historiographer of the new discoveries in Granada. He has been called, by some Spanish writer, "the Coryphæus of Spanish literature, and the prince of ecclesiastical historians." Among his works are, A Dissertation on the Arrival of St. James the Great in Spain:—A Catalogue of all the Bishops, Religious Orders, Great Colleges, Inquisitors General, and Grandees of Spain:—Dissertations on the Authenticity of St. Veronica of Jaen:—A Dissertation on the Spanish Liturgy:—A Critique on almost every Ecclesiastical Author; etc.

Bustum was a place appointed for burning the bodies of the dead among the ancient Romans. The Bustum was in the immediate neighborhood of the place of sepulture, that when the body was consumed the ashes might be interred. See CREMATION.

Busum (or Suman) (sacredness) is the native name used by the Ashantees and Fantees for the deities worshipped by the negroes, commonly called fetiches (q. v.).

Butcher, Henry William, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Aug. 22, 1833, of Wesleyan parents. He received a careful religious training, and early gave himself to the worship and service of God. In 1853 he entered Cheshunt College, and in 1857 became pastor at Long Buckby, Northamptonshire, whence, in 1863, he removed to Margate, where the chief work of his life was done. Here he died, June 5, 1878. Mr. Butcher had great public spirit, and manifested his zeal in the discussion of political, ecclesiastical, educational, and moral questions. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1879, p. 305.

Butcher, John, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in the city of London in July, 1666. Early in life, under the careful instruction of his pious parents, he was brought to the knowledge of the truth; and, when he was but fifteen years of age, began to testify in public of the grace of the Lord Jesus. Gradually he grew to be an able minister, "not of the letter, but of the Spirit." After being approved as a servant of the Master to whom he devoted the remainder of his life, he itinerated much as a preacher in many parts of England. He was everywhere a promoter of peace and concord, and it was his special delight to heal breaches and reconcile differences among brethren. He died near Edmonton, Middlesex, Sept. 16, 1721. See Piety Promoted, ii, 352, 353. (J. C. S.)

Butcher, Thomas Benjamin, an English Congregational minister, was born at Wandsworth, Surrey, in 1790. He was converted at the age of fifteen. In 1840 he was chosen deacon. His first and only charge was Northfleet, where he labored fifty years. He died July 6, 1858. Mr. Butcher was distinguished for great benevolence, disinterestedness, and zeal. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1859, p. 192.

Butcher, William Colman, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Mechanicsville, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1841. He received a careful religious training; was a thoughtful, studious young man; graduated at the law university in Albany in 1864; soon afterwards was converted, and in 1869 entered the Troy Conference. In its active ranks he labored to the time of his decease, Dec. 14, 1874. Mr. Butcher was the possessor of an excellent spirit, a clear judgment, a well-disciplined mind, ready utterance, and was habitually studious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 65.

Buth is the title of an individual who runs furiously on certain days of the year through the city of Lassa, in Thibet, killing recklessly all whom he meets, in honor of the goddess Manipa, who is said to take special delight in the shedding of blood.

Buthos or Bythos (Búthos, the abyss) was the primal essence, among the Valentinian Gnostics, where the spirit is lost in contemplation. According to this system all existence has its ground in the self-limitation of the Buthos, which has in it a fulness of divine life that flows out in the complete series of æons (q. v.). —Gardner, Faiths of the World, s. v. See GNOSTICS.

Butini, Dominique, a Swiss preacher, was born at Geneva in 1677, and died in 1728. He was librarian in 1709, and published Theses et Universa Philosophia (Geneva, 4to). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Butini, Gabriel, a Swiss ascetic theologian and poet, lived in the middle of the 17th century. Having been a village pastor in 1629, he obtained the office of curate of Geneva in 1689. He wrote, Carmina in Miraculosum et Felicem Liberationem a Deo Optimo Muzimo Urbi Geneva Missam anno 1602:—In Obitum Jacobi Godefredi Carmen Epicedium (1652). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Butini, Pierre, a Swiss theologian and preacher, was born Feb. 8, 1678. Having been admitted to the priestly office in 1698, he was called to preach at Leipsic, where he remained three years. He refused a call to the Church in London, and contented himself with the office of preacher in Geneva, where he died in 1706. He wrote, Histoire de la Vie de Jésus-Christ (Geneva, 1710):—Sermons sur Divers Textes de l'Écriture Sainte (1708, 1736). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Butinone, Bernardo, an Italian painter, a native of Travillo, was the companion and friend of Bernardino. In the Church of San Pietro, in Gessato, there are several pictures by Butinone, executed about 1484. He died in 1520.

Butland, Benjamin Charles, an English Congregational minister, was born in 1838. He learned the printer's trade in London in the rooms of the Religious Tract Society. Having become interested in the work of foreign missions, he studied in the missionary institution at Bedford, and afterwards at New College, London. He was then ordained in connection with the Colonial Missionary Society, and set out immediately afterwards for New Zealand. He spent three years at Thames Settlement, after which he returned to England. He was then invited to the pastorate of the Church at Leyland, in Lancashire. His zeal for missionary labors, however, led him to remove to Jamaica in September, 1875. For three years he gave himself to the laborious duties of the pastorate of Four Paths and Brixton Hill. In February, 1879, he accepted the pastorate at Kingston, Jamaica, where he died, June 3, 1880. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 360.

Butler, Augustus Matthew, an English Congregational minister, was born at Leicester, March 5, 1837. He was converted in early life, and joined the Church in 1858. In 1861 he became evangelist to the Leicestershire Congregational Union, and five years later removed to Stowupland as an evangelist to the Suffolk Union. He accepted an invitation to the pastorate at Reddings, Derbyshire, in 1869, and there died, Jan. 18, 1875. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 319.

Butler, Calvin, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Jericho, Vt., May 23, 1797. He graduated at Middlebury College in 1824, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1827; was ordained by Londonderry Presbytery in 1827; labored first at Princeton, Ind., then at Evansville; went next to Washington, Ind., where he preached till the fall of 1838. He then removed to Booneville, and preached to two churches until 1849, when he came to Marine, Madison Co., Ill., and joined Alton Presbytery. He died Nov. 2, 1854. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois; Gen. Cat. of Andover Sem. 1870, p. 74.

Butler, Charles F., a Presbyterian minister, was born at New Hartford, Conn., Jan. 21, 1790. He graduated from Yale College in 1816. After leaving college he taught for two years at Bedford Academy, Bedford, N. Y. In 1819 he was licensed by the Congregational Association of Fairfield County, Conn. He labored at South Salem, Westchester Co., N. Y., until 1828, after which he was pastor in Greenwich, Conn., for ten years. After he had been in the ministry about three years he severed his connection with the Congregational Association, and joined the Rock River Presbytery. He died in 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 286.

Butler, Clark Spencer, a Baptist minister, was born in Montgomery County, N. C., April 4, 1825. When about five years old he moved with his parents to Carroll County, Tenn., where he spent the most of his life. He was a soldier in the Mexican war. In 1847 he united with the Church, was ordained in April, 1853, and for nearly twenty years was a faithful and laborious minister. Being a farmer and poor, he had to labor hard for a support, the churches which he served rendering him but little pecuniary aid. He died Oct. 6, 1872. See Borum, Sketches of Tenn. Ministers, p. 56, 58. (J. C. S.)

Butler, George W., a Baptist minister, was born in Hallowell, Me., April 12, 1817, and united when quite young with the Church. Later in life he pursued a course of study, completing it at the New Hampton Institution. He was ordained at Stratford, N. H., in October, 1846, and spent seven years in laboring among the feeble churches in Coos County, N. H. Subsequently he was pastor three years in Tyngsboro, Mass., and then two years in Sutton, N. H., followed by one year in Hartford, N. Y. In May, 1857, he moved to Berlin Heights, O., where, after laboring very earnestly for a little more than a year, he died, Sept. 15, 1858. (J. C. S.)

Butler, Elijah, a native Cherokee minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was converted in early life, and spoke only Cherokee; but in it was well educated. As far back as 1855 his name is in the Indian Mission Conference minutes, from which date to his death in 1873, he labored faithfully among his people, highly esteemed by all and doing much good. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1873, p. 881.

Butler, Franklin, a Congregational minister, was born at Essex, Vt., Oct. 3, 1814. He graduated from the University of Vermont in 1836, and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1842. The following year, Jan. 18, he was ordained pastor in Windsor, Vt., and remained there until Nov. 11, 1858. For ten years he was agent for the American Colonization Society; from 1867 to 1874 he was editor of the Vermont Chronicle, and during the same time, and until death, he edited the Vermont Journal. For some time he was chaplain of the state prison. In addition to his other duties he served as acting-pastor of the Church in Acuteville from 1869 to 1876. He died May 23, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 18.

Butler, Frederick B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born, in Prince George County, Va., July 22, 1803, of pious parents. He experienced conversion in his twenty-second year; and in 1827 entered the Ohio Conference. In 1829 his health failed, and he retired from active service until 1834, when he again resumed his place in the active ranks. He died March 5, 1839. The conspicuous elements of Mr. Butler's character were dignity and humility, fervor and gentleness, plainness and brotherly kindness. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1840, p. 51.

Butler, Henry, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at New Vineyard, Me., July 15, 1806. He studied for the law, but experienced religion when about twenty-six years of age, and soon after began preaching. In 1832 he entered the Maine Conference. For eleven years he held an effective relation, and then became a supernumerary, which relation he sustained to the close of his life, April 5, 1850. Mr. Butler excelled in energy, faith, labors, deep piety, power with God, in preaching talents, and in the number brought into the Church, any man of his time and conference. He was an exemplary Christian. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1850, p. 482.

Butler, Jeremiah, a Congregational minister, was born at Onondaga, N. Y., May 29, 1812. After studying at the Onondaga Academy, and at the Grand River Institute, in Austinburg, O., he entered Oberlin College, from which he graduated in 1842, and from the Theological Seminary in 1845. In the latter year he was ordained at Oberlin, and soon after became acting pastor in Bellevue, O., serving in that position until April, 1849. From October, 1852, to January, 1858, he ministered in Riga, N. Y.; from 1858 to 1864 in Bergen; from 1864 to 1878 in Fairport, where he died, July 27, 1880. See Cong. Year-book, 1881, p. 18.

Butler, Joel, a Baptist minister, joined the Baptists in 1780, and was ordained at Woodstock, Vt., in 1785. He moved from field to field westerly through the state of New York, and died at Geneva, Ind., Sept. 13, 1822, in his seventy-first year. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, vi, 411.

Butler, John (1), D.D., an English prelate, was born in Hamburg, Germany, probably of English parents, in December, 1717. In early life he was a tutor in the family of Mr. Child, a banker. He became, first, chaplain to the bishop of London, and obtained the living of Everley, in Wiltshire. On the recommendation of Lord Onslow he was appointed one of the king's chaplains, and obtained a prebend in Winchester cathedral. He supported the administration of Lord North, and wrote several pamphlets in which he endeavored to justify the American war. As a reward for these services he was made archdeacon of Surrey, and in 1777 bishop of Oxford. He held at the same time the living of Cuddesden. In 1788 he was translated to the see of Hereford, over which he presided until his death, Dec. 10, 1802. He published several political tracts and a number of single sermons. He collected and published a number of his discourses under the title of Select Sermons, etc. (1801). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Butler, John (2), a Baptist minister, was born in Nottingham, N. H., April 13, 1789. He was converted in his fourteenth year by the preaching of Rev. Thomas Paul, a distinguished minister of African descent, and after his baptism, Oct. 6, 1806, became a member of the Church in Newbury and Newburyport, Mass. He was licensed to preach in April, 1809, and in 1810 was ordained pastor of the Church in Hanover, Mass. In 1824 he removed to Waterville, Me., where he established a school for young ladies, still continuing to preach. In May, 1825, he removed to Winthrop, where, besides carrying on his school, he acted as pastor of the Church for six years. He became pastor of the Church in North Yarmouth, May 8, 1831, in which office he continued until Oct. 15, 1835. On resigning, he accepted an appointment from the Maine Baptist Convention, and was in their service nearly two years. The ten subsequent years of his life were spent in doing the work of an evangelist. During this period he took an active part in eighteen revivals, in which it is estimated that about twelve hundred persons were converted. He died at Franklin, O., July 1, 1856. See Origin of the Church in Yarmouth, Me., p. 15, 16. (J. C. S.)

Butler, John George, a Lutheran minister, was born in Philadelphia in 1754. He served some time in the Revolutionary war, and afterwards commenced a course of theology under the direction of his pastor. In 1779 he was licensed by the Synod of Pennsylvania, and soon after took charge of the Lutheran Church in Carlisle and vicinity. He made missionary tours through Virginia and Tennessee. In 1805 he removed to Cumberland, Md., and took charge of the congregation there, organized in 1794. Here he continued to labor with much zeal until the close of his life, Dec.

12, 1816. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, i, 72; Evangelical Review, x, 564.

Butler, Joseph, a Presbyterian minister, was born on the shores of Lake Champlain in 1799. He was educated at Middlebury College, licensed by the Congregational Association at Montpelier in 1825, and ordained by Champlain Presbytery in 1827. In 1836 he went West, spent some time in Indiana, and then went to Illinois. He was called at once to the Church of Shiloh, in Edwards Co., and there labored, with but short intermissions, for twenty-three years. He removed from Illinois to Pawselin, Minn., where he died, Oct. 27, 1872. See Norton, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Illinois; (N. Y.) Presbyterian, Oct. 19, 1872.

Butler, Lilly, D.D., an English clergyman, became vicar of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, London, in 1691, prebendary of Canterbury, March 21, 1717, and died May 7, 1717. He published several single sermons. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Butler, P. E., an English Baptist minister, was born in Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1803, and was educated for the Church of England at Trinity College, Dublin. He was for several years curate of St. Margaret's, Ipswich, where he was held in high esteem, and preached with much success. Subsequently he left the Established Church, and was baptized at Stepney College Chapel in October, 1837, and in the April following he became pastor of the Church in Keppel street, where he remained for a short time, and then resigned on account of the state of his health. His death took place April 8, 1842. He was the author of a volume of poems on religious subjects, a volume of sermons, and several minor pieces. See Report of English Baptist Union, 1842, p. 23. (J. C. S.)

Butler, Stephen, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Peasmarsh, Sussex, June 29, 1781. In 1802 he received his first appointment, Lynn, and subsequently labored on the Thetford, Norwich, Grimsby, Winterton, Lincoln, and Ipswich circuits. He died at Peasmarsh, March 30, 1818. He was of an unblemished character and naturally reserved. See Wesl. Meth. Magazine, 1820, p. 161; Minutes of the British Conference, 1818.

Butler, Thornton, a German Reformed minister, was born in Catawba County, N. C., Oct. 4, 1820. After completing his theological course at Mercersburg, Pa., he returned to his native state, and was licensed and ordained by the Classis of North Carolina, March 12, 1848. In the same year he became pastor of five congregations in Davidson County, N. C. In 1858 he accepted a call from the East Rowan charge, where he labored for ten years, and then, in 1868, removed to Anna, Ill., where he died, Nov. 2, 1870. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 396.

Butler, Weeden, an English clergyman, was born at Margate in 1742. He was curate to the celebrated Dr. Dodd, and his successor, at Charlotte Chapel, Pimlico. He kept a classical school at Chelsea for forty years, and died in 1823. He published Sermons (1798-99), and other works, for which see Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Butler, W., an English Baptist minister, was born at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, in August, 1801, united with the General Baptist Church in Cauldwell in the autumn of 1817, and soon after began to preach. He was ordained in July, 1825, at Kegworth, where he remained till 1828, and then removed to Longford, Warwickshire, and in 1834 to Hleptonstall Slack, where he continued as pastor till 1848. He died April 19, 1850. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1851, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Butler, William, was an Englishman, who died in 1410, and wrote on the subject of indulgences and against the English version of the Bible, which was made about that time.

Butler, Zebulon, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 27, 1803. He was educated at the Academy of Wilkesbarre, and at Nassau Hall (College of New Jersey). He graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1826, was licensed the same year, and settled in 1828 at Port Gibson, Miss., where his earnest, laborious, and useful life was spent. He died Dec. 23, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 84.

Buto, in Egyptian mythology, was a goddess especially worshipped in the city of the same name in the delta of the Nile, where she had the most magnificent temple. When Isis was persecuted by Typhon, she gave both her children, Bubastis and Horus, to this goddess. As the latter correspond to the Greek Diana and Apollo, so Buto appears as their mother Latona. She had an oracle in Buto, and the Egyptians relate that the city could move from place to place, in order to hide Horus and Bubastis. Every Egyptian deity has its sacred animal: that of Buto was the mouse. See MAUT.

Butson, CHRISTOPHER, a prelate of the Church of England, was born in 1750. He was educated at Winchester; and originally matriculated at Oxford as a commoner of Trinity College, Jan. 22, 1767. In 1768 he succeeded to a scholarship at New College; in 1771, obtained the chancellor's prize for English Verse, on The Love of Our Country; April 3, 1772, he graduated A.B.; and in 1774 vacated his fellowship at New College by marriage; and shortly after was preferred to the deanery of Waterford; whence, in 1804, he was promoted to a seat on the Irish bench, being appointed to the bishoprics of Clonfert and Kilmacduagh, which had been merged in the sees of Killaloe and Kilfenora. Bishop Butson died in 1836. See (Lond.) Christian Remembrancer, April, 1836, p. 249.

Butta (Butto, or Butro). In some MSS. of the Liber Pontificalis

we read that Leo III (795-816) caused to be made for the venerable monastery of St. Sabas, "butronem [al. buttonem] argenteum cum canistro suo pensantem libr. xii." Leo IV (847-855) is also reported, by the same authority, to have placed in the Church of St. Peter, "butronem ex argento purissimo, qui pendet in presbyterio ante altare, pensantem libr. cxlix;" and another, also of pure silver, "cum gabatis argenteis pendentibus in catenulis septem."

These buttæ seem to have been suspended cups used for lamps. See CANISTRUM; GABATHA. The illustrations are from the Hierolexicon; the first is a single suspended butta, from an ancient representation; the second, a corona with three hanging buttæ, from an old painting once existing in St. Peter's at Rome.

The form butrista is used, apparently in the same sense, by Alcuin, Poem. 165 (Du Cange, Glossary; Macri, Hierolexicon, s. v. "Butto").

Martene (De Ant. Eccl. Rit. iii, 96) describes a buta as used for fetching and preserving the chrism, according to an ancient custom, in the church of St. Martin at Tours.

Butteau, THOMAS, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Dec. 26, 1785, of pious parents. He became an orphan early in life; received his education at Hackney College; and first settled in the ministry at Cannock, Staffordshire. He afterwards preached eighteen years at Oulton, Norfolk; fourteen years at Wycliffe; a short time at the church in Oxford Street, Cambridge road; and in 1860 retired from public life. He died at Mile End, Feb. 2, 1865. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1866, p. 239.

Butterfield, George, a Congregational minister, was born Sept. 5, 1810. He studied theology at the Bangor, Me., Seminary, and graduated from the Connecticut Theological Institute in 1838. He was ordained at Wilmington, Vt., in June, 1838; installed at Queechy in 1843, remaining there till 1845; was acting pastor at Randolph from 1845 to 1853; pastor at Eagle Point, Ill., from 1855 to 1860. He removed to Monticello, Ia.; and during the civil war he served three years in the Thirty-seventh Iowa Infantry. For two years he was engaged in mission work in York County, Neb.; and spent the last seven years of his life in Monticello, where he died, July 15, 1872. See Alumni Records of Conn. Theol. Ins., p. 19. (J. C. S.)

Butterfield, William, an English Wesleyan preacher, was born at Halifax, Yorkshire. He was converted in early life; became a local preacher; entered the ministry in 1784; and, after a faithful service of eleven years, he died at Darlington, Yorkshire, in 1794 (or 1795). See Atmore, Meth. Memorial, s. v.

Butterworth, Edward, a preacher of the United Methodist Free Church, was born at Manchester, Eng., in January, 1841. He was converted at the age of twenty, and began to call sinners to repentance soon afterwards. In the Sabbath-school and ragged school he was an earnest worker. He devoted himself to mission work in East Africa, arriving at Ribe in February, 1864, full of energy and faith. Fever closed his labors within three months of his arrival. His life was brief, but bright.—Minutes of Eighth Annual Assembly.

Butterworth, Laurence, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1741, and in 1765 was ordained as pastor of the Church at Evesham, in Worcestershire. This was his only pastorate, and was continued for more than sixty-three years. Such was the vigor of his physical constitution, that he was able to preach till within a very few weeks of his death, which occurred July 1, 1828. He maintained a high Christian character, being distinguished for his integrity, Christian affection, benevolence, and fidelity to the duties of the sacred office. See New Baptist Miscellany, 1828, p. 310. (J. C. S.)

Buttinghausen, CARL, a German theologian, was born at Frankenthal in 1731. He taught theology at Heidelberg, and constantly applied himself to historical researches upon the various states of Germany. He died June 13, 1786. He wrote a Supplement to the Chronicles of Arenten (Frankfort, 1758):—History of the Palatinate and Switzerland (Zurich, 1766). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buttlar, EVA VON, the foundress of the German so-called Buttlar sect, was born at Eschwege, Hesse, in 1670. At the age of seventeen she married a French refugee, De Vesias, who was a dancing-master at Eisenach. She led a very dissipated life; and, being awakened under the influence of pietism, in 1697, she left her husband, and held religious meetings, in which, under the mask of higher sanctity, the most shameful things were committed. She founded at Allendorf, in 1702, the so-called Christian and Philadelphian Society; but within six weeks she was expelled with her adherents. The sect carried on its criminal proceedings at many other places, whither it emigrated. Eva was honored as the door of paradise, as the New Jerusalem, as the mother of us all, as the Sophia come down from heaven, the new Eve, and the incarnation of the Holy Spirit. God the Father was incarnate in the candidate Winter, and God the Son in her youthful paramour Appenfeller. Marriage was declared to be sinful; sensual lust must be put to death in spiritual communion, then carnal communion is also holy. Eva lived in the most shameful harlotry with all the men of the sect; likewise the other women belonging to it. At Sasmannshausen, in Wittgenstein, where their secret worship had been watched, they were threatened with punishment, but escaped. In Cologne they connected themselves with the Roman Catholic Church. At Lude, near Pymont, their criminal madness reached its highest point. Winter was condemned to death, but had his punishment commuted to scourging (1706). Eva escaped the same punishment by flight, and carried on her scandalous conduct for some years longer, but with more prudence. At Altona she belonged outwardly to the Lutheran Church, leading a decent life. She died there after 1717. See Keller, Die Buttlarische Rotte, in Niedner's Zeitschrift für historische Theologie (1845); Göbel, Geschichte des christlichen Lebens in der rheinisch-westphälischen-evangelischen Kirche (Coblentz, 1852), ii, 778-809; Dibelius, in Herzog's Real-Encyklop. (2d ed.) s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v. Büttner, Christoph Andreas, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Oct. 31, 1706, at Nuremberg. He studied at Altorf, and for a time was professor of philosophy at Halle. In 1737 he was called to Stettin; and in 1754 as rector to Stralsund, where he died, Oct. 24, 1774. He wrote, Disp. qua facta Quædam Abrahami Secundum jus Naturæ Considerantur (Altorf, 1727):—Disp. qua Judicium de non Existentia Diaboli Dijudicatur (ibid. 1734):—Disp. de Inaufficientia Rationis ad Salutem (ibid. 1735):—Cursus Theologiæ Revelatæ (Stettin, 1746):—Acentuationis Hebrææ Introductio (ibid. 1747):—Hebrew Grammar (Halle, 1748):—Ratio Chaldaismus Biblicum Formandi (Stettin, 1753). See Meusel, Gelehrtes Deutschland; Steinschneider, Bibliographisches Handbuch, p. 28; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Büttner, David Sigismund, a German theologian of the 18th century, was deacon at Querfurt, and wrote a work on the Deluge (Leipsic, 1710). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Büttner, Gottlieb, a Moravian minister, was born in Germany in 1717, and came to America in October, 1741. In 1740 a mission had been established at Shacomaco, a village thirty miles from Poughkeepsie, near the borders of the Connecticut. Count Zinzendorf ordained Büttner a deacon in February, 1742, and he was appointed a Moravian missionary to this mission. During the first year of his labors among the Mohegan Indians thirty-one persons were baptized. In 1743 Büttner was subjected to considerable persecution, being charged with preaching without authority, and of refusing, on conscientious grounds, to take the oath of allegiance to the constituted authorities. In consequence of this persecution, ten families of the Mohegans removed to Pennsylvania, where a tract of land had been purchased for them. Büttner died shortly before the breaking-up of the mission, Feb. 23, 1745. See Loskiel, Hist. of Morav. Miss. ii, 58, 63; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Büttner, Johann Ernst, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born April 11, 1648, at Friedersdorf, in Upper Lausatia. He studied at Jena; was in 1676 conrector at Lemgo, in 1678 at Stade, in 1685 deacon there; in 1699 he was made pastor primarius of St. Nicolai; and died March 13, 1725. He wrote, Disp. de Essentia (Jena):—De Nomine Messia Glorioso Jehovah Justitia nostra ex Jer. xiii, 6:—Inquisitio Theol. in Historiam Joannis filii Zachariae (ibid. 1670):—*Disp. Button, Alfred, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Fort Plain, N. Y., July 30, 1824. He was converted in 1844; licensed to preach in 1851, and in 1853 entered the Oneida Conference, wherein he labored faithfully till his death, Sept. 27, 1860. Mr. Button was cheerful, eminently pious, and an able, growing minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1861, p. 85.

Button, George, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Rotherham, Yorkshire, in 1754. He united with the Church in youth; was called into the ministry in 1779, and continued in its labors until his death, at Shaftesbury, in 1822. "He was remarkable for self-denial, plainness, abstraction from the world, and devotion to God." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1822.

Button, John Wesley, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Gainsborough, March 28, 1798. In 1820 he was sent to Shaftesbury as supply for his father, Rev. George Button. The following year he went to Witney—his first appointment by Conference: In 1846 he was sent to Oxford, and in 1847 was made chairman of the district. In 1850 he became supernumerary; and on May 26, 1879, he died at Wimborne. He stood high in the estimation of his brethren. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 39.

Buttress, a projection from a wall to create additional strength and support. Buttresses, properly so called, are not used in Classical architecture, as the projections are formed into pilasters, antæ, or some other feature in the general arrangement, so as to disguise or destroy the appearance of strength and support. Norman buttresses, especially in the earlier part of the style, are generally of considerable breadth and very small projection, and add so little to the substance of the wall that it may be supposed they were used at least as much for ornament as for support. They are commonly not divided into stages, but continue of the same breadth and thickness from the ground to the top, and either die into the wall with a slope immediately below the parapet, or are continued up to the parapet, which frequently overhangs the perpendicular face of the wall as much as the buttresses project in order to receive them, as at the nave of Southwell Minster. Occasionally small shafts are worked on the angles of Norman buttresses, but these generally indicate that the work is late.

Early English buttresses have usually considerably less breadth and much greater projection than the Norman, and often stand out very boldly. They are sometimes continued throughout their whole height without any diminution, but are often broken into stages with a successive reduction in their projection, and not unfrequently in their width also, in each; the sets-off dividing the stages are generally sloped at a very acute angle; the buttresses terminate at the top either with a plain slope dying into the wall, or with a triangular head (or pediment) which sometimes stands against the parapet, sometimes below it, and sometimes rises above it, producing something of the effect of a pinnacle, as at Salisbury. The buttresses at the angles of buildings in the Early English style usually consist either of a pair, one standing on each side of the angle, or of one large square buttress entirely covering the angle, and this is sometimes surmounted by a pinnacle. Pinnacles on buttresses of other kinds in this style are very rare, and are indications that the work is late. The angles of Early English buttresses are very commonly chamfered off, and are occasionally moulded: with this style flying or arch buttresses seem first to have been used, but they did not become common till a subsequent period.

In the Decorated style the buttresses are almost invariably worked in stages, and are very often ornamented, frequently with niches, with crocketed canopies, and other carved decorations; and they very commonly, in large buildings, terminate in pinnacles, which are sometimes of open work, forming niches or canopies for statues. With the introduction of this style the angle buttresses began to be set diagonally.

In the Perpendicular style, the buttresses differ but little in general form and arrangement from the Decorated; but the ornaments of the buttresses in each of the styles partook of the prevailing character of the architecture, and varied with it. Thus in the latter specimens of the 15th century they

Butts, Joshua, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Stowe, Vt., April 26, 1804. His early education was received in the common schools of his native place. He never entered or graduated from any college. He placed himself as a candidate for the ministry under the care of the Baltimore Presbytery. In 1832 he entered Princeton Seminary, from which he graduated in 1835. For the next five years he was engaged as a supply to churches in the neighborhood of Baltimore. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Carmel Church, N. Y., by the Presbytery of Bedford, June 8, 1841. After serving this Church one year, he engaged to supply the Church at Yorkville, near New York city, and was installed its pastor in 1848 by the Presbytery of N. Y.; labored here diligently and successfully until 1852, when he resigned and went to California. While there he supplied the First Church of Brooklyn, and afterwards resided at Placerville, Cal., until 1858, when he returned to Yorkville. After the breaking-out of the civil war he accepted the chaplaincy of the 47th Regiment N. Y. volunteers, serving from 1861 to 1865. He died at Chappaqua, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1881. He was under fire in about thirty battles, but never wounded. He was much loved by the soldiers, and faithful in the discharge of his duties. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 48. (W. P. S.)

Butts, Robert, D.D., an English prelate, became dean of Norwich in February, 1731, and was consecrated bishop of that see Feb. 25, 1733. He was translated to the see of Ely, May 25, 1738; and died at Ely House, Holborn, Jan. 26, 1748. He published a Sermon on the Accession (1712):—Sermon before the House of Lords (1737):—Charge to his Clergy (1740). See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Buttsedt, JOHANN ANDREAS, a German Lutheran doctor and professor of theology, was born Sept. 19, 1701, at Kirchheim. He studied at Jena; was in 1741 appointed director of the gymnasium at Hildesheim, in 1743 director at Gera, and in 1751 at Coburg. In 1752 he took his degree as doctor of divinity, and in 1763 was appointed professor of theology at Erlangen, where he died, March 14, 1765. He wrote Die Nothwendigkeit der Geheimnisse in der wahren Religion aus der Vernunft bewiesen (Leipsic, 1730):—Vernünftige Gedanken über die Natur Gottes (ibid. 1736):—Ueber die Schöpfung der Welt (Wolfenbüttel, 1737):—Ueber die Schöpfung des Menschen (Leipsic, 1738):—*Specimen Philologiae S. i. Buy (or Bhuis), FÉLIX, a French Carmelite, was born at Lyons about 1657. He began his studies at Chalons and Valence, and finished them at Paris, where he gained some notoriety by a thesis on the Gallic Church. He wrote a small work entitled Histoire des Quatres Conciles Généraux (Paris, 2 vols. 12mo). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buya. See BUSEE.

Buza ("Natives") was the third great caste of the Medes; the Buza of the Greek historians.

Buzacott, Aaron (1), an English Congregational minister, was born at South Molton, Devon, March 4, 1800, where he was converted in early life and joined the Independent Church. In 1823 he entered Hoxton Academy, and in 1825 offered his services to the London Missionary Society, and was sent to finish his curriculum at the missionary college, Gosport. He left England in 1827, and arrived safely at Avarua, Rarotonga, where he began his labors as teacher, preacher, translator, and printer. Mr. Buzacott found the natives of Rarotonga, in 1827, without a written language; and in 1846 he had translated the whole Bible, and written several useful works in the native tongue. Between 1846 and 1852 he travelled in England to recruit his health; meanwhile publishing his Rarotonga Bible, and advocating the cause of missions. He then returned to his adopted home with five thousand copies of the Bible, a gift of the Bible Society to the natives. He now resumed his work, both as minister of a large congregation, and as tutor of the Institution for Training Native Christian youths as teachers and evangelists. The climate and his incessant labors compelled him to retire to Sidney in 1858, where he continued to reside till his death, Sept. 19, 1864. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1865, p. 229.

Buzacott, Aaron (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Tahiti, South Sea Islands, Oct. 19, 1827, where his parents tarried for a short time on their voyage to the mission field of Rarotonga. He remained with his parents until his twelfth year, when he was sent for instruction to Sydney, New South Wales. Thence he came to England, and was placed in the mission-school at Walthamstow, where he was converted, and began to labor for the salvation of others. Having chosen the missionary work, he studied with the Rev. W. Legge, of Fakenham, Norfolk; then at Cheshunt College; afterwards at New College. Being impressed that his duty was not in the mission field, he accepted the charge of the Church at Debenham, Norfolk, and then at Fetter-lane, London, each for one year. He was ordained at Long Sutton, Lincolnshire, June 18, 1856, and six years afterwards he removed to Romford, in Essex. In May, 1864, he became pastor of the Pentonville-road chapel; and, in 1868, at Asylum-road, Peckham. He was secretary of the Congregational Union of Surrey for three years, and of the Anti-slavery Society for four years. He died Oct. 9, 1881. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1882, p. 287.

Buzanval, NICOLAS (surnamed Choart or Chicheraï de), a French prelate, was born at Paris, July 25, 1611. After passing through several civil dignities, he entered orders, and was promoted to the bishopric of Beauvais, in which office he distinguished himself by establishing hospitals and a clerical school. He died July 21, 1679. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buzetti, VINCENTO BENEDETTO, an Italian theologian, was born at Piacenza, April 29, 1777. He studied at the college Alberoni, and taught philosophy and theology in his native city. He died there Dec. 14, 1824. He wrote a number of religious works, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Buzzell, Aaron, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Barrington, N. H., November, 1764. He was converted at the age of twenty-five, and soon after he began to speak in public, and with his brother John, travelled and labored for seven years. His first effort at preaching was at Alton. His ordination occurred at the October term of the New Durham Quarterly Meeting, 1794. Subsequently he travelled very extensively in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, where his labors were greatly blessed. He organized and assisted in organizing many churches, and baptized more than one thousand persons. He was held in high esteem in Strafford, Vt., his residence of more than half a century, where he died, in October, 1854. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1856, p. 90. (J. C. S.)

Buzzell, Hezekiah, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born at Alton, N. H., Dec. 16, 1777. Shortly after his conversion, about 1799, he commenced preaching, and was ordained Jan. 25, 1803. For fifty years he served his Master in the ministry of the Gospel. A large part of his life was spent in itinerant labor, in which he was very useful. He resided for a time in Weare and then in Gilmanton, and other places in his native state, and finally closed his labors with the Church in Alton. For several years he was a member of the state legislature, either of the House of Representatives or the Senate. He died Sept. 6, 1858. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1860, p. 90. (J. C. S.)

Buzzell, John, a Baptist minister, was born in Barrington, N. H., Sept. 16, 1766. His early youth was devoted to teaching. He was converted in the winter of 1790, and was ordained at Middleton, Oct. 25, 1792. Having identified himself with the Free-will Baptist denomination, he entered zealously into the work of establishing new churches, and strengthening those already formed in different sections of New England. He became pastor at Parsonsfield, Me., in the spring of 1798. He died March 29, 1863, at a very advanced age. His services were in constant demand to promote the interests of his denomination. For several years he was president of their Foreign Missionary Society. He also, by correspondence, brought his denomination into fraternal relations with the General Baptists of England. He was a prime mover in the establishment of the Parsonsfield Seminary. He was noted as an author and a vigorous writer. In 1811 he commenced the publication of a religious magazine, and for several years made it most serviceable in promoting the interests of his denomination. In 1823 he published the first denominational hymn-book, and was one of the association which established the Morning Star, of which paper he was for several years one of the editors. See Barrett, Memoirs of Eminent Preachers. (J. C. S.)

Buzzell, William, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Middleton, N. H., in 1775. He made a public profession of his faith Oct. 17, 1798, and very soon began to speak as a teacher of religion, but was not regularly set apart to the work of the ministry until the autumn of 1804. He exercised his ministry in his native town, laboring especially in revivals there in 1807, 1808, 1812, and 1815. The Church was unable to do much for his temporal support, and he was therefore obliged to resort to secular pursuits. The section of country in which he lived was largely dependent on him for ministerial services, and the constant calls he received took him so much from his daily work that he was often brought into great straits. Besides preaching in his native town, he also supplied pulpits in Wolfborough, New Durham, Acton, Me., and some other places. He labored on amid many discouragements until the fall of 1841. A lingering sickness terminated his life, June 14, 1844. See Morning Star, xix, 42. (J. C. S.)

Byam, HENRY, D.D., a learned English divine, was born at East Luckham, near Dunster, in Somersetshire, Aug. 31, 1580. He was educated at Exeter College and Christ Church, Oxford. In 1612 he obtained the rectory of Luckham and that of Salworthy adjoining. In 1631 he became a prebendary of Exeter, and on the meeting of parliament was unanimously chosen by the clergy of his diocese to be their clerk in convocation. He was a firm adherent of the royal family in the Rebellion, and suffered the loss of all his property on that account. During the exile of the prince Dr. Byam officiated as his chaplain, first in the island of Scilly, and afterwards in that of Jersey, until the garrison was captured by Cromwell's forces. At the Restoration he was made canon of Exeter, and prebendary of Wells. He died June 16, 1669. His works consisted of Thirteen Sermons (Lond. 1675), most of them preached before his majesty in his exile. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Byars, Wesley S., a Baptist minister, was born in Greenville County, N. C., Feb. 18, 1825. He removed in 1829 to Henry County, Tenn., and in 1831 to Haywood County. He united with the Church in October, 1842. After residing in one or two places during the next few years, he returned to Haywood County, and was ordained Nov. 20, 1854. He was pastor of quite a number of churches in Tennessee during his ministry, among which were Friendship, Miller's Chapel, and Providence. He died in Friendship, Crockett Co., April 29, 1875. See Borum, Sketches of Tennessee Ministers, p. 79. (J. C. S.)

Bye-Altars (or Tables), as called by bishop Ridley, probably designate minor or secondary altars, in distinction from the high-altar; but in the primitive Church there were two tables, one, for holding the vestments, on the right side, and the other on the left, for the vessels; and so the term may indicate a credence.

Byer, WILLIAM C., a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Eaton, N. Y., in April, 1814. His father was a blacksmith, and his son, spending most of his time at the anvil in the early period of his life, had but limited advantages for acquiring an education. His conversion took place under the labors of the Methodists, and he was licensed as a preacher in that denomination in 1839. He united with the Free-will Baptists, and was ordained as a minister in 1842. He was very successful as a laborer in revivals, and during his ministry baptized not far from five hundred converts. In the spring of 1866 he had a stroke of paralysis, and afterwards another, of which he died, at Fabius, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1869. Although compelled to spend much of his time in manual labor for the support of his family, Mr. Byer was an earnest and successful preacher. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1870, p. 75. (J. C. S.)

Byers, JAMES, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Annan, Scotland, Sept. 25, 1816. In 1837 he graduated from Pictou College, after which four years were spent in teaching in the province of New Brunswick. He studied theology at Pictou, under Rev. Thomas McCulloch, D.D., but in 1843 entered the senior class of Princeton Seminary, and spent one year. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Truro, in Nova Scotia, Oct. 5, 1842; was ordained by the same Presbytery in 1845, and installed pastor of Shelburne Church, where he served seven years, and next became pastor at Talamagouche. His third and last charge was at Clifton, N. S., where he was installed in 1860, and labored eighteen years. He died May 21, 1879. He was a man of unswerving fidelity to the cause of his Redeemer, and a very successful minister. See Necrological Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1880.

Byfield, ADONIRAM, a zealous "commonwealth man," satirized by Hudibras, was the son of Rev. Nicholas Byfield. He was educated at Cambridge, became an army chaplain in 1642, and was one of the scribes of the Westminster Assembly. After some years as rector in Middlesex and Wiltshire, he died in 1660. He is chiefly known from his controversial tracts, entitled The Grand Debate between Presbytery and Independency (Lond. 1652).

Byington, Cyrus, a Congregational minister, was born in Massachusetts, and graduated from Andover Theological Seminary in 1819. He was agent for the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 1819-20, and went as a missionary to the Choctaw Indians in 1820. He was ordained Oct. 4, 1827, and died at Belpre, O., Dec. 31, 1868, aged seventy-six years. See Gen. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 37.

Byington, M. N., a Universalist minister, appears to have entered the ministry in 1843, in the vicinity of Cincinnati, O. About 1848 he removed to Miller's settlement, near Oxford, O.; and afterwards labored widely in other Western States. He died at Baton Rouge, La., in February, 1873. Mr. Byington was widely known as an earnest and zealous preacher. See Universalist Register, 1874, p. 116.

Byles, MATHER, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, son of Mather Byles, D.D., of the Hollis-street Church, Boston, was born in that city in 1734. He graduated from Harvard College in 1751; was settled as a Congregational clergyman, Nov. 18, 1757, in New London, Conn.; was dismissed in 1768, having become an Episcopalian. The same year he became rector of Christ Church, Boston, where he served until April, 1775, when he accepted an invitation to become rector in Portsmouth, N. H. In 1776, owing, doubtless, to his strong loyalty to the king, he left the country and went to Halifax, N. S., and in 1778 he was banished from the American colonies. After the war he became rector and chaplain at St. John's, N. B. He died March 12, 1814. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 379.

Bylgia (storm of the sea), in Norse mythology, is one of the nine maidens of the waves, the daughters of the marine god Aeger and Ran.

Bynna. See BEONNA.

Bynum, GEORGE C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Chatham County, N. C., Nov. 15, 1847. He was eminently pious in youth, received license to preach in 1866, and in 1867 entered the North Carolina Conference. In its active ranks he toiled until his death, July 11, 1871. Mr. Bynum was a successful and promising preacher, full of faith and good deeds. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1871, p. 541.

Byram, ELIAB, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Bridgewater, Mass., and graduated at Harvard University in 1740. He became pastor at Rosticus (now Mendham), N. J., in October, 1743. Brainard had him for his companion in his first journey to the Susquehanna, and speaks of him with much affection. Byram spent some time in 1746 in Augusta County, and his labors were greatly blessed, the revival lasting till 1751. Falling Spring and Providence called him in 1747, having had experience of his faithfulness and ability, but he declined to settle in Virginia. He joined the New Brunswick Presbytery, May 22, 1751, and accepted a call to Amwell. He died before May, 1754. (W. P. S.)

Byrche, WILLIAM, D.D., LL.D., an English clergyman, was chaplain to the archbishop of Canterbury; became prebendary of Worcester, Oct. 31, 1727, and died in February, 1742. He published a sermon on the Consecration of Bishop Chandler (1717). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Le Neve, Fasti, iii, 88.

Byrchington, STEPHEN, an English Benedictine, was born in the parish of Byrchington, Isle of Thanet, and flourished about 1380. He was a monk of Christ's Church, Canterbury. He wrote Historia de Vitis Archiepiscoporum Cantuariensium, from St. Augustine, A.D. 597, to William of Wittlesey, A.D. 1368; and a Life of Simon Sudbury, given by Wharton, Anglia Sacra, i, 49. See Cave, Hist. Lit. vol. ii.

Byrd, John Ira Ellis, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Sumter District, S. C., May 15, 1791. He was left fatherless when ten years old, and was apprenticed to a shoemaker. He was converted in 1810, and in 1811 entered the South Carolina Conference, in which he labored two years, and then was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. In its ranks he served for fifty-nine years. He died April 6, 1871. By his own exertions he became well-read and a powerful preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1871, p. 578.

Byrd, Rebecca, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was wife of William Byrd, and made her first appearance in the ministry in 1784, in the twenty-sixth year of her age, having been converted two years previously. Soon after, she was engaged to travel abroad, and accompanied Deborah Darby in a visit to Wales. From that time until the death of Deborah, in 1810, they were employed, with little intermission, in the same service in various parts of Great Britain. In 1793 they embarked for North America, and continued to labor in this country for three years. In 1800 she was married, and, after the decease of Deborah Darby, her husband accompanied her throughout England, Scotland, and Ireland. While attending the Yearly Meeting of 1829 she suffered from an attack of apoplexy, but was so far restored that she frequently afterwards ministered in her own meeting at Marnhull. She died May 24, 1834. See The Friend, viii, 357.

Byrd, William (1), an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Uffculme, Devonshire, in 1757. He was converted when about twenty-two years of age, and entered the ministry in 1794. He was "sound in doctrine, and his ministry was exercised in simplicity, and in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." From conscientious reasons he abstained from the use of the produce of West India slavery. His ministry for several years was confined within the limits of Devonshire and parts adjacent, but afterwards he travelled in England, Ireland, and to the Orkney Islands. Catholic in his spirit, "he was a lover of good men of every denomination, and of enlarged charity and liberal views." He died Dec. 16, 1835. See Testimonies of Deceased Ministers, 1836, p. 3-16. (J. C. S.)

Byrd (or Bird), William (2), an eminent English composer of sacred music, was born about 1538. He studied under Tallis, and was chosen organist of Lincoln cathedral in 1563. He was made a gentleman of the chapel royal in 1569, and organist to queen Elizabeth six years later. He died July 21, 1623. His compositions were very numerous. See Lowndes, Bibliographer's Manual; Burney, History of Music; Grove, Dict. of Music, s. v.

Byrde (or Birde), JOHN, D.D., an English prelate, was a native of Coventry, and was consecrated bishop of Penrith, Scotland, June 28, 1537. He was elected to the see of Bangor, July 24, 1539. He became the first bishop of Chester by the charter of erection, and made his profession of obedience to the archbishop of York, April 13, 1542. He obtained, at the same time, the archdiaconates of Chester and Richmond. He was deprived of all these dignities in the first year of the reign of queen Mary (1554), on account of his being married. He died in 1556. He published Lectures on the Epia- cles of St. Paul; and Learned Homilies. See Le Neve, Fasti; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Byrgir, in Norse mythology, was a well to which Bil and Hínke had gone to get water, when they were stolen by the moon and placed among the stars.

Byrkit, WILLIAM A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Marion County, Ind., Nov. 4, 1838. He went to Iowa in his youth; joined the Church in 1855; studied for the ministry at the Iowa Wesleyan University; and in 1860 received license to preach and entered the Iowa Conference. He died July 2, 1863. Mr. Byrkit was a young man of promise. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1863, p. 155.

Byrne, Alexander Sturgeon, a precocious Methodist minister in Canada, grandson of Rev. Alexander Sturgeon (Irish Conference), and son of Rev. Claudius Byrne (Irish and Canada Conferences), was born at Dunganon, Ireland, June 20, 1832. He was converted at thirteen, and was led by a train of providences, almost immediately after his conversion, to exercise his gifts in public, which were of such an extraordinary character as to open his way, when not more than fifteen years of age, into many of the first pulpits of the Irish connection. In the winter of 1848-49 he came with his father to Canada. He was at once received into the ministry in that country; preached in Toronto and London; made an extraordinary impression; but was cut down at Brantford, Ont., Feb. 11, 1851. Young Byrne's character was a rare combination of dignity and modesty, fidelity, forbearance, prudence, zeal, gravity, and cheerfulness; a most faultless religious character, an eloquent and searching preacher. Few have enjoyed so much popularity, and few have been so little affected by it. See Carroll, Life and Remains of Rev. A. S. Byrne (Toronto, 1852, 12mo); Case and His Contemporaries, v. 48, 94.

Byrne, Claudius, a Wesleyan Methodist minister in Canada, was born in Dublin, Ireland, May 12, 1793. He was converted in his thirteenth year; entered the Wesleyan ministry in Ireland in 1824; was transferred from the Irish to the Canadian branch of the Wesleyan Church in 1848; and in the latter he labored effectively six years, and twenty-two as a supernumerary. He died Oct. 5, 1876, at Fairfield, Ont., where he had lived since 1854. He was a vigorous, pithy preacher, and most diligent in that service of love—visiting the sick. See Minutes of the London (Ont.) Conference (Toronto), 1877, p. 12.

Byrne, Edmund, D.D., an Irish prelate, having received orders at Seville, was appointed archbishop of Dublin in 1707, being then in the fifty-first year of his age. Soon after his promotion to the see of Dublin, it was proposed that a public convention of Protestant and Catholic prelates and doctors should be held for two months to propound and debate on the disputed articles of faith; on which occasion this prelate alone of all the Catholics attended the conferences; and with much zeal and wisdom propounded the principles of his religion in the public college of Dublin. In 1712, some nuns obtained permission from Dr. Byrne to be received into his diocese, but they had scarcely arrived when they were apprehended by the lords-justices; and a proclamation was issued Sept. 20 of same year, to apprehend Dr. Byrne and others as popish priests attempting to exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction contrary to the laws of the kingdom. In March, 1717, when the Dominican nuns were driven from Galway, Hugh O'Callanan, then provincial of the Order of the Dominicans, obtained a similar permission from archbishop Byrne for their admission into his diocese, where, in September of the same year, they founded the Convent of Jesus, Mary, and Joseph, of Dublin. Just at this time Dr. Byrne was involved in a controversy with his brother-prelate of Armagh, Dr. M'Mahon, on the ancient primatial rights. The matter was referred to the College of the Propaganda, whose decision, after a litigation of some years, restored the appellant. This subject was, however, again more fully and solemnly laid before the pope in council, when the claim of archbishop Byrne was supported in argument by the Rev. John Clynch, one of the clergymen of his grace's diocese. The final decision of the Roman college has not been ascertained. Dr. Byrne died a few years afterwards. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Archbishops of Dublin, p. 459.

Byrne, James T., an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Jan. 29, 1810. He was converted and joined the Church in early life; was ordained in 1838 at Great Yarmouth; settled at Gorleston, Norfolk; and later, in the same year, sailed for Canada, under the auspices of the Colonial Missionary Society. He first settled at L'Original, on the Ottawa; then at Bytown, now Ottawa City; and subsequently at Brockville, whence he removed to Whitby, commencing his stated ministry in that place in October, 1851. On terminating his pastorate at Whitby, he accepted an invitation from the French Canadian Missionary Society to become their agent, to preach and lecture wherever he could get a hearing. In this sphere he worked with great zeal until his death, Nov. 21, 1874. In this excellent man society lost a sweet example, and religion a bright ornament. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 320.

Byrne, Martin, a Baptist minister, was born at Robinstown, Me., in February, 1811. He was converted at twenty-two; pursued his theological studies at Bangor and at Newton, where he graduated in 1840. He was ordained at Packersville, Conn., June 29, 1842. Subsequently he was pastor of churches in Pembroke, Ellsworth, Conway, and Gardiner, in Maine. For a time he was agent for the American and Foreign Bible Society, and the Young Ladies' College, Worcester, Mass. He removed to Illinois in 1857, and was settled pastor of the church in Pekin; and had charge, at the same time, of the church at La Marsh. He died at Pekin Sept. 19, 1858. See Minutes of Ill. Anniversaries, 1858, p. 9. (J. C. S.)

Byrne, William, an English engraver, was born in London in 1743, and was instructed by his uncle, an obscure artist. In 1770 he went to Paris, and became a scholar of Aliamet. The following are some of his principal plates: The Flight into Egypt; Abraham and Lot Quitting Egypt; A Sea-piece; The Death of Captain Cook. He died in London in 1805. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Byron, JAMES M'KEE, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Downpatrick, Ireland, July 25, 1760. In 1785 he was introduced to Mr. Wesley as a candidate for the ministry, and appointed to Norwich. His circuits afterwards were Kent, Northampton, Penzance, Bradford, Salisbury (1797), Truro, Launceston, and many others. In 1823 he went to France as a supernumerary, where he died, Sept. 24, 1827. Byron possessed powers of a high order for pulpit oratory; his mind was well stored with learning; and his ministry was eminently useful. He was faithful, forgiving, generous, and benevolent. See Wesl. Meth. Mag., 1829, p. 577; Minutes of the British Conference, 1828.

Bytemeister, HEINRICH JOHANN, a Lutheran minister of Germany, was born at Zell in 1698. He was appointed in 1740 professor of theology at Helmstadt, where he died in 1746. He wrote a great number of works in Latin, the most important of which are two on arithmetic and numismatics (Strasburg; 1744).

Bythway, WILLIAM, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Dudley in 1796. He was converted in his sixteenth year; called into the ministry in 1824; retired in 1864 to Manchester; in 1869 to Didsbury, where he died, in September, 1874. Bythway was esteemed for his sound judgment, integrity, and piety. His character was transparent and well balanced. His preaching was racy, sensible, and practical. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1875, p. 12.

Bywater, ALFRED, a young English Methodist preacher, was born at Sheffield in 1809, and was converted in early life. He became a local preacher; but in 1836 began to itinerate in the New Connection. Two years sufficed to break down his health; he returned to Sheffield, hoping to recover, that he might preach the Gospel, but his work was done. He died March 4, 1839, a probationer. See Minutes of the British Conference.

Byzance, LOUIS DE, a native of Constantinople, originally a Jew named Raphael Levi, embraced Christianity, and became a priest of the Oratory. He settled in Paris, and became famous for his interest in Oriental manuscripts of the New Test. He was also an able mathematician. He died in 1722, after twenty years' insanity.

Byzantine Architecture is a name for the style of architecture introduced at Byzantium in the 5th century, derived from the Roman, but distinguished from it by the plans of the buildings, and by the general use of the dome or cupola. The plan of the Grecian or Byzantine churches was usually that of the Greek cross, with a large cupola rising from the centre, and smaller cupolas crowning the four arms. The arches were generally semicircular, sometimes segmental, or of the horse-shoe form. The capitals of columns were little more than square blocks, tapered downwards, and adorned with foliage or basket-work. The doorways were commonly square-headed, with a semicircular, and occasionally, in later specimens, a pointed arch over the flat lintel. The Byzantine style had great influence on subsequent styles, both in England and on the Continent. The Gothic styles are derived quite as much from this as from the Roman.

This style prevailed through Christian Asia and Africa, and extended to Sicily. It was the modification of Roman architecture by an Eastern element. There were four periods of the art: (i) 330-537—rock churches, and round or octagonal churches; (ii) 537-1003—marked by the multiplication of domes and polygonal apses; (iii) 1003-1453—when the narthex became less prominent, and choirs were made more important; frescos were replaced by mosaics; the women's galleries, hitherto erected over the aisles and narthex, disappeared; and the cruciform shape lost its significance by the absorption of the aisles; (iv) 1453 to the present time.

The arrangement was originally an external square, containing a circular building within; but there are several modifications: (1) the round church; (2) the basilica, with apsidal ends to the transept; and (3) the cross of four equal arms, with a dome over the crossing and each arm. The style penetrated to Provence, through commercial relations between Marseilles, Greece, and Constantinople, and thence to the north and centre of France; and also to the banks of the Rhine, under the patronage of Charlemagne. The dome took the place of the Western vault, as most suited to a circular building; and, to Procopius, poetically seemed to be suspended by a golden chain from heaven, and the whole style combined the basilica with the round church of the Holy Sepulchre of Jerusalem. Like the basilica, the Eastern church had its colonnaded atrium, or forecourt (peribolos), the narthex (propyla, pronaos), or advanced portico; galleries for women over the aisles of the nave or trapeza; the chorus cantorum, known as the solea—the presbytery was in it; the holy bema, a raised stage, so called from its steps, or hierateion, or hagian; and the sacristies (pastophoria) here called the paraträpezon, or prothesis, on the north, and the skeuophylakion, or diaconicon minus, on the south. Over the bema of the readers, which resembled the basilica ambon, rose the royal door. There was only a single altar, but in some cases parecclesiae, or side churches for daily services, with altars, were added; the chancel screen was called, from its pictures, the iconostasis, with its central door curtained, and two lateral doors: the kikkis occupied the place of the podium; over the altar rose the dome, or trullus. There were four doors: the holy, which were veiled, between the bema and solea; the royal, between the solea and nave; the angelic, between the nave and narthex; and the beautiful, great, or silver, between the narthex and anterior porch (prothyrum). The influence of the style is seen in the cupolas of Russia; those of France, introduced by Venetian colonists and commerce; the ornamentation of capitals, the polygonal apses, and round churches of Western Christendom. A stream of Italian art came to the south and south-west of France, and thence moved northward in course of gradual development, and also spread down the Rhine, diverging right and left, influencing the border provinces of France—the two developments meeting in the Île de France, as they had previously been combined at Torcello. The Byzantine modification of the basilica in Italy received a new form in Rhineland and again in France: and the turret-like treatment of steeples, the huge triforium, and low central lantern, became common features.

Byzantine Historians, THE. I. General Classification.—This is the name habitually, but inaccurately, applied to the long succession of authors, of diverse merits and of diverse aims, who record or illustrate the course of the Roman empire in the East, from the accession of Constantine till after the conquest of Constantinople by the Ottomans. By some authorities, the term is restricted to the writers subsequent to the accession of Justinian. It is a loose name, and there is least hazard of misapprehension in its widest employment. The designation has been bestowed upon those writers by modern editors, who have associated their works in grand collections, under the title of Corpus Scriptorum Historiæ Byzantinæ, in consonance with the convenient appellation given to the biographers of the emperors from Hadrian to Diocletian, and who are known as the Scriptores Historiæ Augustæ. The assimilation of the titles, and the distinction of the collections, are principally due to the general similarity of design and the difference of the languages employed by the respective authors. The Byzantine and the Augustan historians alike record the reigns of the Roman emperors; but the latter compose their works in Latin; the former write almost exclusively in Greek, and the empire of the West is not distinctly contemplated by them. Yet even this ground of discrimination is, in some degree, deceptive. Claudian and Ammianus Marcellinus are excluded from the Byzantines. Both write in Latin. The former is occupied with the Western emperor, Honorius; but his diatribes on Rufinus and Eutropius throw much light upon contemporaneous affairs in the East. The latter treats mainly upon Eastern transactions, but the earlier part takes in the previous series of emperors. But Mero-baudes and Corippus, who are Latin poets, like Claudian, are admitted into the Cutena Byzantina, though Mero-baudes devotes himself to a Western hero. Eusebius is scarcely included in the fraternity, though he writes in Greek, and has left a Life of Constantine. Zosimus embraced the entire history of the imperial rule down to his own day. The exclusion of Claudian and Am-mianus Marcellinus is to be explained, not by the Occi-dental character of the one, nor by the Latin phrase of both, but by the existence of critical and annotated edi-tions of each author, which dispensed with the necessity of their reproduction in a collection inevitably extensive, and so ample that it may never be fully completed. The same reason may be assigned for the omission of Euse-bius.

Thus the term Byzantine Historians is unavoidably indistinct and wavering. It has been determined by the compass of the collections, not by any definite prin-ciple beyond the requirement that the subject-matter of the accepted treatises should be connected with the story, the institutions, or the characteristics of the em-pire of the East. Many of these writers, like the monastic chroniclers of the West, begin with the creation of the world, and either write brief annals of the generations, or introduce by such dry notices contemporaneous or recent history. Many of the writers are of the priestly caste, or are inclined to theological disputation. Thus, they often notice, with peculiar diligence, the succession and years of the patriarchs, and plunge with zest into religious controversies; but professedly ecclesiastical history does not fall within the scope of these collec-tions, though we find in the Bonn edition the Historia Patriarchica Constantinopolitana. Several treatises, too, not formally historical, are admitted. Provision is made for such comprehension by the title attached—"The Body of Byzantine Writers." All render important ser-vice to the historical appreciation of the times and coun-tries.

Notwithstanding the heavy expenditure by Louis XIV on the first edition of this great Corpus Scripto-rum—notwithstanding the vast and various labor of Du Cange, Labbé, Possinus, Banduri, Niebuhr, and other collaborators, upon the editions of Paris, Venice, and Bonn—this long series of writers has been little regard-ed, until very recent times, except by professed his-torians of the empire, like Cousin, Muratori, Gibbon, Le Beau, and Finlay. Yet they merit wider and closer consideration. They have an interest and a value of their own, unlike any derived from other sources or periods. Nowhere else do the records, of the world present twelve centuries of continuous history, written, in great measure, by contemporaries, with fulness and discernment. Nowhere else do we find such various illustrations of the political, social, military, and eccle-siastical life of one organic system. Nowhere else is it possible to study the processes of natural decline and decrepitude, and the change from bad to worse, from worse to worse still, in so many and in such minute particulars. Nowhere else are the phenomena of the internal and of the external dissolution of a civiliza-tion presented in so many aspects, and in such divers-ified detail. Nowhere else are the authorities of high-er rank, or more intimately associated with the events described. Nowhere else are incidents more startling, more strange, or of more romantic character accumu-lated, than in the obscure pages of these unnoted writers. These circumstances may have enhanced the recently renovated interest in these little-read authors, which has been so marked of late years, especially in Ger-many. These attractions have been the rewards of increased study, not incitements to it. The true cause of renewed regard may be assigned to the growing gravity of the perilous and perplexed Eastern question, which has drawn the eyes of all to the beautiful city on the Golden Horn, and to the remnants of the vast empire of which it is the capital. The expiring agonies of a mighty system, which only two centuries ago was the terror of Christendom, and which, at the time of the discovery of America, threatened to obtain univer-sal dominion, possess a portentous fascination for the student of human affairs. Exactly the same mortal change pursued its languid course a thousand years ago, in the same regions, and under the operation of similar influences. The best commentary upon the morbid conditions now prevailing, and the clearest in-sight into their progress and tendency, may be derived from the phenomena of the earlier age. Hence, partly by conscious determination, mainly by that curious in-stinct which guides the vocations of the ages, an ear-nest and rapidly growing attention has been attracted to the Byzantine historians.

Under this name are included several distinct classes of writers, and some who cannot be reduced to any class. About one half are systematic historians; others are meagre annalists; some are simple chronographers. There are biographers, and memoir writers, and pane-gyrists. Some describe edifices, ceremonials, or insti-tutions. There is a reporter of scandals and tattle. A few note only a single transaction. Many discharge more than one of these functions. Among the au-thors are emperors, as Constantine Porphyrogenitus and Joannes Cantacuzenus; members of imperial houses, as Anna Comnena and Ducas; patriarchs and bishops, as Photius and Eustathius; statesmen and diplomatists, as Georgius Pachymeres and Nicephorus Gregoras; high officials and legists, as Georgius Codinus and Joannes Lydus; and secretaries, as Procopius and Joannes Cinn-amus. Logical classification of such a promiscuous assemblage of ranks, vocations, and topics is impossible. The members are accidentally brought together, and are connected by community of country and purpose—not by similarity of subject or treatment. Relation to the life of the Byzantine empire is the only intrinsic con-nection. In style they differ widely from each other, passing from the semi-Attic propriety of Procopius and Agathias to the Latinisms of Theophanes, the extravag-ant rhetoric of Anna Comnena, the dense obscurity of Nicephorus Gregoras, the neologisms of Ducas and Phrantzes, and the utter corruption of the Historia Patriarchica. They write according to the changing tongues and fashions of more than thirty generations. In despite, however, of multitudinous discrepancies, a serviceable arrangement of these works may be pro-posed.

The Byzantine writers are over seventy in number. Several of them have not been published, or have been published only in part. Critobulus was first given to the public by Müller, in his Fragmenta Historicorum Græcorum, as late as 1869. They may be divided into two great classes, the miscellaneous writers and the his-torical writers. The subjects treated by the former are various and distinct. We have treatises by Constantine Porphyrogenitus on the conduct of the empire, on cer-emonials, and on the provinces; by Nicephorus Grego-ras on the statues, pictures, etc., destroyed by the Franks of the fourth crusade; by Lydus, on magistracies; by Codinus Curopalata, on officials; by Procopius, on pub-lic buildings; by Paulus Silentarius, Descriptio Sanctæ Sophiæ. It is much to be regretted that the mono-graph of the emperor Alexius I, on the finances of the empire, has not yet been edited.

The most important and instructive of these writings are Joannes Lydus on magistracies, and Constantine Porphyrogenitus on the conduct of the empire. The one gives a graphic and needful view of the judicial machinery; the latter, a curious and suggestive account of the relations of the empire, in the 10th century, with surrounding races and contemporaneous states. The trickery, the deception, the meanness, the unblushing fraud which are recommended, reveal conscious imbecil-ity without diminution of arrogance, vanity, and pretension. Strange glimpses, too, are afforded of the condition of rude tribes and incipient kingdoms. The tinsel splendor and empty stateliness of the formal court are illustrated by the same emperor's formulas of ceremonial, and, at a later date, by the roll of dignities prepared by the grand master of the household, Georgius Codinus.

II. The Historical Writers.—Of these, the earliest in date is Praxagoras; the latest, Critobulus, and the author or authors of the Historia Politica et Patriarchica. The work of Praxagoras was composed, as he tells us, in his twenty-second year, and his date is assigned to the reign of Constantine or of his successor. There is only one fragment extant, and that is brief and unimportant. It has not been inserted in the editions of the Byzantine historians, but is given in Müller's Fragmenta Historicorum Græcorum. Many of the earlier historians, as Dexippus, Priscus Panita, Malchus, exist only in fragmentary form, and gratitude is due to the patriarch Photius and to the emperor Constantine VII for preserving what remains of them. The latest writers of this class extend beyond the duration of the empire, and connect the Roman world with the modern age.

These historians may be conveniently but loosely distributed into three classes: (1) panegyrists; (2) chroniclers, chronographers, and annalists, more or less dry and jejune; (3) historians, general, particular, or incidental, represented respectively by Zonaras, Cinnamus, and Eustathius, De Excidio Thesalonicensi.

1. The panegyrists are Merobaudes, who leaves a broken and unintelligible eulogy on Aëtius, and belongs to the Western empire; Procopius and Priscian, on Anastasius; and the encomium of Corippus on Justin II, which is a metrical history of that monarch, like the "Robert Guiscard" of William of Apulia.

2. No sharp line of discrimination can be drawn between the chroniclers or chronographers and the historians proper, for their characteristics are often blended. The absence of reflection or independent judgment may be made the ground of distinction. The chronographers are about twenty-five in number, and vary in extent and character. The most important are Georgius Syncellus [see SYNCELLUS], with the continuation of Theophanes and his successors, and the Paschal chronicle.

3. Of the historians, properly so named, there are five who conduct the history of the Roman empire from Augustus to the capture of Constantinople by the Turks. Zosimus begins with Augustus, and comes down to the taking of Rome by Attila. Zonaras opens with a universal chronicle, but gives a fuller account of events from Constantine to the death of Alexius Comnenus. Nicetas Choniates continues the story to the Latin conquest. Nicephorus Gregoras records the transactions down to 1359. Laonicus Chalcocondylas concludes the tale of a thousand years with the history of the Ottoman Turks, and with their overthrow of the Eastern empire. These are writers of considerable but unequal merit. Zonaras is of especial interest, for the long period which he embraces, for his continuous narrative, for his preservation of details otherwise unknown, for his perspicuity and general intelligence. Zosimus has a distinct philosophical aim—the exposition of the causes inducing the decay of the empire. He is accused of prejudice and malevolence—charges easily brought against a pagan of his day—but he writes clearly, forcibly, and well, and reveals the signs and symptoms of the waning majesty of Rome. Nicetas Choniates, or Acornates, and Nicephorus Gregoras are clumsy and tedious writers, but they transmit the account of a dismal period of vice, crime, national distress, and revolution. Laonicus Chalcocondylas records in wretched phrase the rise and progress of the Ottoman Turks, and the last century and a half of the expiring empire.

A livelier interest attaches to those writers who relate the eventful periods in which they were themselves actors, or with which they were intimately and personally acquainted. Procopius, Constantine Porphyrogenitus, Nicephorus Bryennius, and his imperial spouse, Anna Comnena, Joannes Cinnamus, Georgius Pachymeres, Joannes Cantacuzenus, and Georgius Phrantzes, are the most prominent of these. They were all on the scene of action; they were all at the centre of events. As a historical writer, for style, for vigor, for reach of thought, and for delineation of character, Procopius far surpasses any other Byzantine author. See PROCOPIUS. There is no exaggeration in designating him the Thucydides of the empire. His work was continued by Agathias, and further extended by Menander, the Protector. The emperor Constantine Porphyrogenitus, who has contributed in so many ways to our knowledge of Byzantine affairs, is entitled to special regard for his biography of his father, Basil, the founder of the Macedonian dynasty. Nicephorus Bryennius and Anna Comnena were connected, not merely by the bonds of matrimony, but also by community of subject. The husband wrote the history of the Comneni till the acquisition of the throne by Alexius I; the wife took up the pious task at her husband's death, and narrates the reign of her father. Both are among the most entertaining writers of the whole series, but a peculiar interest attaches to Anna's Alexiad, from the rank, abilities, and accomplishments of the princess, and from the attractive topics of that notable period. During that reign occurred the invasion of the empire by Robert Guiscard and the Normans; the exciting incidents of the first crusade; and the manifold other hazards and perplexities of the failing empire. See COMNENA, ANNA. Joannes Cinnamus, a confidential officer of high rank, reports with brevity the career of the right-minded Kalo-Joannes, and with fulness and discretion the chivalrous reign of the heroic, but wayward and dissolute, Manuel Comnenus. George Pachymeres, one of the weightiest and driest of these historians, records the fortunes of the Hellenic empire during the Frank domination, and under the rule of the first Palæologus. Joannes Cantacuzenus, who himself usurped the imperial sceptre, relates, with partial view, and in intricate and inflated phraseology, but with ingenuity and minuteness, the vicissitudes of those troublous years of family and civil discord which compelled him to seize and to abdicate the empire. There is a melancholy fascination in the sorrowful narrative of Georgius Phrantzes—a loyal dignitary and a member of the reigning house, who recounts the story of the Palæologi, and the hazards, the dismay, the massacre, outrages, and ravage which attended the last struggle, and marked the extinction of Roman suzerainty.

In looking over the course of this long and slow dissolution, there are distinct stages in the descent, which arrest regard and repay careful meditation. With these successive lines of degradation correspond equally notable changes among other races, promoting a diverse civilization. An acquaintance with the contrasts and reciprocal influences of the contending systems, during the anxious centuries, is only one of the instructive lessons to be gained from the Byzantine historians, who are thus indispensable for an intelligent appreciation of the forces which have built up the modern world on the crumbling ruins of the old.

III. Literature.—The illustration of the Byzantine writers must be sought in the introductions, prefaces, and commentaries attached to individual authors, and especially in the treatises and notes of Du Cange. The only works of a general character to be cited here are, Hankius, De Byzant. Rerum Script. Græcis (Leipsic, 1677); Nikolai, in Ersch and Gruber's Enkyclopædie (ibid. 1870), Geschichte der Byzantin Literatur. (G.F.H.)

Byzantium, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Byzacenum), provincial, at Byzantium, in Africa.

I. Held A.D. 397, to confirm the canons of the Council of Hippo of A.D. 393. Its synodical letter is in the acts of the Third Council of Carthage of the same year, 397 (Mansi, iii, 875).

II. Held A.D. 507, a numerous council, which insisted on filling up vacant bishoprics, king Thrasamund having forbidden this in order to extinguish the orthodox Church (Ferrand. Diac., V. Fulgent. xvi; Labb. iv, 1378-1380).

III. Held A.D. 541, sent a deputation to the emperor Justinian, who, in reply, confirms all the canonical privileges of the metropolitan of Carthage (Dacianus), and of the African primates (Rescript of Justinian to the Council and to Dacianus, in Baron. ad an. 541; Labbe, v, 380).

IV. Held A.D. 602, in the cause of Crementius, or Clementius, or Clementinus, primate of the province, held at the instigation of Gregory the Great (Epist.

xii, 32), who exhorts the comprovincial bishops to inquire into, and adjudicate upon, certain accusations that were current against their metropolitan (Labbe, v, 1612).

V. Held A.D. 646, under Stephen, the metropolitan, against the Monothelites (Labbe, v, 1835; vi, 133).

Byzas, the founder of Byzantium, now Constantinople, was said to have sprung from the gods; being a son of Poseidon and Ceroessa, the daughter of Zeus and Io. But Byzas was really the name of the leader of the Megarians, who founded Byzantium B.C. 658.

Cabala. We give here some additional particulars.

1. The Sephiroth. The Cabala insists upon the following points with regard to these: i. That they are not created, but emanated (נצח) from the En-Soph. ii. That they form among themselves, and with the En-Soph, a strict unity, and simply represent different aspects of one and the same being. iii. That all the ten emanations alike partake of the perfections of the En-Soph. iv. That, as emanations of the Infinite, the Sephiroth are infinite and perfect, like the En-Soph, and yet constitute the first finite. On the accompanying wood-cut is shown the figure of the archetypal man, representing the ten Sephiroth. Another grouping is given in the table on following page.

The Sephiroth as represented by the Human Form.

2. Creation of Angels. "God," says the Sohar, "animated every part of the firmament with a separate spirit, and forthwith all the heavenly hosts were before him" (iii, 68a). These angelic beings consist of two classes—good and bad—have their respective princes, and occupy the three habitable worlds in the following order: The angel Metatron inhabits the second world, the World of Creation. He alone constitutes the world of pure spirits, and is the garment of Shaddai, i. e. the invisible manifestation of the Deity. His name is numerically equivalent to that of the Lord. The angelic host inhabiting this world are divided into ten ranks, answering to the ten Sephiroth; and each is set over a different part of the universe. The demons, who constitute the second class of angels, inhabit the fourth world, or the World of Action. Though they are the grossest and most deficient of all forms, they still form ten degrees, answering to the ten Sephiroth. The prince of this region of darkness is Samael, angel of poison or death. He is the evil spirit who seduced Eve; and has a wife, called the Harlot, or the Woman of Whoredom, who, together with him, is treated as one person, and is called "the Beast."

3. The Destiny of Man and the Universe. It is an absolute condition of the soul to return to the infinite source from which it emanated, after developing on earth the perfections, the germs whereof are implanted in it. If the soul, after assuming a human body, during its first sojourn on earth, fails to acquire that experience for which it descends from heaven, and becomes contaminated by sin, it must reinhabit a body again and again, till it is able to ascend in a purified state. This transmigration, however, is restricted to three times. The world, being an expansion of the Deity's own substance, must ultimately share that blessedness which it enjoyed in its first evolution. Even Satan himself, the archangel of wickedness, will be restored to his angelic nature, as he, too, proceeded from the Infinite Source of all things. When the last human soul has passed through probation, then the Saviour will appear, and the great jubilee year will commence, when the whole pleroma of souls, cleansed and purified, shall return to the bosom of the Infinite Source.

Caballero, RAYMONDO DIOSADA, a Spanish theologian of the Jesuit order, was born at Palma, in the isle of Majorca, in 1740. He was educated at Madrid, but took refuge in Rome at the time of the suppression of his order, and devoted himself to literature. Nearly all of his works were published under the pseudonym of Filippo de Parripalma. He died in 1820. He wrote, De Prima Typographia Hispanica Aetate Specimen (Rome, 1793):—L'Eroismo de Ferdinando Cortese Confirmato contro le Censure Nemiche (ibid. 1806):—Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu Supplementa Duo (ibid. 1814-16). See Hofer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Bdy. Dict. s. v.

born at Cavaillon (Venaissin) in 1305. He became chancellor of Sicily, patriarch of Constantinople, cardinal and legate, and was intimately associated with Petrarch. He died at Perousia in 1371, and was buried in the Carthusian Church of Bonpas, where his marble mausoleum was seen in 1791. He wrote a few sermons and practical works in Latin. See Hoefer, *Nouv. The name tolerably well corresponds, but the position seems too far north for the grouping in Josh. xv, 40. See JUDAH, TRIBE OF.

Cabezalero, JUAN MARTIN DE, a reputable Spanish historical painter, was born near Cordova in 1633, and studied under Don Juan Carreno. His best works are the Assumption, and a picture of St. Ildefonso, in the Church of San Nicola. There is also an Ecce Homo and a Crucifixion by him in the Church of the Franciscans. He died in 1673. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cabiatic, CLAUDE DE BANE, seigneur de, a French theologian, was born at Nîmes in 1578. He was of the family of the barons of Avejan, and was for a time a Calvinist, but, having pursued his studies with the Jesuits of Tournon, he became a zealous Catholic. In 1620 he was made consulter at the presidial of Nîmes, where he died about 1658. He wrote, L'Écriture Abandonnée par les Ministres de la Religion Réformée (1658). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cabīri (κάβειροι), in Greek mythology, were divine beings of an early order, apparently belonging to a tribe existing previous to the Greeks. Their worship was continued even after the spreading of the Pelagic religion, especially in the islands Samothrace and Lemnos. It afterwards passed over into an unintelligible secret worship, in which the Cabiri were often confounded with different deities. In Bœotia the Cabiri were in close relation with Ceres and Proserpina, and therefore probably they may be looked at as assisting dæmons of fruitfulness. In Rome their worship was united to that of the Penates, who were believed to have come from Troy; it was finally carried so far as to represent persons of the imperial court as Cabiri, on coins, etc. They were usually depicted as very small, with a hammer on their shoulder, and the half of the shell of an egg on their head, with a very thick belly. It is believed that the Romans brought this worship to the Celts and Bretons, but confounded the titles of the priests with those of the deities, because they themselves did not know the fundamentals of the doctrine. See Smith, Dict. of Class. Biog. and Mythol. s. v.

Cabling, a round moulding frequently worked in the flutes of columns, pilasters, etc., in classical architecture, and nearly filling up the hollow part; they seldom extend higher than the third part of the shaft.

Cabot, MARSTON, a Congregational minister, was born at Salem, Mass. He graduated in 1724, and was ordained over the Church North at Killingly, Conn., in 1730. He is said to have been attacked with apoplexy in the pulpit, and to have died a few hours after, April 8, 1756. He published five sermons. See Cong. Quarterly, 1861, p. 156.

Cabrera, Alfonso de, a Spanish Dominican, was born at Cordova about the middle of the 16th century. He was sent, soon after his elevation to the priesthood, to preach the Gospel in America. After his return he preached with wonderful success in the chief cities of Spain; and died, worn out by his excessive labors, Nov. 20, 1598, before he had completed his fiftieth year. He left four volumes of sermons and some treatises, which have often been printed in Spain, and at Paris and Palermo.

Cabrera (Morales), Francisco, a Spaniard, who lived in the 17th century, and taught at Salamanca. His History of the Popes, joined to that of Chacon and Vettorini, was printed in 1630. A new edition of the work of Chacon was brought down by Oldoini to 1677. Supplements by Guarnacci to 1740, and by J. P. de Cinque and R. Fabricius to 1756, have been added.

Cabrera, Pedro, a Spanish theologian, brother of Alfonso, was a priest of the order of St. Jerome of Cordova in the 17th century. He first taught philosophy and afterwards theology, at Cordova and elsewhere. He wrote a Commentary on the Summa of St. Thomas (Cordova, 1602, 2 vols. 8vo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cabrisseau, Nicolas, a French theologian, was born at Bethel, Oct. 1, 1680. He was highly esteemed by Tellier, archbishop of Rheims, but persecuted by the successor of that prelate as refractory to episcopal authority. In 1722 he was banished thirty leagues from the archiepiscopal jurisdiction, and was employed by cardinal Noailles at Paris; but was persecuted afresh and imprisoned at Vincennes, and finally sent in exile to Tours, where he died, Oct. 20, 1750. He wrote some practical religious works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cacalla, a Spanish martyr, was a friar of Austin's order, and priest of the town of Valladolid, in Spain, and preacher sometime to the emperor Charles V. He was burned in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 451.

Caccia, Guglielmo (called il Moncalvo), an eminent Piedmontese painter, was born at Montalbano, in Monterrat, in 1568. He settled first at Milan, and painted in the Church of San Antonio Abate a representation of the titular saint, with St. Paul. His best oil-paintings are, St. Peter, in the Chiesa della Croce; St. Theresa, in the church of that name; the Descent from the Cross, which many consider his masterpiece, in San Gaudenzio, at Novara; also, the Raising of Lazarus and the Miracle of the Louves. He died in 1625. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caccia, Orsola Maddelena, and Francesca, daughters and scholars of Guglielmo Caccia. They assisted their father in his fresco works, and are the only women ever known to have practiced this branch of the art. In Monterrat they painted a number of cabinet pictures, and more altar-pieces than any other females. Orsola founded the convent of the Ursulines at Moncalvo, the chapel of which is decorated with some altar-pieces by her. There is also a Holy Family. Orsola died in 1678, and Francesca at the age of fifty-seven. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caccia, Pompeo, a Roman painter, flourished at Pistoja in the first part of the 17th century. There are a number of his works in that city, among which is the Presentation of Jesus in the Temple, at the Sale-siane, dated 1615.

Cacciaguena, Buonsignore (or GERONIMO), an Italian monk and priest, a native of Siena, flourished in the second half of the 16th century. He was a friend and companion of St. Philip of Neri. He left several works on practical piety, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caccianiga, Francesco, an Italian painter, was born at Milan in 1700, and studied under Franceschini at Bologna. He afterwards went to Rome, where he obtained the favor of the prince Borghese, for whom he executed a number of works. His best productions are at Ancona, where he painted several altar-pieces, the best of which are the Marriage of the Virgin, and the Last Supper. He died at Rome in 1781. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cacciari, Pietro Tommaso, an Italian theologian of the Carmelite order, lived in the second half of the 18th century. He was a doctor in theology, apostolic examiner, and controversial reader in the Propaganda at Rome, and left, in Latin, a work on the writings of Leo the Great (Rome, 1751, 2 vols. fol.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caccini, Giovanni, an Italian architect and sculptor, was born at Florence in 1562, and studied under Dosio. He erected, at the Church of La Nunziata, in Florence, a loggia with arches and Corinthian columns, sculptured out of Siena marble; he also designed a grand choir and altar for the Church of Santo Spirito. He died in 1612. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caccini, Tommaso, a Dominican of Florence, and doctor of theology, who died Jan. 12, 1648, is the author of Storia Ecclesiastica del Primo Concilio Niceno Adunato e Confermato di S. Salvastro (Lucca, 1637). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 663. (B. P.)

Caccioli, Giovanni Battista, an eminent historical painter, was born in the castle of Budrio, near Bologna, in 1628. He studied under Domenico Maria Canuti, and painted several pictures for the Bolognese churches. He died in 1676. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cachet, Jean, a French Jesuit, born at Neufchâteau in Lorraine, died at Pont-a-Mousson, Dec. 22, 1633, aged thirty-six, leaving many ascetical works, the principal of which are Vie de Jean Berchmans, a Jesuit, from the Italian (Paris, 1630, 8vo);—Vie de S. Isidore et de la B. Marie della Cabeça sa femme (Verdun, 1631), from the Spanish of J. Quintana;—Vie de S. Joseph (Pont-a-Mousson, 1632, 12mo). See Biog. Universelle, iv, 450.

Cacodæmon, in Greek mythology, was the title of an evil spirit, in opposition to Agathodæmon (a good spirit).

Cad, in British mythology, was an idol that was worshipped in the form of a fighting ox. He was also called Tarw-Cad. He seems to have been a god of war.

Cadalous (Lat. Cadulus or Cadeolus), Pietro, an Italian prelate, sprung from the family of Zanachia, was a native of Parma, of which city he became bishop by simoniacal means, on the death of Hugo, A.D. 1046. He was a warm supporter of the emperor Henry, who intruded him into the see of Rome under the title of HONORIUS II (q. v.).

Cadan. See CATAN.

Cadana, Salvatore, an Italian monk, born at Turin, lived about the middle of the 17th century, and wrote Ottavia Sacramentate (Venice, 1645);—Il Principe Regnante (Turin, 1649). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cadda (Ceadda, or Chad), was an early English bishop, whose name is attached to a spurious character of A.D. 706 (Kemble, C. D. No. 58); possibly Hedda or Headda, bishop of Lichfield. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Cadden, ROBERT, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ireland, Oct. 28, 1782. He was carefully trained by his pious widowed mother, with whom he emigrated to Lancaster, Pa., in 1798; experienced conversion when about twenty; and after having faithfully discharged the duties of a class-leader, exhorter, and local preacher, he entered the Baltimore Conference, in which he sustained an effective relation for thirty-seven years. In 1852 he became superannuated, and died at his residence in Baltimore County, Md., June 26, 1859. Mr. Cadden was remarkable from childhood for his sobriety and firmness of disposition. He was diffident and retiring, deep in piety, and faithful in labors. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 20.

Cadell was a Welsh saint of the 7th century, patron of Llangadell, a church formerly in Glamorgan-shire. See also CATELL.

Cademann, Adam Theodule (or Gotthelf), a German Lutheran preacher, was born in 1677 at Haynichen, near Freiberg, in Saxony. He first pursued his studies at Gera, then at the universities of Leipsic and Wittenberg, where he received his degrees. In 1707 he became vicar at Litzenroda, a village near Torgau, in 1713 pastor at Stiptitz, and finally, in 1729, archdeacon at Kemberg, where he remained until his death, which occurred February 16, 1746. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Cademann, Johann Rudolph, a German Lutheran theologian, son of Johann Georg, pursued his studies at Leipsic, where he took, in 1699, his degrees in theology. In 1708 he was appointed deacon at Naumburg, and in 1717 superintendent at Pegau, where he remained until his death, which occurred about 1720. He wrote Disput. de Schola Libertinorum, ex Act. Ap. VI. 9. (Leipsic, 1704). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cadeoldus (or Edoldus), Saint, a French prelate, originally a monk, became abbot of Grison, and finally bishop of Vienne. He died in 696, and is commemorated Jan. 14. See Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Cadesreuter, CHRISTOPH, a German Lutheran preacher and pedagogue, lived in the latter part of the 16th century, in the diocese of Hof, Bavaria. He wrote Grammatica Græca (Leipsic, 1599). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cadfan was a Celtic saint of the 6th century, of good birth in Armorica, who crossed over into Wales at the head of a large company, mostly his own relatives, supposed to have been exiled in consequence of the Frankish invasion. He is chiefly known as the first abbot of a monastery founded by him and Enion Freuhin, in the isle of Bardsey. An ancient Welsh inscription upon a rude pillar at Tywyn in Merionethshire, where was one of the many churches of his foundation, is thought to refer to him.

Cadfarch, a Welsh saint, who lived about the middle of the 6th century, was the founder of the churches of Penegoes, Montgomeryshire, and Abererch, Carnarvonshire. He is commemorated October 24.

Cadrawd was an early Welsh saint. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 92, 100.

Cadgyfarch was an early Welsh saint. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 102.

Cadharians were a Mohammedan sect who deny predestination, and hold that human actions are solely regulated by the free-will of man himself. They have been styled the "Manichæans of the Mussulman faith," because they maintain the existence of two original co-ordinate principles, the divine and the human.

Cadiocenus (Thadiocenus or Thadiacus), was a supposed archbishop of York, who retired into Wales A.D. 586. See Stubbs, Regist. p. 153.

Cadion, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French theologian, who died as a canon at Autun about 1600, after having been curate at Alise, left a Vie de Sainte Reine (Alise, 1648). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cadir is an order of Mohammedan monks founded by Abdul-Kadir-Gilani, who died at Bagdad in 1165. They never cut their hair, and always go bareheaded and barefooted. They can leave the order at pleasure, and are under no vow of celibacy.

Cadizadelites are a modern Mohammedan sect who resemble, in some degree, the ancient Greek stoics. Their faith and practice seems to be a confused mixture of Mohammedanism, Christianity, and Judaism. They pray at funerals for the souls of the departed, calling upon the dead to remember that "there is but one God only." They read the Bible in the Slavonic tongue, and the Koran in the Arabic. They love Christians, and protect them from insults on the part of other Mohammedans. They believe that Mohammed is the Paraclete or Comforter. They hate images and the sign of the cross, and practice circumcision, claiming in this to follow the example of Christ.

Cadle, RICHARD F., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who died in November, 1857, at Seaford, Del., was for many years at the head of the mission among the Oneida Indians at Green Bay, Lake Michigan. In 1853 he took charge of the churches at Seaford, Laurel, and vicinity, in Sussex County, Del. He was an earnest and faithful minister of the Gospel. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1858, p. 612.

Cadmus, in Greek legend, was the son of Agenor and of Telpassara or of Antiope. Agenor, king of Phœ-nicia, had, besides four sons, an extraordinarily beautiful daughter, Europa, whom Jupiter carried off in the form of a bull. When the disheartened father sent his sons and his wife away in search of her, with the command not to return without her, Cadmus and his mother reached Thrace, where the latter died. Having taken friendly leave of the Thracians, he went to Delphi to inquire of the oracle where his sister could probably be found. He was told to follow a cow of a certain description, and to settle there where she would fall exhausted. The cow wandered through Boeotia, and fell on the spot where the city of Thebes was built. Then Cadmus desired to sacrifice the cow to Minerva.

and sent some of his attendants to a spring of Mars to get some water. This spring was guarded by a dragon of the god, who tore several of the attendants to pieces, whereupon Cadmus, assisted by Minerva, slew the dragon, broke his teeth, and, by the advice of the goddess, sowed them. From this seed there grew armed men, who killed one another. Only five of the sowed men (Spartans) were left remaining: Echion, Udaeus, Chthonius, Hyperenor, and Pelor, and from them the Thebans derived their five tribes. Cadmus was compelled to serve the god eight years, for his injury to the dragon; at the expiration of which time, however, he had become so fully reconciled to the god that the latter gave him his daughter Harmonia as a wife. Minerva gave him the kingdom. The gods all came to the wedding, which was celebrated with the greatest brilliancy. The children of Cadmus were, Polydorus, Autonoe, Ino, Semele, and Agave. After a number of years Cadmus left Thebes, and in his old age he died, at the same time with his wife, or, as Ovid says, they were changed into snakes. He taught the Greeks the use of ores for weapons, and instituted writing by letters among them. See Smith, Dict. of Gr. and Rom. Biog. and Mythol. s. v.

Cado (or Cataw) was a Welsh saint of the 6th century. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 232.

Cadoc (Cadocus, Docus, Cathmael, Cattwg the Wise), abbot of Llancarvan, in Wales, was the son of Gundleus (or Gwynllyw Filwe), and was educated by an Irish anchorite, Menithi. He then went to Gwent (or Caerwent), Monmouthshire, where he studied under St. Fathai. From Gwent he removed to Glamorgan, and founded the monastery of Llancarvan, of which he became first abbot. He was the friend of Dubricius, and the means of the conversion of St. Illritus. He was born, probably, about the beginning of the 6th century; Colgan and Lanigan assign 570 as the date of his death. He was commemorated Jan. 14. The fables of Cattwg the Wise are printed in the Tol Manuscripts, edited by E. William (1848). His Life is given in the Acta Sanctorum of the Bollandists, under Jan. 2, 602. Colgan (Tr. Thaum. 152, 185, n.) seeks to identify the Mochatocars left by St. Fiac at Innisfail as the Cadocus of Wales, but the dates do not harmonize. He has also been confused with St. Sophias of Beneventum. His Scotch dedication was at Cambuslang, County Lanark.

Cadog, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was the founder of Llangadog Fawr Church, in Carmarthenshire, and others. He is not to be confounded with Cadoc (q. v.).

Cadogan, WILLIAM BROMLEY, Non., an English clergyman, was born Jan. 22, 1751, and educated at Westminster School, and at Christ Church College, Oxford. He was presented to the vicarage of St. Giles, Reading, in 1774, and soon after to the rectory of Chelsea. He spent the greater part of his life at St. Giles in faithful and successful ministerial labors. He died Jan. 18, 1797. His publications consist of several single sermons; and after his death appeared Discourses, Letters, and Memoirs of his Life, by Richard Cecil, M.A. (1798). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cadonici, GIOVANNI, an Italian theologian, who was born at Venice in 1705, and died Feb. 27, 1786, wrote several works, in which he attacked the Molinists and the pretensions of the Roman Church. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cadovius, ANTON GÜNTHER, a German theologian, was born at Oldenburg, Aug. 16, 1654. He studied at Leipsic, Jena, and Wittenberg, and, after a course of travels, became preacher of the duchess Christine-Charlotte, and, in 1678, pastor at Esens, in East Frisia, where he died, April 3, 1681, leaving De Ritere Sabbati (Vitebm. 1673):—De Tempore (ibid. 1674):—De Justitia (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cadrod was a reputed Welsh saint of the 6th century.

Cadry, JEAN BAPTISTE (better known by his anagram, Darcy), a French theologian, was born in 1680 at Trez, in Provence. He studied first under his father (who was superior of the college of Grimaldi), and afterwards at Paris (1701), where, having entered orders, he obtained the vicarage of St. Étienne-du-Mont, and later (1716) that of St. Paul. In 1718 he was nominated canon of Laon, but, on account of the papal interference, he returned to Polisseau. He died at Sarigny-sur-Orge, Nov. 25, 1756. He was an opponent to the bull Unigenitus (q. v.), and wrote the last three volumes of the Histoire du Livre des Réflexions Morales et de la Constitution Unigenitus (Amsterdam, 1723-38); the first being prepared by Joh. Louail:—Témoignage des Chartreux au Sujet de la Constitution Unigenitus (1725):—Observations Théologiques et Morales sur les deux Histories du P. Berruyer (1755). See Nouv. Dict. Historique; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 652; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Caducanus, a Welsh divine, was bishop of Bangor, but, leaving his bishopric, he became a Cistercian monk in Monasterio Durensi, his bishopric not being rich, and at that time very troublesome on account of the civil wars. Caducanus "was no less happy than industrious in his endeavors, writing a book of sermons, and another called Speculum Christianorum." He died in 1225. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 494.

Caduceus was the rod or sceptre of Mercury, being a wand with two wings, entwined with two serpents, borne by that deity as the ensign of his quality and office, and given him by Apollo for his seven-stringed harp. Wonderful powers were assigned to this rod by the poets, such as laying men asleep and raising the dead. It was also used by the ancients as a symbol of peace and concord. See Smith, Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v.

Caduindus, Saint. See CHADOENUS.

Cadurcus, JOHANNES, D.C.L., a French martyr, was degraded and burned at Limousin, in France, in 1533, for exhorting his countrymen upon All-hallow's day, and afterwards confounding a friar out of the Bible. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 396.

Cadwallader, DAVID, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Montgomeryshire, North Wales, May 28, 1791. He was converted and joined the Methodists in 1812; began preaching in 1814; and emigrated to Delaware County, O., in 1821, where he labored as a local preacher till 1828, when he joined the Ohio Conference, and was sent as Welsh missionary to Oneida County, N. Y. Three years later he returned to Delaware County, labored one year in the Ohio Conference, and then, on account of the small salary that he had been receiving, was obliged to locate in order to support his family. He labored successfully as a local preacher until 1844, when he re-entered the Ohio Conference, and for four years travelled extensively through Ohio and Pennsylvania. In 1848 he was stationed at Pittsburgh, Pa., and in the following year, when many preachers fled the city on account of the terrible pestilence that raged there, Mr. Cadwallader was always found at his post, not only among his own people, but among others. Failing health obliged him to become a supernumerary in 1854, and he retired to his home in Delaware County, O., where he died, Oct. 19, 1855. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1856, p. 113.

Cadwell, Christopher Columbus, a Congregational minister, was born at Lenox, N. Y., Dec. 4, 1811. At the age of eighteen he went to the Manual Labor Institute at Whitesborough; thence to Lane Seminary, expecting to complete his theological course there, but became dissatisfied with the officers of that institution in repressing free discussion, as he declared, and left, in company with many others. In 1835 he was ordained, and began to preach in the April of that year, removing to Kingston, Canada, in 1836. In the fall of the same year he returned, and was a member of the anti-slavery convention held at Utica, N. Y., which was broken up by a mob, and completed its sessions at Peterborough. In May, 1837, he went back to Canada, and remained until February, 1838, preaching at various points with success, after which he returned to New York. In June he emigrated to Wisconsin, and spent his first year at Southport, now Kenosha. Subsequently he preached a few months at Racine; in 1840 went to Rochester, in Racine County, where he organized a church, and one also at North Rochester; in 1843 he removed to Waukegan, Ill., then called Little Fort, organized a church and preached there until July, 1844; in the same year went to Paris, Wis., and organized a church in that place. With broken health, he returned to his friends in New York State, Sept. 16, 1844. His health improving, he began to preach again in February following, and returned to the church at Little Fort, Ill., in May, 1845. After two years his health again failed, and he removed to Caldwell Prairie, Wis., where he built a church; preached also at Burlington, and helped build another church; early in 1854 he took charge of the churches at Genoa and Richmond, Ill., spending fifteen years with them, and erecting two church-buildings. Desiring to enter more directly into missionary work, he went to Missouri in June, 1869, and began his labors in Barton and Vernon Counties. He had founded a church at Lamar, and other organizations were in contemplation, when he died there, Jan. 16, 1870. See Cong. Quarterly, 1870, p. 405.

Cadwell, Elisha B., M.A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Warrick County, Ind., Nov. 29, 1850. He was converted in 1861; licensed to preach in 1871; and admitted into the South-east Indiana Conference in 1874. He graduated at More's Hill College in 1875; was elected professor of ancient languages in his alma mater in 1878, and died March 13, 1879. Mr. Cadwell was an earnest Christian, a faithful pastor, and a sound and instructive preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 26.

Cadwell, John, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Westfield, Mass., Aug. 11, 1805. He was converted in his twenty-fourth year; immediately began earnest and successful work for Christ, in holding cottage meetings, and after laboring zealously some years as class-leader and local preacher, he entered the New England Conference in 1836. He continued his earnest work to the day of his sudden death, Jan. 8, 1876. Mr. Cadwell was not especially brilliant, nor did he possess marked ability, but he was a good man, fresh and vigorous. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 69.

Cady, Daniel Reed, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born at Malta, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1813. He was a student at Hamilton Academy; graduated at Williams College in 1838, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1845, having studied law at Albion, and practiced two years. He was ordained at Rutland, Mass., Oct. 29, 1845; was dismissed Oct. 11, 1849; was installed at Westborough, Dec. 5, 1849, and was dismissed, Feb. 6, 1856, after an illness of fifteen months; was installed at Arlington, then at West Cambridge, Feb. 14, 1856, and dismissed, June 29, 1877, on account of impaired health. He was director of the American Educational Society, trustee of Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, and member of Executive Committee, manager of Massachusetts Sunday-school Society, and of the Congregational Board of Publication. He died at Westborough, May 17, 1879. He published Memorials of Lieut. Joseph P. Burrage (Arlington, 1864);—of Deacon John Field (ibid. 1870);—of Rev. Reuben T. Robinson (Winchester, 1871);—also a sermon, The Bible in Schools, besides other memorials. See Vital Statistics of Cong. Ministers, 1879; Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 74.

Cady, Lawton, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Killingly, Conn., July 24, 1796. He was converted in the South in 1820, where he spent some years amid slave institutions, which he thoroughly abhorred; and in 1842 he joined the Providence Conference, wherein he served the Church until his death, June 18, 1871. Mr. Cady was an excellent man, a thorough Methodist, a lucid, accurate, logical, argumentative preacher, amiable, and a favorite among his acquaintances. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 37.

Cæcias, in Greek mythology, was the north-east wind. He was represented on the Tower of the Winds in Athens, with earnest features, wet, loose beard and hair, and with a flying dress about his strong limbs. With both hands he holds a winnowing basket, out of which he throws rain and hailstones on the earth. He was so represented for bringing for Greece storms and hail, clouds and snow, and cold, wet weather.

Cæcilia, Saint, is the name of several females in the Latin calendar.

1. A Roman lady, and one of the four principal virgins and martyrs of the Western Church, commemorated in the Latin and Greek churches, Nov. 22. Of her life hardly any authentic account has come down to us. It is supposed that St. Cæcilia was born at Rome in the 3d century, of parents who secretly adhered to the Christian religion. At a very early age she took the vow of chastity, and as she grew to womanhood became distinguished for her musical talent, mental graces, and personal loveliness. She could play skilfully on all the musical instruments of the day, but was so little satisfied with them that she set herself to invention, and produced the organ. According to her parents' wish, she became, at the age of sixteen, the wife of Valerian, a young nobleman. Upon the nuptial night she informed her husband that she was guarded night and day by a glorious angel. Valerian, desiring to see the angel, was told that he could not unless converted to Christianity, to which he consented, receiving baptism at the hands of pope Urban. The prefect Almachius commanded him to abjure the faith, and upon his refusal to do so, had him, and his brother Tiburtius, beheaded. Soon after he sent to Cæcilia, and commanded her to sacrifice to the gods. Upon her refusing to do so, the prefect gave orders that she should be cast into her own bath, after it had been heated to an intense degree. "But a heavenly dew falling upon the spouse of Christ refreshed and cooled her body, and preserved her from harm." A day and a night the prefect waited for news of her death. Then he sent one of his soldiers to behead her; but though the sword smote her neck thrice, the executioner could not cut off her head, and departed, leaving her on the floor of her bath, covered with blood. She lived three days, never ceasing to exhort the people to continue steadfast in the Lord, and died Nov. 22, A.D. 280. Urban and his deacons buried her in the cemetery of Calixtus, on the Via Appia, near the third mile-stone, and consecrated her house, which she had given to God, as a church forever. It is alleged that her body was found at Rome by Paschal I, A.D. 821, in the cemetery was heard accompanying the vocal music. In England, at the latter part of the 17th century, her day was found a convenient one for holding an annual festival set on foot for the encouragement of music. For a more detailed account of St. Cæcilia see Baronii Annuaire, s. an. 821; Bollandists, Acta Sanctorum, April 14, p. 204; Ceillier, Histoire des Auteurs Sacrés (Paris, 1859, vol. ii); Jameson, Sac. and Legendary Art, p. 583-600 (Lond. 1857, 3d ed.); Tillemont, iii, 259-689; Harper's Magazine, Nov. 1880.

2. Martyr at Carthage with Dativus, A.D. 304.

3. Called also Clara, is supposed to have lived in the 7th century, and to have been abbess of Remiremont, in Lotharingia, for a period of thirty years. She is commemorated Aug. 12. See Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Aug. ii, 732.

Cæcilian is the name of several saints.

1. Jerome says that Cyprian was converted "suadente presbytero Cæcilio," etc., a statement that has probably influenced most editors to substitute Cæcilius for Cæcilianus in the texts of the Life of Cyprian, by his own deacon, Pontius. Cæcilianus is, doubtless, correct. He was etate as well as honore presbyter, and Cyprian, as a deacon, probably lived with him, reverencing him greatly "as the father of his new life." He appears afterwards as venerabilis sacerdos (Bolland, Acta Sanctorum, Jun. 1, p. 264), and was inserted as Sanctus Cæcilius in the Roman martyrology (June 3) by Gregory XIII (see Morcelli, Afr. Christiana, ii, 76).

2. An ecclesiastic who was first archdeacon, then (A.D. 311) bishop, of Carthage.

When archdeacon, he resolutely supported his bishop, Mensurius (q. v.), in opposing the fanatical craving for martyrdom. When nominated as his successor this was remembered against him, and a party, headed by a wealthy but superstitious lady, Lucilla, prepared to fill the vacant see. Cæcilian's party hastened matters; the election took place, and Cæcilian was consecrated by Felix, bishop of Aptunga.

of Prætextatus, adjoining that of Calixtus, and removed to the Church of St. Cæcilia, which he was then rebuilding.

The legend of this saint has furnished the subject of several remarkable pictures, the oldest of which is a rude picture of her on the wall of the catacomb called The Cemetery of San Lorenzo, probably of the 6th or 7th century. The most celebrated of the modern representations of St. Cæcilia is the picture by Raphael (Rome, 1513), and now in the gallery of Bologna. It is not known when St. Cæcilia was first regarded as a patron saint of music, and in the ancient documents that have come down to us there is nothing to show that she ever made use of musical instruments; and, in fact, before the 15th century, she is seldom seen depicted with them. The tradition which connected her name with music is easily accounted for. Pope Paschal built on to St. Cæcilia's Church a monastery, to which he gave a handsome endowment, providing that the religious should guard the bodies of the saint and her companions, and chant the praises of God around her tomb day and night (Baillet, Vies des Saints, ad diem Nov. 22). Such a service of song could not but kindle a legend-loving imagination, and the story grew that often Cæcilia's own instrument

Secundus, primate of Numidia and bishop of Tigisis, was shortly invited to Carthage by the opposing party. He came, attended by seventy bishops, and cited Cæcilian before them. Cæcilian declined to appear, but professed his willingness to satisfy them on all personal matters, and offered to lay down his episcopal office and submit to re-ordination at their hands. Secundus and the Numidian bishops answered by excommunicating him, and ordaining Majorinus, a member of Lucilla's household, as bishop. In the resultant schism, Constantine took sides with the Cæcilianists, and a council was called in the Lateran, Rome, A.D. 313. The personal charges against Cæcilian were examined and dismissed, and his party proclaimed the representatives of the orthodox Catholic. Cæcilian proposed a compromise, but his advances were rejected. A council was called at Arles, A.D. 314, which confirmed the validity of the ordination of Cæcilian. This was endorsed by Constantine, Milan, A.D. 316. Cæcilian lived until about A.D. 345.

3. A martyr with others at Cæsaraugusta (Saragossa), under Datianus, the praeses of Spain. His natalis was April 16 (see Usuard, Mart.).

4. A martyr at Carthage with Dativus A.D. 304. See CÆCILIA, 2, above.

Cæcilius is the name of several men in early church history. See also CAPELLA.

1. Cæcilius Natalis, the pagan in the dialogue of Octavius, by Minucius Felix, is supposed by Tillemont to be no imaginary personage, but a real convert. Tillemont discusses his identity with Cælianus, and with the married presbyter who converted Cyprian (iv, 46, 47, 50; Jerome, Viri Illus. c. 67; Pontius, p. 3).

2. A presbyter and friend of Cyprian. See CÆCILIAN, 1.

3. One of the seven bishops said to have been ordained by the apostles at Rome, and sent into Spain. The seven are celebrated together in a Choriambic hymn in the Mozarabic liturgy on May 15 (Acta Sanctorum, May iii, 441).

4. The martyrdom of Cæcilius on the farther side of the Tiber is assigned to Nov. 17 in the Martyr. Hieron.

5. Bishop of Biltha, in proconsular Africa, a member of the Committee de Virginitus Subintroductis (Ep. 4), A.D. 249, sat in each of the synods, de Pace maturius danda, etc., and as senior bishop spoke first in the synod de Baptismo III. He is not impossibly the same bishop who is addressed by Cyprian on the subject of the mixed chalice (Ep. 63).

Cæilphinn. See CAELLAINN.

Cael (Irish, slender), is a name of frequent use in early Irish Church history.

1. At Oct. 26 the Mart. Doneg. cites Cael, virgin, as one of the four daughters of Mac Iaar, of the Dal Mesincorb; "and they were of Cill-na-ninghen" (the Church of the Daughters) "by the side of Tamlacht to the south," in Londonderry, or at Killinenny, near Tullaght, County Dublin. But the Mart. Tullaght places their abode at Cill-maignend, i. e., Kilmainham, near Dublin.

2. Colgan mentions a Caila, whom he also calls Cælius, whose festival is Nov. 10, on which day Mart. Doneg. gives "Cael Craibhdeach," and the table to the Martyrology "Caol, the Devout (Cælius);" and another Cælius is connected with Athrumia, Feb. 17. But little more can be said of these. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 318, n., 391, n.

3. Cruimther Cael of Kilmore, celebrated as a saint May 25. Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 709, c. 26) connects him with St. Endeus, but gives no account of his relation to Kilmore, to which he is attached in the calendars.

Caelan. There are several saints of this name in the Celtic calendars, such as Caelan of Cilleo, celebrated June 30; Caelan of Doire or Doire-Chaolain, June 19; Caelan of Echinis, Sept. 25; and Caelan of Tigh-na-manach, Oct. 29. But the most notable is Caelan of Inis-Cealtra, July 29; who (under the names Caelan, Coelan, or Chilian) is usually considered the writer of the Life of St. Brigida, which stands as the sixth memoir of that saint in Colgan's Trias Thaumaturga. He was a monk of Inis-Cealtra (now Inishcaltra, County Clare), and probably flourished after the beginning of the 8th century. See Colgan, Tr. Thaum. p. 596, 597; O'Donovan, Four Mast. i, 187; O'Hanlon, Irish Saints, ii, 13; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. Ir. i, 381.

Cælestus. Saint, confessor, and bishop of Metz in Lotharinga at the beginning of the 4th century, is supposed to have died about A.D. 320. His acts are doubtful. He is commemorated Oct. 14.

Cælestius. (1.) One of the chief presbyters of Carthage, who summoned the neighboring bishops and those of Numidia to elect a bishop; and being disappointed at the election of Cæcilian, made a party against him. (2.) The Pelagian. See CŒLESTIUS.

Cælin (or Celin) is the name of two early English ecclesiastics.

1. A brother of bishops Cædda and Cæddæ, a priest in the household of Athelwold, king of Deira. He is mentioned by Bede (H. E. iii, 23, ed. Giles) as introducing his brother Cædda to the notice and favor of his master, about A.D. 653.

2. Provost of Ripon, who was allowed by Wilfrid, in the year 709, to seek a more retired life. The name occurs in the Liber Vitæ of the Church of Durham. See Eddius, Vita Saint Wilfridi, cap. lxi.

Cælius, MICHAEL, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Döbeln, Sept. 7, 1492. In 1519 he was appointed pastor of the Roman Catholic Church at Rochlitz. Leaving his Church and embracing that of the Reformation, he was appointed in 1523 pastor at Pensen, in Bohemia; and in 1525, dean and pastor at Mansfeld. He died in 1559. His writings on the Lord's Supper, and his exhortation to the ministers at the Diet of Augsburg, were edited by Cyriacus Spangenberg in 1569. See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, a. v. (B. P.)

Caellainn (or Caellfhinn), commemorated as an Irish saint on Feb. 3, was the daughter of Cael, of the race of Ciar. Her church is now called Tearmon Caelainne and Tearmon Mor, parish Kilkeevin, County Roscommon. She was the special patron of her kinsmen, the Ciarraidhe, in Connaught, and the legend places her in the reign of Aedh, son of Eochaidh Tirmcharna, king of Connaught, slain A.D. 574. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 13, n.; O'Donovan, Book of Rights, p. 100, n.

Caemghen of GLENDALOUGH. See COEMGEN.

Caemh (or Caويمه) is commemorated as a Scottish saint on April 4. Mart. Doneg. has "Caemh, virgin of Cill-Caويمه," and Mart. Tullaght, "Coine, Cilli-Coine." Again, at Nov. 2, Mart. Doneg. gives "Caويمه, the Albanan, of Cill-Chaويمه," which Dr. Reeves (Mart. Doneg. p. 294, n.) interprets "of Alba, the modern Scotland."

Caemhan. Under this form, and that of Caiman, Coeman, Cayman, Coemhoc, and Mochoemoc, this name is of frequent occurrence among the saints of Ireland, and the work of identification is very difficult.

1. Of Ard-Caemhain—set down on June 12—was the son of Coemloga and Caemell, and appears to have been uterine brother of St. Coemgen. The Mart. Doneg. calls him Caomhan, or Sanct-Lethan, of Ard-Caomhain, in Leinster. Lanigan (Eccl. Hist. Ir. ii, 221, 223) fixes his date, as brother of St. Coemgen, to the period of the second class of Irish saints—that is, to the second half of the 6th century.

2. Of Enach-Truim—on Nov. 3—is said to have been of the race of Labraidh Lorc, king of Ireland. Along with St. Fintan and St. Mochumin of Tir-da-glas, St. Caemhan was under the direction of St. Colum, son of Crimthann of Tir-da-glas, and with the rest constantly followed him. He founded the monastery of Enach-Truim, now Annatrim, Queen's Co.; and flourished A.D. 550. There he spent the remainder of his days, and died Nov. 3, the year unknown.

3. (Caomhan, Coman, Comman, Conun, Conram, or Convan). In the table of the Mart. Doneg. he is called Pulcherius. According to Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 335), Caemhan belonged to a noble stock in Scotland, but withdrew to the Orkneys, where he built a monastery, and, after living in great sanctity as bishop and confessor, died there about 640. At Kirkwall and throughout the islands his memory was long revered. He is commemorated on Feb. 14, and many altars have been raised to his honor.

4. Brec, whose day is Sept. 14. St. Caemhan Brec, of Roseach, is carefully distinguished from St. Mac Nisi (Sept. 3), who is known by the same name, and founded Connor. Ussher places his birth in Hibernia, 529, and his death in 615.

Caemhlach (Lat. Camulacus) of Rathain—commemorated Nov. 3—was one of the bishops of the first class, ordained by St. Patrick, and his house was at Rahen, Kings Co. He is called the Commiensian, and the Hymn of Camelac is in the Antiphony of Bangor.

Caemhog is commemorated among the Irish on July 22. The sex of this saint is uncertain, either from the female termination given to the name, or from other circumstances. Kevoca, a saint of the male sex, is called Caemhog. Both Colgan and Lanigan regarded this person as female, and are in confusion as to identity; the one making her the same as Caviltighern, and the other taking her to be Coennaca. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 586; Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. Ir. ii, 45, 223.

Caencomhrac is commemorated in the Irish calendar on July 23. Mart. Doneg. (by Todd and Reeves, p. 199) gives him as bishop, first at Cluain-mic-Nois, and next at Inis Endaimh, in Lough Ribh, County Roscommon. He left Cluain on account of the popular veneration given him as a prophet, and sought for solitude in Lough Ree.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Caerfán (or Cairlan) was an Irish prelate. A short memoir of this saint is given by Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 744), from which we learn that he was born in the district of the Hy-Niellan or O'Niallan, County Armagh. He was over a monastery in the same place about 546; and was finally raised to the episcopate of Armagh, succeeding Feidlimidh Finn in 578. His death took place in 588, and he is commemorated March 24. See also Lanigan, Eccles. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 183; O'Donovan, i, 212, n., 213; Ware's Bishops.

Caernan is an Irish saint, commemorated Jan. 31. Among the disciples and relatives of St. Columba is enumerated "Cairnaan, filius Branduib, filii Meilgi," as coming with St. Columba on his first visit to Britain. But there is no proof to show whether the Cairnaan thus named is the Caernan of Jan. 31, or he of Cluain—each commemorated April 28.

Cæsar, bishop of Dyrrhachium, is given by Dorotheus as one of the seventy disciples sent out by our Lord, and is said to have been mentioned by St. Paul, on the strength of the passage "Grete them that be of Cæsar's household." The Menology (Dec. 9) makes him bishop of Corona.

Cæsar, Dominicus, a German Benedictine, lived about the middle of the 17th century. In 1652 he taught logic at Salzburg, and soon afterwards became abbot of Oberaltach. He wrote Ariadne Logica (1653). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cæsar, W., an English Baptist, born in 1790, was the pastor of a Baptist church at Farnham, Surrey, from 1853 to the time of his death, May 7, 1863.

Cæsar-Augustanum CONCILIUM. See SARA-GOSSA, COUNCIL OF.

Cæsare, Jacob à, a French Catholic theologian, lived in the latter part of the 17th century. He wrote Doctrina de Sacrificio Missæ (Douay, 1669). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cæsare, Raphael de, an Italian theologian, was born at Naples, and lived near the close of the 16th century. He wrote Consolatio Animarum, sive Summa Casuum Conscientiæ (Venice, 1589, 1599). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cæsareā, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Cæsariense). Several such were held at the various places named below.

I. In Palestine, A.D. 196, on the Easter controversy that had arisen between pope Victor and the churches of Asia Minor; Narcissus of Jerusalem, Theophilus of Cæsarea, Cassius of Tyre, and Clarus of Ptolemaie being present, as we learn from Eusebius. They beg, in what he has preserved of their letter, to be understood as keeping Easter on the same day as the Church of Alexandria. But several versions of the acts of this council have been discovered in the West, at much greater length: the only question is, are they in keeping with the above letter? See Cave, Hist. Lit. i, 97; Mansi, i, 711-716.

II. In Palestine, summoned A.D. 331, to inquire into the truth of some charges brought against St. Athanasius by his enemies, but not held till 334, when he was further accused of having kept the council appointed to try them waiting thirty months. He knew too well to what party the bishop of the diocese belonged to appear even then; and, on his non-appearance, proceedings had to be adjourned to the Council of Tyre the year following. See Mansi, ii, 1122.

III. In Palestine, A.D. 357 or 358, apparently, under Acacius, its metropolitan, when St. Cyril of Jerusalem was deposed. Socrates adds that he appealed from its sentence to a higher tribunal, a course hitherto without precedent in canonical usage; and that his appeal was allowed by the emperor.

IV. In Pontus, or Neo-Cæsarea, A.D. 358, at which Eustathius, bishop of Sebaste, was deposed; and Meletius, afterwards bishop of Antioch, set in his place.

V. In Cappadocia, A.D. 370 or 371, when St. Basil was constituted bishop in the room of Eusebius, its former metropolitan, whom he had been assisting some years, though he had been ordained deacon by St. Meletius. A work of the 9th century makes St. Basil anathematize Dianius, the predecessor of his own predecessor at this synod; but St. Basil himself denies ever having done so. In another place he seems to speak of another synod about to be held in his diocese, to settle the question of jurisdiction between him and the metropolitan of Tyana, consequent on the division of Cappadocia by the civil power into two provinces. St. Basil stood upon his ancient rights; but eventually the matter was compromised, by the erection of more sees in each, the carrying out of which, however beneficial to their country, proved so nearly fatal to their friendship. The date assigned to this council is A.D. 372. See Mansi, iii, 453.

Cæsarea-PALESTINÆ. We extract a further description of the ruins of this once noted place from Porter's Hand-book for Palestine, p. 354 sq.

"The ruins of Cæsarea lie close along the winding shore, projecting here and there into the sea, and presenting huge masses of masonry, and piles of granite columns, to the restless waves. A strong mediæval wall encompasses it on the land side, enclosing an oblong area about one half mile long by one fourth broad. The wall is strengthened by small buttress-like towers, and a moat. The upper part is ruinous—the masonry being tumbled over in huge masses like the walls of Acalon. In the interior all is ruin; not a building remains entire; confused heaps of stones and rubbish are seen, with here and there a solitary column, or a disjointed arch, or a fragment of a wall, all overgrown with thistles and brambles. In the southern wall is a gateway still nearly entire; and on a rising ground a little within it stand four massive buttresses, the only remains of the cathedral of Cæsarea. But the most interesting part of the ruins is the old port. It is unfortunately not only destroyed, but a large portion of its walls has been carried off for the rebuilding of Akka. The famous mole was a continuation of the southern wall of the city. The ruins of nearly one hundred yards of it remain above the water. There has evidently been a strong tower here, intended to guard the harbor. One wonders how those thick walls have been shattered, and how those huge blocks of masonry have been moved from their places, and how they cling together now, like fragments of rock, worn by the elements and beaten by the surf. Then the immense numbers of granite columns attract attention—here projecting in long rows from the side of the broken wall, and there lying in heaps, half buried in the sand. There are the remains of another mole about one hundred yards north. The foundations of both are composed of very large stones, reminding one of those in the substructions of the Temple at Jerusalem; but the superstructure is much more recent, probably not older than the time of the crusades, and is wholly composed of ancient materials. The city of Herod evidently extended considerably beyond the present walls, though little of it now remains. A few heaps of hewn stones and débris, half covered with sand, and overgrown with brambles, serve to mark its site. Many columns lie about, and doubtless many more have been covered up. A little to the east of the wall, among the bushes, may be seen three shafts, somewhat conical in form, and measuring nearly nine feet in diameter at the base. There is also a block of red granite thirty-four feet long, five broad, and four deep."

Additional details are given in Bäderer's Hand-book for Syria, p. 351. (Compare Conder, Tent-work in Palestine, i, 205 sq.)

Plan of the Ruins of Cæsarea-Palestina.

"The medieval town was built in the form of a rectangle, measuring five hundred and forty paces from north to south, and three hundred and fifty paces from east to west. The walls, which were strengthened with buttresses, are six feet thick and still twenty feet high, and are enclosed by a moat, lined with masonry, about thirteen yards wide. On the east wall there are still ten towers; on the north, three; on the west, three; and south, four. At the north-west corner there is a kind of bastion. Towers stand at distances varying from sixteen to twenty-nine yards. The ruins are all of sandstone, with the exception of the fragments of columns of gray and reddish granite, some of which are of vast size. Of the three gates on the land side, that on the south only is preserved. In the midst of the ruins are the remains of a large church of the crusaders' period. The three apses are still distinguishable, and a few of the flying buttresses are also standing. These constructions are older, belonging to an ancient heathen temple. The church was afterwards a mosque. A little to the north of it are the remains of a smaller church. On the south-west side a ridge of rock, bounding a small harbor, runs out into the sea for about two hundred and fifty yards. This natural pier was enlarged by Herod, and on it stood his Tower of Drusus. Large blocks of granite are still seen under water. The foundations only of the Temple of Cæsar are now extant, and their white stones confirm the statement of Josephus that the materials for it were brought from a great distance. The extremity of the ridge of rock, where the 'Tower of Strato' probably once stood, is now occupied by the remains of a mediæval castle, about nineteen yards square, with fragments of columns built into the walls. The top of this ruin commands a very extensive view. In the interior are several vaulted chambers.

"The Roman city probably extended far beyond the precincts of the mediæval, particularly eastwards. To the south of the town is traceable the vast amphitheatre of Herod, turned towards the sea, and exactly corresponding with the description of Josephus. It was formed of earth and surrounded by a moat. In the middle of it are remains of a semicircular building, probably a theatre."

CÆSAREA-PHILIPPI. We give a further description of this place from Porter's Hand-book for Palestine, p. 324 sq.

"This ancient city occupies one of the most picturesque sites in Syria. A broad terrace on the mountain-side looks out over the plain of Haleb to the castellated heights of Hunin. Behind it rises in rugged peaks the southern ridge of Hermon, wooded to the summit. Two sublime ravines cut deeply into the ridge, having between them an isolated cone more than one thousand feet in height, crowned by the ruins of the castle of Subeibeh. On the terrace at the base of this cone lie the ruins of Cæsarea-Philippi. The terrace itself is covered with oaks and olive-trees, having green glades and clumps of hawthorn and myrtle here and there—all alive with streams of water and cascades.

structions of the bridge, the gateway, and the round corner-towers of the citadel are of high antiquity, being constructed of large bevelled stones. They have been repaired, however, as we learn from an Arabic inscription over the gate, in comparatively recent times. The most striking view of the site and surrounding scenery is obtained from the south bank of Wady Za'âreh, a few paces below the bridge. The chasm is at our feet, with the streamlet dashing through it amid rocks and clumps of oleanders; then we have the old bridge, garlanded with creepers and long trails of ferns; then the shattered walls and towers of the citadel; then the wooded slopes around, with the castle of Subeibeh towering high over all. The ruins of the town cover the south bank of Wady Za'âreh, with a portion of the level ground to the west and north-west of the citadel. Great numbers of granite and limestone shafts lie amid heaps of hewn stones. The modern village consists of some forty houses huddled together in a corner of the citadel—that of the sheikh crowning a massive tower at the north-eastern angle. Some of the houses have on their flat roof a little arbor formed of branches of trees; in these the inhabitants sleep during the summer, to escape the multitudes of scorpions, fleas, and other creatures that swarm in every dwelling."

Cæsareus, a deacon, mentioned by Bede, Martyrology (Nov. 24) as suffering in the persecution of Maximian with Largus and Smaragdus. By some he is thought to be Cyriacus, commemorated with the same two companions on March 16 and Aug. 8.

Cæsaria is the name of several early Christian females of eminence.

1. Cæsaria (or Cæsarius, for the sex is doubtful) had consulted St. Basil to know whether it were lawful and expedient to partake of the eucharist daily by one's

View of Banias (Cæsarea-Philippi).

"The ruins of the city extend from the base of the cliff on the north to the banks of a picturesque ravine three hundred or four hundred yards southward. The stream from the great fountain bounds the site on the north-west and west, and then falls into this ravine, so that the city stood within the angle formed by the junction of two ravines. The most conspicuous ruin is the citadel—a quadrangle some four acres in extent, surrounded by a massive wall, with towers at the angles and along the sides. On the east, south, and west the walls are still from ten to twenty feet high, though broken and shattered. The northern and western walls are washed by the stream from the fountain; along the eastern wall is a deep moat; while the southern is carried along the brow of the chasm called Wady Za'âreh. This chasm is spanned by a bridge, from which a gateway opens into the citadel. The sub-self. St. Basil approves of daily communion, though himself communicating only four times a week.

2. This person and her daughter Lucilla were among the nine or ten Manichæans who were all that were known to Felix, the convert from that sect, in North Africa in the 5th century.

3. Saint of Arles, was born at Chalons and educated at Marseilles. She became abbess of Arles when her brother St. Cæsarius was bishop of that see. He drew up the rules of her convent, and procured their ratification by pope Hormisdas. After governing for thirty years, she died about 530. Her monastery was demolished during the invasion of Arles by Theodoric in 507, but was rebuilt by Cæsarius. See Acta Sanctorum Boll. Jan. 12, i, 729.

4. A later abess of the same nunnery writes to St. Rhadegunda defining a Christian's three duties, prayer, Bible reading, and thanksgiving; and sending her, as requested, a copy of a letter of Cæsarius, about A.D. 560. See Martene, Anecdota (Paris, 1717), i, 3.

Cæsarini, JULIANO, an Italian prelate, was descended from a noble family at Rome, and was made cardinal in the year 1426 by pope Martin V, who, as well as Eugenius IV, employed him in several important negotiations. He was slain in the battle of Ladislaus with the Turks at Vannes, in 1444.

Cæsarius, a German theologian, lived in the early part of the 13th century. He was of the noble family of Milendunk, in the country of Neussel. He was priest of the convent of Prum, belonging to the Benedictine order. After four years he resigned his position and withdrew to the convent of Heselbach, of the order of the Cistercians. Here he wrote, in 1222, Explicatio Rerum et Verborum, which is found in his Registrum Bonorum Ecclesiæ Prumiensis. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cæsarius is the name of several early Christians in addition to those given in vol. i.

1. A deacon from Africa, who was martyred with the presbyter Julianus at Terracina, in Campania. He was seized here while preaching against idolatry, and was thrown into the sea in a sack; but his body was recovered, and buried near Terracina. His story in Bede includes the fall of a temple in answer to his prayer, and the joint martyrdom of Leontius his persecutor. Bede and Usuard place him in the reign of Claudius; but another account makes him to have buried Domitilla and her companions in the reign of Trajan.

2. Martyr at Cæsarea in Cappadocia under Decius; commemorated Nov. 3.

3. Father of Eudoxus the Arian. He endeavored to wipe out a life of vice by a martyr's death at Arabissa, in Lesser Armenia, under Diocletian.

4. If we accept as genuine the treatise, Ad Cæsarium Monachum Epistola contra Apollinaristas, we learn from it that Cæsarius embraced a religious life in childhood, became a monk, and secured the affection of Chrysostom. Embracing the views of Apollinarius, he wrote to Chrysostom, acquainting him with his new-found happiness. The intelligence caused great grief to Chrysostom, who composed the above-mentioned letter containing a refutation of this heresy. For an extended discussion of the genuineness of the treatise, see Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Caeti (Caoide, Coeddi, Caideus, Caidocus, or Ceti) is celebrated as an Irish saint Oct. 24. The Mart. Doneg. gives two entries of saints under these names at Oct. 24 and 25. The table of the Martyrology identifies these names as belonging to one person, but it seems more probable that one name under these different Celtic and Latin forms belongs to at least two individuals. See also CAIDOCUS.

1. CAETI (Cuette, or Coeddi), a bishop at Iona (whom Colgan calls Caideus and Cridinus), died, according to the Four Masters, in 710. Other authorities give 711 and 712 (the latter being probably the true date). He is commemorated Oct. 24.

2. CAOIDE (Caideus, or Caidocus) was abbot of Domnach-Caoide, at the Dannaill foot in Tir-Eoghain—that is, "the Church of Caoide," now Donaghedy, in the north of Tyrone. He is commemorated Oct. 25.

Caffa, MELCHIORE (called the Maltese), an Italian sculptor, was born at Malta in 1631, and studied under Bernini. He executed a number of fine works for the Roman churches, of which the most esteemed is a marble group of St. Thomas distributing alms, in the chapel of San Agostino. He died at Rome in 1687. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Caffarelli, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French prelate, was born April 1, 1763. He was obliged to flee into Spain in 1799, but returned to France in 1802, and was made bishop of St. Brieuc, which position he held until his death, Jan. 11, 1815. He was president of the electoral college of the department of the North, went to Paris and participated in the council held there. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caffo AB CAW, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, was patron of Tregaian, a chapel of Llangeinwen, in Anglesey.

Caffre. See KAFFIR.

Cafur is the name of a fountain referred to in the Koran as belonging to the Mohammedan paradise.

Cagliari (or Caliari), PAOLO. See PAOLO VERONESE.

Cagnazzo (Lat. Gagnatius, or Cognatius), GIOVANNI, a learned Dominican, inquisitor at Bologna, known under the name of Tabiensis, from Tabia, his native place, died at Bologna in 1521, leaving a Summa Theologica, called Tabiena, from his surname. It is also known as the Summa Summarum (Bologna, 1515, 4to; Venice, 1602).

Cagnoaldus (Hagnoaldus, Chainoaldus, or Chagnulfus), Saint, an early French prelate, the eldest brother of St. Faro, bishop of Meaux, was a monk at Luxeuil in the time of St. Columban. About 617 Eustasius, abbot of Luxeuil, sent him and Walbertus to the new monastery of Eboriac, near Meaux, which Faro, the sister of Cagnoaldus, had just built for monks and nuns, under the rule of Columban. He was afterwards made bishop of Laon, and was present at the Council of Rheims in 625. It is probable that he lived till after 655. His festival is marked on Sept. 6 (Baillet, Sept. 6).

Cahen, SAMUEL, a Jewish writer of France, was born at Metz, Aug. 4, 1796. He received his Talmudic education at Mayence. While a private tutor at Verdun he prepared himself for academic honors. In 1822 he accepted the professorship of German in the academy at Versailles, which he soon relinquished for the office of secretary to the celebrated Alphonse de Beauchamp. In 1824 he was made director of the consistorial school at Paris, where he died, Jan. 8, 1862. He published, Cours de Lecture Hébraïque Suivi de Plusieurs Prières, avec Traduction Interlinéaire, etc. (Metz, 1824, 1832):—La Bible, Traduction Nouvelle, avec l'Hebreu en Regard, Accompagné des Points-voyelles et des Accents Toniques, avec des Notes Philologiques, Géographiques, et Littéraires et les Principales de la Version des Septante et la Texte Samaritain (1851, 18 vols.); to which Munk, Dukes, Gerson, Lévy, and others contributed:—Archives Israélites de France, Revue Mensuelle, Historique, Biographique, Bibliographique, et Littéraire (1840-46). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 139; Morais, Eminent Israelites of the Nineteenth Century (Philad. 1880), p. 27. (B. P.)

Cahoon, CHARLES D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Linden, Vt., about 1800. He joined the travelling connection of the New England Conference in 1822, and, on its division in 1830, became a member of the New Hampshire Conference. After serving for three years as preacher in charge, and eleven years as presiding elder, he was transferred to the Rock River Conference, and in it labored diligently until his decease, Sept. 25, 1845. Mr. Cahoon was an eminently holy man, professed and gave evidence of possessing perfect love, was sound in Methodism, and deeply devoted to the cause of religion. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1848, p. 263.

Cahoone, WILLIAM, JR., a Presbyterian minister, was born in New York in 1796. He graduated at Dickinson College, Pa., in 1823, and spent over two years in Princeton Seminary. He was ordained by the second Presbytery of New York, May 1, 1828; was missionary of the Reformed Dutch Church at Berne, N. Y., in the same year, and afterwards served as stated supply at Stuyvesant; at Hyde Park, 1829 to 1833; at Coxsackie, 1834 to 1847; at Fordham, 1847 and 1848. He died in 1857. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. p. 48; Corwin, Manual of the Reformed Church (3d ed.), p. 205.

Caian, a Welsh saint of the 5th century, was patron of Tregaian, a chapel under Llangefui, in Anglesey. He is commemorated Sept. 25.

Caideus. See CAETI.

Caidocus, Saint, apostle of the Morini, was a disciple and companion in travel of St. Columban. He and an associate, Fricoreus, seem first to have gone to Lower Germany to teach the Gospel; but, being driven from that country, they came into Ponthieu, in Picardy. Being roughly treated there, they were about to give up their mission, when a young nobleman, Richarius, received them into his house. Under their direction he retired from the world, and built the monastery of Centula, where St. Caidocus remained until his death, about A.D. 640, and was buried within its precincts. He is commemorated on Jan. 24. See also CAETI.

Caignet, ANTOINE, a French theologian, was successively canon, chancellor theological, and grand-vicar of Meaux. He died in 1669, leaving Les Vêrités et les Vertus Chrétiennes (Paris, 1624, 4 vols. 12mo):—Année Pastorale (ibid. 1662, 4to):—La Morale Religieuse, etc. (ibid. 1672, 4to):—La Dominical des Pasteurs, etc. (ibid. 1675). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Cailla. See CAEL (2).

Caillon. See COLGA (5).

Caillan, an Irish saint, commemorated Nov. 13, was the son of Niatach of the race of Conmac, and brother of St. Diermitius, abbot of Inis Clotra. He is said to have been brought up with his relation St. Jarlath, under St. Benen of Armagh, and to have been a disciple of St. Columba. These statements are evidently inconsistent, and the latter seems the most likely, especially as in the Life of St. Maedhog (or Modicus) of Ferns, born A.D. 558, Maedhog is said to have been his school pupil. He is one of the chief saints of Ireland, and presided over the Church at Fiodnacha, in Magh-Rein, County Leitrim, and his monastery became a famous school of divinity.

Caille, ANDRÉ, a French theologian, lived near the close of the 16th century. He wrote Apologie contre Pierre Lotton, de Sacrificio Christi Semel Peracto (1603). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caillau, GILLES JEAN, a French theologian of the Minorite order, lived in the former half of the 16th century, and wrote Recueil de Toutes les Femmes, tant du Vêl que du Nouveau Testament, lesquelles ont Vêu sous la Règle du Saint-Paul—a translation of certain letters of St. Basil and St. Jerome. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caillet, JEAN, a Jesuit, was born in 1557, and died at Douai, his native place, Sept. 4, 1628, aged fifty years, leaving Illustria Sanctorum Virorum Exempli et Fucta Lectissima per singulos Anni Dies (6 vols.).

Cailly, PIERRE, regius professor of philosophy and elocation at Caen; died Dec. 31, 1709, leaving, among other works, Durand Commenté, or the agreement between philosophy and theology, with regard to the doctrine of transubstantiation, in which he adopted the opinions of Durand on the subject of transubstantiation. Nesmond, bishop of Bayeux, condemned this work in 1701, and Cailly publicly retracted the opinions he had expressed. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Cailtan, a Scottish monk, is mentioned by St. Adamnan, St. Columb. i, c. 31, and by O'Donnell, St. Columb. ii, c. 44, as having charge of a "Cella Diuni," in "Stagno Abœ fluminis," and was suddenly sent for by St. Columba, who saw he was near his death. The next night, on his arrival, Cailtan became ill and died. The most probable site of his cell is on the creek or bay in Mull, called Loch Buy. Camerarius gives the commemoration of "St. Cailtanus Abbas" at Feb. 25.

Caiman. See CAEMHAN.

Caiman, Saint, belongs to the third order of Irish saints, and was descended from the princely house of Hykinselagh. He retired for solitude and devotion to an island in Loch Derg, and lived there in the first half of the 7th century. He died A.D. 653, and was buried at Inishcaltra. His festival is March 24.

Cain, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, was patroness of Llangain, Carmarthenshire.

Cainchus. See CAINNECH (3).

Cainder. See CAINNER.

Caine, JOHN, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born on the Isle of Man, Oct. 16, 1812. He emigrated to America at the age of sixteen; experienced conversion three years later; and, after laboring some time as a local preacher, he, in 1844, entered the Genesee Conference, in which he labored as health permitted to the close of his life, in 1853. Mr. Caine was excessive in good works, and abundantly successful. He was ardent in piety, punctual in duty, and true to Christ. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1853, p. 252.

Cainnech (Canicus, Canice) is the name of several Irish saints.

1. Commemorated Jan. 23. Colgan thinks this may be St. Cannechus, who was baptized by St. Patrick, became "præfectus monachorum S. Patricii et episcopus," and built the church of Kealltag, in the same district of Corco-themne (i. e. Corcoghenny, County Tipperary), where he was baptized.

2. Commemorated Jan. 31. In Mart. Doneg. there is Cainneach, son of Ua Chil, priest. Mella was the name of his mother, and also the mother of Tighearnach of Doire-Melle. But as to Cainnech, his father, or his life, we have nothing better than supposition.

3. Abbot of Achadh-bo—commemorated Oct. 11—better known in Ireland as St. Canice, and in Scotland as St. Kenneth, was of the race of Ciar, and tribe of Corco Dalann. He was born in 517, at Kiannaght, County Derry, and, being baptized by bishop Luceth (or Lry-rech), was brought up in his mother's country. He afterwards went over to St. Cadocus in Wales, whose love he won by his prompt obedience. Proceeding to Rome to the limina apostolorum, he seems, upon his return, to have studied under Moli Clairenach at Glasnevin, and under St. Finnian at Clonard. Subsequently he appears to have gone to Scotland, and been with St. Columba in Iona. With this saint he was closely connected, as well as with other great men of his time, such as the two Brendans, St. Comgall, St. Fintan of Clonagh, and St. Mochemog (or Pulcherius) of Liathmor. The exact date of the foundation of his monastery is unknown, but it was probably before 577, on land granted him by his patron Colman, lord of Ossory. On an island in Loch Ree he wrote a copy of the four Gospels, under the name of Glass-Kinnich, the "chain" (or "Catena") of Cainnech. He died in A.D. 600. His principal church was Achadh-bo (now Aghaboe, or Aughavo), Queen's County; and he was also patron of Kilkenny. Besides his Irish dedications of Kilkenny, Aghaboe, and Drumachose, and being honored as the patron of the diocese of Ossory, he is, next to St. Brigid and St. Columba, the favorite Irish saint in Scotland. See Forbes, Kal. Scott. Saints, p. 297; Montalembert, Monks of the West, iii, 230.

Cainner (Cainder, Cannera, Cinnera, Cun-nera, or Kennere) is the name of several Irish saints.

1. Mart. Doneg. calls this saint the daughter of Cruithnechan, at Cill-Chuillinn, in Caibre: but Mart. Tallaght has "Caineach ingen Cruithnechan." Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 174) calls her St. Cannera, daughter of Cruithnechan, in Bertraighe. She betook herself to solitude, and had, as a friend, St. Senan of Iniscathe. Near the close of her life she was removed to his monastery, where she died, and was buried on the shore of Scatteray Island. She flourished about 530, and in St. Senan's Life is called Kymera. She is much revered in the district of ancient Carberry, County Cork, especially at Cill-Chuillinn. She is commemorated Jan. 28.

2. St. Kennere, virgin martyr, is given Oct. 29 in the Scotch calendars. She is said to have been a companion of St. Ursula, on the Lower Rhine, in the middle of the 5th century, but to have escaped when the others were martyred. She was afterwards murdered through jealousy, and special honor was given to her relics by St. Willebrod. She had dedications in the south-west of Scotland.

Caireach DERGAIN, an Irish saint, commemorated Feb. 9, was the sister of St. Enna of Arran, in Galway Bay, of the race of Colla-da-chrioch, and family of Orgielli, in Ulster. Her father was Conall Derg. Her death is entered in the Four Masters at 577, and she is commemorated Feb. 9. Although her monastery is placed at Clonburien, parish of Moore, County Roscommon, there is no little doubt as to her place and time.

Cairell (Lat. Carellus), an Irish saint, commemorated June 13. On this day Mart. Doneg. and Tallaght put Cairell bishop of Tir-Rois, and the former adds, from the Life of St. Colman Ela, that bishop Carell was along with him when he went to Lann-Ela, in the end of the 6th century. This must be Carellus, son of Nesson, of Leinster descent, who is the contemporary of Sts. Colman Ela, and Senan, and the bishop at Tir-Rois. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 611.

Cairlan. See CAERLAN.

Cairn (Saxon, carn, hill or heap), in British and Scottish heathendom, was an artificial mound, encircled by trenches, on which the original natives performed judicial and sacred ceremonies. They were probably sepulchral monuments of eminent chiefs, and finally became noted landmarks. Public meetings were often held on them, and it is thought that criminals were executed there, and a fire was continually kept burning on them. Out of reverence, the hill in early times was only approached from the east and west. See ALTAR; STONE.

Cairncross, Alexander, a Scotch prelate, was of the family of Cairncrosses of Cowmisle, and was a dyer in the Canongate of Edinburgh, which employment he exercised for many years. He took his degree of A.M. at the Edinburgh University in 1657, was licensed to preach in 1662, and became minister at Trinity Church, Edinburgh, in 1663, and afterwards at Dumfries until 1684, when, by the recommendation of the duke of Queensberry, he was promoted to the see of Brechin, and advanced to the archbishopric of Glasgow the same year. He continued there until 1686, when, having incurred the displeasure of the king, he was removed, Jan. 13, 1687. In 1693 he was made bishop of Raphoe, in Ireland, where he continued until his death, in May, 1701, aged about sixty-four years. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 168, 269; Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, i, 96, 560; ii, 380; iii, 899.

Cairncross, Robert, a Scotch prelate, was of the family of Balmashannan, in the shire of Angus, and was provost of the collegiate church of Corstorphine, and chaplain to king James V, by whom he was put into the office of high-treasurer upon the fall of the earl of Angus, Sept. 5, 1528. He was soon after made abbot of Holyrood, but was turned out in 1529. He was made bishop of Ross in 1540, and was, by the parliament, appointed to be one of the lords of the council to the governor, the earl of Arran. He joined with the rest of the clergy in opposing the treaty of peace with England, and the marriage of the infant queen with the prince of Wales. He probably died in 1545. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 190.

Cairnech is the name of several Irish saints.

1. One of this name (written Caernach) appears in the Four Masters among the deaths under A.D. 779 (rather 784), as son of Suibhne, and prior of Armagh. In the Annals of Ulster, A.D. 783, he is called "Cernach mac Suibhne equonimus Ardmachae"—i. e. house-steward of Armagh.

2. Commemorated March 28, was the son of Saran and Pompa (or Bebona), and was born about A.D. 450. His brothers were St. Berchan and St. Ronan, and his monastery was probably at Cruachan Ligeon, on Lough Foyle, near Lifford. He must have died about A.D. 530, and thus could scarcely have been associated with St. Patrick in revising and purifying the Irish laws.

3. Of Tuilen—commemorated May 16—is probably the St. Carnocus ("Episc. Culdæns") of June 15 of Cambrerius. He flourished about A.D. 450, and was the son or grandson of Ceredig. Choosing the religious life, he went to Ireland, where he co-operated with St. Patrick. He returned to Britain, but eventually died in Ireland. Colgan cannot decide whether this Cairnech or the one preceding is the Carnechus Moel who wrote the Acts of his master, St. Ciaran. This Cairnech is said to have come from Cornwall to join St. Patrick, and to have helped him to compile the Brehon laws. He, therefore, lived in the 5th century. His burial-place is said to be at Dulane, in Meath. The Welsh represent him as the son of Ceretic, and say that he was born in Cardigan.

Cairnes, John, a Scotch clergyman, held meetings in Edinburgh in support of the Protestant faith in 1555, and was a reader there in 1561. He was admitted to the ministry by the assembly in 1566, and was the fourth minister in the city in 1568. He was banished and put in exile for a time, but his stipend was continued, and was increased in 1586, and again in 1588 and 1590. He was for some time clerk to the session, and died in 1595. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, i, 6.

Cairney, Robert DE, a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of Dunkeld in 1396, and held the office about forty years. He acquired the lands of Crawmond, in the same parish, during his possession of the see. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 85.

Cairns, Adam (1), a Scotch clergyman, was educated at the parish school of Temple; was licensed to preach in 1787; presented to the living at Longforan in 1793; had a new church built in 1795, and died Nov. 6, 1821, aged sixty-three years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, iii, 716.

Cairns, Adam (2), D.D., a Scotch clergyman (son of the preceding), studied at the Edinburgh University; was licensed to preach in 1824; became assistant to Sir Henry Moncrieff Wellwood, Bart.; was presented by the earl of Wemyss to the living at Manor in 1828, and ordained; transferred to Dunbog in 1833, and promoted to Cussar in 1837. He joined the Free Secession in 1843. His health failing, he was sent as a missionary to Gibraltar; demitted his charge, and settled in Chalmers Church, Melbourne, Australia, in 1853. He published Some Objections to Universal Atonement, and other Sermons:—The Second Woe (1852);—and The Origin and Obligation of the Sabbath. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, i, 251; ii, 463, 490.

Cairns, Christopher, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1723; was licensed to preach in 1728; was called to the living at Tweedsmuir, and ordained, in 1732. He died Jan. 6, 1761. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 260.

Cairns, George, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland in 1817, but removed with his parents to America. He graduated at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Pa., in 1846, and from the theological seminary at Allegheny City in 1850. He was licensed by the Allegheny Presbytery in 1847, and for three years he served the churches of Buffalo and Union, Pa. In 1857 he removed to Illinois, and became the pastor of Prospect Church, Peoria Presbytery, where he remained until his death, June 25, 1863. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 105.

Cairns, William Douglass, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Stratford, Conn., Aug. 4, 1804. He graduated at Yale in 1823, became a communicant among the Congregationalists, and began the study of theology at Princeton, with a view to the ministry. Here his religious convictions underwent a change, and he united with the Protestant Episcopal Church, being admitted to the order of deacons at Richmond, Va., in 1825. He labored in Gloucester County, Va.; Wilmington, N. C.; Hudson, N. Y.; and, as a general missionary, in Edenton, N. C. Subsequently he went to Columbus, Ga., of which parish he was rector at the time of his death, which occurred at Somerville, Ala., May 8, 1850. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1850, p. 325.

Cairo, COUNCIL OF. There seems to have been at least one such, held in the 5th century, not otherwise noted. Certain bishops of Egypt having by their conduct given offence to many of the principal Christian inhabitants of Misra (now Cairo), the latter requested Cyril, the seventy-fifth patriarch of Alexandria, to deprive them of his communion. He refused to do so, and the other prelates presented a memorial to the vizier. A synod was assembled at Misra in 1239, which was opened by the vizier in a harangue, severely rebuking the prelates for having disregarded the honor due the patriarch. He requested them to furnish him with such information as would enable him to pronounce a correct judgment. This was accordingly done by both parties, and at the end of three weeks the vizier summoned the bishops before him, and telling them that he had not read the collection of canons which they had put into his hands, and that he did not intend to read them, declared that he could do nothing else but exhort them to unity and peace, as worshippers of the same God, and as professors of the same religion. The recalcitrant prelates held a conference with Cyril, the end of which was their agreeing to return into concord with him, upon condition of his subscribing certain articles containing the points necessary to be reformed in the Church. To this Cyril consented, and the articles were drawn up accordingly. At the head of these articles was placed the confession of faith according to the decisions of the councils of Nicæa, Constantinople, and Ephesus (which alone are recognized by the Jacobites). Then follows a profession concerning the observance of all things contained in Holy Scripture, the apostolical canons, and the decrees of those councils which the Jacobite Church receives, as well as of those customs which were in use in the Coptic Church. Among the new decrees then made were the following:

That the patriarch should not excommunicate any one in the diocese of another bishop, except upon lawful and canonical grounds; and not even so, except the bishop, having been duly admonished to do this, should refuse, without assigning an adequate cause.

That (on the other hand) the patriarch should not absolve one excommunicated by his own bishop, unless it should appear that the excommunication was unjust, and the bishop himself, after two monitions, should refuse to do so.

That each bishop should have entire control over his own diocese; that nothing should be taken from it territorially; and that so in like manner each bishop should confine himself to the boundaries of his diocese on the day of his consecration. That the patriarch should not apply to his own use the offerings made in the churches on festival days, or at certain accustomed times, but that they should be at the disposal of the bishop of the diocese; except the patriarch should consent, at his consecration, to take such offerings in lieu of his usual pension.

Cyril and his suffragans retired from the vizier's presence, rejoicing that so dangerous an appeal had had so happy an issue.

Cairo, FERDINANDO, an Italian historical painter of the Piedmontese school, was born at Casal Monferrato in 1666 (others say 1656 or 1671), and studied with his father, an obscure artist, and afterwards with Franceschini, at Bologna. He executed the frescos on the ceiling of the Church of San Antonio at Brescia. He died at Brescia in 1730. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cairotte, PAOLO MAURIZIO, an Italian prelate, was born at Turin in 1726. In 1761 he was called, contrary to his wishes, to the episcopal see of Asti. He reformed the customs of the clergy, and died in 1786. He wrote Instruction à la Jeunesse Ecclésiastique (1775). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cairpre (Lat. Carbreus, or Corpreus). There were several Irish saints of this name, but most of them are very obscure; such as Cairpre, bishop of Maghbiele, commemorated May 3; Corpreus of Clonmacnoise, Nov. 1; and Cairpre, bishop of Cill-Chairpre, in Tir-Aedha. Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 509) gives a memoir of St. Corpreus Crom of Cluannmicnois (March 6), who died in 889. Among the disciples of St. Finnian (Feb. 23) is given St. Carbreus, bishop of Cuil-rathain, venerated Nov. 11. He is said to have been a disciple of St. Mennena (q. v.), and in the Life of that saint there is an account of St. Cairpre's being carried by pirates into America, in Gaul, and there put to grinding corn. He was released, and consecrated bishop by St. Brugacius; flourished at Cuil-rathain, now Coleraine, in 540; and died about 560. See Colgan, Acta Sanctorum, p. 406, c. 3, p. 438, and Tr. Thaum. p. 148, 183; Lanigan, Ecc. Hist. of Ireland, ii, 77-79; Reeves, Eccles. Antig. p. 75, 188, 247.

Caissin. See CASSAN.

Caius (Gr. Γάιος, i. e. Gaius) is the name of several early Christians, not otherwise noted.

1. Only one Gaius is named among the seventy disciples by Dorotheus, and he is said to have succeeded Timothy in the see of Ephesus. In the Menology he is commemorated Nov. 4. This may be the Gaius who is addressed in the third epistle of John, if we suppose Diotrephes to have held the see when the epistle was written.

2. Caius, bishop of Pergamos, is named in the Apostolical Constitutions (vii, 46).

3. The twenty-first bishop of Jerusalem, according to Eusebius (H. E. v, 12), and called Gaius in the Chronicon (sub anno 160); and by Epiphanius (Har. 66, p. 637).

4. The twenty-third bishop of Jerusalem, and called Gaius in the Chronicon (sub anno 160). Only one of these is named in Rufinus.

5. Martyr, of Eumeneæ, at Apamea, who refused to be reckoned with the Montanist martyrs. In the Roman martyrologies he is commemorated March 10.

6. Arrested with Dionysius of Alexandria, A.D. 250, and confined with him in a desert place of Libya. He is commemorated with Dionysius by the Greeks, Oct. 4, as a deacon and martyr.

7. Priest of Didda, was excommunicated, with the approval of Cyprian (Ep. 28), for receiving the lapsed without penance. He is supposed by Tillemont (iv, 94) to have been one of five schismatics named in epistle 40.

8. Gaius, Fortunatus, and Antus are commemorated, Aug. 28, at Salerno, as patron saints; and are supposed to have been companions of Felix. They are not mentioned in the martyrologies of that day, but the first two are frequently joined in the Hieronymian martyrology—e. g. Jan. 19, Feb. 2, March 4.

9. One of the martyrs of Saragossa.

10. Martyr, at Nicomedia, Oct. 12, with twelve soldiers, and commemorated in the Roman martyrologies.

11. One of the forty martyrs of Sebaste. This name is frequently mentioned in the Hieronymian martyrology, and occurs in the Lesser Roman martyrology on April 19 (at Militana) and on Nov. 20 (at Messina). Usuard adds one (at Bononia) Jan. 4, and one drowned March 4.

12. Deacon of Alexandria, who followed Arius, and signed his letter to St. Alexander.

13. Orthodox bishop of Thumis, in Egypt, who assisted at the councils of Tyre, Sardica, and Nice. He had to flee from the Arian persecution, and perhaps appears at the Council of Alexandria in A.D. 362, as bishop of Paretonia, in the Libyan desert.

14. The Arian bishop of Pannonia, who was at the Council of Milan in 335, and at the Council of Rimini in 359, maintained the third confession of Sirmium, and was deposed. Afterwards he was reinstated, and sent on a deputation to Constantius. The Semi-Arians who were deposed at Constantinople in 360 asked the Western churches to hold him excommunicated, which they accordingly did, in 371.

15. A heretic, to whom Augustine writes in 390 his epistle 19, sending him all his books.

16. Supposed Donatist bishop at Carthage; others read Carus.

17. Patriarch of Alexandria. See GAIANUS (6).

18. Monk. See DIONYSIUS THE AREOPAGITE.

Caius, bishop of ROME from Dec. 17 (16?), 283, to April 22, 296—i. e. for twelve years, four months, and one week (Pontifical, Bucher, p. 272); but only eleven years, according to Anastasius (c. 24), and for fifteen years, according to Eusebius, who speaks of him as a contemporary (H. E. vii, 32; Chron. 284). He is probably the same as Caius the deacon, imprisoned with pope Stephen in 257. Caius is said, in the early pontifical, to have avoided persecution by hiding in the crypts. He is stated by Anastasius to have established the six orders of usher, reader, exorcist, subdeacon, deacon, and presbyter, as preliminary stages necessary to be passed before attaining the episcopate; also to have divided Rome into regions, and assigned them to the deacons. He is said to have sent Protus and Januarius on a mission to Sardinia. According to the 6th century pontifical he died in peace, and is not called a martyr earlier than by Bede and Anastasius. From a confusion between the calends of March and of May, in the Mart. Hieron., Rabanus assigns his death, and Notker his burial, to Feb. 20. His commemoration on July 1, in the latter martyrology, is unexplained. He was the last of the twelve popes buried in the crypt of Sixtus, cemetery of Callixtus; and is, therefore, mentioned again Aug. 9, at which date a copy of the inscription, set up by Sixtus III, was placed in the margin of the ancient martyrology.

Cajetan, a cardinal, of Placentia, and legate of the pope in France, lived in the latter part of the 16th century. He wrote Litteræ ad Universos Regni Franciæ Catholicos, super Conventu quorundam Ecclesiasticorum ab Henrico Borbonico ad Oppidum S. Dionysii Indictio (Paris, 1593):—Ezhortatio ad Catholicos qui in Regno Franciæ ab Heretici Partibus Stant (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cajetan, Constantino, an Italian Benedictine, was born at Syracuse, in Sicily, in 1560. Having joined his order in 1586 at Catania, he was called to Rome, where he assisted the famous Baronius in the edition of his Annales, and where he was also appointed by Paul V. custos of the Vatican library. In 1621 he commenced the erection of the College de Propaganda Fide, which was completed by Gregory XV, and of which he was made first president. Cajetan died Sept. 17, 1650. He edited the works of Petrus Damianus, the Sanctorum Trium Episcoporum, Isidori Hispalensis Vitæ et Actiones, etc. See Mongitorius, Bibliotheca Sicula; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 916. (B. P.)

Cajetan, Mario, an Italian Capuchin of Bergamo, who died about 1746, at a very advanced age, and left a number of ascetical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cajetan, Ottavio, an Italian Jesuit, was born at Syracuse, in Sicily, Aug. 22, 1566; and died, as rector of the college at Palermo, March 8, 1620. He wrote Vitæ Sanctorum Sæculorum ex Antiquis Græcis Latinisque Monumentis (edited by Peter Salernus, Palermo, 1657):—Isagoge ad Historiam Sacram Siculæ (ibid. 1707). See Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 676, 815; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Cajetan, Sebastian, a French theologian of the order of the Observantine Minorites, lived in the first half of the 17th century. He was provincial of his order, and left in Latin a commentary on the Decretals. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cajot, Charles, a French theologian, brother of Jean Joseph, was born at Verdun, Aug. 17, 1731; entered the congregation of St. Vannes, of the order of St. Benedict; and died Dec. 6, 1807, leaving Recherches Historiques sur l'Esprit Primitif et les Anciens Collèges de l'Ordre de S. Benoît (Paris, 1787). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cajot, Jean Joseph, a French Benedictine of the congregation of St. Vannes, was born at Verdun-sur-Meuse in 1726; joined the order at Hautvilliers in 1743; and died in his native town July 7, 1779, leaving a number of archaeological and critical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cakebread, CHARLES, an English Baptist minister, was born near Banbury, Oxford County, in 1795. His father was a minister, and he united with the Church at the age of eighteen; and, after studying for a time, was ordained pastor at Marylebone, Portsea. Subsequently he became pastor at Landport. While absent from his charge on account of his health, he died in London, Dec. 2, 1858. See (Lond.) Baptist Handbook, 1861, p. 97. (J. C. S.)

Calabre is a dark or ruddy fur from Calabria, used for the almuces of minor canons and priests vicars in English cathedrals.

Calabre, EDMÉ, a French priest of the Oratory, was born at Troyes in 1665; and died, as professor at Soissons, June 13, 1710. During the last fifteen years of his life he was employed at Soissons in preparing young priests for their spiritual calling. He left a Paraphrase on the Psalms, and some Sermons. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calahan, JAMES, a Methodist Episcopal minister, son of Rev. George Calahan, a Methodist preacher, was born in 1807. He experienced religion when but a boy, and in 1826 entered the Ohio Conference. In 1832 he became superannuated; and died Nov. 9, 1833. Mr. Calahan was a young man of considerable talent and culture, deep piety, and usefulness to the Church. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 343.

Calais. See CARLEFUS.

Calais, HENRI DE, a French Capuchin of the 17th century, wrote an Apology against the adversaries of his order (Paris, 1649, fol.).

Calamanda was a virgin martyr, honored Feb. 5, at Calaffa, diocese of Vico, in Spain, of whose history nothing is known (Tillemont, v. 550).

Calame, Mary Anne, was a philanthropist of the Society of Friends. In early life the poor and the helpless became the principal objects of her care. Her efforts to reclaim the children of vicious parents led her at last to the establishment of a kind of home for them. She began with only five children, asking at first about a farthing a month for their support, from each of her neighbors. In 1832 the institution which she established at Locle, Switzerland, as a refuge for the young from vice and misery, contained two hundred and fifty children. These were nourished, clothed, and educated by benevolent contributions, under her direction. These contributions came largely from the Society of Friends in England. In this work she was assisted by her intimate friend, Marguerite Zimmerlin, during a score of years. Mary Anne held religious services after the manner of the Quakers, not only in the institution which she had founded, but also in Neuchâtel. She died Oct. 22, 1834, leaving the orphanage in the hands of a committee, together with all the funds which she had collected for it. See The Friend, viii, 366.

Calame, Romain, a French chronologist of the congregation of St. Vannes, was a native of Morteau, in Franche-Comté. He entered the order at the abbey of St. Evre de Toul, June 3, 1644; taught philosophy, belles-lettres, and theology in several convents; and died at Fontaine, near Lexeuil, Sept. 4, 1707, leaving a number of historical and other works, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calamus, in ecclesiastical usage, is (1) the reed—the single upright shaft which supported the table of an altar, called also Columella. In the 5th century there were, according to local usages, two or four pillars, and a fifth, in the centre, which supported the reliquary, was sometimes added, as in St. Mattha's at Tarascon, St. Agricola's at Avignon, and one at Marseilles, formerly at St. Victor's Abbey. The space between these columns served as a sanctuary for fugitives. (2) Called also Fistula, Siphon, and Canna—a narrow tube or pipe of precious metal, which was for some time used after the 10th century, or, as some say, a still earlier date, in the Western Church, by the communicants, for suction, when partaking of the chalice. Bishop Leofric, in 1046, gave a silver pipe to Exeter Cathedral; William Rufus gave other kinds to Worcester. The custom was long retained at St. Denys and Cluny, at the coronation of the kings of France; and the pope still, at a grand pontifical mass, uses a golden pipe at communion when he celebrates in public together with his deacon and subdeacon. The Benedictines and Carthusians communicated the laity with a reed in Italy, in memory of the bitter draught of vinegar, gall, and myrrh offered in a reed to the dying Saviour on the cross, and also to avoid any risk of spilling the consecrated wine, and to obviate the repugnance of some persons to drinking from the same cup with others.

Calamy, Benjamin, D.D., an eminent English divine, son of Edmund the elder, was educated at St. Paul's School, and at St. Catharine's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow in 1668. He was chosen minister of St. Mary Aldermanbury, April 25, 1677, and soon after appointed chaplain to the king. In 1683 he became vicar of St. Lawrence Jewry, with St. Mary Magdalen, Milk Street, attached. June 18, 1685, he became a prebendary of St. Paul's. He died in January, 1686. He published several single sermons, and some collections of sermons. His celebrated Discourse about a Scrupulous Conscience was preached in 1683, and published the following year. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Calamy, James, an English clergyman, younger brother of Benjamin, was educated at Cambridge (graduating in 1672). He became prebendary of Exeter, and died in 1714. He published some sermons. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Calandar, SHARAF BU-ALI, a Moslem fanatic, lived in the 13th century. At the age of fourteen he went to Delhi, where he was introduced to Khaja Cuth Udin, and he was occupied for twenty years in outward science. He then pretended to have become inwardly enlightened, threw his books into the river Jemua, and travelled as a religious teacher. He founded in Asia Minor, in connection with other Mohammedan savants, a school of spiritual philosophy, under the title of Masnavi. He professed to work miracles, and his tomb is a place of pilgrimage. His death occurred, according to Hamilton (East India Gazette, ii, 367), in 1323, which would give him the extreme old age of 130 years. His Fatiha was printed at Calcutta (Hidayat el-Islam, p. 269). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calandio (or Calendio) succeeded Stephen II as bishop of Antioch, A.D. 481, owing his promotion to the emperor Zeno, and Acacius, bishop of Constantinople. There is a large body of evidence (not, however, to be admitted without grave question) that Calandio's election was of an uncanonical character; that, being at Constantinople on business connected with the Church of Antioch at the time of the vacancy of the see, he was chosen bishop, and ordained by Acacius. The authorities for this version of the facts are, Theophanes, p. 110 c; Gelasius, Gesta de Nomine Acacii; Labbe, Concil. iv, 1082. The same authorities add that the Eastern bishops had reappointed the deposed bishop of Antioch, John Codonatus, but that he was bribed to retire by the appointment to the archbishopric of Tyre. Calandio thus quietly succeeded to the see, and was recognised both by the Eastern bishops and by pope Simplicius. The letter of Simplicius to Acacius, July 15, 482, conveying his sanction of Calandio's appointment, renders it very doubtful whether there is not a misrepresentation of the facts, in consequence of a confusion between the election of Calandio and his predecessor, Stephen II, who is entirely passed over by Theophanes. Calandio commenced his episcopate by refusing communion with all who declined to anathematize Peter the Fuller, Timothy the Weasel, and the Encyclic of Basiliscus; and is reported to have endeavored to counteract the Monophysite bias given to the Trisagion by Peter the Fuller. He rendered his short episcopate still further notable by translating the remains of Eustathius. Calandio fell into disgrace, and was banished by Zeno, at the instigation of Acacius, to the African oasis, in 485, where he probably ended his days. The charge against him was political, but the real cause of his deposition was the theological animosity of Acacius, whom he had offended by writing a letter to Zeno, accusing Peter Mongus of adultery, and of having anathematized the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon, and by his refusal to forswear communion with John Talajas and pope Felix III. See Liberatus Diaconus, Breviar. c. xviii; Gelasius, Epist. xiii ad Dardan. Episc.; Labbe, iv, 1208, 1209; xv, 1217.

Calandrucci, GIACINTO, an Italian painter, was born at Palermo in 1646, and studied under C. Maratti at Rome, where he painted two fine pictures; one of St. John, in San Antonio de Portoghesi, and one of St. Ann, in Santa Paolina della Regola. He painted a picture of the Virgin, with Saints, at Palermo. He died in 1707. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calanna, PIETRO, an Italian Franciscan, was born at Termini, on the island of Sicily, in 1531, where he also died, Jan. 19, 1606. He advocated the philosophy of Plato, and wrote a work on the subject (Palermo, 1599, 4to), and a funeral sermon. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calanus, JUVENCUS CELIUS, a Hungarian prelate and historian, was a native of Dalmatia, and lived near the close of the 12th century. We only know of him that, in 1197, he was bishop of the Five Churches. He wrote Attila, rex Hunorum (Venice, 1502, fol.), and aided in an edition of Plutarch, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calaoorat (or Calahorrat), JUAN, a Spanish Franciscan of the 17th century, wrote a history of his order in Syria and Palestine, of which an Italian translation was published at Venice in 1694. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calapatauroth, in Talmudical legend, is an archon placed to guard the mysterious book of Jehu, written by Enoch in Paradise.

Calāthus, in Greek mythology, was the holy basket of Demeter (Ceres), which, on the evening of the fourth day of the Eleusinia, was drawn about on the wagon of the goddess in procession. This was done in memory of the plucking of flowers by Proserpine, and of her abduction by Pluto; therefore it was also filled with flowers, and each of the basket-carriers had flower-wreaths about her.

Calcagni (Lat. Calcagninus), ROGIERO, an Italian theologian of the Dominican order, was a native of Florence. He distinguished himself as a preacher, was appointed bishop of Castro in 1240, and inquisitor of the faith in Tuscany, and was remarkable for his zeal against the heretics. Having assisted at the Council of Lyons, under Innocent IV, in 1245, he attended a second council held at the same place in 1274, and after thirty-four years in the episcopacy he retired to the convent of Arezzo, where he died in 1290. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Calcagno (Lat. Calcanus), LORENZO, a celebrated jurisconsult of Brescia, who died in 1478, leaving De Septem Peccatis Mortalibus:—De Conceptione S. Mariæ, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calcar (or Kalcker), JEAN DE, an eminent Flemish painter, was born at Calcar, in the duchy of Clèves, in 1499. He was a disciple of Titian, at Venice, and perfected himself by studying Raphael. He imitated those masters with such success as to deceive the most skilful critics. Among his various pieces is a Nativity, representing the angels round the infant Christ, which he arranged so that the light emanated wholly from the child. He died at Naples in 1546. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Calcia, GIUSEPPE (also called Il Genovisino), a Piedmontese painter, flourished about 1675. In the church of the PP. Predicatori, at Turin, are two pictures by him, of St. Dominico and St. Tommaso. He painted several altar-pieces for the churches at Alessandria.

Calculatōres (or Caulculatores), casters of horoscopes. This term does not appear to figure in church history till the time of Charlemagne. An ecclesiastical capitulary of 789, dated from Aix-la-Chapelle, referring to the precepts of the Pentateuch against witchcraft and sorcery, enacts that "there shall be no calculators, nor enchanters, nor storm-raisers (tempestarii), or obligatores (?); and wherever they are, let them amend or be condemned"—the punishment being apparently left to the discretion of the judge (c. 64). The term figures again, and in much the same company, in a similar enactment contained in certain "Capitula Excerpta" of the year 802, also dated from Aix-la-Chapelle (c. 40).

Caldana, ANTONIO, an Italian painter, a native of Ancona, flourished at Rome in the latter part of the 18th century. He painted a large picture, much admired, in the sacristy of San Nicola da Tolentino, from the life of the saint. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Caldara. See CARAVAGGIO.

Caldcleugh, JOHN, a Scotch clergyman, was third master at St. Mary's College, St. Andrews; minister at Abdie in 1594; and was appointed constant Moderator of the Presbytery in 1606. He was charged before the High Commission in 1611, for unadvisedly giving admission to a minister at Strathmiglo, but was only admonished, and remained. He was a member of the Assemblies of 1600, 1601, 1602, 1608, 1610, and generally supported the measures of the court. He is described as a vain boaster and unwise. He died in 1612. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 466, 467.

Calder, Charles, A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister at Croy) took his degree from the University and King's College, Aberdeen, in 1767. He was licensed to preach in 1773, and called to be minister at Urquhart and Logie-Western in 1774; and had a new church built in 1795. He died Oct. 1, 1812, aged sixty-three years. He was a man of saintly character, gentle, benign, but majestic in his simplicity. He was a successful minister, generous to the poor, and esteemed by all his parishioners. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 303, 304.

Calder, Frederic, an English Wesleyan minister, was born in 1785. He was converted at the age of fifteen; entered the ministry in 1808; became a supernumerary at Bedford in 1842; removed to Cheltenham in 1844, and died June 20, 1851, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. He travelled sixteen different circuits. His ministry was earnest, persuasive, and successful. Calder was a diligent student. Besides minor productions, he wrote, Memoirs of Simon Episcopus (Lond. 1835; New York, 1837, 12mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851.

Calder, Hugh, A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister at Croy), took his degree from King's College, Aberdeen, in 1767. He was licensed to preach in 1776, presented to the living at Croy in 1778, after a vacancy following his father's death, and ordained. He died Aug. 31, 1822, aged seventy-seven years. His son Alexander was a minister. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 250.

Calder, James, a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister at Cawdor), was licensed to preach in 1738; appointed minister at Ardersier in 1740, and ordained; he refused an earnest call from Inverness in 1746, and was transferred to Croy in 1747; he had a new church built in 1767, and died Dec. 24, 1775, aged sixty-four years. He had three sons, all in the ministry. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 244, 245, 250.

Calder, John (1), a Scotch clergyman, chaplain to Sir James Calder, was licensed to preach in 1703. Having a knowledge of the native language, he was appointed to go to Sutherland by the General Assembly of 1704; was recalled, and appointed minister at Cawdor in 1705, and was ordained the same year. He died in March, 1717. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 248, 249.

Calder, John (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister at Croy), took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1764. He was licensed to preach in 1767; presented to the living at Wiem in 1769, and ordained in 1770; transferred to Roskeen in 1775, and died June 1, 1783, aged about thirty-nine years. He was both pious and popular. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 817; iii, 323.

Calder, John (3), D.D., a Scotch Dissenter, was born at Aberdeen in 1733, and educated at the university there. He settled with a congregation at Alnwick, Northumberland, where he married a lady of fortune. In 1770 he removed to London, and succeeded Dr. Price at Poor Jury Lane. Soon afterwards the society was dissolved, Dr. Calder became a member of Mr. Belsham's Unitarian congregation in the Strand, and devoted himself chiefly to his literary labors. He died in 1815. He published a Sermon (1772):—a translation of Le Courayer's Last Sentiments on Religion (1787), and other works. See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Wilson, Dissenting Churches, i, 127.

Calder, Robert, a Scottish Episcopal clergyman, was born in 1650, at Elgin, in Morayshire. He was graduated from King's College, Aberdeen, in 1674, and ordained about 1680. In 1689 he was appointed to the parish of Newthorn, in the county of Berwick, but refused to acknowledge William and Mary, and was deprived of his curacy, and imprisoned for eleven months in Edinburgh jail for exercising his ministerial functions. He died in Edinburgh, May 28, 1723. He published Scotch Presbyterian Eloquence (Lond. 1693):—Three Sermons (1701):—Reasons for a Toleration of the Episcopal Clergy (Edinburgh, 1703):—The Divine Right of Episcopacy (1705):—The Lawfulness of Set Forms of Prayer (1706):—The Genuine Epistles of Ignatius, etc. (1708):—The Nail Struck in the Head (1712):—Remarks on the Oath of Abjuration (1712):—Comparison between the Kirk and the Church of Scotland (1712; Lond. 1841):—Miscellany Relating to Rites and Ceremonies, etc. (1713):—The Priesthood of the Old and New Testament (1716, 1717):—Verses on King James's Death, and other works. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 468; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Caldera, Duarte, a Portuguese juriconsult of the first half of the 17th century, studied under Covarruvias and De Costa, and left De Erroribus Pragmaticorum (Antwerp, 1612). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calderari, Cesare, an Italian monk, a native of Vicenza, lived at the close of the 16th and the beginning of the 17th century, and wrote several ascetic works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calderino, Giovanni (1), an Italian lawyer, a native of Bologna, died July 13, 1348, leaving a Commentary on the Books of the Decretals. His son GASPARD also wrote on the same. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calderino, Giovanni (2), an Italian theologian of the 16th century, is known by a work entitled De Hæreticis (1571), relating to the duties of an inquisitor. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calderon, Antonio, archbishop elect of Granada in 1652, was born at Baça, in the diocese of Toledo, and died in 1654, before consecration, leaving three or four works on the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin, etc.

Calderwood, Archibald, A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the Dean of Guild of Edinburgh), was baptized in June, 1657; took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1675; was admitted as minister at the Canongate Church in 1680, and died in 1681. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 88.

Calderwood, James, A.M., a Scotch clergyman of Dalkeith, took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1642; was licensed to preach in 1647; appointed minister at Humbie in 1649, and ordained. On his conforming to episcopacy, the king presented the living to him in 1662. He had a charter of lands at Whytburgh granted in 1677, and died Nov. 27, 1679, aged about fifty-eight years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 337.

Calderwood, William (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1613; was licensed to preach in 1614; presented to the living at Heriot in 1617, and in 1648 had eleven score of communicants. His health failing him in that year, and his sight also, he was unable to perform duty. He died in 1669. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 283.

Calderwood, William (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the Dean of Guild of Edinburgh), was baptized Jan. 22, 1636; took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1653; was called to the living at Dalkeith in 1659, and ordained. He died March 4, 1680. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 265.

Calderswood, William (3), A.M., a Scotch clergyman (related to the historian), took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1649. He was in the service of Sir Adam Hepburn, a Lord of the Session, from 1648; was licensed to preach in 1652; admitted minister at Legerwood in 1655; deprived by Act of Parliament in 1662, though he often visited the parish privately afterwards. He was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690; was a member of the General Assembly in 1692, and died June 19, 1709, aged eighty years, having earned a high reputation for sanctity of life and ministerial usefulness. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 527, 528.

Caldicott, Thomas Ford, D.D., a Baptist minister, was born in the village of Long Buckby, Northamptonshire, England, March 21, 1803. His father was a deacon and lay-preacher of the Baptist Church in that village. The son became a Christian at the age of seventeen. He soon began to preach, having received a license from his Church. Feeling the need, however, of a better preparation for the ministry, he studied for a time in a school of some note in Chipping Norton, and then himself opened a school in Leicester, employing his leisure hours in the study of the languages, under the tuition of a competent teacher. He came to America in 1827, and opened a school in Quebec, preaching on the Sabbath in the city and its neighborhood. After a time, he became connected with the 79th Highland Regiment, acting as tutor in the family of the commanding officer, and afterwards as regimental schoolmaster. He was with the regiment in Montreal, Kingston, and Toronto. In the latter city he closed his engagement with the army, and devoted himself to teaching a private school. Not satisfied, however, with his vocation as a teacher, and longing to become an active pastor, he gave up his school, and was ordained in 1834 as pastor of the Church in Chinguacousy, Canada. He remained there about a year, and in 1835 he was called to Lockport, N. Y., where he had a successful ministry of four years. Subsequently he was called to fill important pulpits in Roxbury, Mass., in what is now the Dudley Street Church, in the First Baptist Church, Charlestown, and in the Baldwin Place Church, Boston. Nineteen years were spent in New England in these three churches, and two or three years in the employ of the Northern Baptist Education Society. While acting as pastor of the Baldwin Place Church, in Boston, he was visited with a severe illness, which compelled him to resign his pastorate. He was indisposed for a year, a part of which he spent in Europe. On returning to America he took charge, for a time, of a new church which had been formed at Williamsburg, N. Y. He was also, for a time, pastor of the Lee Avenue Church, Brooklyn. In 1860 he removed to Toronto, and became pastor of the Bond Street Baptist Church, where his ministry was eminently successful. During the entire period of his service as a preacher of the gospel, which was of some thirty-five years' duration, it is estimated that he baptized upward of a thousand persons. His death, which was almost instantaneous, took place July 9, 1869. See Memorial Sermon, by Rev. William Stewart. (J. C. S.)

Caldonius, bishop of an unknown African see, first appears (Cyprian, Ep. 24) as asking the opinion of Cyprian, and Carthaginian presbyters, as to whether "peace" may not be given to the lapsed, who, on subsequent confession, suffered confiscation and banishment. In 251 he was appointed by Cyprian to visit Carthage, to relieve sufferers by persecution, assist them in resuming their trades, to influence the lapsed, etc. Afterwards he was charged with the excommunication of Felicissimus; and in the same year was sent with Fortuna-

tus to Rome, from the Carthaginian synod, to report on the election of Cornelius and the position of Novatian (Ep. 44, 45). They also conveyed to Cornelius the last synodical letter about Felicissimus, and copies of Cyprian's forty-first and forty-third epistles on the same subject. In 252 he appears as second bishop, by seniority, at the Council of Carthage, and in the same rank at the fifth Council of Carthage, in 255.

Caldwell, Abel, a Congregational minister, was born in Massachusetts, and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1817, and from Andover Seminary in 1821. He was ordained Feb. 27, 1822, and immediately afterwards became home missionary in New York. He labored at Westford, from 1823 to 1827; at Volney, from 1827 to 1830; in the Presbyterian Church at Portage, from 1830 to 1835; became stated supply at Sheldon, from 1835 to 1838; at Black Creek, from 1839 to 1841; at Centerville, in 1841 and for some time afterwards. He acted as colporteur in New York and Canada from 1850 to 1860. He died at Black Creek, Aug. 1, 1861. See Gen. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 44.

Caldwell, Asa, a Baptist minister, was born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1796, and united with the Church in Spencer, Tioga Co. Not long after this he commenced preaching, in which work he continued until nearly the close of his life. He was pastor of churches in Oswego, Tompkins, Herkimer, and Cortland counties, where many souls were converted through his instrumentality. He is represented as having been an earnest scriptural preacher, with a warm and catholic heart, and a vigorous advocate of temperance and anti-slavery. Not meeting with the sympathy which he looked for as a moral reformer, he became disheartened, and for a time withdrew from association with his brethren. In January, 1859, he closed his connection with the Calvinist Baptists, and became a member of a Free-will Baptist Church, in Summer Hill, Cayuga Co. He died in Locke, Cayuga Co., June 26, 1859. See Free-will Baptist Register, 1860, p. 90. (J. C. S.)

Caldwell, Asbury, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Paris, Me., about 1810. He was converted in early life, and in 1832 entered the Maine Conference, in which he labored until his death, Dec. 1, 1842. Mr. Caldwell was friendly in disposition, of great intellectual activity, a fluent speaker, strikingly original, sound in doctrine, and eminently pious. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1843, p. 344.

Caldwell, Booth, an Irish Presbyterian minister, was born near Omagh, and in 1797 was ordained minister of Sligo, where he remained till his death, in 1810. He was emphatically a man of prayer, and as such he was held in memory by those who knew him.—Reid, Hist. of the Presb. Church in Ireland.

Caldwell, David, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Bennington, Vt. In early life he removed to Virginia, and was ordained at Alexandria in 1841, serving in the ministry seventeen years. He was, for a time, rector of St. Paul's Church, Norfolk; and two years before his death succeeded to the rectorship of St. James's, Leesburg. He died there Nov. 25, 1858, aged forty-three years. Mr. Caldwell was about to publish a series of lectures on the Psalms, when he died. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. 1859, p. 680.

Caldwell, Ebenezer Bowditch, a Congregational minister, was born in Massachusetts. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1814; and also took a course in theology in Andover Theological Seminary, graduating in 1817. He was ordained July 10, 1818; and was pastor of a Congregational church in Indiana, and at Waynesboro', Ga. He died at Bath, Ga., Aug. 6, 1819. See Gen. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 32.

Caldwell, Isaac Nelson, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Jefferson County, Tenn., March 14, 1836. He graduated from Maryville College, Maryville, in 1858; and studied theology in the Union Theological Seminary, New York city. In 1861 he was licensed by the Newark Presbytery, and stationed at Fayetteville, Tenn. His health, which was rapidly declining when he entered the ministry, soon rendered him unable to perform pastoral duties. He removed to North Carolina in 1864, but returned to Tennessee in 1867. He died at Union City, May 16, 1867. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 318.

Caldwell, James A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Glasgow University in 1600; was ordained minister at Bothkennar in 1603; transferred to Falkirk in 1616, and died in October of the same year, aged about thirty-six years. He published The Countesse of Marre's Arcadia or Sanctuarrie (Edinburgh, 1625; partly republished in 1862). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 186; ii, 693.

Caldwell, James Douglass, a Presbyterian minister, was born Sept. 24, 1847, near Elizabeth, Alleghany Co., Pa. He prepared for college at Beaver Academy; graduated from Princeton College in 1871; also studied three years at Jefferson College; spent one year at Princeton Seminary, and two at the Alleghany Seminary, where he graduated. He was licensed by Redstone Presbytery, April 22, 1873; and was ordained as an evangelist by Wooster Presbytery, Sept. 9, 1874. In 1875 he went to Texas as a home missionary. There he gathered three churches and labored three years, supplying the churches of Cambridge and Adora. In 1878 he travelled three hundred and seventy miles in his own conveyance to Austin, in order to attend the first meeting of the new synod of Texas, to be organized as ordered by the preceding General Assembly. He was elected clerk of the synod, and took an active part in the proceedings; also assisted at the communion table on the Sabbath. He died next day, Oct. 14, 1878. See Neurolog. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1879, p. 61.

Caldwell, John A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Glasgow University in 1657; had the living of Robertson presented in 1664, but declined it; was admitted to the parish of Portpatrick in 1666, and died at Edinburgh in June, 1689, aged about fifty-four years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 770.

Caldwell, John P., a Presbyterian minister, was licensed by the presbytery of St. Clairsville. His first field of labor was Chandlersville, O.; he afterwards served at Sharon and Fredericktown; and subsequently at Florence, Pa.; and still later at Beech Springs, Barnesville, and Crab Apple, O. He died at Uniontown, O., Jan. 31, 1872, aged fifty-three years. Mr. Caldwell was widely known and highly respected. See Presbyterianism, Feb. 17, 1872.

Caldwell, Patrick, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1768; appointed minister at Norriestown in 1775, and died March 25, 1796. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 728.

Caldwell, Robert (1), an English Calvinistic Methodist, rose from a very humble condition, became an itinerant in Lady Huntingdon's Connection, but preferred a settled pastorate, and in 1800 accepted a call to the Church in Silver Street, London, where he was popular, and had success, but was cut off prematurely in 1803. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, iii, 123.

Caldwell, Robert (2), an English Congregational minister, was born at Mid-Calder, near Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1777. When he was quite young his parents moved to Edinburgh; and at the age of fourteen they apprenticed him to the trade of a mason, which he followed till upwards of twenty. In 1799 he became a student of theology, under the care of Mr. Innes, and of Mr. Ewing, of Glasgow. In 1802 he commenced to labor at Falkirk, where previously the Congregationalists had no regular preaching; and here he soon gathered a Church, to the pastorate of which he was ordained, Nov. 22, 1803. In 1813 he accepted an invitation to Wick, in Caithness, and remained there for nearly twenty years. He removed to Howden-on-the-Tyne, near Newcastle, England, in 1834, where he was the means of building a new church; and, after a successful pastorate of eight years, resigned his office, owing to impaired health. He died in 1850. Mr. Caldwell was a man of spotless character, great familiarity with the Scriptures, and eminently faithful in all the duties of life. See The Evangelical Magazine (Lond.), 1850, p. 687; (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1850, p. 92.

Caldwell, Vincent, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born in Derbyshire, England, in 1674. He became a member of the Society at the age of seventeen or eighteen, under the ministry of John Gratton. After a time he was recognised as a minister by the Friends. He labored for a while in his own country, and then crossed the Atlantic and took up his residence in East Marlborough, Chester Co., Pa., where he continued till his death. His ministry is said to have been "sound and edifying, being attended with the power of truth, and adorned with an exemplary conversation." Twice he made extensive visits to the meetings in the southern provinces of America, and once to several of the West India Islands. See Piety Promoted, iv, 345, 346. (J. C. S.)

Caldwell, William, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Glasgow University in 1647, and held a bursary of divinity there. He was presented by the king to the living at Ballantrae in 1662, and ordained in 1663. He died in September, 1672. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 753.

Caldwell, William H., a Baptist minister, commenced as a lay preacher in Halifax, N. S.; was ordained pastor of the Granville Street Church, Halifax, Sept. 22, 1852; had a successful career; and died at New Germany, 1862. See Bell, Hist. of the Baptists of the Maritime Provinces, p. 411.

Caldwood, David. See CALDERWOOD.

Caleca (or Calecas), MANUEL, a Greek monk and theologian, flourished at Constantinople about 1360. He renounced the communion of the Greek Church, and attached himself to the Romish party in the East; became a Dominican, and wrote much on the subjects in dispute between the Greek and Roman churches; e. g., De Processione Sp. Sancti (Ingolstadt, 1608, and in the Bibl. Patrum, t. 26), translated into Latin by Ambrogio Traversari of Camaldoli:—On the Essence and Operations of God, against the Palamites:—De Principiis Fidei Christianæ (Paris, 1672), edit. in Greek and Latin by Combefis, Actuarium Noviss:—A Treatise on the Most Holy Trinity. See Cave, Hist. Lit. ii, App. p. 65; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calef, Jonathan, a Congregational minister, was a native of Kingston, N. H. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1787; was ordained pastor of the church in Bloomfield, Me., June 11, 1794; dismissed in October, 1801; installed at Lyman, Me., in November following; and died in 1845. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 544.

Calef, Robert, was a merchant in Boston in the early part of the last century, who died April 13, 1719. He deserves a place in the records of New England history on account of the bold stand he took in opposing the infatuation which seems to have pervaded all classes of the community, with reference to witchcraft. He was the author of a work, entitled More Wonders of the Invisible World (Lond. 1700), which was a reply to Cotton Mather's Wonders of the Invisible World. Mather had distinctly avowed his belief in witchcraft, and that belief was held and proclaimed by the leading divines of the day. So obnoxious was Calef's book, that, by order of Dr. Increase Mather, president of Harvard College, it was burned in the college yard, and a pamphlet was published in defence of the Mathers, bearing the title, Remarks upon a Scandalous Book, etc., which had this motto, "Truth will come off conqueror." Ere long the motto was fully verified, but not in the way in which it was anticipated. The spell which rested upon the community was broken. Bitter regret was felt by those who had been instrumental in procuring the death of persons charged with the commission of crimes while under the influence of Satanic agency. See Mass. Hist. Coll. vol. iii; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Calefactory (Pisalis, or pyrale, the "Common House" at Durham), a mediæval name for the sitting-room of a monastery or religious house. It was a chamber provided with a fireplace or stove, used as a withdrawing-room by monks, and generally adjoining the refectory. It very often was a portion of the substructure of the dormitory. Here the brethren met before the dinner, and in winter time for warmth. Where there was no Galilee, processions were marshalled here. The præcentor of Benedictines dried his parchment, prepared the waxen tablets and liquefied ink, and the censers were filled by the sacristan's servants, in this room. At Winchester a chamber in the south wing of the transept, used for the latter purpose, still retains the name. At the Grey Friars, London, it was furnished with aumbries and water from the conduit; at Kirkham it had a bench-table, and at Thornton a series of stalls.

Calemerus was a deacon of Antioch at the Council of Alexandria, in A.D. 362.

Calen, Schotto, a German theologian, was born at Riga. He studied at Giessen, and became Lutheran pastor of St. Peter's, in his native place, where he remained till his death, July 10, 1657. He was the author of Theorenata Philosophica (Giessen, 1615):—Deliciae Paschales:—and some Sermons in German. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calendar, in ecclesiastical usage, is a name for sculptures of agricultural labors, within medallions, found in Norman churches and those of the thirteenth century, as ornaments over doors and porches.

Calendar, Ecclesiastical. A complete alphabetical list of the saints commemorated in the Roman Catholic Church, with the day of each, may be found in Guérin, Les Petits Bollandistes (Paris, 1882), x, 221-592.

Calendario, Filippo, an Italian architect and sculptor, flourished at Venice about 1334. He is erroneously said to have erected the superb porticos, supported by marble columns, that surround the vast area of the square of St. Mark. There are several other good works, however, in that city, by him, especially the galleries of the ducal palace. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Calendio. See CALANDIO; CANDIDIANUS (10).

Calenius, Gualterus, a Welshman, was preferred archdeacon of Oxford about 1120. He was highly prized for his great learning. He went over to Brittany, France, and thence brought back an ancient MS. of the British princes from Brutus to Cadwalader, which he communicated to Geoffrey of Monmouth, who translated it into Latin. Walter continued the same chronicle for four hundred years, until his own time. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), iii, 499.

Calense, Cesare, a Neapolitan painter, about 1590, executed a fine Descent from the Cross, in San Giovanni Battista, at Naples. See Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Calentyn, Peter, a Flemish theologian, who died in 1563, wrote, Via Crucis a domo Pilati usque ad Mon- tem Calvariae (Louvain, 1568):—Pèlerinage Spirituel dans la Terre Sainte (ibid. 1663). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calepino (or d'Acalepio), AMBROGIO, an Augustinian monk, was born at Bergamo, June 6, 1435. He was descended from an old Italian family of Calepio, whence he took his name. He died Nov. 30, 1511. He devoted his whole life to the composition of a polyglot dictionary, first printed at Reggio in 1502. This great work was afterwards augmented by Passerat and others. The most complete edition was published at Basle in 1590, in eleven languages. The best edition is that published in Padua, in 1772, in seven languages.—Ency. Brit. 9th ed. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calepodius. (1) A Roman presbyter in whose cemetery (three miles from Rome on the Aurelian way) Calixtus was buried. The distinguished conversions he made at Rome, jointly with Calixtus; his appearing in a vision, after death, to Calixtus in his martyrdom; and the burial of Calixtus, are related in Bede (Martyr. May 10, Oct. 14), and partially by Usuard. His natale was May 10, as recorded, also, in the lesser Roman martyrology. (2) Bishop of Naples and legate of the pope at the Council of Sardica. But, according to Athanasius, two presbyters signed for the pope, and Calepodius for himself only. He may be the same by whom Liberius wrote to Eusebius of Vercelli, A.D. 354. (3) Donatist bishop of Bazar, in Africa, in 411.

Calert, MICHAEL, a German Lutheran theologian, was born at Zeitz, Sept. 19, 1603. He was son of Laurent Calert, chamberlain of the council at Zeitz, and studied philosophy at Leipsic, and became in 1632 bachelor of theology. Being called, in 1633, to Misnie, as director of the gymnasium, he became, in 1635, pastor and ecclesiastical superintendent at Bischofswerda, and in 1645 held the same position at Weissenfels. In 1651 he was made doctor of theology at Leipsic. He died at Weissenfels, May 10, 1655. He wrote a large number of works, among which we mention, De Discrimine Legis et Evangelii (Leips. 1634):—De Decalogi Præceptis Prioribus Duobus (ibid. 1651):—Decalogi Præceptum Tertium (ibid. 1652):—Aphorismi de Conciliis Oppositi Assertionibus, etc. (ibid. 1656). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calès, bishop of Hermette, was on the list handed over by Meletius to Alexander. See also CARILEFUS.

Caletricus, Saint, confessor and bishop of Chartres, was present at the third Council of Paris in 557, and second Council of Tours in 567. He seems to have died in 571 (or 573). See Acta Sanctorum Boll. Oct., iv, 278.

Caletti, GIUSEPPE (called il Cremonese), a painter of Ferrara, was born about 1600, and first studied the works of D. Dossi, but afterwards became an imitator of Titian. He has two fine pictures in the church of San Benedetto at Ferrara, representing St. Mark, and the Four Doctors of the church. He died in 1660. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calf as a Christian emblem. In the early Church a calf (or ox) symbolized several things. According to Auringhi (lib. vi, ch. xxxii, vol. ii, p. 320), it represented the Christian soul. He also takes it to represent the apostles laboring in their ministry, quoting various fathers, and St. Chrysostom's idea, that the oxen and fallings spoken of as killed for the Master's feast are meant to represent prophets and martyrs. It has been taken to represent also the Lord's sacrifice. A calf is represented near the Good Shepherd in Buonarroti (Vetri, tab. v, fig. 2); and Martigny refers to Allegranza (Mon. Antichi di Milano, p. 125) for an initial letter at Milan, where the animal is represented playing on a lyre: typifying, as has been supposed, the subjugation of the human nature to the life of faith. St. Clement of Alexandria (Pædag. lib. i, c. 5) seems to make a comparison of young Christians to sucking calves: though no such comparison exists in Scripture. See LYRÆ.

Calfee, WILLIAM MONROE, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Franklin County, Ind., April 16, 1825, of pious Baptist parents. He was converted in his eighteenth year, but afterwards relapsed into sin. In 1845 he was reclaimed; in 1848 removed to Marion County, Ind., and was licensed to exhort. In 1852 he received license to preach; moved to Iowa in 1859, and in 1861 entered the Western Iowa, now Des Moines, Conference, wherein he labored zealously and successfully until his death, Jan. 7, 1868. Mr. Calfee was a warm-hearted Christian; a ready debater, remarkable for pungent wit and scathing sarcasm; an extraordinary temperance lecturer; but, as a preacher, unrefined, and sometimes even coarse. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1868, p. 283.

Calhill (Calfill, Cawfield, etc.), JAMES, an English prelate, was born in Shropshire in 1530. He was educated at Eton, and entered King's College, Cambridge, in 1545. In 1548 he was removed to Christ Church, Oxford, of which he afterwards became sub-dean. In 1565 he became incumbent of Bocking, in Essex, and archdeacon of Colchester; and in 1570 was nominated to the see of Worcester, but died in August, before his consecration. He left, Historia de Excommunicatione Catharinæ nuper Uzoris Petri Martyris (Lond. 1562, 8vo):—An Answer to J. Martiaill's Treatise of the Cross (ibid. 1565, 4to). See Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Calhoon, WILLIAM, a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1772 in Prince Edward County, Va. He entered Hampden-Sidney College at the age of fourteen. He was licensed to preach the gospel by the Hanover Presbytery in 1792, and in the same year went as a missionary to Kentucky. He returned to Virginia in 1799, and accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Staunton. He died Aug. 27, 1851. He was a man of vigorous intellect and great self-command. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 237.

Calhoun, George Albion, D.D., a Congregational minister, was born in Washington, Conn., Oct. 11, 1788. His early education was very limited. In 1812 he joined the junior class in Williams College, but left at the end of the second term to enter Hamilton College, in Clinton, N. Y., from which he graduated in 1814. He also graduated from the Andover Theological Seminary in 1817. The year following he spent as a home missionary in the vicinity of Geneva, N. Y., preaching almost daily. Thence he went to North Coventry in 1818, and was ordained as pastor of the Church there in the following year. By an arrangement with his people, he spent one year in collecting funds for the endowment of the Theological Institute of Connecticut, of which he was a trustee for many years. On account of impaired health, he spent the autumn of 1830 in Maine, in behalf of the American Education Society, and afterwards visited one hundred churches in Connecticut, pleading the cause of home missions. A trip to Europe, from which he returned in November, 1831, greatly improved his health. In 1860 he resigned the active duties of his pastorate, and in September, 1862, received as colleague in the pastoral office Rev. W. J. Jennings. For twenty months he supplied the pulpit of the First Church in Coventry, but was stricken with paralysis in December, 1863, and again in 1866. He died in North Coventry, June 7, 1867. His published writings are not numerous. Among them is a series of letters to Dr. Bacon in reply to his attack on the Pastoral Union and Theological Institute of Connecticut. See Cong. Quarterly, 1869, p. 63; Gen. Cat. of Andover Theol. Sem. 1870, p. 32.

Calhoun, Simeon Howard, D.D., a Congregational divine, was born in Boston, Mass., Aug. 15, 1804. He fitted for college at Canajoharie, N. Y., and was a graduate of Williams College in the class of 1829. He was ordained as an evangelist at Springfield, Mass., Oct. 26, 1836. Having entered the service of the American Bible Society, he became their first agent in the Levant, arriving in Smyrna early in 1837. In 1844 he joined the Syrian mission of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. His term of service covered the long period of thirty-one years, 1844 to 1875. His special department was the charge of the seminary at Abeh. He returned to his native country on the termination of his connection with this institution. He lived but a short time, his death occurring Dec. 14, 1876. He published, in Arabic, A Hand-book for the Bible and A Life of Christ, in the form of Notes on the Harmony of the Gospels. See Cong. Quarterly, xix, 412. (J. C. S.)

Calici, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian theologian, was a secular priest at Florence towards the end of the 17th century, and wrote Discorso Apologetico, etc. (Lucca, 1697). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caliga, a sort of half-boot or stocking made of various material, serving for a defence against cold, and as such worn at times by soldiers; by monks, if infirm or exposed to cold; and by bishops in outdoor dress. The Rule of St. Ferreolus, quoted by Duncange, has an amusing passage forbidding the elaborate cross-gartering of these caligae, out of mere coxcombry. The earliest writer who mentions the caligae as among the "sacred vestments" to be worn by bishops and cardinals is Ivo Carnotensis (died 1115). See BUSKIN.

Calignon, PIERRE ANTOINE D'Amberreux de, a French preacher and theologian, was born at Greenwich in 1729. Being of a Protestant family, he fled from France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, but returned in 1735, and was made royal almoner at Geneva, where he officiated for the French Catholics. During the Revolution he retired to Ponthierry, near Melun, and died Dec. 25, 1795. He is said to have written several works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caligo, in Roman mythology, is darkness, the origin of all things, from which Chaos originated. By Chaos, Caligo was mother of night and day, Erebus and Æther.

Caligula. See CALIUS.

Calimani, SIMONE, a Venetian rabbi of the 18th century, is the author of Grammatica Ebraica, with an appendix on Hebrew poetry (Venice, 1751; Pisa, 1815). It was translated into Hebrew by Eichenbaum (Wilna, 1848). See De' Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 65 sq.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 139; Steinschneider, Bibliogr. Handbuch, p. 31, and Catalogus Librorum Hebr. in Bibliotheca Bodleiana, p. 2595. (B. P.)

Calinicus, as martyr at Apollonia in the reign of Decius, is commemorated, according to Usuard, Mart., on Jan. 28.

Calino, Cesare, an Italian Jesuit theologian, who was born at Brescia about 1669, and died Aug. 19, 1749, wrote several chronological and practical works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calino, Mutio, an Italian prelate and theologian, was born at Brescia. He was archbishop of Zara, and, as such, assisted at the Council of Trent. He died at Terni, April 6, 1570. He wrote some works, among which we notice Constitutiones Synodales, etc. (1567). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caliph, or Khalif (Arab. Successor), is the highest ecclesiastical dignitary among the Mohammedans, vested with absolute authority, both religious and political. The caliphs are regarded as the vicars or representatives of Mohammed. When Bagdad was taken by the Tartars, and the caliphate destroyed, the Mohammedan princes appointed in their respective dominions a special officer to discharge the spiritual functions of the caliph. In Turkey he was called mufiti (q. v.), and in Persia, sadue.

Caliphate is the office of caliph in Mohammedan countries. It continued from the death of Mohammed till the taking of Bagdad by the Tartars in the six hundred and fifty-fifth year of the Hegira (A.D. 1307). The title was claimed, however, by certain individuals in Egypt, who assumed to be of the family of the Abbassides, and the successors of the Prophet. The honor of being the true caliphs is claimed at present by the emperors of Morocco.

Calippus, a deacon, is represented as the bearer of the spurious correspondence between Sabinius and Polybius.

Calisius, JOHANN HEINRICH, a German theologian, who was born at Wohlau, in Silesia, in 1633, and died in 1703, court-preacher and member of consistory, is the author of several hymns, of which one has been translated into English by Mills, in Horæ Germ. p. 224: "Auf, auf, mein Herz, und du mein ganzer Sinn" (Awake! awake! to holy thoughts aspire). See Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, iii, 535 sq. (B. P.)

Calixt, FRIEDRICH ULRICH, a Lutheran theologian, son of George Calixt, was born at Helmstädt, March 8, 1622. He studied at his native place, and, after completing his curriculum, travelled extensively. Having returned, he was made doctor of theology, and was soon appointed professor of theology, member of consistory, and abbot of Königsutter. He died Jan. 13, 1701. He took an active part in the controversies which his father had with Calov and others, and edited also some of his works, as, Responsum Maledictis Mognuntior. Theologorum pro Romani Pontificis Infallibilitate, etc. (Helmstädt, 1672):—Disput. 15 de Præcipuis Christ. Relig. Capitib. (ibid. 1658):—Tractatus Diversi de Peccato (ibid. 1659):—Fascic. Programmatum et Dissertationum de Persona Christi (ibid. 1663):—De Igno Purgatorio (ibid. 1650). Caliya, in Hindu mythology, is the name of a great evil serpent, who was ultimately overcome and crushed by the god Vishnu in his incarnation Krishna.

Call to the ministry is more a matter of Christian ethics than of Church canons, and yet the early Church was not without its rules upon this subject. The temper that ought to animate those who are to be ordained was held to be, on the one hand, a sincere and pure desire to serve God in some special way, but on the other, also, a shrinking from the fearful responsibility of the ministry; accompanied, however, with obedience to the call of superiors. Under this view, it naturally came to be, and so was the common rule, that the bishops or rightful electors should choose, at least to the higher orders; and in such case the canons enacted that any one already in orders in any degree could not refuse to accept. A like rule would apply in a less degree to the first entry into the ministry; the supply in both cases being supplemented by voluntary candidates, from the necessity of the case, but it being held the best that the call should come from others, who had authority. On the other hand, the call need not originate with the bishop. It was open, and it was considered a pious act for parents to devote their children to the ministry, not compelling, but exhorting and encouraging them so to devote themselves. The second Council of Toledo, in 531, regulates the education of those "whom the will of parents, from the earliest years of infancy, had devoted to the clerical office." Pope Siricius (Ep. i, c. 9, 10) had, before that (385-398), regulated the several periods of years during which such should remain successively in each order of clergy. And Conc. Emerit., in 666, bids the "parochial presbyters" choose promising young people for the purpose of making them clergymen. Nor was this restricted to young people with their parents' consent; but older men were permitted to offer themselves for the ministry; yet under certain conditions, in order to insure purity of motive. Two centuries later, Gregory the Great required, in a certain case, a probation in a monastery. The Council of Constantinople, in 869 (can. 5), prohibited only those who sought to be tonsured from ambitious or worldly motives. The call to the ministry, then, in the earlier Church, meant, in general, the invitation, approaching to a command, of the bishop; which might, however, be anticipated, under certain circumstances, by the voluntary offering of himself by the candidate.

Callaham, OBADIAH B., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Smyth County, Va. He embraced religion in early youth, and in 1852 entered the Holston Conference, wherein he labored with much zeal and success until within a few weeks of his death, in September, 1855. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1855, p. 597.

Callander, Alexander (1), a Scotch clergyman, was admitted minister at Killearn in 1572, having Bawffrowne under his charge; was transferred to Largs in 1574, with Kilbride and Ardrossan under his charge; he continued in 1580, but no further mention is found of him. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 252, 355.

Callander, Alexander (2), a Scotch clergyman, was appointed by the earl of Orkney to the living at South Ronaldshay and Burray in 1584, and was confirmed in the living by the king; he continued in 1589, but is not thereafter mentioned. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 388.

Callander, Alexander (3), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1621, and was admitted minister at Denny in 1627. A violent flood in 1636 destroyed much of his parish. At the battle of Kilsyth, in 1645, he had protection from the marquis of Montrose. He died in September, 1663, aged about sixty-three years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 698.

Callander, Daniel, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1599; became minister at South Ronaldshay and Burray in 1610, with six hundred communicants at the former place, and one hundred at the latter. He was bitterly rebuked by bishop Graham for preaching, in general, against sin; afterwards suspended for giving ordinances to persons under discipline, and finally deposed by the bishop; yet he preached frequently in Zetland. He was still later admonished by the bishop; but dwelt at the manse, and continued in 1636. He had a testimonial of approval from his brethren in 1638, and was appointed by the synod minister at Birsay and Harray in 1639. He died May 15, 1641, aged about sixty-two years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 388, 392.

Callander, John, A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of Alexander 3), took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1661; was licensed to preach in 1663; was presented to the living at Denny, and ordained in the same year. He died in May, 1680, aged about thirty-nine years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 698.

Callander, Richard, A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of Alexander 3), studied at the universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, and took his degree at the latter in 1649. He became chaplain to the countess of Roxburgh; was called to the living at Cockburnspath in 1657; was presented to the living by the king in 1662; collated in 1663; transferred to Falkirk in 1663, and died Jan. 29, 1686, aged sixty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 187, 371.

Callander, Robert, a Scotch clergyman, a native of Falkirk, was licensed to preach in 1764; was presented to the living at Kirkmaiden in 1772, and ordained. He died at Maybole, Dec. 29, 1812, aged seventy-four years. He published an account of the parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 762.

Callaway, Charles M., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Delaware, was born in 1826. He graduated from the Theological Seminary of Virginia in 1850; was rector, in 1853, of a Church in Middleway, Va., and in 1857 of the Church in Topeka, Kan., where he remained until 1861, when he became rector of the Church of the Ascension in Baltimore, Md., and served there until 1870. His next parish was St. John's, Charleston, Va., residing meanwhile near Kanawha Court-house. In 1873 he had no regular charge, but in the following year was rector of St. John's Church, Kanawha Court-house. After this he was rector of Grace Church, Brandywine Hundred. He died suddenly at Wilmington, April 11, 1877. See Prot. Epis. Almanac, 1878, p. 168.

Callaway, Christopher C., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Lincoln County, Tenn., about 1821. He professed conversion in 1838, and in 1844 entered the Alabama Conference. In 1855 he was appointed agent of the Southern University; and died Aug. 11, 1867. Mr. Callaway had but few educational advantages when young, but attained marked mental and literary ability. He possessed a fine physique, melodious voice, sensitive temperament, a genial, ardent spirit, and unflagging zeal. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1867, p. 131.

Callaway, Elisha, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Delaware, Jan. 8, 1792. He removed to Hancock County, Ga., in early life, and in 1818 was received into the travelling connection of the South Carolina Conference. In 1834 he was transferred to the Alabama Conference. He died June 21, 1876. He was ever faithful, zealous, and successful; quiet and humble in daily life, but loud, bold, and powerful as a preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1870, p. 457.

Callaway, Enoch, a Baptist minister, was born in Wilkes County, Ga., Sept. 14, 1792. He united with the Sardis Church in 1808, where he was ordained Nov. 7, 1823. He was pastor of churches in his native county and in Oglethorpe County for twenty-five or thirty years. He accomplished much in promoting the cause of Christ in the field of his labor, and greatly built up his denomination there. He died Sept. 12, 1859. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 176. (J. C. S.)

Callaway, John, an English Wesleyan minister, was converted at the age of thirteen; entered the ministry in 1815, and was at once sent as a missionary to Ceylon, his stations being Matura, Colombo, and Galle. He returned to England in 1826, where he labored faithfully for several years. He died Nov. 23, 1841, aged forty-eight. He published several works in the Singhalese language, which were widely used. "He was an able divine." See Minutes of the British Conference, 1842.

Callaway, Joshua S., a Baptist minister, was born in Wilkes County, Ga., May 30, 1789, and united with the Church Sept. 23, 1809. In 1818 he removed to Jones County, and having been ordained in 1820, he preached there with great success for ten years, and then changed his residence to Henry County. He opposed the anti-missionary spirit of the denomination in his native state, and influenced many of his brethren to contribute to aid in sending the gospel to the heathen. During his ministry he baptized many hundreds. He was an able minister of the New Testament. He died at Jonesborough in 1854. See Cathcart, Baptist Encyclop. p. 176. (J. C. S.)

Callaway, S. T., a Baptist minister, was born in Winchester, Clarke Co., Ky., Jan. 14, 1806; was licensed in 1831, and preached in his native state until 1851, when he removed to Illinois, and resided in Jacksonville, Morgan Co., for some time; and removed to Tuscola, in 1862, where for several years he was pastor of the Church. In 1869 he was elected superintendent of public schools for the county, and re-elected in 1873, and was in office until his death, which occurred June 7, 1875. He was highly respected and esteemed in the community. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1876, p. 1-11.

Callcott, WILLIAM HUTCHINS, an English musical composer, was born at Kensington in 1807, and died Aug. 4, 1882. He published some musical pieces, such as The Holy Family and Half-hours with the Best Composers. His anthems, "Give peace in our time, O Lord," and "In my father's house are many mansions," are admirable specimens of part-writing, full of deep feeling and refined musical treatment, and are likely to continue favorite works with all church choirs. In the latter years of his life Mr. Callcott enjoyed the friendship of Dean Alford and Charles Kingsley, and in his intercourse with them "he found the truest sympathy with his own deeply religious nature and complete purity of life." (B. P.)

Calleja, ANDRES DE, a Spanish painter, was born at Rioja in 1705. He obtained academic honors and court favor, established a school of painting, and was greatly beloved by his scholars. His best works are in the churches of San Croix, of San Felipe le Royal, the convent of St. Francis, and the chapel of the Treasury. He died in 1782.

Callen is a Scottish saint, commemorated Nov. 28. In the parish of Rogart, in Sutherland, the church, dedicated apparently to a saint locally known as St. Callen, was repaired between 1602 and 1619. In 1630 a yearly fair, named St. Callen's, was held at Rogart. It may be that this saint is COLGA. See Forbes, Kal. Scott. Saints, p. 294.

Callenberg, CASPAR, a German canonist and Jesuit, was born in 1678 at Castrup, in Westphalia. He taught philosophy at Münster, and theology at Paderborn, Münster, Treves, and Aix-la-Chapelle; and died at Kösfeld, Oct. 11, 1742, leaving several historical and other works, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Callender. See CALLANDAR.

Callender, Aurora, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Shoreham, Vt., March 7, 1798. He removed with his father to Cumberland County, Pa., at the age of seven; experienced conversion in 1818; received license to preach in 1825; and in 1828 moved to Ohio and entered the Pittsburgh Conference. In 1837 he was transferred to the Erie Conference, and in 1849 joined the Wisconsin Conference, wherein he labored until its division in 1856, when he became a member of the West Wisconsin Conference. In 1857 he was retransferred to the Wisconsin Conference, labored in its active ranks until 1863, and spent the remainder of his days as a superannuate, dying at Pinckneyville, Ill., Oct. 23, 1871. Mr. Callender began his ministry when circuits were large, support poor, and appointments almost daily. Even as a superannuate he preached nearly every Sunday, and often during the week. He was a man of robust health and physique, a sound, instructive preacher, and a devoted Methodist. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 118.

Callender, N., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Chazy, Clinton Co., N. Y., Sept. 18, 1800. He removed with his parents to eastern Ohio in 1817; received the best education his circumstances allowed; experienced conversion in 1819; was licensed to exhort in 1821, to preach in 1825, and in the same year entered the Pittsburgh Conference, in which he filled the most important appointments. In 1839, having acquired a knowledge of the German language, he became one of the pioneers of German Methodism in this country; took charge of the Pittsburgh German Mission District, the first of the kind in Methodism, and built there the first German Methodist church in the United States.

In 1840 he was appointed to the New York German Mission; in 1842, as moral instructor at the Western Penitentiary, Pennsylvania; but in 1845 returned to the English work. From 1854 to 1859 he presided over the Michigan and Cincinnati German Districts; then again entered the English work; and between 1862 and 1866 acted as hospital chaplain, United States army, Camp Dennison, Ohio. From 1866 to 1871 he occupied various important charges in the regular work; and then, on account of the infirmities of age, became superannuated. He died Feb. 6, 1876. Mr. Callender was a man of deep piety, a sound theologian, a good counsellor, a warm, steadfast friend, and a successful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1876, p. 103.

Calles, SIGISMUND, a German Jesuit, who died at Vienna in 1761, is the author of Annales Ecclesiastici Germaniæ (Vienna, 1756-58, 6 vols.):—Series Misnensium Episcoporum (Regensburg, 1752):—Annales Austriæ (Vienna, 1750, 2 vols.). Callicrætes. (1) Bishop of Claudiopolis, in Pontus, joined in petitioning Jovian against the Arians. (2) Sergeant, who wrote down the dispute of Basil against Photinus.

Callicūlae were ornaments for the alb or white tunic, made either of some richly colored stuff or of metal. Examples of these may be seen in Perret, Catcombs de Rome, ii, pl. 7; and Garrucci, Vetri Ornati, vi, 5; xxv, 4.

Calligōnus was a eunuch and chamberlain to Valentinian II, who insulted Ambrose, A.D. 385, and was afterwards put to death on another and peculiarly infamous charge.

Callinicus is the name of several persons in early Christian history.

1. Martyr, of Cilicia, who was made to run six miles in boots bristling with nails inside, to Gangra, in Paphlagonia, where he was burned, and where his church was afterwards famous. He is commemorated July 29.

Callinicus is likewise the name of a martyr at Apollonia under Decius, commemorated Jan. 28; and of a third, commemorated Dec. 14.

2. A Greek sophist and rhetorician, usually assigned to the reign of Gallienus, A.D. 259-268. Clinton (Fasti Rom. ann. 266) points out that the sophist is also assigned to a later date, and thinks that Suidas may have confounded two Callinici. Among the works ascribed to him by Suidas (p. 1961 B) are ten books on Alexandrian history, referred to by Jerome (Proœm. Com. in Daniel).

3. Bishop of Perga, in Pamphylia, at the Council of Nice, A.D. 325.

4. A Melitian bishop of Pelusium, who slandered Athanasius in 331, accused him at Tyre, in 335, of breaking a chalice, and of deposing and ill-treating himself. He was present at the Council of Sardica, and asked permission of the Council of Nice to persevere in schism.

5. Bishop elect of Sangra, sent by Eusebius of Ancyra, who was himself unwilling to ordain him, to Proclus, patriarch of Constantinople, for ordination (A.D. 434-446). He was sent back, however, to Eusebius, who ordained him. He died soon after.

6. Bishop of Apamea, in Bithynia, named the patriarch of Antioch, as well as those of Rome and Constantinople, as leading him to condemn Dioscorus at the Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451).

7. Patriarch of Constantinople, A.D. 693 (or 692) till 705, was previously presbyter and treasurer of the Church of Blachernæ. Soon after his appointment he offended the emperor Justinian by refusing to compose a prayer to be said at the removal of a church. It soon came to his ears that orders had been given to Stephen, the governor of Constantinople, for a general massacre of its inhabitants, to begin with the patriarch. This intelligence, doubtless, disposed him to receive Leontius as a deliverer; and he accompanied that usurper to the font on his entry into the city, publicly welcoming him with the cry,

"This is the day which the Lord hath made." On the return of Justinian, in 705, Callinicus was deprived of his eyes and banished to Rome. See Theophilus, Chron. p. 313; Niceph. Constant. Breviarium, p. 28.

Calliōpē, in Greek mythology, was one of the Muses, the oldest daughter of Zeus and Mnemosyne. She possessed the gifts of oratory, of music, of statesmanship, and, later, of poetry. By Apollo, or by Eger, she became the mother of Linus and Orpheus. By different fathers she had various other children: Ialemus, Hymenæus, and the Sirens. Her attributes are sometimes the lyra, sometimes a parchment roll or a tuba.

ΚΑΛΛΙΟΠΗ-ΠΟΙΗΜΑ

Calliopius (1), a Pamphylian, who was brought before Numerius Maximus, and scourged and crucified on Good Friday, April 7, 304. (2) Bishop of Thessaly, whom pope Boniface, A.D. 422, in writing to Rufus, declares separated from his communion, as far as we can gather, for resisting the authority of the see of St. Peter. (3) Bishop of Nice, to whom, about A.D. 425, Atticus, patriarch of Constantinople, sent three hundred pieces of gold, at a time when many of the people of Nice were starving.

Callirrhōē. The following is an account of this interesting locality, taken from Büdcker's Syria, p. 303.

"A ride of about three hours to the north, over a hilly country, avoiding the Wady Zehara, a short and deep gully, brings the traveller to the brink of the deep valley of the Zerka Māin, in the region of Callirrhōē. From this terrace to the bed of the brook the road descends eight hundred and seventy-six feet. The bottom and sides of the ravine are covered with a luxuriant growth of plants, including palm-trees, and will interest botanists. The flora resembles that of southern Arabia and Nubia. At the bottom of the valley is seen red sandstone, overlaid with limestone and basalt (to the south). The ravine has been formed by the action of a powerful stream. Within a distance of three miles a number of hot springs issue from the side-valleys, all of them containing more or less lime, and all rising in the line where the sandstone and limestone come in contact. The hottest of these springs, which send forth clouds of steam and largely deposit their mineral ingredients, has a temperature of 142° Fahr. The Arabs say that these springs were called forth by a servant of king Solomon, and they still use them for sanitary purposes.

In ancient times they were in great repute, and Herod the Great visited them in his last illness."

The following more minute description of the springs is from Ridgeway's Lord's Land, p. 408 sq.:

"On reaching the valley I put my hand into a small stream gushing from the hill, and had to withdraw it instantly. One of the horses got into it, and jumped out very quickly. Riding down about half a mile, we met a large stream, two yards wide and two or three feet deep, of hot sulphur water. Rushing on, it leaps over a large boulder, forming quite a fall, and dashing and leaping for one hundred yards in a succession of cascades, it floods the main valley. Below this, by the hill on the right, we found evidences where baths had existed. Holes through which sulphur was escaping formed the crude baths of the Bedouin. Farther still, a beautiful fountain, so divided by impeding rocks as to make a dozen little fountains, bursts from the mountain, creating a reservoir of hot water, which, losing itself under an enormous sulphur crust, descends about one hundred feet, when it, too, floods the lower level of the wady. Some of these waters are 130° Fahr. As to their number, instead of saying there are six or eight, it is nearer the fact to regard the whole bed of the valley on the north for about a mile one continuous hot sulphur spring.

"In addition to the medicinal quality of the waters, the temperature of the valley in autumn, winter, and spring is delightful; while for scenery, in the fantastic blendings of basalt, limestone, and sandstone, the exquisite forms of the sulphur crystallizations, following in their outlines twigs, reeds, and roots, on which the volatile salts have chanced to fasten, the fragrance and colorings of oleanders, junipers, and flowering shrubs, and the flight and songs of various birds, there is everything to charm.

"Our bath that day was most delicious. In the main stream we lay rolling like pigs from the cold water to the hot water, and from the hot to the cold, and where the hot and cold mix at the most agreeable point. Indeed, so exactly does the cold and hot water divide in the stream that the body can lie partly in the one and partly in the other at the same moment. As the waters flow along, the moss grows luxuriantly where the cold water runs, and not a vestige of green appears under the warm water. The line of verdure is as sharp as if cut by a knife."

Callisen, Christian Friedrich, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Glückstadt, Feb. 20, 1777. In 1817 he was appointed pastor at Schleswig and provost at Hütten, and died in 1852. He wrote, Kurzer Abriss des Wissenswürdigsten, etc. (Altona, 1810; 3d ed. 1843).—Kurzer Abriss der Religionsphilosophie (Kiel, 1802).—Handbuch zum Gebrauch nachdenkender Christen beim Lesen des Neuen Test. (1812-14, 2 vols.).—Kurzer Abriss einer populären und practischen Glaubenslehre (Schleswig, 1852). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 16, 216, 246, 303, 391; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 210 sq. (B. P.)

Callisen, Johann Leonhard, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Aug. 23, 1738, at Preez, in Holstein. In 1764 he was pastor at Zarpfen, in 1782 at Oldesloe, and went, in 1792, as general superintendent and member of consistory to Rendsburg, where he died, Nov. 12, 1806. His best work is, Die letzten Tage unseres Herrn Jesu Christi (edited by his son, Nürnberg, 1813; 3d ed. 1838). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 402; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 211; Döring, Die deutschen Kanzelredner, p. 14 sq. (B. P.)

Callista and Christa (or Calliste and Christe, Christina, etc.) were two sisters who had lapsed, and to whom Dorothea was intrusted, with orders that they should induce her to give up her faith. She, however, converted them. They were tied back to back, and thrown into a boiling caldron. There is a Calliste commemorated Sept. 1, in the Byzantine calendar, as having suffered martyrdom with her brothers. See also CALOCÆRUS.

Callistēa, in Grecian usage, was a festival which was celebrated in honor of Juno by the inhabitants of Lesbos, at which beauty took the prize. A similar festival was that of the Eleusinian Ceres, instituted by Cypselus, and celebrated by the Parrhasians in Arcadia. The most charming maiden was decorated, and the women were called Chrysophores (gold-bearers).

Callistrātus (1), an Isaurian bishop, and a friend of Chrysostom. Having written to Chrysostom, excusing himself for not having visited him at Cucusus, on account of the length of the journey and inclemency of the season, the latter responded (winter of 404), thanking him for his letters, and expressing a desire to receive both a visit and correspondence. See Chrysostom, Ep. 200. (2) A legendary martyr, commemorated, in Basil's Menologium, Sept. 27.

Callistus is the name of several persons in early church history. See also CALIXTUS.

1. A deacon who accused pope Damasus of adultery, and was expelled from the Church by the Council of Aquileia.

2. Prefect of Egypt, killed by his servants, Sept., 422, to which event a passage of Cyril's homily, the next Easter, is supposed, by Tillemont (xiv, 282), to refer.

3. Son of a Roman prefect, and the subject of a miracle of healing in the legendary Life of Epiphanius (ii, 337).

4. With Carisius and seven others, martyrs at Corinth, commemorated April 16.

Callistus, a monk of Mount Athos, was deputed by the monks of his monastery to Constantinople, during the contest between Paleologus and Cantacuzenus, to make peace. In 1349 or 1350 he was made patriarch by the emperor Cantacuzenus. In 1355 he refused the request of the emperor to crown his son Matthew, and retired to the monastery of Xamantis. Upon his refusal to return he was deprived of the patriarchate, and Philotheus substituted in his place. However, when John Paleologus came to the imperial throne, Callistus was restored to that of the patriarchate, and was sent as legate into Servia to treat for peace with Elizabeth, the widow of the prince of that country, where he died, at Pheras, the capital, in 1358. His homilies On the Exaltation of the Cross are given in Greek and Latin by Gretzer, De Cruce, ii, 1347; other works exist also in MS.

Callon, JACQUES, a French theologian, was born at Rheims in 1626, where he afterwards took charge of the seminary. He died June 2, 1714, leaving many unpublished works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Callot, JACQUES, an eminent French engraver, was born at Nancy, in Lorraine, in 1592, and was instructed by Cantagallina and Giulio Parigi. He died in 1635. The following are some of his principal works: The Murder of the Innocents; The Crucifixion, with the Virgin, St. John, and Magdalene; The Annunciation; The Entombing of Christ. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Calloway, DAVID, an English Methodist preacher, was born at Selsea, Sussex, March 10, 1824. He was a scholar in the Bible Christian Sunday-school; was converted at eighteen; became a Sunday-school teacher and local preacher; and in 1845 entered the ministry, and labored for three years in the Isle of Wight. In 1849 he was appointed to Lone, where he died, Oct. 23 of the same year.

Callum. See McCALLUM.

Callwen, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, and patroness of a church in the parish of Defynock, in Brecknockshire. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 153.

Cally, PIERRE, a French theologian, a native of Mesnil-Hubert, near Argentan, in the diocese of Sees. Having pursued his studies at Caen, he there became professor of eloquence and philosophy in 1660, and principal of the College of Arts in 1675. In 1684 he was made curate of the parish of St. Martin. He first taught the Cartesian philosophy in France. From 1686 to 1688 he was an exile at Moulins. He labored zealously for the conversion of the Protestants. He died Dec. 31, 1709. He wrote, Doctrine Hérétique et Schismatique touchant la Primauté du Pape Enseignée par les Jésuites dans leur Collège de Caen (1644).—Universæ Philosophiæ Institutio (Caen, 1695).—Discours en forme d'Homélies sur les Mystères, sur les Miracles, et sur les Paroles de Notre-Seigneur Jésus Christ qui sont dans l'Évangile (ibid. 1703). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calmaig. See COLMAN (2).

Calminius, Sainr, commonly known by the French as St. Carméry (or St. Calmèle). Both Carméry and Calmèle are said to have founded the monastery of Moustier-St.-Chaffre, belonging to the church of Velay, and the monastery of Manzac (or Mozac), in Auvergne, belonging to that of Clermont. The uncertainty about them, however, is illustrated by the fact that Carméry is celebrated Aug. 19, and Calmèle Nov. 22. Carméry is said to have died either in the 6th or the 7th century; Calmèle at the beginning of the 8th. The Vita Calminii, edited by Th. Aquinas, states that the saint lived in the time of Justinian. The first Justinian died in 565, the second in 711; but there is no reason for trusting this date.

Calmuc. See MONGOLIAN.

Calnan, JOHN, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ireland about 1833. He emigrated to America in early life; was converted at Carlinville, Ill., and in 1858 entered the Southern Illinois Conference. In 1861 he was granted a superannuated relation, and shortly afterwards died, Nov. 21, 1861. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1862, p. 211.

Calne, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Calnese). Calne is a town in Wiltshire, England, where a convention was held in 979, in the fourth year of Edward, king and martyr, in consequence of the dispute then rife between the monks and clergy, the former of whom were unduly favored by Dunstan, archbishop of Canterbury, to the great prejudice of the latter. Dunstan himself presided in this council, at the head of the chief nobility, the bishops, and other ecclesiastics. No decision was, however, arrived at, owing to a singular accident, which broke up the council—the floor of the chamber in which they were assembled giving way, all were precipitated to the ground, except Dunstan, whose seat escaped. See Baronius, A.D. 977; Labbe, Concil. ix, 724; Wilkin, Concil. i, 263.

Calo, Johann Adam, a German Lutheran theologian, was born at Belgern, in Saxony. He pursued his studies at Wittenberg, where, having received his degrees in 1705, he became, in 1707, professor. In 1716 he was made deacon at Schlieben, and in 1733 at Schönevalde, where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1742. He wrote, Disp. de Chlodowæo M. Primo inter Francos rege Christiano (Wittemb. 1704):—Disp. de Pseudo-apostolis veteri et recentiori Ecclesiæ Infensis (ibid. 1708):—Disp. quod Christus Formaliter et Syllogistice Disputaverit (ibid. eod.):—Renovatus Theologorum Wittenbergensium Conspectus (Wittemb. 1713). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calo, Pietro, of Venice, was a Dominican, who lived about 1300, and wrote some lives of the saints and other treatises.

Calocærius. (1) Said to have been deputy and successor of Apollinaris at Ravenna, and to have held the see from the time of Vespasian to that of Adrian. (2) Martyr at Albenga, on the coast of Genoa, put by Usuard, at Brescia, March 19 or April 18.

Calocærus and Parthenius, eunuchs, were respectively chamberlain and major-domo to Æmilianus, a Christian of Armenia, consul under the emperor Philip. Decius endeavored to induce them to sacrifice, and upon their refusal sent them to torture. They were afterwards condemned to the stake, and the fire not burning, they were despatched by a blow on the head, May 19. They are commemorated May 19 and Feb. 11.

Caloërius, bishop of Claudiopolis, in Pontus, was represented by a deputy at the council of A.D. 449 at Ephesus.

Calona, TOMMASO, an Italian Capuchin, was born at Palermo in 1599, and died there in 1644, leaving Latin commentaries on the history of Samuel, on Judges, and on the minor prophets (Palermo, 1644). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calonymus. See KALONYMUS.

Calopodius was a eunuch and presbyter, a Eutychian, deposed by Anatolius, A.D. 451. One Calopodius stole the authentic copy of the acts of the Council of Chalcedon from the altar of the great church at Constantinople, of which he was steward, and took it to Anastasius, who tore it up, A.D. 511. They are, probably, different persons.

Calori, RAFFAELLE, a painter of Modena, flourished from the years 1452 to 1474 in the employment of the duke of Bosso. He executed a picture of the Virgin, which is highly commended. He has several other works in different churches of his native country.

Calosyrius was a suffragan of Cyril of Alexandria, who wrote to him, about A.D. 444, a letter to be read in all the monasteries of his diocese of Arsinoë, against anthropomorphism, and against confounding idleness with sanctity. The same bishop, at Ephesus, A.D. 449, declared that he had always maintained communion with Eutyches.

Calphurnius. See MACARIUS.

Calpurnius. (1) Father of pope Pontianus. (2) St. Patrick (q. v.).

Calumet, the "pipe of peace" (sometimes of war), in use among the North American Indians, is regarded by them with the utmost veneration, and believed to have been presented to them by the sun. It "is a great smoking-pipe, of red, white, or black marble. It is very much like a pole-axe, has a very smooth head, and the tube, which is about two feet and a half long, is made of a quite strong reed or cane, set off with feathers of different colors, and several plaits made of woman's hair, variously interwoven. To this they fix two wings, which makes it something like Mercury's caduceus, or the wand which ambassadors of peace held formerly in their hands. They thrust this reed through the necks of huars, which are birds speckled with black and white and about the size of our geese, or through the necks of a certain kind of ducks. These ducks are of three or four different colors. Every nation adorns the calumet as custom or their own fancy suggest. The calumet is a passport to all who go to the allies of such nations as send it. It is a symbol of peace, and the natives are universally of opinion that some great misfortune would befall any person who would violate the faith of it. It is the seal of all undertakings, of all important affairs and public ceremonies" (Father Hennepin).

Calumnies AGAINST THE CHRISTIANS. A new society like the Christian Church could not escape misrepresentation. It offended men by presenting a higher standard of purity than their own, and the secrecy attending portions of its life and worship gave rise to suspicions. Popular credulity was ready to accept every malicious or ignorant tale of horror suggested. Also there was a system of calumny, of which the Jews were the chief propagators.

1. The Agape, and the more sacred supper at first connected with them, furnished material for some of the more horrible charges. "Thyestian banquets and Edipodean incest" became bywords of reproach. When they met, it was said, an infant was brought in, covered with flour, and then stabbed to death by a new convert, who was thus initiated in the mysteries. The others then ate the flesh and licked up the blood, and by this sacrifice were bound together (Tertull. Ad. Nat. i, 15; Apol. c. 8). Two sources of this monstrous statement may be given:

(a) To drink of human blood had actually been made, as in Catiline's conspiracy, a bond of union in a common crime (Sallust, Catil. c. 22); and the blood, it was said, was that of a slaughtered child (Dio. Cass. xxxvii, 30). Christians were regarded as members of a secret society conspiring for the downfall of the empire's religion and polity, and were supposed to have like rites of initiation.

(b) The language of devout Christians as to the Supper would tend to confirm, if not originate, the belief. It was not common bread or wine which they ate and drank, but flesh and blood.

2. The charge of impurity came next. When the Christians met—men and women—it was at night. A lamp gave light to the room, and to its stand a dog was said to be fastened. After supper meat was thrown to the dog, which would overthrow the lamp-stand in struggling to reach it, and then the darkness, it was said, covered a scene of shameless and unbridled lust, in which all laws of nature were set at nought (Tertull. Apol. c. 8; Ad. Nat. c. 16; Euseb. H. E. iv, 7-15; Origen, Contra Cels. vi, 27; Minuc. Felix, c. 9). This calumny, also, we may trace to two main sources:

(a) In the Bacchanalia and other secret mysteries, it was known that such licentiousness had been but too common.

(b) The name of the Agape, interpreted by men of prurient imaginations, was sure to strengthen the suspicion. They could form no other notion of a "love-feast" held at night. The terms "holy kiss," and the "kiss of peace" were distorted likewise. The names of "brother" and "sister," by which Christians spoke of each other, were said to refer to incestuous intercourse (Minuc. Felix, loc. cit.).

(c) It seems probable that in some cases abuses of this kind did actually exist in the Agapæ. The language of 2 Pet. ii, 13, and of Jude 12 shows that excesses had occurred. The followers of Carpocrates are said, by Clement of Alexandria (Strom. iii, 2-4, p. 185) and Eusebius (H. E. iv, 7, § 5), to have been guilty in their Agapæ of those practices popularly imputed to the Christians at large.

3. The charge of atheism was naturally made against a people who held aloof from all temples and altars; and, though frequently used against them, can hardly be classed as a distinct calumny. Still less can we place under that head the fact that they worshipped one who had died a malefactor's death, although this, from apostolic times, was a frequent topic of reproach (Tacit. Annal. xv, 63; Justin M. Dialog. c. Tryph. c. 93; Minuc. Felix, p. 86). It was not strange, either, that the reverential use which the Christians of the 2d century made of the sign of the cross led to the notion that they worshipped the cross itself. The most astounding statement is that Christians worshipped their God under the mysterious form of a man with an ass's head. Tertullian (Apol. c. 16; Ad Nat. c. 11) speaks of a caricature exhibiting such a form, with the inscription "The God of the Christians"—ὁυκοίτης (i. e. "ass-born"). A picture answering to this description has actually been found on a wall of a palace of the Cæsars, on the Palatine Hill. It is to be noted that this was but the transfer to the Christians of an old charge against the Jews, who were said to have been led by the wild asses of the desert to find water during the Exode (Tacit. Hist. v. 3). See OXOLATRY.

4. The belief that Christians worshipped the sun had a wider currency and more plausibility. They met together on the day generally known as the Dies Solis. They began at an early period to manifest a symbolic reverence for the East; and these acts, together with references to Christ as the "true light," and to themselves as "children of light," would naturally be interpreted as acts of adoration of the luminary itself. This, however, never rose to the rank of a popular calumny.

5. It was also reported that the members of the new sect worshipped their priests with an adoration which had in it something of a phallic character ("Alii eos ferunt ipsius austitutis ac sacerdotis colere genitalia," Minuc. Felix, Octav. c. 8). In this case, as in the charge of immoral excesses, we have probably the interpretation given by impure minds to acts in themselves blameless. Penitents came to the presbytery of the Church to confess their sins, and knelt before them as they sat; and this attitude may have suggested the revolting calumny to those who could see in it nothing but an act of adoration.

6. Over and above all specific charges, there was the dislike which men felt to a society so unlike their own. These persons, who lived apart from the world, were a lucifuga natio. They were infructuosi in negotiis. They were guilty of treason because they would not offer sacrifice for the emperors, and looked for the advent of another kingdom. Though ignorant, rude, uncultivated, yet they set themselves up above the wisest sages. They showed a defiant obstinacy in their resistance, even to death, to the commands of civil magistrates (Marc. Aurel. xi, 3). For a copious list of Latin treatises on these and similar early cavils at Christianity, see Volbeding, Index Program. p. 92 sq.

Calumny. The law of the early Church enjoined a heavy penalty upon those guilty of perjury. By can. 73 of the Council of Eliberis, "He that bears false witness against another, to the loss of his life or liberty, is not to be received to communion even at his last hour." In a lighter case, he was to do penance for five years, before he was reconciled and perfectly restored to the peace of the Church.—Bingham, Christ. Antiq. bk. xvi, c. xii, § 15. See DETRACTION; SLANDER.

Caluppānus, Saint, was born in 527, and spent his early years in the monastery of Inclia, where he so abstained from food as to be unable to perform his share of the ordinary work of the establishment. The other monks reproached him, and he withdrew to a neighboring cave, where he built himself an oratory. He occupied himself entirely with study and prayer, and is said to have vanquished persecuting evils spirits by using the sign of the cross and the Lord's Prayer. St. Avitus visited him at his cave, and ordained him deacon and priest. He died in 576. See Acta Sanctorum Boll. March, i, 262.

Calusco, TADDEO, was a Milanese of the order of St. Augustine, who died in 1720, leaving, besides other works, Esame della Religione Protestante, o sia Pretesa Riformata (Venice, 1720, 4to).

Calvart, DENIS (Ital. Dionisio, also called Fiammingo), an eminent Flemish painter of the Bolognese school, was born at Antwerp about 1555, and was the scholar of Sabbatini. After quitting this master he studied the works of Raffaele and other great painters at Rome, after which he returned to Bologna and established that celebrated school where Albano Domenichino and Guido were first instructed. His finest picture is the St. Michael in San Petronio, at Bologna. Some of his other works are, The Holy Family, with St. Roch and St. Sebastian, in the Church of San Giuseppe; Our Saviour Appearing to Magdalene, in San Giorgio. He died at Bologna in 1619. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calvert is the name of a family whose history is closely identified with that of the colony of Maryland. It includes:

1. GEORGE, the first lord Baltimore, who was born at Kipling, in Yorkshire, about 1580, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford. He early became secretary to Robert Cecil, one of the principal secretaries of state to James I. Soon afterwards he was made one of the clerks of the privy council, and in 1617 he was knighted. He afterwards became one of the two secretaries of state, and in 1620 received a pension of one thousand pounds annually. In 1624 he frankly confessed to the king that he had become a Roman Catholic, and resigned his office. The king, however, retained him as privy-councillor during his entire reign; and in February, 1625, created him baron of Baltimore, in the county of Longford, Ireland. Calvert had obtained a royal patent for himself and heirs granting them the absolute proprietorship of the province of Avalon, in Newfoundland. He expended twenty-five thousand pounds in advancing this new plantation, and built a handsome house in Ferryland, to which he had sent a colony in 1621. He afterwards fitted out two ships at his own expense, with which he relieved the English fishermen of that coast from the encroachments of the French. Becoming dissatisfied with Newfoundland, he visited Virginia in 1628. Not being able to take the oath of supremacy required by the Episcopal party in that colony, he sought possessions outside of its limits. He returned to England, and in 1632 obtained a patent for the territory within the limits of the present states of Delaware and Maryland. He died in London, April 15, 1632, before the grant was made out, and it was afterwards issued to his son as below.

2. CECIL, second lord Baltimore, son of George, received June 20, 1632, the charter which had been intended for his father, but which was executed for him by Charles I. It conferred on lord Baltimore and his heirs forever absolute ownership of the territory granted, and also civil and ecclesiastical powers of a feudal nature. The only tribute required was the annual payment of two Indian arrows, by which the proprietor acknowledged the sovereignty of the king. Cecil did not go with his colony to America, but sent out an expedition in November, 1633, under the charge of his brother, Leonard Calvert (q. v.), who became the first governor. Cecil Calvert died in 1676. The successive lords Baltimore were John (third), Charles (fourth), Benedict (fifth), Charles (sixth), and

3. FREDERICK, seventh lord Baltimore, was born in 1731, and succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1751, and also to the proprietorship of Maryland. He died at Naples, Sept. 14, 1771, leaving no legitimate children, and the title "lord Baltimore" ceased to exist.

Calvert, Daniel, an English Congregational minister, was born June 8, 1794. He was the second of three brothers who entered the ministry. In early life he joined the Independent Church at Mixenden. He entered Airedale College in 1818, and afterwards became a home missionary in the West Riding of Yorkshire. He served the following stations: Tadcaster and Wetherby, Yorkshire, and Calderbrook, near Rochdale, Lancashire. He died at Calderwood, Yorkshire, Sept. 22, 1849. He was a simple, plain, good man.

Calvert, Henry, a Scotch clergyman, a native of England, was admitted in 1629 assistant minister at Broadisland, Scotland, and afterwards at Oldstone, Ireland, where he was deposed by the bishop of Down, in 1636, for refusing to subscribe to the canvass. He returned to Scotland, and was presented to the living at Paisley in 1641. He found the charge a heavy one, and got an assistant minister appointed, which laid the foundation for a second charge in the town. He was disabled by gout in 1647, and died June 22, 1653. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, ii, 196.

Calvert, James, an English nonconformist divine, was born in York and educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge. He had been for several years at Topcliffe when he was silenced by the act of uniformity; after which he retired to York, and lived privately, but studied diligently. As a result of his studies here, he brought out his work, entitled Nupthali, seu Collectatio Theologica, de Reditu Decem Tribuum, Conversione, et Mensibus Ezekielis (1672). About 1675 he became chaplain to Sir William Strickland, and, afterwards, to Sir William Middleton and tutor to his son. He died in December, 1698. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Calvert, John, an English Congregational minister, was born in 1787. He was educated at the Idle Academy, and was for many years pastor of the Independent Church at Morley, near Leeds, where he died, Sept. 26, 1846.

Calvert, Leonard, the first governor of Maryland, whom we may designate as the "Roger Williams" of that state, on account of the position he took on the matter of religious liberty. He was sent to America by his brother, Cecil Calvert, the proprietor of the territory embraced in what became the state of Maryland. About two hundred Roman Catholic families accompanied him. The colonists landed at Point Comfort, Va., Feb. 24, 1634. Sailing up the Potomac, they came to an island which Calvert named St. Clements, of which he took possession "in the name of the Saviour of the world and of the king of England." Pursuing his way, he came to Piscataway, on the Maryland side. Here he had an interview with an Indian chief, and subsequently with others of the aborigines, with whom treaties of friendship were made; and the settlement was commenced under auspicious circumstances. The colony began its existence, as did that of Rhode Island, with a declaration of the broadest principles of civil and religious liberty. Christianity was established without putting the state under the control of any one denomination of Christians. The new commonwealth became the asylum to which those in other parts of the country, especially New England, who endured persecution for conscience' sake, fled. Governor Calvert erected a mansion at St. Mary's, for the use of himself and those who might succeed him in office. When the monarchy was overthrown in England by the execution of Charles I, and the Commonwealth was set up in its place, it was not to be expected that the Roman Catholic governor of an English province would be suffered to remain in power. Calvert was displaced and a new governor appointed in his place. He died in 1676. See Belknap, Amer. Biog. ii, 372, 380; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Calvert, Reuben, an English Congregational minister, was born on Oct. 2, 1806, at Marley, Halifax, Yorkshire. A sermon to the young was the means of his conversion, and in September, 1826, he became a member of the Church at Halifax. In 1828 he entered Airedale College. In July, 1832, he settled at Upper Mill, Saddleworth. He remained there nine years, doing much good. In July, 1841, he removed to Hyde, Cheshire, where he remained till his death, which occurred Dec. 19, 1856. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1858, p. 195.

Calvert, Thomas, an English nonconformist divine, uncle to James Calvert, was born at York in 1606, and educated at Sidney College, Cambridge. He served as chaplain to Sir T. Burder, in Derbyshire, for some time, and afterwards held the vicarage of Trinity, in York. He also preached at Christchurch, York, and was one of the four preachers who officiated at the cathedral during the time of Cromwell. When the act of uniformity was passed he was ejected from Allhallows parish, in that city, and lived privately. He died March, 1679. His works include Mel Cali, an Exposition of Isa. liii (1657);—The Blessed Jew of Morocco (1648);—Three Sermons (1660);—Heart Salve for a Wounded Soul, etc. (1675). See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Calvi, Giovanni Battista, an Italian theologian and layman, was born at Milan in the latter half of the 18th century. He wrote, Veritas Romanæ Ecclesiæ quam Brevisime Demonstrat Catholici in Conspectu Religionis Protestantium (Milan, 1758). See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calvi, Lazzaro and Pantaleo (or Pantaleone), Genoese painters, were sons of Agostino Calvi, a reputable painter of Genoa. Lazzaro was born in 1501, and with his brother Pantaleo was educated in the school of Pierino del Vaga. They painted in concert at Genoa, Monaco, and Naples. Lazzaro was jealous of his brother's work, and Pantaleo claimed no share of the praise justly due him. The jealousy of Lazzaro led him to the commission of the foulest crimes. He painted the Birth and Life of St. John the Baptist for the Chapel of Nobili Centurioni. His last works were for the Church of Santa Caterina. He died in 1606 or 1607. Pantaleo died in 1595. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Calvin, James, an English Methodist minister, was born at Manchester in 1813. He was converted at the age of nineteen and joined the Primitive Methodists, and distinguished himself by Christian zeal as a class-leader and local preacher. At the age of thirty-four he entered the itinerant ministry, and labored earnestly and successfully in sixteen circuits in Ireland and England. In July, 1880, he was appointed to the Barton-on-Humber Circuit, where he continued his ministrations till January, 1881, when he became a supernumerary. He died June 21, 1881. He was a faithful minister of the Gospel and a devoted Christian.

Calvin, Joseph Hadden, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Clones, Ireland, June 10, 1828. In 1846 he came to the United States. He graduated at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1849, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1852. He was licensed by the New Brunswick Presbytery the same year, and installed pastor of the churches of Bethlehem and Burton's Hill, Greene County, Ala., where he remained for six years. In 1858 he was elected professor of languages in Austin College, Texas. In 1859 he was called to Oakland College, Miss. He died Feb. 14, 1867. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1868, p. 319.

Calvinus (or Calwinus), a presbyter, is addressed by Alcuin in two letters, dated respectively (in edition of Frobenius) cir. A.D. 797 and 800. From his being mentioned in connection with "Symeon sacerdos," it is conjectured that he was an Englishman. In the first letter occurs "Nil tibi deesse æstimo in cella sancti Stephani honestæ conversationis;" but Frobenius is uncertain whether this cell is some English monastery, or whether it was that of St. Stephen, at Choisy, in France, to which Calvinus had retired. The second letter is addressed to him jointly with Cuculus, and they are bidden to exhort Symeon to fortitude under his tribulations.

Calvör, CASPAR, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born Nov. 8, 1650, at Hildesheim. He studied at Jena and Helmstädt, and was in 1677 deacon, and in 1684 superintendent, at Zellerfeld. In 1710 he was called as pastor primarius and general superintendent to Clausthal. He died May 11, 1725. He wrote, Gloria Mosæ, h. e. Illustria aliquot Facta sub Mosæ, etc. (Goslar, 1696): —Ritualet Ecclesiasticum (Jenæ, 1705, 2 parts): —Saxonia Inferior Antiqua Gentilis et Christiana (Goslar, 1714): —Der Ruhm Christi, eine Streitschrift wider der Juden (Leips. 1710): —Juden-Katechismus (ibid. eod.). See Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 140; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 198, 627, 795. (B. P.)

Calybitæ. Saints who lived in huts were so styled.

Calydonian Boar, in Greek mythology. Ceneus, king of Calydon, had made to the deities a solemn offering of thanks, but had forgotten Diana, who therefore sent an animal in the form of a boar, with bristles like arrows, and with teeth like the tusks of an elephant. It vomited fire, destroyed the vineyards and the woods, laid waste the cornfields, killed the cattle, and compelled the inhabitants to seek refuge in the city Calydon. Thereupon the valiant Meleager assembled the heroic young men of Greece to a united hunt for this monster boar. Echion, Jason, and Mopsus threw their spears in vain at the monster. Eupalamus and Pelagon were killed by him, also Enesimius, and the father of Achilles only escaped death by swinging himself on a tree; but the boar began to gnaw at the tree and try to pull it up by its roots, when Castor and Pollux came near, by whose spears the boar was driven into the thicket of the woods. Then Atalanta shot a feathered arrow at the beast, and struck it near the ear. Meleager praised her shot, saying she deserved the prize more than the men. Anceus, boasting, wished to show what a man could do in comparison with a woman, and said, "Even should Diana protect the boar, still he would succumb under the axe." Then he raised his battle-axe, but, even before it fell, the monster's sides were split open. The companions came together and dipped their weapons in the monster's blood. But Meleager took the head and hide of the animal and presented both to Atalanta.

Calypso, in Greek mythology, was a nymph of the sea, whose parents are stated differently, as she is sometimes called a Nereide, sometimes an Atlantide, sometimes an Oceanide. In the island Ogygia she possessed a most magnificent palace. Here she sat weaving at the golden loom, when Ulysses came, after he had been shipwrecked, and had been nine days on a mast, tossed hither and thither by the waves. The beautiful nymph offered to give him immortality and eternal youth, if he would always remain with her. Seven years she held him fast, until, at the instigation of Minerva, Jupiter sent Calypso word, by Mercury, to let her lover go. Thereupon she gave him wood and implements to build a ship, with which he sailed to the island of Alcinoüs, king of the Phæacians. According to some accounts, Calypso had two sons by Ulysses, Nausithots and Nausinots. The poem of Fénelon, according to which Telemachus, seeking his father, comes to Calypso, has no foundation in ancient mythology.

Camail, in ecclesiastical usage, is a French name for (1) a tippet or mozetta of black silk, worn by French clergy, but edged, lined, or furred to mark canons. (2) An aumusse, or cape of fur, adopted by the English dignitaries, with edging of the animal's tail, or pendants, and worn by canons in a modified form in the 15th century. See ALMUTUM.

Camaldöli (or Camaldules) were a reformed order of Benedictines founded by Romuald of Ravenna in 1009. They wore a cassock, scapular, and hood, of white wool, and a large-sleeved gown. They lived in mountainous and solitary places.

Camara (y Murga), Christopher dela, a learned Spanish prelate, was born at Arciniega, near Burgos, towards the end of the 16th century. He was professor of Holy Scripture at Toledo, and afterwards bishop of the Canaries, and eventually of Salamanca, where he died in 1641. He published a sort of early ecclesiastical history of the Canaries, under the title, Constituciones Sinodales del Obispado de Canaria, su primera fundacion y translacion, vidus de sus obispos, y breve relacion de las islas (Madrid, 1634). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camara (or Camarra), Lucio, of Chieti, an Italian antiquary in the middle of the 17th century, wrote De Teate Antiquo Marrucinarum in Italia Metropoli Lib. 3 (Rome, 1651, 4to). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Camargo, IGNACIO, a Spanish Jesuit and professor of theology at Salamanca, was born Dec. 26, 1650, and died Dec. 22, 1722. He published Regula Honestatis Moralis, a theological treatise on the way to act morally (Naples, 1702, fol.), in which he combats the doctrine of probability; viz., that it is allowable for a man to follow an opinion which he thinks probable, although it appears to him to be less certain, less sure, than the contrary opinion. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Camassel, ANDREA, an Italian painter and engraver of the Roman school, was born at Brevagna, near Foligno, in 1601, and studied under Domenichino. He died in 1648. His best works are, The Assumption, in the Pantheon, and The Dead Christ, at the Cappuccini; also The Triumph of Constantine, in St. John Lateran. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cambacérés, l'Abbé de, a French priest, uncle of Étienne, was born at Montpellier, in 1721, and became archdeacon there. In 1757 he preached before king Louis XV, and in 1768 delivered his beautiful panegyric of St. Louis, which elicited from the congregation, though in a church, the most unbounded tokens of applause. He became a celebrated preacher, and published, besides the Panegyrique (1768, 4to), three volumes of Sermons (1781, 12mo, and 1788). See Biog. Universelle, vi, 589.

Cambacérés, ÉTIENNE HUBERT DE, a French prelate, was born at Montpellier, Sept. 11, 1756. After entering holy orders he was rapidly promoted, being appointed archbishop of Rouen in 1802, and eventually to the cardinalate. He refrained from taking part in the French Revolution, but, later, was active for a time in political affairs. He died Oct. 25, 1828. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cambedoxi is the Japanese name for the Chinese god Fo, among the inhabitants of Nippon, Japan, and the islands round about.

Cambolas, FRANÇOIS DE, a French priest, born in 1600, was canon of St. Saturnin, in Toulouse. He founded the order of nuns of Notre Dame at Toulouse, and was distinguished for his piety, modesty, and charity. He died May 4, 1668. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cambounet (de la Mothe), JEANNE DE (or de Sainte Ursule), a French Ursuline and biographer, who lived at Bourg-en-Bresse in the second half of the 17th century, is the authoress of Journal des Illustres Religieuses de l'Ordre de Sainte Ursule (Bourg, 1684). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cambout (de Pont-Château), SÉBASTIEN JOSEPH DU, a French theologian of the second half of the 17th century, was abbé of the convent of Pont-Château, and left some epistles, for which see Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cambrai, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Cameracense), was held in August, 1565, in the city of that name in France, Maximilian, archbishop and duke of Cambrai, presiding, assisted by the bishops of Tournai, Arras, St. Omer, and Namur. Twenty-two decrees were published, each of which contains several chapters. The titles of the decrees are as follows:

1. Of heretical books.
2. Of theological lectures in chapters and monasteries.
3. Of schools.
4. Of seminaries.
5. Of doctrine, and the preaching of the Word of God.
6. Of ceremonies, and the holy offices.
7. Of the ministry.
8. Of the life and conversation of clerks.
9. Of the examination of bishops.
10. Of the examination of pastors.
11. Of the residence of bishops and curates.
12. Of the residence of pastors, and their duties.
13. Of visitation.
14. Of the ecclesiastical power and jurisdiction.
15. Of matrimony.
16. Of tithes, etc.
17. Of purgatory.
18. Of monasteries.
19. Of the salute.
20. Of images.
21. Of relics.
22. Of indulgences.

The 3d, relating to schools, contains six chapters; it orders that they be visited by the curate every month, and by the rural dean at least once in each year, in order that a report may be made to the bishop.

The 12th enjoins the wearing of the surplice and stole by the priests, when they carry the holy sacrament to the sick, and also that a clerk carry a lighted taper and bell, that the people may be warned of its approach, and of their duty towards the holy sacrament and to the sick person.

Finally, the council confirmed the decrees of the Council of Trent. See Labbe, Concil. xv, 147.

CAMBRAI, SECT IN. In the early part of the 11th century a Christian sect was discovered in the diocese of Cambrai, in the districts of Arras and Liege, which was supposed to have had its origin in the teaching of Gundulf, an Italian, and from some of its strange doctrines was thought to have some connection with certain Oriental sects. They rejected marriage, and held that a state of celibacy was indispensable to a participation in the kingdom of heaven. They alleged that the disciples of Christ, both male and female, ought to live together only in spiritual fellowship. They also held the utter inefficacy of mere outward sacraments to purify the heart. Neander says, "To show the inefficacy of baptism they pointed to the immoral lives of the clergy who performed the ceremony, to the immoral lives of the persons baptized, and to the fact that in the children on whom baptism was performed not one of the conditions was to be found upon which such efficacy must depend—no consciousness, no will, no faith, no confession. The tenets which they had received from Gundulf agreed in all respects, as they affirmed, with the doctrines of Christ and of the apostles. They were as follows: to forsake the world, to overcome the flesh, to support one's self by the labor of one's own hands, to injure no one, to show love to all the brethren. Whoever practiced these needed no baptism; where these failed, baptism could not supply their place. They were also opposed to the worship of saints and relics, and ridiculed the stories told about the wonders performed by them. But it is singular to observe that they at the same time held to the worship of the apostles and martyrs, which probably they interpreted, however, in accordance with their other doctrines, and in a different manner from what was customary in the Church." They were opposed to the worship of the cross and of images, and had no reverence for churches as such, claiming that "the church is nothing but a pile of stones heaped together; the church has no advantage whatever over any hut where the divine Being is worshipped."

Those who held these views were early arrested and brought to trial, but succeeded in explaining their faith to the satisfaction of the bishop. After this they increased to considerable numbers, and the archbishop assembled a synod at Arras in 1025, before which the arrested members were compelled to appear. Here they were obliged to subscribe a recantation on the cross, but the only effect was to make them more cautious in their teachings. Towards the end of the 11th century a sect of this kind once more made its appearance in the same locality. Their leader, a man named Ramihed, although it was impossible to convict him of heresy, was burned to death in an old hut, for charging the priests with immorality. The persecution to which the leaders of the sect were subjected tended greatly to increase its numbers, and to give it such importance and permanence that in the 12th century it was still found in many towns of the district. See Neander, Hist. of the Church, iii, 597 sq.

Cambricum Concilium, A.D. 465, is a fiction, taken from Geoffrey of Monmouth, etc.

Cambuca, a pastoral staff ("Inventurus cruculam cum cambucâ ipsius summi pontificis"). See Mart. Theat. Anecd. iii, 1121, a, sq.

Camburn, MYRON B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1820. He was converted at the age of twelve; licensed to preach in 1844; and in 1846 was admitted into the Michigan Conference. He filled twenty-two conference appointments successively, and died at his post, Oct. 17, 1872. Mr. Camburn was remarkably healthy, faithful, and laborious. He was a fully consecrated Christian, and a gifted preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 94.

Camden, WILLIAM, an eminent English antiquarian and historian, was born in London, May 2, 1551, and was educated at Oxford. In 1577 he was co-rector, and in 1597 rector, of the Westminster School. He died at Chiselhurst, Nov. 9, 1623. His main work is Britannia, sive Florentissimorum Regnorum Anglia, Scotia, Hibernia et Insularum Adjacentium ex Intima Antiquitate Chirographica Descriptio (Lond. 1586). He also wrote Remains of a Greater Work concerning Britain (ibid. 1605):—Annales Rerum Anglicarum et Hibernicarum Regnante Elisabetha (1615-17, 2 vols.). In his honor the Camden Society was founded in 1838. (B. P.)

Camelæ (or Gamelæ Dææ), in Roman mythology, were goddesses of marriage (Gr. γαμή), invoked by young women just before their nuptials.

Camelaucium (Camelaucum, Camelaucus, or Camalaucum) was a covering for the head, used chiefly in the East. It appears to have been a round cap with ear-flaps of fur, originally camel's hair, if the ordinary etymology is to be accepted, or wool, and sometimes adorned with gems. The form and name being preserved, it sometimes became a helmet, and was worn in battle. We find it adopted by royal personages, and Ferrario (Costumi, Europa, vol. iii, pt. i, pl. 30) and Constantine Porphy. (De Adm. Imp. c. 13) describe by the same name the sacred caps, preserved at the high-altar of Camelaucum.

St. Sophia's, traditionally believed to have been sent by an angel's hands to Constantine the Great, and used in the coronation of the emperors of the East. See CROWN.

Its ecclesiastical use in the East seems to have been chiefly confined to the monastic orders. Goar (Eucholog. p. 156) tells us that the mitre of the metropolitan of Constantinople had this name only when he was taken from the monastic ranks. It is defined by Allatius (De utriusque Eccl. Consens. lib. iii, c. viii, no. 12, apud Ducange) as a round woollen cap worn by monks. It was worn by Armenian bishops when officiating at the altar. See MITRE.

Camēnæ (or Camōnæ), in Roman mythology, were spring-nymphs endowed with prophetic gifts among certain ancient Italian nations. To them belonged Carmentis and Egeria. Their worship in a grove at Rome had been instituted by Numa. The name was afterwards given to the Muses of the Greeks.

Camenz, Erdmann Gottfried, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Grossenhain (Saxony) in 1692, and studied at Wittenberg. In 1718 he was called as pastor to Schönewalde; in 1734 to Schlieben, as provost and superintendent, and he died there in 1743. He wrote, Disput. de Navi Tyria, ductu Ezech. xxvii, 3, 5, 6 (Wittenberg, 1714):—De Aqueductu Hiiskiz (ibid. eod.):—De Suspecta Maimonidis in Antiquitatibus Judaicis Fide (ibid. 1716). See Dietmann, Chursächsische Priester, iv, 684; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 140; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Camenz, Karl Wilhelm Theophilus, a Lutheran theologian of Germany, was born at Cöln, near Meissen, Oct. 14, 1769. For some time he was pastor at Oberau, and in 1807 became superintendent at Sayda, where he died, Sept. 1, 1837. He wrote, Katechetisches Handbuch (1801-11, 8 vols.):—Lehrbuch der Glaubens- und Sittenlehre des Christenthums (Meissen, 1811). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. ii, 269; Zuchold, Bibl. Theol. i, 212. (B. P.)

Camerarius, Bartolommeo, an Italian theologian, born at Benevento, was for twenty-four years professor of law at Naples, at the end of which time, viz., in 1529, he was made president of the royal chamber. In 1557 he settled at Rome, where pope Paul IV appointed him commissary-general of the papal troops. He died at Naples in 1564. He was a man of vast learning, and wrote, De Prædestinatione, de Gratia et Libero Arbitrio, contra Calvinum (Paris, 1556):—De Jejunio, de Oratione et Eleemosinâ (ibid. eod. 4to):—De Purgatorio Igne (Rome, 1557):—a work on preaching, and another on matrimony. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camerata, Giuseppe (1), an Italian painter and engraver, was born at Venice in 1668, and studied under Gregorio Lazzarini. At a great age he executed, for the gallery of the elector of Saxony, The Parable of the Lost Drachma, after Feti; The Holy Family, after J. C. Procaccini; The Assumption, after Camil. Procaccini; The Chastity of Joseph, after Contarini. He died at Dresden in 1761. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camerata, Giuseppe (2), an Italian engraver and miniature painter, was born at Venice in 1718, and studied engraving under Gio. Cattini. In 1751 he was made engraver to the court at Dresden. The following are some of his principal plates: The Parable of the Prodigal Son; David with the Head of Goliath; The Holy Family; The Adulteress before Christ. He died in 1803.

Camerino, Francesco, an Italian preacher of the early part of the 14th century, was sent as a missionary to Asia Minor. On his return he lived at Avignon in intimate relations with pope John XXII (1333), but afterwards returned to Italy. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cameron, Charles Richard, a Church of England divine, was born in 1780. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford. His latter days were spent as rector of Swaby, Lincolnshire, where he died, Jan. 10, 1865. He was the author of several sermons and pamphlets, among which are, Lectures on Confirmation:—A Sermon on the Death of Nelson:—Sayings and Doings of Poetry:—A Letter to Mr. Whitmore on the Corn Laws:—A Pamphlet on the Sabbath Question, addressed to Archbishop Whately:—Parochial Sermons:—On the Antichrist of St. John:—On the Revolutions of 1848:—A Poem on the New Moral World against Socialism. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1865, p. 664.

Cameron, Finlator, an English Baptist minister, was born at Chatham in 1782. He united with the Church, by baptism, June 29, 1800, and in the latter part of 1801 began his theological studies under the tuition of Rev. Dan Taylor of London. He was ordained as pastor of the General Baptist Church in Louth, July 4, 1805. He had supplied the pulpit of this church for more than a year and a half, previous to his ordination. His ministry was so prosperous as to make necessary an enlargement of the building in 1808. Some division having sprung up in his Church, he retired from the pastorate, and for ten years served the Baptist Church at Coningsby, returning to Louth, by the unanimous request of the Church, in 1822. Prosperity again attended his labors. He died Aug. 29, 1848. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1849, p. 41. (J. C. S.)

Cameron, James (1), a Wesleyan Methodist missionary, was born at Kirkintilloch, near Glasgow, Scotland, Aug. 1, 1805. At the age of fifteen he united with the Methodist Society, and soon began to preach in the streets of his native village. In 1829 he was accepted by the British Conference, and sent to Cape Town, South Africa, where he labored five years with ability and success. For nearly twenty-five years thereafter he toiled in various parts of the Eastern Province of South Africa, and in the Orange Free State, among Europeans and natives; and everywhere his labors were those of an able, undaunted, and untiring preacher. In 1857 he returned to Cape Town, where he ministered to large congregations till 1864, when he was appointed to Natal as chairman of that district; and there and in D'Urban and in Pietermaritzburg (his residence for the last years of his life) he worked with loving zeal and ceaseless devotion until called away to rest, Dec. 12, 1875. Mr. Cameron's sermons were carefully prepared, massive in their structure, rich in truth, and delivered with great energy. He was a cheerful, yet serious and consistent, Christian. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1876, p. 36.

Cameron, James (2), an English Congregational minister, was born in 1809. He spent his boyhood at Gourcock, on the Firth of Clyde; matriculated at the university of Glasgow in 1830; was converted in 1831; and in the following year entered the Glasgow Theological Academy. In the autumn of 1835 he went to Innerleithen to improve his health, and there instituted a series of meetings which resulted in the establishment of an Independent Church in the place, and a great religious awakening in the town. Mr. Cameron was ordained at Portobello in 1837, and in 1843 removed to Dumfries, where he remained till 1847, when he accepted a call at Headgate, Colchester. His final charge was at Hopton, Mirfield. Here he died, March 29, 1873. Those who knew him best were those who loved him most. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1874, p. 316.

Cameron, James (3), a Presbyterian minister, was born in 1816 at Greenock, Scotland. He came to America as the representative of a British commission house. Mercantile life proving distasteful, he pursued painting as a profession. In 1845 he went to Italy, and on his return, in 1849, was made a deacon in the Presbyterian Church at Chattanooga, Tenn. During the late civil war he left the South, removed to Philadelphia, and finally went to Greenville, Me., in 1868. At Greenville he ministered to the Congregational Church for four years. In 1870 he was ordained an evangelist, and was acting pastor at Waterville from 1872 to 1874. He then went to California, ministered to the people in San Bernardino and other places, and died at Oakland, Jan. 5, 1882. See San Francisco Bulletin, Jan. 6, 1882. (B. P.)

Cameron, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was of the family of Lochiel, and was first made official of Lothian in 1422. He afterwards became confessor and secretary to the earl of Douglas; was provost of Trincluden in 1424; and was made keeper of the seal Feb. 25, and royal secretary March 7, 1425. In 1426 he was elected bishop of Glasgow; in 1428 was made lord-chancellor of the see; in 1429 he erected six churches within his diocese; and in 1433 was chosen one of the delegates from the Church of Scotland to the Council of Basel. In 1444 he was still chancellor. After his removal from this office, bishop Cameron began to build the great tower at his episcopal palace in Glasgow, where his coat armorial is to be seen to this day, with all the badges of the episcopal dignity. He probably died in 1448. He enacted canons which may be found in MS. in the Harleian Collection, No. 4631. See Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.; Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 248.

Cameron, John (2), an English Wesleyan missionary, was born in 1808. In 1833 he was sent to the West Indies, where his exertions were great and his labors successful. Nevis, Anguilla, and Dominica were his fields. He died on the last-named island, Sept. 22, 1841. He was a man of strong understanding and self-control. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1842.

Cameron, Simon B., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was converted about 1844. After preaching under the auspices of the Kentucky Conference for two years, he went farther south to improve his health. In 1850 he joined the Texas Conference, in which he served the Church as his health would permit, until his death, Oct. 2, 1853. Mr. Cameron was a young man of marked ability and fine promise. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1853, p. 490.

Cameron, William (1), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Delaware County, N. Y., Aug. 4, 1781. In 1814 he entered the Genesee Conference, and, with a few years' exception as a superannuate, he labored faithfully until his death, in 1850 or 1851. Mr. Cameron was an exemplary Christian in all the walks of life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1851, p. 633.

Cameron, William (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born Aug. 26, 1816, in Cecil County, Md. He was prepared for college in the West Nottingham Academy, Md., and graduated from the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, in 1839. Five years following he spent in teaching. He entered Princeton Theological Seminary in 1844, and remained nearly two years; but left before examination, in the spring of 1846, to fill an appointment to which he was urgently called. He then acted as private tutor in Jefferson County, Va.; was professor of ancient languages and literature in Masonic College, Mo.; then principal of Female College, at St.

Joseph; of Brandon Academy, Miss.; professor of mathematics in West Tennessee College; principal of Trinity High-school, at Pass Christian, Miss.; of an academy at Lexington, Mo.; of the Peabody School at Crystal Springs, Miss., from 1872 to 1875. He was licensed to preach by the presbytery of Central Mississippi, April 20, 1861; and ordained by the presbytery of East Mississippi in 1865. He preached as stated supply at Pass Christian; at Mossy Creek Church, Tenn.; at Overton, Tex., from April 23, 1877. He died at the last-named place, May 10, 1879. Mr. Cameron had a strong desire to preach the gospel; but his peculiar fitness for teaching kept him mainly in the school-room and in the professor's chair. See Necrolog. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1880, p. 35.

Camerus, ordained deacon by Polycarp, succeeded Papius in the see of Smyrna, according to Metaphrastes. See Tillemont, ii, 372.

Camilla, Saint, of AUXERRE, went with St. Germanus to Ravenna; but is said to have died on her return journey, A.D. 437. See Acta Sanctorum, Boll. Mart. i, 842.

Camilliānus, Saint, confessor and bishop, or TROYES, is supposed to have died in 525 (or 536). He was present at the first council of Orleans, A.D. 511.

Camillo, FRANCISCO, a reputable Spanish historical painter, was born at Madrid about 1635 (others say 1610), of a Florentine family, and studied under Pedro de las Cuevas. One of his best pictures is in the Church of San Juan Dios, at Madrid, the Nuestra Señora de Bellem. Some of his other works are, The Descent from the Cross; St. Mary of Egypt before the Virgin. He died in 1671. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Novv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camillus and Camilla, in Roman antiquity, were the titles applied to the boys and girls who were occupied in the ceremonies of sacrifice, whether temporarily or as a preparation for their entering the priesthood. In the latter case it was necessary that they should be the children of parents still alive, and freeborn.

Camillus. (1) Presbyter of Genoa, who consulted St. Prosper respecting some propositions of Augustine on predestination, after that father's death; and to whom Prosper addressed his Answers to the Genoese. (2) Father of St. Ennodius, bishop of Pavia, A.D. 473. See Ceillier, x, 300, 569.

Camis is a title of the honored dead among the Japanese, to whom they pay divine homage. They believe that the souls of very good men become Camis, or protecting geniuses of men; while those of the wicked wander through the air, writhing in agony. To these deified heroes they build temples or mia (q. v.), and offer sacrifices, swear by them, and implore their assistance in all important undertakings. This system prevails among the Sintoists (q. v.) in Japan, and hence the system has sometimes received the name of the religion of the Camis. See KAMI.

Camisia, in ecclesiastical usage, is a name for (1) a shrine in which the Book of the Gospels used at high-mass was anciently preserved. It was frequently made of gold, richly jewelled. Many such existed in English cathedrals and parish churches before the Reformation. (2) An alb (q. v.).

Camm (née Newby), Anne, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Kendal, England, in August, 1627. While residing in London, whither she had been sent to complete her education, she became a Christian, and united with the Puritans. Her first marriage was with John Audland (q. v.), and both husband and wife soon joined the Society of Friends, and, not long after, she was recognised as a minister in that denomination. More than once, in her early ministry, she was arrested and thrown into prison, and kept there, at one time, for a year and a half. Her husband died in 1663, and subsequently she married Thomas Camm, another minister among the Friends. After a life of remarkable usefulness, during which she passed through great sufferings for conscience' sake, she died, Sept. 30, 1705. See Friends' Library, i, 473-479. (J. C. S.)

Camm, John, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born near Kendal, Westmoreland, England, in 1604. He was converted under the preaching of George Fox, and soon after commenced his labors as an itinerant preacher among the Friends in the North of England, and in London, whither he went with Francis Howgill, "with a message from the Lord to Oliver Cromwell, their protector." He is said to have been "a man richly furnished with the gifts of the Holy Spirit, patient in exercises, grave in behavior, profound in judgment, quick in discerning, and a sharp reprover of wickedness, hypocrisy, and of disorderly walkers in the profession of truth." He died a peaceful Christian death in 1652. See Evans, Piety Promoted, i, 31, 33. (J. C. S.)

Camm, Thomas, a minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Camsgill, Westmoreland, England, in 1641. He was converted in early life, and eventually recognised as a minister. He had a large share of the hardships and persecutions of the Quakers which marked the age in which he lived. In 1674 he was imprisoned at Kendal, for nearly three years, for the non-payment of tithes, and subsequently at Appleby for six years. He was also very heavily fined. During these trials he conducted himself with wisdom and patience. He died in the triumphs of Christian faith, Jan. 13, 1708. See Friends' Library, i, 479-481. (J. C. S.)

Camma, in British mythology, was the goddess of hunting.

Cammarch was a Welsh saint of the 6th century, and founder of Llangamarch, in Brecknockshire. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 233.

Cammarota, FILIPPO, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born Nov. 23, 1809. He was appointed archbishop of Gaeta in 1854, and died March 1, 1876. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1876, p. 630.

Cammin, Saint, was one of the most celebrated abbots of Ireland, who in his youth retired to the island of Inish-Kealtair, on the lake of Derg-Derch, on the confines of Thomond and Galway, where he built a monastery. The church of that place still retains the name of Tempul-Cammin. He died about 653. See Ussher, Antiq. p. 503.

Camœna. See CAMENÆ.

Camos, MARCOS ANTONIO, a Spanish prelate, was born at Barcelona in 1553. After a military career and the loss of his wife, he became an Augustine monk in 1591, studied theology and philosophy, and in 1605 was appointed bishop of Trani (in Bari), but died before his confirmation to that office. He left, Microcosmo y Gobicino universal del hombre Christiano. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camp, Abraham, a German preacher, was a native of Cologne. He became a member of the Jesuit order in 1688, and studied belles-lettres at Aix-la-Chapelle, and theology at Treves. Having preached with great success at Düsseldorf, he was placed at the head of the new missions established in the duchies of Juliers and Berg, and held that position until his death, which occurred at Düsseldorf, Feb. 26, 1696. He wrote, Aquila Grandis Magnarum Alarum:—Lessus Oratarius et Poeticus Funeris Serenissimæ Mariæ Annæ-Josephæ Austriacæ (Düsseldorf, 1689). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camp, Albert Barlow, a Congregational minister, was born at Northfield, Conn., and graduated from Yale College in 1822. After a theological course at Andover, which he completed in 1826, he was settled over the First Congregational Church in Ashby, Mass. In 1832 he returned to his native place, where he resided two years, supplying various pulpits in the vicinity. In 1834 he was settled over the Church in Bridge-water, Conn., and continued there ten years. He removed to Bristol in 1845, where he became engaged in book-keeping and writing for various manufacturers in the vicinity, and continued in this occupation until the failure of his health. He died in Bristol, May 17, 1866, aged sixty-nine years. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1866.

Camp, Amzi, a city missionary, died in New York, Jan. 5, 1864. He was for nearly thirty years in the employ of the American Tract Society as city missionary. His life was one of earnest, patient, self-denying labor among the neglected classes. See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. 1864, p. 591.

Camp, Henry Bates, a Congregational minister, was born at Durham, Conn., Dec. 10, 1809. After graduating from Yale College in 1831, he began the study of theology in the Yale Divinity School, and completed his course at the Princeton Theological Seminary, graduating in 1834. In July, 1835, he was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church at North Branford, Conn., but resigned this charge in August, 1836, on account of ill-health. In 1837 he became an instructor in the American Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb at Hartford, where he taught until 1864. The rest of his life was spent in retirement at Hartford, where he died, Feb. 16, 1880. See Obituary Record of Yale College, 1880.

Camp, Joseph Eleazer, a Congregational minister, graduated at Yale College in 1787; was ordained pastor of the Church in Northfield, Conn., in 1790, continuing there until 1837; and died in 1838. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, ii, 592.

Camp, Phineas, a Presbyterian minister, was born at Durham, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1788. He graduated at Union College in 1811, and spent over two years in Princeton Theological Seminary. He was ordained by the North River Presbytery in 1817, and spent a year as missionary in Ohio, Michigan, New York, and Pennsylvania. His first charge was Westfield, N. Y. (1819-22), and his next Lowville (1825-29), and afterwards he served at Denmark and Whitestown, N. Y., and Dixon, Ill. He died at the last-named place, Jan. 30, 1868. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 16.

Camp, Riverius, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Florida, was rector for many years of Trinity Church, in Brooklyn, Conn., until 1872, when he became rector of Christ Church, Monticello, Fla. In the following year he returned to his former rectorship in Conn., and in 1874 to his former Church in Monticello. He died Sept. 12, 1875, aged sixty-five years. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1876, p. 150.

Camp, Samuel, a Congregational minister, graduated at Yale College in 1764; was ordained pastor of the Church in Ridgebury, Conn., in 1770; and died in 1813. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, i, 664.

Campāga (Campacus, Gambocus, or Campobus), was a kind of ornamental shoe worn by emperors and kings. At a later period it was worn by the higher ecclesiastics at Rome, and by others elsewhere, but in disregard of the special privileges claimed in regard to it by Roman authorities. See Gregory Magnus, Epis. lib. vii, ep. 28.

Campagna, GIROLAMO, an Italian sculptor, was born at Verona in 1552, and studied under Cataneo. His productions consist chiefly of altars and sepulchres, in the cities of Venice and Verona. He was living in 1623. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campagnola, Domenico, an eminent Venetian painter (and engraver) of the school of Titian, lived about 1543. He received lessons from his father, Giulio, and painted both in oil and fresco with great brilliancy. The following are some of his plates: Christ Healing the Sick Man at the Pool of Bethesda; The Resurrection of Christ; The Descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost; The Assumption of the Virgin. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campagnola, Giulio, a Paduan painter and engraver, lived about 1500. Among the plates by him is especially mentioned the picture of John the Baptist Holding a Cup.

Campāna (Ital. bell), a name used first as a Latin term by Bede, in the 7th century, and employed generally afterwards, to denote the bells used in churches, to summon the people to public worship.

Campana, Alberto, a Florentine Dominican, was professor of philosophy at Pisa, and afterwards of theology at Padua, where he died, Sept. 24, 1639, leaving a metrical translation of the Pharsalia, in Italian (Venice, 1600). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campana, Pietro, an Italian engraver, was born at Soria in 1727, and studied under Rocco Pozzi. The following are his principal plates: St. Francis of Paolo; St. Peter Delivered from Prison. He died in 1765.

Campanaio, Lorenzo di Lodovico (surnamed Lorenzetto), an Italian sculptor and architect, was born at Florence in 1494, and at an early age was commissioned to complete the tomb of cardinal Forteguerri, in the church of San Giacomo, at Pistoja. He was also employed upon the tomb of cardinal Chigi in the church of Santa Maria del Popolo. He died in 1541. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campanarius (bell-ringer). His special office in a church is perhaps not mentioned in the literature of the first seven centuries. In more ancient times the duty of ringing the bells at the proper seasons seems to have been laid upon the priests themselves (Capitularé Episcop. c. 8; Capit. Caroli Magni, lib. vi, c. 168). To the same effect Amalarius (De Div. Off. iii, 1) says, speaking of the ringing of bells, "Ne despiciat presbyter hoc opus agere" (Ducange s. vv. Campanum, Campanarius). In later times the ostiarius was the bell-ringer (Martene, De Rit. Eccl. ii, 18, ed. 1783). See BELL.

Campanella, Angelo, a Roman engraver, was born about 1748. He engraved several plates for G. Hamilton's Scholia Italica, and the statues of the Twelve Apostles in St. John of Lateran. He died in 1815.

Campanile, an Italian missionary, was born at San Antonio, near Naples, in 1762. He early became a member of the Dominican order, was consecrated priest, and, being charged with the duties of teaching, he acquitted himself to the satisfaction of his superiors. He joined the College of the Propagandists at Rome, and, on account of his knowledge of the Arabic language, was sent, in 1802, into the East as prefect of the missions of Mesopotamia and Kurdistan. Returning to Naples after thirteen years of successful labor, Campanile became preacher, and soon after assistant professor of Arabic, at the University of Naples, where he died, March 2, 1835. He wrote a History of Kurdistan. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campanna, Pedro, a painter of the Roman school, was born at Brussels in 1503, and, while young, visited Rome and studied the works of Raphael. He painted the triumphal arch erected for the reception of Charles V, in 1530, at Bologna. The best of his works are in the Cathedral of Seville, particularly his famous pictures of The Nativity, and The Purification. He died in 1570. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campanton, Isaac ben-Jacob, a Jewish writer of Castile, in Spain, was born in 1360, and died at Penja-fiel in 1463. Although not very learned, he was called the Gaon of Castile. He is the author of The Book of the Ways of the Talmud, ררכי ההלמוד, a methology of the Talmud, in which he lays down general rules for the understanding of its style. It was first published at Mantua, 1596. See Furst, Bibl. Jud. i, 140; Lindo, Hist. of the Jews, p. 193; Finn, Sephardim, p. 386; Grätz, Gesch. des Juden, viii, 152; Jost, Gesch. d. Juden. u. s. Sekten, iii, 87; Etheridge, Introd. to Heb. Lit. p. 267. (B. P.)

Campbell, Abraham, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Pennsylvania, June 11, 1811. He was converted at the age of nineteen, and in 1850 entered the Illinois Conference. He afterwards became a member of the Southern Illinois Conference; held a local relation between 1864 and 1868; and the remainder of his life was an effective member. He died Feb. 10, 1879. Mr. Campbell was a clear and forcible preacher, a successful pastor, and an amiable companion. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1879, p. 33.

Campbell, Alexander (1), a Scotch prelate, son of Sir John Campbell, was made first Protestant bishop of Brechin while a boy, May 16, 1566, and was present with Regent Moray in the convention at Perth, July 28, 1569. He had a leave of absence in 1567, to study abroad, went to Geneva, and, on his return home, in 1574, he exercised the office of particular pastor at Brechin, without interfering with episcopal duties. He sat in many parliaments, and retained the designation of bishop until his death, in February, 1608. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 166; Fasts Eccles. Scotiam, iii, 889.

Campbell, Alexander (2), a Methodist Episcopal minister, joined the Texas Conference in 1872. After the division of the Conference, he labored successfully in the West Texas Conference until he was transferred to the Texas Conference, and appointed to the Courtney Circuit. He died in 1880. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1881, p. 333.

Campbell, Alexander (3), D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania, and graduated from Jefferson College. He studied theology at Princeton Theological Seminary two years, graduating in 1822. He was ordained a minister in the Presbyterian Church, and preached at Buckingham and Blackwater, Md., from 1828 to 1837. Subsequently he preached at Dover, Del., and Poplar Springs, Md. He then became stated supply at Makemie Church, New Orleans, La., from 1850 to 1854. He was a teacher in the same place during 1855. He died in 1855. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 34.

Campbell, Alfred Elderkin, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Cherry Valley, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1802. He graduated from Union College in 1820. Immediately after, he took charge of the academy in his native town, and studied law while he taught school. He soon after turned from the bar to the ministry, and in 1822 went to Princeton Theological Seminary, and graduated in 1823. He was ordained in 1824. His first settlement was at Worcester, Otsego Co., and his subsequent settlements were in Newark and Palmyra, both in Wayne County, and in Ithaca. He had charge of the Church at Cooperstown for twelve years. He then went to Spring Street Church, New York city. In 1858 he became Secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, and in 1867 accepted an invitation to become pastor of the Church at Cherry Valley, where he remained for the rest of his active life. He died at Castleton, N. Y., Dec. 28, 1874. See Presbyterianism in Central New York, p. 480.

Campbell, Allan Ditchfield, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Lancaster, England, March 15, 1791. He emigrated to America, and settled in Baltimore, Md. He was educated at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. In 1815 he was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, and appointed to preach near Pittsburgh. In 1818 he was ordained at Meadville. In 1820 he removed to Tennessee, where he remained a short time, and then returned to Pittsburgh. He died Sept. 20, 1861. He took an active part in all the public and ecclesiastical movements of his day, and was noted as an excellent preacher. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 139.

Campbell, Archibald (1), D.D., regius professor of divinity and ecclesiastical history in the University of St. Andrews, about the middle of the last century, published The Authenticity of the Gospel History Justified (Edinburgh, 1759, 2 vols. 8vo), and other theological treatises. See Darling, Cyclop. Bibl. s. v.

Campbell, Archibald (2), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was converted in youth; appointed to a circuit in 1797; retired from active work in 1828; resided in Dublin from 1830; and died there, March 23, 1848, aged eighty years. He is well spoken of. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1848.

Campbell, Benjamin, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Ireland. He was received by the Newcastle (Del.) Presbytery, Nov. 5, 1729, and was licensed and ordained to a charge in their bounds before September, 1733. He died in September, 1735. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Campbell, Benjamin H., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Pennsylvania. He spent three years in the study of theology at Princeton Seminary. He was ordained by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Feb. 2, 1836. He was next at Rome, N. Y., and afterwards pastor at Lower Tuscarora, Pa., 1840-46. He resided in Philadelphia, in infirm health, 1847-48. He died in 1848. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 81.

Campbell, Charles F., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Marion district, S. C. He was a member of the South Carolina Conference, probably joined in 1859; labored six months, and then died, probably in 1860. Mr. Campbell was prompt, faithful, and amiable. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 252.

Campbell, Daniel, an English Wesleyan minister, was a native of the north of Britain. He joined the Methodist Church in Nottingham, and in 1798 was sent as a missionary to Jamaica, W. I., and commenced preaching at Montego Bay. A bill having been passed through the local legislature forbidding Protestant preaching to the natives except by the clergy of the Established Church, Mr. Campbell was sentenced to a month's close confinement in a damp and dismal quarter of the Morant Bay jail, where John Williams, a local preacher, had been immured for a like offence. Campbell returned to England in 1803, and procured from the home government a disallowance of the law. He thenceforward labored in Great Britain. A paralytic stroke received on the Newcastle-under-Lyme circuit compelled him to cease travelling in 1833. He settled in London, and died, April 21, 1835, aged sixty-four years. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1835; West. Meth. Magazine, 1838, p. 641 sq.

Campbell, David R., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Washington County, Pa. He graduated at Jefferson College, and received his theological education at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny City. He was licensed to preach, and ordained pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Steubenville, O., where he spent most of his ministerial life. In consequence of declining health he was obliged to resign his charge. He was a laborious and successful preacher of the Gospel, and rejoiced that he was counted worthy of being put into the ministry. He died at Steubenville, Feb. 25, 1878, aged fifty-two years. See Presbyterian, March 15, 1878. (W. P. S.)

Campbell, Donald, a Scotch prelate, was of the family of Argyle, and abbot of Cupar. He was elected to the see of Brechin in 1558, but the election did not please the court of Rome, because the abbot had declared himself inclined to the new doctrine. He never assumed the title of bishop, but contented himself with that of abbot, in which rank he is named in the parliament of 1560. He died while holding the office of lord privy-seal to queen Mary in 1562. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 165.

Campbell, Duncan R., LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Scotland, Aug. 14, 1814. He was a graduate of one of the Scotch universities, and came to the United States in May, 1842. For several years he was in the active duties of the ministry, and won for himself an excellent reputation as a scholar and preacher. As pastor of the Baptist Church in Georgetown, Ky., he added to this reputation, and was called to the presidency of the college in that place in 1849. Success attended his administration until the breaking-out of the civil war scattered the students, and for several years the classes were very small. He died at Covington, Ky., Aug. 16, 1865. Dr. Campbell is said to have been "a man of fine culture and extensive as well as thorough scholarship, both in belles-lettres and theology." See Appleton's Annual Cyclop. v, 645. (J. C. S.)

Campbell, George A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Baltimore Hundred, Del., Sept. 3, 1846. He experienced conversion in 1866, received license to exhort in 1869, to preach in 1870, and in 1871 entered the Wilmington Conference. In 1875 his health declined, and he died Sept. 7, 1876. Mr. Campbell was a young man of fine promise, an excellent, practical preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1877, p. 12.

Campbell, George Washington, a Congregational minister, was born at Lebanon, N. H., March 25, 1794. He graduated at Union College in 1820, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1823. In the following year he was ordained pastor at South Berwick, Me., as the colleague of the Rev. John Thompson. His dismissal occurred in 1828; and on Jan. 13, 1830, he was installed pastor of the Second Church in Millbury, Mass. In July, 1833, he left that place, and after spending two years at Bradford, Vt., as acting-pastor, he was installed, Jan. 27, 1836, at Newbury, which pastorate he vacated in 1850. Having removed to Haverhill, N. H., he made his residence there for two years, during which time he preached for several months at Fishersville, and for some months at Post Mill Village and Fairlee, Vt., on alternate Sabbaths. In 1853 he moved to Bradford, Mass., residing there until the close of his life. He supplied the pulpit of the church in Wolfborough, N. H., for one year, beginning May 20, 1855; of that in Kensington, two years, 1858-60; of that in Mechanics' Falls, Me., for six months, 1865-66; in Bristol and Wells, several months each. He died at Bradford, Mass., Feb. 2, 1869. See Cong. Quarterly, 1869, p. 301.

Campbell, G. R., a Baptist minister, was born in Carleton County, N. B., March 1, 1820. He was baptized in 1844 at Woodstock; was ordained at Howard, in March, 1867; labored in York, Victoria, and Carleton counties, and died in July, 1878. See Baptist Year-book of Maritime Provinces, 1878.

Campbell, Harvey M., a Baptist missionary to Arracan, was born at Lebanon, N. Y., June 8, 1823, and was a graduate of Madison University. He was ordained at Saline, Mich., in June, 1849, and sailed the autumn following for the field of his labors. He went to Kyouk Phyo in November, 1850, and there engaged in missionary labor till his death, Feb. 22, 1852. (J. C. S.)

Campbell, James (1), a Presbyterian minister, was born at Campbell on Kintyre, in Argyleshire, and came to America in 1730. He was licensed by the New Castle Presbytery, and received by the Philadelphia Presbytery, in 1739. The church at Tehicken sought his services, and the presbytery granted its request, but he, after many struggles, told the synod, in 1739, that he was unconverted, and dared not preach till he was born again. He had been preaching four years, and was moral, upright, and well esteemed. At the persuasion of Whitefield he was induced to preach once more, on the following Sunday. He consented, and success attended his labors. In May, 1742, he was directed to spend one fourth of his time at Forks, and in August Durham asked for a portion of his time. Campbell was ordained Aug. 3, 1742, and was ordered to divide his time between Forks and Greenwich. He was installed at Tehicken May 24, 1744. In 1758 he was dismissed to join the South Carolina Presbytery, and he became a minister of a band of his countrymen settled on the left bank of Cape Fear River. The Scotch-Irish began to flow in a steady stream southward from Pennsylvania before the French war, and drew to this region large numbers from their native land. Mr. Campbell united with the Orange Presbytery in 1774. When or where he died is not known. (W. P. S.)

Campbell, James (2), a Presbyterian minister, was presented to the presbytery April 26, 1770; was licensed Oct. 10, 1771, and sent to visit the vacancies, Timber Ridge, Forks of James, Sinking Spring, Hat Creek, and Cub Creek, Va. Oct. 15, 1772, the presbytery was informed of his death. See Foote, Sketches of Virginia, 2d series.

Campbell, James (3), a Presbyterian minister, was born near Mercersburg, in Franklin Co., Pa., May 4, 1798. He graduated from Jefferson College in 1825, entered Princeton Theological Seminary the same year, and graduated in 1828. He was licensed by New Brunswick Presbytery, Aug. 7, 1828; was received by certificate into Redstone Presbytery in 1830; and in August of the same year was installed pastor over the churches in Kittaning and Crooked Creek. He next was installed as pastor of Poke Run Church, in Blairsville Presbytery. In 1834 he was received into Ohio Presbytery, and became pastor of Pine Creek Church, and in 1838 became pastor at Sharpsburg. For four years he continued to supply various churches, but was never again settled as a pastor. After this he labored in Huron, Marion, Hocking, and Huntingdon Presbyteries in Ohio. He and his wife opened, at Athens, O., a seminary for young ladies, in which they taught for two or three years. For three years he was teacher at Shirleysburg, Pa. From 1857 to 1859 he was at Highland, Kan., and was employed as agent for Highland University a part of the time. He then was a member of the Muncie Presbytery (Ind.). He died at New Orleans, June 14, 1875. Mr. Campbell loved to preach, and was constant and heroic in his endurance of hardships in his missionary work wherever he labored. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1876, p. 13.

Campbell, James M., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, joined the Alabama Conference in 1854; entered the Confederate army as chaplain in 1861; became major, and was killed at Spottsylvania Court-House, Va., May 14, 1864. Mr. Campbell was a warm-hearted, energetic, efficient minister, a close observer, and diligent student. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1864, p. 514.

Campbell, James Robinson, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born near Armagh, Ireland, in 1800. He emigrated to the United States in 1824, and connected himself with the First Reformed Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia. In 1834 he was licensed by the Reformed Presbytery of Philadelphia, and designated to the mission field of north India. He died in Landour, India, Sept. 18, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1863, p. 380.

Campbell, John (1), a Scotch prelate, was made bishop of the see of Argyle June 1, 1608. He died in 1612. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 290.

Campbell, John (2), a Congregational minister, was born in the north of Scotland in 1690, and was educated at the University of Edinburgh. He came to America about 1717, and in 1720 became the pastor of the Church in Oxford, Mass., the ordination taking place March 11, 1721. He continued in that relation for more than forty years, and died March 25, 1761. Mr. Campbell was a man of more than ordinary abilities, acting not only as the pastor of his flock, but as their physician, and, when called upon, settling their disputes as a judge. He published A Treatise on Conversion, Truth, Justification, etc. See Ammidown, Hist. Collection, i, 242; Allen, Amer. Biog. s. v. (J. C. S.)

Campbell, John (3), a Presbyterian minister, was born in Scotland in 1713, and came to America in 1734. Charleston and New Providence, N. J., petitioned New Brunswick Presbytery that, if he should be licensed, they might have his services. May 19, 1747, Campbell was taken on trial, licensed Oct. 14, and ordained and installed over the above churches, Oct. 27. On May 1, 1753, he was struck with palsy in the pulpit, and died a week later. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America, 1857.

Campbell, John (4), a Scotch Congregational minister, was the subject of religious impressions very early in life. In 1802 he joined Mr. Haldane's classes at Edinburgh. In 1806 he labored zealously for some months at Callander, Scotland. He commenced his regular labors at Fort William in 1807. In 1811 he removed to Oban, and was ordained in August of the same year. He preached much in the surrounding districts. On July 3, 1852, he was taken ill, and died Feb. 4, 1853. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1854, p. 220.

Campbell, John (5), an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born in the County Down, Ireland. He was converted at the age of eighteen; entered the itinerancy in 1812; became a supernumerary at Magherafelt, his last circuit, in 1842; removed to Belfast in 1845; and died March 4, 1851, aged sixty-six years. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1851; Hill, Alph. Arrangem. of Wesl. Meth. Ministers, 1846, p. 197.

Campbell, John (6), D.D., an English Congregational minister, was born at Kirriemuir, Scotland, in 1795. He was very precocious in childhood; became converted in early manhood; received his collegiate education at the University of St. Andrews and at the Glasgow University; and began his ministerial labors at Kilmarnock, Ayrshire. In 1828 he removed to London and was engaged at the Tabernacle, where he labored until 1848, when he resigned the pulpit, but retained the office of pastor during life. He died March 26, 1867. The endowments and attainments of Dr. Campbell were multifarious and marvellous. He was a man of iron will, of untiring energy, of unflinching courage, and of vast information. As a controversialist he had few peers. He wrote several volumes. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1868, p. 259.

Campbell, John (7), a Scotch Congregational minister, was born at Stonehouse, Lanarkshire, Jan. 15, 1828, of pious parents, who took him in his childhood to Manchester, Jamaica. He was converted there, and soon afterwards he joined the Church, devoted his life to spreading the Gospel tidings, entered Glasgow University, and, having completed his classical and theological courses, he was ordained pastor, in 1855, at Kilmarnock, where he died, March 28, 1859. Mr. Campbell was most assiduous in his attentions to the sick, energetic in caring for the young, and laborious in his pulpit preparations. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1860, p. 173.

Campbell, John A. (1), a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, joined the Memphis Conference in 1849, and in its active ranks served to the close of his life, in January, 1857. He was a plain, humble, pious, useful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1857, p. 756.

Campbell, John A. (2), a Presbyterian minister, was born near Edinburg, Ind., March 21, 1825. He was educated at Bloomington, Ind., and studied theology in the Oxford Theological Seminary. He was licensed in 1848. In 1854 he accepted a call to Putneyville Church, Armstrong Co., Pa. In 1858 he was made principal of Mount Lebanon Academy, Pa. He died Aug. 8, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1861, p. 208.

Campbell, John C., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Blount County, Tenn., Dec. 27, 1802. He was educated at Marysville College; was licensed by the Union Presbytery in 1830, and settled at New Providence, Ill., where he remained for eighteen years. He afterwards preached at various places in Illinois, and died at Cerro Gordo, in the same state, Dec. 31, 1862. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1864, p. 295.

Campbell, John N., D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Philadelphia, March 4, 1798. He was baptized by the Rev. Robert Annan, pastor of the old Scotch Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, and in connection with that church he received his early religious training. He was a pupil of the celebrated teacher, James Ross, and afterwards became a student in the University of Pennsylvania. After studying for some time under the preceptorship of Dr. Ezra Stiles Ely, he went to Virginia, where he continued his theological studies, and became connected, as professor of languages, with Hampden-Sidney College. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Hanover in May, 1817. The first two or three years after licensure he remained in Virginia, and preached in various places. In the fall of 1820 he was chosen chaplain to Congress. He afterwards returned to Virginia and preached for some time in Petersburg, and also went into North Carolina, and was instrumental in establishing the first Presbyterian Church in Newbern. In 1823 he returned to the District of Columbia, and for more than a year was an assistant of Rev. Dr. Balch of Georgetown. In 1824 he took charge of the New York Avenue Church in Washington city, where his great popularity quickly filled the place of worship. In January, 1825, he was elected one of the managers of the American Colonization Society, and for six years discharged the duties of that office with great ability and fidelity. In 1831 he became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Albany, N. Y. In 1836 he was appointed a director of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, which office he held till the close of his life. He was scarcely ever absent from his pulpit, and his rare executive abilities were called into requisition outside of his profession. For many years he was one of the regents of the university of the state of New Jersey. He died suddenly, March 27, 1864. Dr. Campbell possessed great energy of mind and decision of character, and, though he had a delicate frame, his endurance and vigor were wonderful, enabling him to accomplish a great amount of work; and his experience of the world, added to a natural shrewdness, made him an adept in the knowledge of human nature. As a preacher, he was clear, evangelical, and animated. His sermons were carefully prepared, but written in a character only legible to himself, and then they were delivered with a graceful ease and freedom which made them appear to those who listened as if they were the productions of a moment. They were brief and logical, and easily remembered. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1865, p. 79. (W. P. S.)

Campbell, John Poage, M.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Augusta County, Va., in 1767. In 1781 he removed to Kentucky. He graduated at Hampden-Sidney College in 1790, and was licensed to preach in May, 1792, and took charge of several congregations in Virginia. In 1795 he returned to Kentucky, and became pastor of the churches of Smyrna and Flemingsburg. He died at Chillicothe, O., Nov. 4, 1814. He published several Sermons, etc. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 626.

Campbell, Joseph, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Omagh, County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1776. He came with his parents to America in 1797, and, having enjoyed excellent advantages for a common education previous to leaving Ireland, he engaged, shortly after arriving here, in teaching, at the same time prosecuting his theological studies. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New Brunswick in 1808. In 1809 he accepted a call to become pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Hackettstown, N. J. Here he continued laboring with great acceptance and success for nearly thirty years. He died Sept. 6, 1840. A volume of his Sermons was published by Dr. Gray, with a Memoir prefixed. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iv, 429.

Campbell, Lewell, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, entered the Kentucky Conference in 1831. Six years later he was appointed missionary to Texas, then included in the Mississippi Conference, which he joined in 1838, and held an active relation therein until within one year of his death, having labored eight years on circuits, two on stations, sixteen on districts, and one as agent for Centenary College. His last year he spent as a superannuate, dying Sept. 21, 1860. Mr. Campbell's early educational advantages were very limited, yet, by a life of close study, he became intellectually and theologically a strong man. He was ardent in temperament, energetic in life, and consecrated to his calling. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 227.

Campbell, Neil (1), a Scotch clergyman, was "parson and chanter" at Kilmartin in 1574; a member of the general assembly in 1590; assessor to the moderator; promoted to the bishopric of Argyle in 1606, but resigned it in 1608 in favor of his son. He was a member of the general assembly of 1610, having continued his duties as presbyter; he leased three fourths of the parsonage and vicarage of Kilbride (part of his patrimony), to Alexander Campbell. He died in July, 1627, and his two sons, John and Neil, were promoted to bishoprics. In life and doctrine he was praised as superior to all the other bishops. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 11, 445.

Campbell, Neil (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the bishop of Argyle), took his degree at the Glasgow University in 1607, was the first minister over the new parish of Glassary, appointed in 1616, and had the same year over £300 "for nineteen year tack of the bishop's quarter of the kirk at Dysart." He was promoted to the bishopric of the Isles in 1634, became proprietor of Ederline, subscribed the Covenant, abjured Episcopacy, and by the synod was declared, in 1640, capable of the ministry. He died before April 29, 1647. His episcopal robes, four in number, were estimated as of £200 value. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 7, 449.

Campbell, Peter, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Perthshire, Scotland, in November, 1784. He graduated at Glasgow University in 1814, studied theology in Edinburgh, and was licensed by the Glasgow Presbytery in 1819. In 1820 he emigrated to the United States. In 1823 he was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Florida, N. Y., where he remained till 1844. He died Oct. 19, 1866. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1867, p. 357.

Campbell, Robert, an Irish Methodist preacher, was born near Portadown in 1809. He was converted in early life; joined the Methodists; gave himself to earnest work in the Church; entered the itinerant ministry in 1836, and for more than forty years was an earnest, practical, revival preacher. He was for some years a supernumerary, but a happy and useful one, and died at Clones, May 18, 1879. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1879, p. 47.

Campbell, Robert B., a Presbyterian minister, was born in South Carolina. He studied at Princeton Theological Seminary for three years, graduating in 1824. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Harmony, Dec. 20, 1826; preached at Lancaster Court-House, S. C., from 1826 to 1828; was stated supply at Beaver Creek in 1829, and at Cane Creek during 1830; preached at Waxhaw and Beaver Creek from 1831 to 1837; was stated supply at Camden from 1837 to 1844, and pastor and stated supply at Franklin, Miss., from 1848 to 1867. He died in 1871. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 32.

Campbell, Robert Potter, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born near Pine Grove Mills, Pa., Aug. 17, 1849. He was converted in 1866; graduated at Dickinson Seminary (Williamsport, Pa.) in 1872, and at Drew Theological Seminary in 1875; and in the same year entered the Central Pennsylvania Conference. His appointments were: Martinsburg, Glen Hope, and Woodland, where he closed at once his labors and life, Jan. 21, 1880. Mr. Campbell was a young man of unusual energy and force of character. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 24.

Campbell, Robert S., a Presbyterian minister, was born Jan. 16, 1823. He was educated at Madison College, Antrim, O., and was licensed to preach by the Second Presbytery of Ohio in 1854. In the fall he entered the Western Theological Seminary, and, after completing his course, he went West as a missionary. In 1856 he was ordained and installed pastor of DeWitt Church, Ia.; and, after twelve years of effective service he resigned, and travelled as an evangelist in Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio. He again went to the West, and took charge of the Church at Pleasant Unity, Ill., where he was installed pastor by the Rock Island Presbytery. In 1878 he resigned and organized a Church at Davenport, Ia. In consequence of illness he was compelled to resign, and went to New Concord, O., where he died, Jan. 10, 1880. See Christian Instructor, Feb. 12, 1880. (W. P. S.)

Campbell, Thomas J., a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Columbus, N. C., Feb. 22, 1809. He removed to Georgia in 1815; experienced religion in 1827; received license to preach the same year; and in 1845 entered the Alabama Conference, wherein he labored until 1853, when he became superannuated. He died in 1854. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1854, p. 554.

Campbell, William (1), D.D., an Irish Presbyterian divine of the last century, published a Sermon (Belfast, 1774):—Vindication of the Presbyterians in Ireland (3d ed. 1786):—Examination of the Bishop of Cloyne's Defence of his Principles (1788). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Campbell, William (2), a Universalist minister, was born at or near Brownsville, Fayette Co., Pa., Nov. 21, 1781. He moved to Gallia County, O., in 1797; joined the Halcyon (a Partialist) Church in 1802; and subsequently united with the Universalists, and became a preacher of that faith. He died at Wilkesville, Vinton Co., O., March 16, 1870. See Universalist Register, 1871, p. 112.

Campbell, William (3), an English Congregational minister, was born at Wick, in the north of Scotland, in 1803. He was a precocious youth, and, at the age of fourteen, had made such progress in learning that he became tutor in a wealthy family in Sutherlandshire. Subsequently he entered Edinburgh University, and took his degree of M.A. before he reached manhood. Having joined the Church, he resolved on quitting the university to enter the ministry, and, accordingly, after taking a theological course at Highbury College, he was ordained at Cheltenham. Subsequently he labored at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Stockton-on-Tees, London, Sydenham, Monmouth, and finally resided at Penge Park, London, and died July 8, 1876. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1877, p. 349.

Campbell, William (4), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Warren County, O., Aug. 21, 1810. He removed to Fountain County, Ind., in 1826; embraced religion in 1832; began preaching that same year; and in 1838 united with the North-western Indiana Conference, wherein he labored until the fall of 1859, when feeble health obliged him to retire from his favorite work. He died June 4, 1860. Mr. Campbell, as a citizen, neighbor, and friend, was highly esteemed; as a minister, he was thoughtful, unique, prudent, useful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 355.

Campbell, William (5), a young English Methodist preacher of great promise and deep piety, born at Alnwick, Northumberland, in 1816, was converted in his youth, and began to preach. He became an itinerant in the New Connection in 1842, and travelled only at Staley Bridge and Stanley. He died at Alnwick, Aug. 19, 1842. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1850, p. 462.

Campbell, William (6), a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Ireland in 1816, and, at the age of three, emigrated with his parents to Quebec, Canada. He was converted when about nineteen; entered Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., in 1837, where he remained three years, receiving while there license to exhort and to preach. Between 1840 and 1843 he labored under the presiding elder, and then united with the Philadelphia Conference. He continued his work in the effective ranks until his death, at Salisbury, Md., Aug. 13, 1849. Mr. Campbell was an excellent preacher, thoughtful, fluent; a good pastor, solicitous, diligent, sympathetic, punctual. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1850, p. 426.

Campbell, William Graham, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Rockbridge County, Va., July 27, 1799. His early education was received chiefly at a classical school in that county. He graduated at Washington College, Va., in 1825; then spent one session as tutor in the college; entered Princeton Theological Seminary in the fall of 1825, and spent one year there in study. He was licensed by Lexington Presbytery, Oct. 23, 1826, and was ordained an evangelist by the same presbytery April 26, 1828. He then supplied a church at Christianburg, Va., and at the same time taught a school in that place. From 1830 to 1841 he labored as a missionary in Greenbrier and Pocahontas counties, Va., supplying the churches of Spring Creek, Anthony's Creek, Little Level, and Mount Carmel. From 1841 to 1843 he was stated supply at Warm Springs, Va.; was installed pastor at Shemariah, Va., by Lexington Presbytery, Aug. 24, 1844, and remained there till 1850. From this time to 1857 he resided at Staunton, Va., preaching and teaching. From 1857 to 1859 he had charge of an academy for girls at Salisbury, N. C. From 1859 to 1865 he was stated supply to Lebanon Church, Va. From 1866 he resided in Harrisonburg, Va., until his death, Aug. 2, 1881. See Necrol. Report of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1882, p. 15; Christian Observer, Sept. 28, 1881.

Campbell, William J., a colored Baptist minister, was born in 1812. He was baptized by the celebrated Andrew Marshall, and was licensed to preach by the First Colored Church in Savannah, Ga. On the death of Mr. Marshall he became his successor, in 1856, and, by his efforts, a new house of worship was built, and dedicated during the late civil war. Under his ministry the Church greatly increased in numbers. Owing to some internal troubles, he, with his deacons and seven hundred members, retired from the church edifice and worshipped in a hall. He died Oct. 10, 1880. See Cathcart, Bapt. Encyclop. p. 179. (J. C. S.)

Campè, in Greek mythology, was a monster stationed in Tartarus, to guard the Centimanes and Cyclops imprisoned there by Uranus. When Jupiter was advised by his mother and Metis to get the means whereby he might master his father, he was promised the help of the Cyclops and of the hundred-armed giants if he would liberate them; therefore he killed Campè and liberated them. When Bacchus journeyed through Libya, he erected a tent near Zabirna; here he slew an earth-born monster which bore the same name as the above (others say it was identical with it), and had killed many of the inhabitants. He piled up a great hill over the carcass, as a monument to his courage.

Campeggio, Giovanni Battista, an Italian prelate, was a grandson of Lorenzo. By his talents he obtained the episcopacy of Majorca. He opened the Council of Trent, Dec. 13, 1545, by a speech entitled De Tuenda Religione, published at Venice in 1561. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campeggio, Tommaso, an Italian prelate, was born in 1500. He was nephew of cardinal Lorenzo, and accompanied that prelate on many of his missions. He succeeded him in the episcopal see of Feltre, and was sent by Paul III as nuncio to the colloquy of Worms (1540). He was one of the three bishops present at the opening of the Council of Trent in 1545, and there assisted at the sessions held under the pontificate of Paul III. He died at Rome, Jan. 11, 1564. He wrote various treatises on ecclesiastical discipline, among which we notice, De Auctoritate Sanctorum Conciliorum, dedicated to pope Pius IV (Venice, 1561):—also various works on ecclesiastical duties (ibid. 1550–55). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campen, Heimeric de (better known as Heimericus de Campo), a Dutch theologian, was born at Kampen (Overijssel). He first taught philosophy at Cologne. He was present at the Council of Basel in 1431, and in 1445 was made professor of theology at Louvain. He died there in 1460, leaving, De Auctoritate Concilii:—Super Sententias, and some other treatises. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campen, Johannes, a Dutch theologian, lived in the beginning of the 15th century. He entered the order of Carmelites, and wrote some commentaries upon Quodlibetorum Opus; Summule Artium, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campetti, PIERRE CALIXTE, a French theologian of the Capuchin order, was a descendant of the noble family of St. Sever, in Guienne. He died at Bordeaux in 1670. He wrote, Pastor Catholicus, de Theologia Pastoralis, in Tres Partes Distributa (Lyons, 1668):—De Præceptis Decalogi et Ecclesiæ (ibid. 1669):—De Peccatis Septem Mortalibus et Censuris Ecclesiasticis (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camphari, GIACOMO, an Italian theologian, was born at Genoa in 1440, and became a member of the Dominican order. He went to England, to finish his studies at Oxford, where he was made a licentiate in philosophy. On his return to Italy he published De Immortalitate Animæ, Opusculum in Modum Dialogi (Rome, 1473; Milan, 1475; Vienna, 1477; Cosenza, 1478). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camphausen, MATTHEW, a Flemish theologian, was born at Düsseldorf, Aug. 16, 1636. He entered the Jesuit order at Cologne in 1655, and became a notable preacher in Westphalia. He died at his native place, Sept. 18, 1703, leaving Passio Jesu Christi Adumbrata in Figuris et Prophetis (Cologne, 1704). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campi, Antonio, an Italian painter and architect, the second son of Galeazzo, and scholar of Giulio, was born at Cremona before 1536, and lived till after 1591. His best oil-paintings are St. Paul Resuscitating Eutychus, and The Nativity, in San Paolo, at Milan. As an architect he erected several edifices which are deserving of praise. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campi, Bernardino, a Cremonese painter, was born in 1522, and studied under his brother Giulio, and under Ippolito Casta at Mantua. At Cremona he executed, in the church of San Gismondi, St. Cecilia with St. Caterina and a Choir of Angels. There are several other compositions of this artist in Milan, Mantua, and Cremona. He died about 1594. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campi, Galeazzo, an Italian painter, was born at Cremona in 1475, and probably studied under the elder Boccaccino. He died in 1536. His picture of The Virgin and Infant, dated 1518, is in San Sebastiano at Cremona. Some of his best works seem to have obtained a place in the Gallery of Painters at Florence. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campi, Giulio, an eminent Italian painter, the son of Galeazzo, was born at Cremona in 1500, and studied under Giulio Romana at Mantua, and afterwards at Rome. His best works are at Mantua, Milan, and Cremona. Two of them are, The Descent from the Cross, in San Gismondo, at Cremona, and the Dome of San Girolamo, at Mantua. He died in 1572. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campi (or Campo), Pietro Maria, an Italian ecclesiastic of the middle of the 17th century, was canon of his native town and a reputable preacher. He wrote, Dell' Historia Ecclesiastica di Piacenza (Piacenza, 1661–62):—Vita Gregorii X (Rome, 1655). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campi, Vincenzo, an Italian painter, youngest son of Galeazzo, was born at Cremona before 1532, and studied under his brother Giulio. He painted four Descents from the Cross, for the churches of Cremona, and St. Peter Receiving the Keys, for San Paolo, of Milan. He died in 1591. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campiani, AGOSTINO, an Italian theologian of the first half of the 18th century, was born at Trivero, and became professor of canon law at Turin. He wrote, De Officio et Potestate Magistratum Romanorum (Geneva, 1725):—Formularum et Orationem liber Singulus (Turin, 1728). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campigny, CHARLES BENOIT DE, a French Celestine and afterwards Benedictine, was born at Orleans, and in 1588 obtained a canonry in the cathedral of Bruges. He afterwards became superior of a religious house at Lyons, and eventually entered the convent of St. Maur. He died in the monastery of the Blancs Manteaux at Paris in 1634, leaving, Le Guidon de la Vie Spirituelle, and L'Anutophile aux Pieds du Roi (Paris, 1613). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campion, Charles, Comte de Tersau, a French amateur engraver, was born at Paris in 1744, and died about 1816. The following are some of his plates: Abraham and Isaac; Job and his Wife; The Dead Christ, with the Virgin and Angels. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Campion, Hyacinth, a Hungarian philosopher and theologian of the order of the Franciscans, was born at Buda in 1725. He was at first professor of philosophy and theology, and finally became provincial of Sclavonia. He died at Eszek, Aug. 7, 1767. His extant writings are, Animadversiones Physico-historico-morales de Baptismo, etc. (Buda, 1761):—Vindicæ pro suo Ordine, etc. (ibid. 1766):—Vindicæ denuo Vindicatæ, etc. (ibid. eod.). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campione, FRANCESCO MARIA, an Italian theologian of the order of the Trinitarians, lived in the beginning of the 18th century. His extant writings are, Istruzione per gli Ordinandi (Rome, 1702; Venice, 1703):—Instruzione del Clero per ogni esame da-subire dell' Ordinario (Rome, 1710):—Instructio pro se Comparantibus ad Audiendas Confessiones (ibid. 1711). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campioni, CARLO ANTONIO, a Tuscan composer of music, was born at Leghorn in 1720. He devoted himself early to the use of the violin and to composition, and his works were welcomed in Germany, England, and Holland. In 1764 he was called to Florence, as master of the chapel choir of Francis II of Lorraine, grand-duke of Tuscany, and devoted himself from that time to the composition of church music, performing, in 1797, a Te Deum with two hundred musicians. Campioni possessed the most complete collection of the madrigals of composers of the 16th and 17th centuries. He has left seven works of trios for the violin, and three of duos for violin and violoncello. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campisi (Lat. Campesius), DOMENICO, a Dominican preacher, theologian, and musician of Sicily, was born at Raialbuto, and lived in the early part of the 17th century. He was of the order of Preachers, and was appointed professor of theology in 1629. He was also a skilful composer of music. He wrote, Motelli a Due, Tre et Quattro Voci, con una Compèta (Palermo, 1615-18):—Lilia Compi, Binis, Ternis, Quaternis, et Quintis Vocibus, Modulanda cum Completario et Litanis Beatæ Virginis Mariæ (Rome, 1623). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campistron, LOUIS, was a French poet and preacher of the Jesuit order. He was born at Toulouse in 1660, or, according to Querard, in 1656. Having followed, as chaplain, the army of the duke of Vendôme to Italy, he became professor of rhetoric. Afterwards he distinguished himself at the court by his funeral sermons, delivered in honor of the two dauphins, son and grandson of Louis XIV, and finally of Louis XIV himself. Near the close of his life he withdrew to Toulouse, where he died, March, 1737, or, according to Querard, 1733. He wrote, Quatre Stances sur la Sympathie:—Ode sur le Jugement Dernier:—Oraisons Funèbres des Deux Dauphins et de Louis XIV (Toulouse, 1711, 1712, and 1715). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Campitæ (also Campates and Campenses) is the name of a small congregation of Donatists at Rome, mentioned by Jerome and others, and called also Montenses (q. v.) and Rupiani. Optatus says that their first bishop was Victor of Numidia, and that no church in Rome was open to him. He therefore surrounded a cave outside the city with wattles, and used it for a conventicle. Jerome says they met on a mountain. The three names seem to have been derived from campus, mons, and rupes, in allusion to their places of meeting.

Campo, Christoval, a Spanish martyr, was a citizen of Zamora, and was condemned as a heretic because he would not adhere to the doctrines of the Church of Rome. He was burned in 1560. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 456.

Campo, Liberale da, an Italian painter of the Venetian school, flourished in the latter part of the 14th century. In the cathedral at Venice is a picture by him representing The Nativity, dated 1418.

Camps, PETER, D.D., a Roman Catholic priest, a native of San Martin de Mercadal, Minorca, followed his flock to St. Augustine, Fla. The parish church was in the hands of the Protestants, the Franciscan chapel a barrack, and the other two chapels in ruins. Camps accordingly said mass in the house of Carrera, near the city gates. He continued religious services during the British rule, and died among his flock, May 18, 1790, aged seventy. In 1783 Florida was restored to Spain, when the Roman Catholic religion had free course. See De Courcey and Shea, Hist. of the Cath. Church in the United States, p. 667.

Camulachus. See CAEMLACH.

Camtilus, in Italian mythology, was, according to various inscriptions, a god of war of the ancient Sabines, or a surname of Mars.

Camus, a French singer and composer of the court of Louis XV, was born in 1731 and died in 1777. He executed several sacred musical pieces, especially one entitled Qui Confidunt in Domino. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camus, Bonaventura, a theologian of Lorraine, lived near the middle of the 17th century. He was superior of the Franciscans at Toul, and wrote, Eucharistie Sacramentum Explicatum (Toul, 1656). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camus, Jean, a French martyr, for confessing the gospel of Christ, was condemned by the senate of Paris, and burned there in 1547. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 404.

Camusat, NICOLAS, a French ecclesiastic, was canon of Troyes, in Champagne, where he was born in 1575, and died Jan. 20, 1655. He edited Chronologia Seriem Temporum et Historiam Rerum in Orbe Gestarum Continens, from the creation to the year of Christ 1200, by an anonymous monk of Auxerre (Troyes, 1680, 4to):—A Collection of the Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Troyes, in Latin (ibid. 1610):—Historia Albigenium, by an eye-witness (first published from the MSS. in 1615; was translated into French by Sorbin, and published at Paris):—Miscellanea, a curious collection of acts, treatises, epistles, etc., from 1390 to 1580; besides many other works. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Camuset (or Camuzet), abbé, a French theologian, was born at Chalons-sur-Marne in 1746. He was at first assistant master of the College Mazarin, then professor. His works are highly esteemed, even by his adversaries. He wrote, Pensées Antiphilosophiques (Paris, 1770):—Saint-Augustin Vengé des Jansénistes (ibid. 1771):—Principes contre l'Incrédulité (ibid. eod.):—Pensées sur le Théisme (ibid. 1785). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

CANA, MIRACLE OF. Representations of this miracle frequently present themselves in early Christian art. It was supposed to be typical of the eucharist; indeed, Antique Representation of the Miracle at Cana.

Theophilus of Antioch, so far back as the 2d century, looks on the change of the water as figurative of the grace communicated in baptism (Comment. in Erung.

lib. iv). Cyril of Jerusalem (Catech. xxii, 11) says it represents the change of the wine into the blood of the Lord in the eucharist; and this idea has been applied with eager inconsequence to the support of the full dogma of transubstantiation. The miracle is represented on an ivory, published by Mamachi, Bottari, and Gori, which is supposed to have formed part of the covering of a throne belonging to the exarchs of Ravenna, and is referred to the 7th century. See Bandini, In Tabulam Eburneam Observationes (Florentia, 1746, 4to).

Canada, DOMINION OF. The national and religious associations of this, our most important neighbor on the North American continent, are such as to justify the occupancy of more than usual space for their consideration.

1. Physical, Industrial, and Political Aspects.—1. Geography.—The Dominion of Canada comprises all those portions of British America, except the eastern coast of Labrador, that lie between the United States and the Atlantic, Pacific, and Arctic Oceans. Its area is about 3,500,000 square miles.

2. Geology.—From the Atlantic, along the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, along the north shore of the Ottawa, and even on its southern shore in its western part, along the Georgian Bay and the north shore of Lake Superior, thence north along the eastern shore of Lake Winnipeg, and extending beyond the height of land between these lines and Hudson's Bay, is one almost continuous belt of Lower Laurentian, relieved, at wide intervals, by spots of Upper Laurentian, with occasional bands and spots of Huronian, Cambrian, and Silurian, and, along the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Rivers, a considerable extent of Siluro-Cambrian, or Lower Silurian. The southern coast of Labrador, the southern shore of the St. Lawrence, the country along Lake Ontario, and what is known as "The Western Peninsula" of Ontario, have the Lower Silurian, rising, between Lake Erie and Lake Huron, through the Upper Silurian into the Hamilton and Chenung series of the Erian or Devonian formation. In the "Eastern Provinces," the strata reach through the Upper Silurian, Devonian, Carboniferous, and, in Prince Edward Island, even to the Trias. West of Lake Winnipeg, the series enters the Cretaceous and Tertiary. The Cretaceous appears also in British Columbia. The long range of islands skirting the north shore of Lake Huron are Lower Silurian on the north and Middle Silurian on the south, while, on the adjacent mainland, the Huronian prevails, and stretches north-east to the neighborhood of James's Bay. The "Eastern Townships" of Quebec give strata even of the Upper Silurian as their general character. South-west of James's Bay is a vast basin of Devonian; and surrounding this, and extending northwards, is a great extent of Silurian. Pleistocene gravels, sand, and clay are uniform and abundant in Canada. Terraces and ancient sea-beaches line the rivers and lakes, and contain, as far west as the Ottawa River, remains of marine shells and fish, at the height of even 450 feet above the St. Lawrence. The relation of these formations to the scenery and products of the country will be apparent.

3. Resources.—In minerals Canada is rich, producing the common metals, with nickel, platinum, antimony, and bismuth; all kinds of coal, salt, coarse and fine clays, marbles of great beauty, soapstones, building and precious stones. Her western coal-fields, to say nothing of those of the east, yield from 4,900,000 to 5,000,000 tons to the square mile, as at Horse-shoe Bend, on the Bow River, and at Blackfoot Crossing on the same River, respectively, the beds reaching even to a depth of twenty feet. Her anthracite of the western mountain region has been pronounced excellent. Her wheat-fields, of which 300,000,000 acres lie on the Athabasca and Peace Rivers alone, are among the best on the continent. Northern fruits, timber, and fish are abundant; and these, with numerous other products, find markets in parts as distant as Brazil and the East Indies.

4. Trade, Industry, etc.—According to the Dominion Annual Register for 1881, Canada has 1,310,896 tons of shipping, placing her fourth on the list of maritime powers of the world, England being first, the United States second, and Norway third. The number of acres owned in the same year by 588,973 owners was 67,645,162; the number occupied was 45,358,141. The amount of wheat raised was 32,350,269 bushels, with other products in proportion. The value of the fisheries in 1882 was $16,824,092.34, exclusive of the catch in Manitoba and the north-west territories, from which no returns were made. The value of Canadian lumber exported in 1881-82 was $24,962,652. In 1881, the amount invested in manufactures was $165,302,623, and the products of these amounted to $309,676,068. Canada, in 1882, had 52 railways, with 8069.44 miles completed, and 3189.16 miles in construction. The Canadian Pacific Railway is pushed forward with great speed, 450 miles having been laid, at an average of 2.6 miles a day. On one day, 4.1 miles were put down. On her canals, extending over a water-stretch of 2384 miles, Canada, in the year 1882, spent $2,100,000, gaining a revenue of $326,340.71. The Dominion expended on public works, in 1881-82, $1,884,964.07. The public debt in 1882 was $153,661,650, or $34 per head of her population. The banks which furnish returns had assets worth $229,714,471, and liabilities $152,819,055. The post-offices numbered 6171, and of these 806 were money-order offices. The deposits in the post-office savings bank were $9,473,661.53.

5. Politics.—Canada consists of confederated provinces and provisional districts. The provinces are Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia. The districts are Keewatin, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Athabasca. Each province has its local government; and, for the north-west territories, or districts, a lieutenant-governor, with a council, stipendiary magistrates, and other officers, holds the reins of government at Regina, Assiniboia. The general government is a limited monarchy, the sovereign of England being the supreme ruler, though the sovereign's functions are generally performed by representatives called governors-general. The Confederation Act provides that the government may be administered by the sovereign personally. The tenure of office by the governor-general is usually for six years. The chief officer is assisted by a privy council, consisting of persons whom he summons for the purpose of advising him, and any or all of whom he can remove. The lieutenant-governors of the provinces are paid by the general government; and their powers and functions are assigned by the governor-general, who appoints them, the office being held during his pleasure. That pleasure may not be exercised for the removal of a lieutenant-governor during the first five years, except for cause. The three estates of the realm are Queen, Senate, and Commons. The number of senators is limited by the Confederation Act to seventy-eight. The Canadian Almanac for 1884 shows seventy-two in office. Senators hold office for life, unless judged by the Senate disqualified by absence, removal from the country, bankruptcy, or treason. Senators cannot sit in the Commons. The basis of representation from the provinces in the Commons is population, as determined by the decennial census, Quebec having a fixed number of members, sixty-five, and the other provinces having more or fewer in the proportion to their population that sixty-five bears to that of the province of Quebec. The House of Commons chooses its own speaker, and may, at any time, be dissolved by the governor-general; or a new election must take place every five years. The speaker of the Senate is appointed by the governor-general, and has a vote, but no casting-vote. The speaker of the Commons has a casting-vote only. Money-bills originate in the Commons, and relate to no subjects beyond those mentioned in the governor's message. Two years are allowed the queen in which to veto any bill, even after it has been passed by both houses and signed by the governor-general. The members in the several executive councils of the provinces vary, as do the houses in each, Ontario having but one house, the Legislative Assembly, and Quebec having two, the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly. The local parliaments of Ontario and Quebec sit for four years. Those of the maritime provinces have regulations which existed prior to confederation. Military matters, marriage and divorce (except such matters as licenses to marry, the persons allowed to keep registers of marriage, etc.), banking, criminal law, and, in general, all matters relating to the whole country, are in the hands of the central government. Education is a local matter. Agriculture and immigration are not confined to either the local or the general government. Judges, except in courts of probate in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, are selected from the bar of the provinces they are to serve, are appointed by the governor-general in council, and are paid by the Dominion Parliament. That parliament takes the revenues and assumes the debts of the provinces, as they were before confederation, and pays these provinces fixed sums yearly to enable them to meet their burdens. In the Dominion Parliament debates may be in French or English: both languages must be used in records, journals, and printed acts in the province of Quebec. The Dominion capital is Ottawa; the capitals of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and British Columbia, respectively, are Toronto, Quebec, Halifax, Fredericton, Charlottetown, Winnipeg, and Victoria.

II. Population.—The number of inhabitants of the Dominion, in 1881, was 4,324,810. In 1882 there arrived 160,449 immigrants who declared their intention of remaining in Canada. The immigration of 1883 was 133,000. Hence, the population of Canada, at the close of 1883, was 4,618,259. Of the 4,324,810 given in the census of 1881, those of French origin number 1,298,929. Of the full number, 3,715,492 are native Canadians, Ontario containing the largest proportion of these, and Quebec the next. Divided according to religions, the Methodists number 742,981 adherents; Presbyterians, 676,165; Church of England, including 2596 Reformed Episcopalians, 577,414; Baptists, including 21,234 Methodists of Ontario and Manitoba, 296,525; Congregationalists, 26,900; Disciples, 20,193; Lutherans, 46,350; Plymouth Brethren, 8831; Adventists, 7211; Quakers, 6553; Protestants (so-called), 6519; Universalists, 4517; Unitarians, 2126; other denominations, 14,269: total Protestants, 2,436,554; Roman Catholics, 1,791,982; those of "no religion," 2634; those giving no returns of religion, 86,769; pagans, 4478.

III. History.—I. Political.—Canada was first settled by the French, who gave it its present name from an Indian word meaning "a village." The first brick house of which we have any record was built by Père Buteux, in 1644, at Tadoussac, or, as the Indians called it, also, Sadilege. This trading-post lay at the confluence of the Saguenay and the St. Lawrence, and gained its name from the Indian (Ojibwa) Dhōdhōsh, plural Dhōdhōshig, a female breast, the surrounding hills and an island some distance up the Saguenay having a resemblance to the breasts of a woman. In 1663, Canada became a "royal government," with a governor and a council, with the Custom of Paris as a legal code, and with a modification of feudalism. The cession of Canada to England, by the treaty of Paris in 1763, found in the colony about 65,000 souls. The "Quebec Act" of 1774 was unjust to the English, depriving them of the right of habeas corpus. In 1793, Upper Canada abolished slavery, and Lower Canada did the same in 1803. The constitution of 1791 divided Quebec into Upper and Lower Canada. The virtual suspension of that constitution by the English Parliament led to the rebellion of 1837. In 1841 the two provinces were united under a new constitution, framed on the English model. The confederation of all the British American provinces had been advocated by chief-justice Sewell as early as 1814; was brought prominently before the public in 1837 by the present Sir Alexander Galt; and was accomplished for Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, on July 1, 1869; for British Columbia in 1871, and Prince Edward Island in 1872, Newfoundland alone now refusing to enter the Dominion. In 1870 Canada consummated the acquisition of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories, and so laid the foundation of her future nationality. The relative progress of Canada may be seen from the following statement: In 1812, the year of the "American war," the population was 400,000; that of the United States, according to Mackenzie's History of America, was 8,000,000. Putting the present population of the latter at 55,000,000, the population of Canada ought to be, if the same rate of progress had been maintained in both countries, 2,750,000. The actual population, however, is above 4,600,000; that of Quebec and Ontario, "Old Canada," alone, being 3,282,255.

2. Ecclesiastical.—(1) Roman Catholics.—In 1610 and 1611 Acadia was visited by Récollets and Jesuits. In 1615 four Récollets came to Quebec with Champlain. In 1617 services were held at Quebec, Tadoussac, and Three Rivers. Great interest attaches to the church at Tadoussac, as it was the first church erected in Canada. Up to 1642 it was a bark cabin, with a wooden door, fastened by a padlock taken from the missionary's portmanteau. In 1747 Père Coquart, a Jesuit, commenced a wooden church. About 1870 some carpenters, while repairing the present church, found, under the floor, "a plate of what appears to be hammered lead," with the following inscription engraved upon it. It is given verbatim et literatim.

The early record of Jesuit labors is one of privation, zeal, virtue, superstition, mutilation, and massacre. Labors of refinement bore their share in the sacrifices made for religion. François Laval, vicar-apostolic in 1659 and bishop in 1672, to check the liquor-traffic, first interfered, as an ecclesiastic, with the civil government, and, by his power, made the governors tremble. He gave his name to the university into which the seminary of 1668 developed. The Seminary of St. Sulpice, at Montreal, was founded in 1647. The Grey Nuns were settled in that city in 1737 by Madame Youville. The year 1826 witnessed the establishment of the diocese of Kingston, which included the whole of Upper Canada. Further divisions took place as the Church progressed, until now, in the Almanach Ecclesiastique du Canada for 1884, returns are furnished from four ecclesiastical provinces containing sixteen dioceses, three apostolic vicariates, and one apostolic prefecture, besides one Canadian diocese, that of Vancouver Island, which is under the control of the American province of Oregon city. The first bishop of Upper Canada was the Rev. Alex. McDonnell, who is said by Dr. Canniff to have been consecrated in 1822. When he entered the country, in 1804, there were only two Roman Catholic clergymen in Upper Canada, and one of them deserted his post. The bishop had no assistance for ten years, while travelling from Lake Superior to Lower Canada. He lived in Indian huts, and spent many thousand pounds of his private means in building churches and educating priests. He obtained almost all the lands now possessed by his Church in Ontario, and held for years a seat in the Legislative Council. The recent progress of Roman Catholicism in Canada is very marked, and threatens the welfare of the country. The time was when, in the persons of the Récollets, it opened its church-buildings in Quebec and Montreal to clergymen of the Anglican and Scotch churches respectively, while a Gallican bishop welcomed the arrival of a Protestant bishop by a double kiss. Now, adopting the syllabus and the Vatican decrees of 1864 and 1870, and strengthened by the influx of European Jesuits, it systematically pushes the Protestants out of public offices and the province of Quebec; attempts the suppression of the Protestant press, and the control of the books to be studied in Ontario schools; threatens the destruction of a medical school which has been affiliated with a Protestant university, and openly boasts of its designs on the political and religious destinies of the whole Dominion. The results which would arise from the predominance of this form of Christianity may be judged from the fact that the latest sources of information at hand show that over 64 per cent. of the non-readers over twenty years of age, and 59 per cent. of the non-writers, of the Dominion, are found in the one province in which that Church is supreme. This supremacy arose from the generous grant to the conquered French, by the English victors, of such religious rights as they had possessed up to the time of the conquest, and, also, of the use of the French language. The year 1855 was signalized by the abolition of the seigniorial tenure of land. Prior to this, the seignior was a feudal judge of all crimes except murder and treason; and, from him, the peasant held his land subject to compulsory feudal obligations. The Seminary of St. Sulpice was the seignior of the whole island of Montreal; and, even with its now limited power, it has so strengthened its claims that a large band of Indians, intrusted to it for education, has been driven to seek refuge from its severity in a distant portion of Ontario.

(2) Church of England.—The first clergyman who officiated in Canada was the Rev. John Ogilvie, D.D., a graduate of Yale; and the first after the conquest was Mr. Brooke, of Quebec, who acted as chaplain at Niagara in 1759. The Rev. John Doty was a chaplain between 1777 and 1781, and a missionary at Sorel after 1784. The first resident clergyman was the Rev. John Stuart, a United Empire Loyalist from Virginia. He arrived in 1781, and labored between Kingston and Niagara. The United Empire Loyalists, by their assumption of special claims for their Church, afterwards introduced long and bitter contentions into the land which they adopted. The first bishop was the Right Rev. Charles Inglis, of Nova Scotia, who was consecrated in 1787. In 1793 bishop Jacob Mountain was appointed to Quebec, which meant all that was then Canada. His successor was the Hon. and Right Rev. Charles James Stewart, D.D., said to be a scion of the royal house of Stuart. He was a member of the Executive Council of Canada under the constitution of 1791; and to him and his successors was granted by letters patent the title of "lord bishop," though the Anglican Church is not "Established" in Canada. In 1791 one seventh of the unsurveyed lands was set apart "for the support of a Protestant clergy." The ambiguity of the term "Protestant clergy" caused a long and bitter agitation, which ended, in 1854, in the triumph of those opposed to a religious establishment. In 1839 the diocese of Quebec, under Dr. George Jehoshaphat Mountain, was divided, and that of Toronto formed, with the Hon. and Right Rev. John Strachan, D.D., as bishop. He was the Anglican champion in the Clergy Reserves agitation. Through his exertions King's College was opened in 1843, in Toronto, as an Anglican institution. On the transformation of this into a provincial university, called "Toronto University," in 1850, Trinity College, Toronto, was begun for the Anglican Church, and opened in 1852. In 1850 the queen exercised her royal supremacy in the Canadian branch of the English Church for the last time, by appointing Dr. Fulford as bishop of the new diocese of Montreal. In 1860 bishop Fulford became metropolitan, after nine years of effort, led by Dr. Strachan, to secure the right of the Canadian Church to create such an appointment. Dr. Lewis, to whose suggestion the Lambeth Conference of 1867 was due, became bishop of "Ontario" in 1862. The issuing of royal mandates for the consecration of bishops ceased with the appointment of Dr. Williams as fourth bishop of Quebec in 1863. In the meantime, bishops had been appointed to Fredericton in 1845, Rupert's Land in 1849, Huron in 1857, Columbia in 1859, the missionary diocese of Algoma in 1873, Moosonee, another missionary diocese, in the same year, to Athabasca and Saskatchewan in 1874, and to Niagara in 1875. Two new bishops were consecrated in 1879 for dioceses named New Westminster and Caledonia, formed from that of Columbia; and a new diocese of Assiniboia, as yet without a bishop, has been erected in the north-west. In October, 1880, was formed the "Society for Converting and Civilizing the Indians, and Propagating the Gospel among Destitute Settlers in Upper Canada." Its first missionary was Mr. James D. Cameron, "a half-bred native," who was "zealous even to enthusiasm." The address to the Indians, published in the annual report of this society with the long name, is a charmingly simple presentation of the Gospel of Christ. A committee of the S. P. C. K. of England was at work in York, now Toronto, prior to 1825. The contributions of the Canadian Church to foreign missions are made through the great societies of England. The mission of this Church to the French Canadians is known as the "Sabrevois Mission." During 1888 the various missions of Canada have been consolidated under one central missionary society, and the Church has energetically committed itself to the temperance reform, by the formation of a Church of England Temperance Society, with parish branches and Bands of Hope. The contests between High and Low churchmen have been keen and long, the clergy in the Toronto diocese and the most eastern dioceses tending to the High school, and most laymen leaning to the Low. The Evangelicals have recently secured appointments from their school to two dioceses, one of which is the best in Canada.

(3) Presbyterians.—In 1765 a chaplain of the 24th regiment, the Rev. George Henry, officiated at Quebec, while Mr. Bethune, chaplain of the 84th, founded the first Presbyterian congregation in Montreal. In 1792 was erected the St. Gabriel Street Church, Montreal, the oldest Protestant church-building in Canada. The first presbytery was formed in 1786, in Nova Scotia, where the burghers and anti-burghers had commenced work. The "Associate Presbytery of Nova Scotia" was founded by Dr. James McGregor and two others in 1794. These two presbyteries united in 1817, as the "Presbyterian Church of Nova Scotia." In 1808 the Presbytery of Montreal was founded by two ministers and one elder. The Established Church of Scotland, or "The Kirk," commenced labors in 1784, when the Rev. Samuel Russel took up his residence in Halifax. In 1831 the "Synod of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, in connection with the Church of Scotland," was formed in "Old Canada," with twenty-five ministers. These united, in 1840, with the "Associate Church of Scotland in Upper Canada." Prior to that time, the "United Presbyterian Church in Canada" was formed. In 1833 the "Synod of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island" was formed, with seven ministers. The Presbytery of New Brunswick did not enter this synod, but, in 1835, formed the "Synod of New Brunswick." The "Free Church" secession of 1843 led to the formation of the "Presbyterian Church of Canada," in 1844, with twenty-five ministers. This schism has ultimately led to a unity grander and purer, doubtless, in spiritual life, than would have been probable without it. In 1861 the "Free Church" and the "United Presbyterian Church" united as the "Canada Presbyterian Church," with two hundred and twenty-six ministers. The General Assembly of this Church was founded in 1870. On June 15, 1875, in Montreal, "The Kirk," the "Canada Presbyterian Church," the "Church of the Maritime Provinces in connection with the Church of Scotland," and the "Presbyterian Church of the Lower Provinces" united as the "Presbyterian Church of Canada." A very few congregations connected with "The Kirk," of which "St. Andrew's Church" of Montreal is the chief, refused to enter the union, and commenced a suit at law for the control of the "Temporalities Fund." This fund had arisen from the consolidation of grants received principally from the "Clergy Reserves." The suit ended as had a previous one, that of the new "Methodist Episcopal Church" against the "Wesleyans," in the decision that the majority of a Church, in its corporate action, must be considered the Church. While supporting the majority, however, Parliament refused to alter the title of the board which controls the fund; and it remains as "in connection with the Church of Scotland." The claimants who entered the union were twenty-seven; the dissidents, seven.

The "Presbyterian Church of Canada" makes the Bible the infallible rule of faith and manners, the Westminster Confession the subordinate standard, the catechisms the means of doctrinal instruction, the "Form of Presbyterian Church Government" and the "Directory for the Public Worship of God" the standards of government and worship. This Church has missions in the New Hebrides, Trinidad, Erromanga, Formosa, and India, besides missions to the French-Canadian Roman Catholics. As a specimen of the early influence of this Church, special reference may be made to the Rev. William Smart, one out of many names connected with pioneer work in Canada. Converted to God in Drury Lane Theatre, London, by seeing the vast audience, and asking himself, "Where will all these people be in one hundred years?" and "Where shall I then be?" he gave himself to study and the ministry of Christ, came to Canada in 1811, and founded the first Sunday-school in Upper Canada; in 1817 established the first Bible Society in Upper Canada; in 1818 founded the first Missionary Society; and originated the first Religious Tract Society in 1820. The early spirit of this Church has not departed from it; but, with great wealth and intelligence, its influence for good grows steadily.

(4) Methodists.—This body, the largest of the Protestants, like both Anglicans and Presbyterians, owes its origin in Canada greatly to soldiers. Commissary Tuffey, of the 44th regiment, a local preacher, held meetings in Quebec in 1780; and major Neal, of a cavalry regiment, another local preacher, labored in 1786 along the Niagara river. Philip Embury and Barbara Heck, after living ten years in Lower Canada, came to Upper Canada in 1785. In 1788 came to Ernestown an Irishman, named James McCarthy, a follower of Whitfield. He preached for the Methodists. His enemies had him conveyed to one of the "Thousand Islands," where he was left to perish. His fate has never been generally known; but his son informed the writer of this article that he escaped from the island, and, after making his way towards home, was found by the roadside stabbed in a number of places. The early records of Methodism give the names of Losee, Dow, Bangs, Dunham, Case, the Coates, Pickett, and others, as the pioneers of its heroic age. In 1814 the English Wesleyans began work in Montreal, and extended it to Upper Canada in 1818. In 1820 Lower Canada was given up to the English Conference, Upper Canada being under the control of the Methodists of the United States. The Methodist preachers of the West, many of them being from the United States, and not able to take the oath of allegiance, were not allowed to perform marriages, even when that right was conceded to Presbyterians and Lutherans in 1797, and when, as late as 1823, a bill was introduced into Parliament to give them the desired authority. The first conference met at Hallowell, now Picton, in 1824. The Conference Missionary Society was formed at this period. The "Canadian Wesleyans" arose in 1827, under Ryan and Breakenridge. In 1828 Canadian Methodism became independent of the United States, and, in 1831, its preachers obtained the right to marry. In 1833, aided by the Rev. Dr. Alder, it united with the British Conference, taking its name and form, and abandoning episcopacy. In 1840 this union ceased, owing to the fact that the Canadians refused to be coerced entirely by the English on questions of domestic policy, and make their paper, the Christian Guardian, the advocate of the union of Church and State. In 1834 arose a new Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1847 the English and the Canadians reunited.

Methodism in Nova Scotia began about 1775, in services held by the people themselves, they being destitute of clergy. These led to the conversion of a youth named William Black, who subsequently became "The Apostle of Methodism in Nova Scotia." In 1784 Freeborn Garrettson and James O. Cromwell arrived; and, in 1788, James Wray, an English missionary. Methodism in New Brunswick began in 1791, under the Rev. A. J. Bishop, of Jersey. In Prince Edward Island, the pioneer, in 1807, was the Rev. James Bulpit. In the Hudson's Bay Territories, the work began with English and Canadian missionaries in 1840. For British Columbia, England provided money, and Canada supplied men—the Rev. Dr. Evans, and Messrs. White, Robson, and Browning, in 1858. In 1854 the Canada East District was united to the Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church; and in 1873 Mr. Cochran and Dr. McDonald went as missionaries to Japan. The year 1874 witnessed the union of the Canada Conference with the Conference of Eastern British America and the Methodist New Connection, under the name of "The Methodist Church of Canada." Connection with England then ceased. A general union of all the Methodists, except the colored people and the Albrecht Brüder, took place in 1883. Legislative action, confirming this union, has taken place during the present year, 1884. The amalgamated bodies were the Methodist Church of Canada, the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Primitive Methodist Church, and the Bible Christians. The new name is "The Methodist Church." The General Conference, composed of ministers and laymen in equal numbers, is quadrennial. Two general superintendents travel through the whole country, and are so appointed as to secure a new election every four years. They are responsible to the General Conference. Their salaries are paid from the General Conference Fund, the Mission Fund, and the Educational Society, in the proportion of one half, one third, and one sixth, respectively. The salaries are $2000 and travelling expenses. The Rev. Samuel Dwight Rice, D.D., and bishop Carman are the general superintendents. Laymen sit in Annual Conferences, which elect their own presidents. Probationers do not sit in conference. A general superintendent, if present, opens the Annual Conference, and presides during the first day, and alternately with the president on following days. The term "Chairman of District" has been changed to "Superintendent of District." Annual Conferences elect their own stationing committees, and ordain their own probationers. In district meetings, ministry and laity are equally represented. Laymen, to be elected to Annual Conferences, must have been of five years good standing as members of the Church, and of the minimum age of twenty-five years. Equitable arrangements are made for the management of the "Superannuated" and "Supernumerary" Funds, the Missionary Fund, and the transfer of ministers from one conference to another, no conference having the power to transfer a man, without his consent, for more than nine years. The transfer committee is composed of the general superintendents, presidents of conferences, and one minister from each Annual Conference. It has two sections, the Western and the Eastern, the dividing line being the eastern limit of the Montreal Conference. The conferences are named London, Guelph, Niagara, Toronto, Bay of Quinte, Montreal, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland. The Church has 157,762 full members, and 12,151 on trial; ministers, 1633; probationers, 219; parsonages, 877; churches, 3159; Sunday-schools, 2707; scholars, 175,052. The value of church property is $9,130,807. There are foreign missionaries in Japan and Bermuda, 14; French missionaries, 9; Indian, 27, besides unpaid agents and teachers; domestic, 350. The amount raised for missions in 1883 was $193,769.

(5) Baptists.—The earliest history of the Baptists in Canada is connected with the Maritime Provinces. Baptist principles became the nucleus around which, during times of revival, persons originally Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Baptists associated together. At first, mixed communion prevailed in many places, yielding, finally, to close communion. Strange speculations, mystical explanations of Scripture, and the confounding of emotional impulses with the action of the Holy Spirit, marked many of the early Baptist preachers, and doubtless contributed to arouse prejudices seriously affecting the subsequent history of the body. Henry Alline, a "New Light" Congregationalist, and David George, an escaped slave from Virginia, both illiterate men, as early as 1760 and 1792, contributed to Baptist interests by preaching to both blacks and whites. The latter lived in a hut of bark and poles, baptized converts in a creek, was forced to go to Sierra Leone, and on his return found his church at Shelbourne broken up, and was saved from further persecution by being formally licensed to preach to the blacks by governor Odell, in 1792. In 1763 a Baptist congregation from Massachusetts came, with their pastor, Mr. Nathan Mason, to Sackville, N. B. Others from the same place came to Nova Scotia. Shubal Dimock, a Presbyterian of Mansfield, Conn., was persecuted and plundered. He removed to Newport in 1771, was immersed in 1775, and formed a church in 1779. Churches were formed in Cornwallis, in 1776; Chester, 1778; Halifax, 1795; and Argyle, 1806. The first Baptist church erected in the Maritime Provinces, or, perhaps, in Canada, was either that of Sackville, in 1763, or, as seems more strongly supported, that of Horton, in 1778. In 1797 four ministers devised a plan of an association, six churches, partly Baptist and partly Congregational, uniting. The first minutes were published in 1810. Great progress was made by revivals in 1828, in which year the association was strengthened by the addition of a congregation partly composed of seceders from the Church of England. This secession is credited to the opposition of the rector, afterwards bishop Inglis, to "evangelical" preaching and conversions. The "Fathers" of the Baptist churches in the East were Theodore and Harris Harding, Chipman, Edward and James Manning, Ansley, Dimock, Burton and Crandall. Gilmore, Cramp, and Davidson are names most prominent in the West. The first Baptist congregation of "Old Canada" was that of Caldwell's Manor, in Lower Canada, formed in 1794 by Rev. E. Andrews, of Vermont. The Montreal Church began in 1831. The Canada Baptist Union was formed in 1800. The Grande Ligne Mission began in 1835. The Maritime Provinces have seven Associations, with 218 ordained ministers and 38,430 communicants, two thirds of whom are in Nova Scotia. The Baptist Convention for the Maritime Provinces meets annually for the management of home and foreign missions and for education. These departments are managed through three boards. Among the Telugus of India are three stations, eight missionaries, four men and four women, with ninety-one communicants. The mission property of the Eastern Baptists, among the Telugus, is worth $12,500. The disbursements for the year ending August, 1883, were $8331. The Home Mission Board, which meets at Yarmouth, spent, last year, $4400 for forty-nine missions and fifty-two men. There is also a French mission above Yarmouth, near Digby. In Ontario and Quebec are two home mission conventions, combined in one foreign missionary society, organized in 1866. This society, also, has a mission among the Telugus, with the same number and kind of stations and missionaries as the Eastern society, and about eleven hundred communicants. The Western Baptists number 27,066.

(6) Congregationalists.—In 1759 New England Puritans settled in Nova Scotia under a provincial enactment, which gave "full civil and religious liberty" to "Protestants dissenting from the Church of England." After this, Congregational churches gradually increased in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Some Christian soldiers at Quebec secured, in 1801, from the London Missionary Society, a pastor, Rev. Mr. Bentom, who supported himself mainly by the practice of medicine. He was fined and imprisoned for the publication of a pamphlet protesting against the arbitrary suspension by the authorities of the act granting power to Congregational ministers to keep registers of clerical acts. This deprived such ministers of their legal status for thirty years. Mr. Bentom's Church eventually joined the Presbyterians. Prior to doing so, however, they began the Quebec Auxiliary Bible Society in 1804, and organized the first Canadian Sunday-school in 1806. In 1811, a graduate of Dartmouth College, the Rev. John Jackson, came to the "Eastern Townships," and labored with almost no pecuniary reward for ten years, retiring through failure of health. In 1815, a graduate of Middlebury College, the Rev. J. Taylor, came to Eaton; and in 1816 the Rev. Thaddeus Osgood came to Stanstead and formed a Congregational Church. Congregationalism was introduced into what is now Ontario by the Rev. J. Silcox, of Frome, England. In 1831 was formed Zion Church, Montreal, which, under the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Wilkes, has, perhaps, done more for Congregationalism in Canada than any other church. In 1833 the illegal decree before mentioned was rescinded. Dr. Wilkes, after educating himself in Glasgow for the ministry, came to Canada in 1836. The feelings aroused by the rebellion of 1837 caused many pastors from the United States to return thither, leaving the congregations to struggle alone. In that year the missions were supervised in the East by Dr. Wilkes, and in the West by Mr. Roaf, Kingston being the dividing point. This kind of Congregational episcopacy ended in 1851, but has lately been revived under the Rev. Thomas Hall. The Congregational Union of Ontario and Quebec was formed in 1853, from separate organizations in these provinces. The Congregational Theological College, formed by a union of schools in 1846, was removed from Toronto to Montreal in 1864, and affiliated with McGill University. Among other benefits conferred on Christianity by this college, not the least has been the gift to the Church of England of the Rev. John Cunningham Geikie. Canadian Congregationalism is organically weak and numerically small, yet true to a sound but large-hearted Christianity. Besides the Congregational Union of the West, there is a similar union for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The returns for the West for 1882-83 are, members, 6047; Sunday-school scholars, 7260; preaching-stations, 107, of which 5 are in Manitoba, on missions started by the Rev. Mr. Ewing; Sunday-schools, 80; additions by profession, 398; baptisms, 403, of which 43 were of adults. The returns for the East are, members, 1284; Sunday-school scholars, 755; preaching-stations, 27; Sunday-schools, 13; additions by profession, 19; baptisms, 44, of which 5 were of adults. The organ of this body is the Canadian Independent, of Toronto, of which Rev. John Burton, B.D., is editor.

(7) The Evangelical Association.—This body, founded by Jacob Albrecht, of Montgomery County, Pa., commenced in Canada in 1839, under two missionaries in Welland and Waterloo, the Revs. M. Eis and C. Hall. Their work, at first among Germans, has become partly English. The body is connected with the Church of the same name in the United States. In 1864 a separate conference for Canada was formed. Missions exist on the Ottawa, in Muskoka, and at Parry Sound. In April, 1883, there were 5066 members, 55 preachers, 75 churches, valued at $118,400, 25 parsonages, worth $28,225, with 82 Sunday-schools, 5320 scholars and 1007 teachers. The Mission Fund amounted to $7000.

(8) Christian Disciples.—This body maintains the same principles as the followers of Campbell in the United States. It arose, apparently, from the labors of Scotch Baptists and followers of the Haldanes. The pioneers were Stewart, Stephens (both students of Haldane's College), Weir, Hutchison, Oliphant, Menzies, McLaren, McKellar, McVicar, Sinclair, Robertson, and Barclay, with Mr. James Black, of Eramosa, who came to Canada in 1825, and still lives, at the age of over eighty. The body is not numerous.

(9) Unitarians.—There are but three congregations of this body in Canada, so far as is known. These are in Montreal, Toronto, and St. John, N. B. The Montreal Church was organized in 1842, and served for some months by the Rev. Henry Giles. The first pastor was the Rev. Dr. Corder. For ten years the Church was connected with the Remonstrant synod of Ulster, Ireland. In 1856 it became independent. In the strife and opposition of its first years, it grew. With the repudiation of such irrational interpretations of orthodox doctrines as alone furnish a legitimate ground for objections against these doctrines, the orthodox churches gain such a hold on the masses that Unitarianism makes but little progress. The Unitarian Church in Toronto was founded in 1845. That in St. John appears to have no settled pastor. The congregation in Montreal is of the moderately conservative wing, and seeks to be definitely Christian. The radicals, who either reject the supernatural, or call themselves Agnostics, have drifted into the "Free Thought Club." The body numbers 2126.

(10) There are other small bodies, Lutherans, Quakers, Swedenborgians, etc.; and small communities of Jews exist, to the number of 2393. "Free-Thought" clubs exist in some of the leading cities, chiefly in Montreal.

IV. Languages, Literature, and Education.—German prevails in some localities, but is gradually giving place to English. French is spoken by 1,298,929 persons, chiefly in the province of Quebec, and promises to increase in extent and influence. Canadian French is not a patois, but is mainly the French of the age of Louis XIV, preserved, by distance, from the effects of the revolutions of France, and exhibiting trifling local varieties in vocabulary, with occasional Anglicisms. In the writings of Garneau, Sulte, Chapman, Lemay, Faucher de St. Maurice, Marmette, Bibaud, Fréchette, and many others, a style is found that would do no disgrace to Paris, the last-named having been made laureate by the French Academy. The intonation of Canadian French lacks the refinement of Paris; but that of Canada does not give the harsh burr to the letter r which is so often heard east of the Atlantic, and is wholly devoid of dialects. Canada supplies, in increasing numbers, her own school text-books; and royal societies of art and literature, founded under the auspices of the marquis of Lorne, promote the growth of an educated taste. The table below shows the publications of the country that publish advertisements.

Education is under the control of the provincial governments, and, consequently, is not uniform. In Ontario and other provinces, the system is unsectarian, yet Christian, provision being made for opening and closing prayers, though permission to be absent from these may, under certain circumstances, be given. There is provision for Roman Catholic separate schools. In Quebec, education is sectarian and Roman Catholic, with provision for Protestant dissentient schools. In Manitoba, the schools are partly Protestant and partly Roman Catholic. The Ontario system, developed by the late Dr. Ryerson, is the model, to which the best remaining systems are similar, with local peculiarities. Under that system, the various grades of schools are public schools, high schools, collegiate institutes, and the university, with a special institution named Upper Canada College, founded in Toronto and endowed on the model of the great public schools of England, and with model and normal schools and an agricultural college. The public schools are free, as are most of the high schools and collegiate institutes; and education is compulsory. There are military schools at prominent places, and a military college at Kingston. These are under Dominion control, there being no provincial militia in Canada. The chief non-denominational colleges are Toronto University, McGill University, and the University of New Brunswick. The expenditure for education in Ontario alone for 1880 was $2,822,052.

The Roman Catholics have one university, Laval, in Quebec, besides numerous colleges and convent-schools.

The Church of England has, of universities, Trinity, Bishop's, the Western, King's College, and St. John's in Toronto, Lennoxville, London, Windsor, N. S., and Winnipeg, respectively. There are, also, in Toronto, Wycliffe Theological College, and, in Montreal, the Diocesan Theological College, to meet special wants, besides other colleges and schools, some of which are for ladies only, and the Sabrevois Mission College of Montreal.

The Presbyterians have Queen's and Dalhousie Universities, with Manitoba and Morrin Colleges, besides Knox Theological College, of Toronto, and the Presbyterian Theological College, of Montreal, and other schools, some being for ladies.

The Methodists have Victoria and Albert Universities, which, under the union, are to be consolidated under the name of the former, Albert becoming a high-class school. They have, also, Mount Allison University, with theological schools in Cobourg, Montreal, and Sackville, besides ladies' colleges at Hamilton, Whitby, and Sackville, and various other schools.

The Baptists have Acadia University, with Horton Academy and Acadia Seminary, with a first-class theological college, McMaster Hall, in Toronto, and a college in Woodstock, Ont.

The Congregationalists have a theological college in Montreal.

The medical schools of Toronto, Kingston, and Montreal are of a high character. Schools for the blind, for deaf mutes, for Indians, and reformatory schools, with scientific, literary, and art societies, abound. Two medical schools for ladies have recently been opened in Toronto and Kingston. Wealth begins to show its power in the erection and equipment of buildings not surpassed upon this continent. The result is seen in the fact that Canadian names, both French and English, are honorably quoted in Europe, even while Canada is, politically, not yet a perfect nation, but is in a state of transition from a position difficult to define to one more definite but, as yet, unseen.

CANAL, FABIO, a Venetian painter, was born in 1708, and studied under Gio. Bat. Tiepolo. He died in 1767. In Venice he executed many works for the churches and public edifices.

Canale, GIUSEPPE, a Roman designer and engraver, was born in 1728, and studied under Jacob Frey. In 1751 he was invited to Dresden to execute some fine works for the gallery. The following are his principal prints: Christ and St. John; Christ Appearing to St. Thomas; A Turkish Woman; Maria Josephina, Queen of Poland.

Canales (Canalis or Canale), Bartolommeo, an Italian theologian, was born in 1605, at Monza, in the duchy of Milan. He entered the congregation of Regular Clerks Barnabites, and was celebrated for his piety and seclusion from the world. He died in 1684, and left some works, among them, Diario Spirituale, or meditations for every day in the year (Milan and Rome).

Canales, Giovanni, an Italian theologian, was born at Ferrara and lived near the close of the 15th century. He entered the order of Cordeliers, and composed several treatises on the Celestial Life, the Nature of the Soul, on Paradise, on Hell, etc. (Venice, 1494). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canarese (or Karnata) VERSION. The Canarese is spoken by about seven millions throughout the Mysore, also in the province of Canara, and as far north as the Kistna River. The first attempt towards a Canarese version of the Scriptures was made at Serampore in 1808, and it was not till 1822 that the New Test. was completed at press. A version of the Old Test. was also undertaken, and partly executed by the Serampore missionaries. But, on finding that others had undertaken a similar work, they relinquished it. In 1817, Mr. Hands, of Bellary, an agent of the London Missionary Society, made it known to those concerned that he had translated the whole of the New Test. into Canarese. Of this translation the Gospels and the Acts were printed at Madras under the immediate eye of the translator. In order that the translator might not be longer detained from his station, the types and printing materials were sent to Bellary, and the entire New Test. was completed in 1821. At this period Mr. Hands had likewise completed the translation of the Old Test., while his friend and coadjutor, the Rev. Wm. Reeve, had engaged in a separate translation of the Pentateuch, with the view of comparing it with that of Mr. Hands, and of securing thus a more correct and idiomatic version. In 1822, while these two laborers were conjointly engaged in their undertaking, the Madras Bible Committee, upon whom the superintendence of this translation had devolved, invited them to associate themselves with major A. D. Campbell and R. C. Gosling, so as to form a sub-committee of translation. Under the care of this sub-committee, the version of the Old Test. was continued. In 1832 the Old Test. left the press. As it was afterwards found desirable to submit the entire Canarese Scriptures to a further and more elaborate revision, the Rev. G. H. Weigel was engaged by the British and Foreign Bible Society, at the instance of the Madras Committee of Revision, to devote his whole time to the work. Under this arrangement a thoroughly revised translation of the Canarese New Test. was completed in 1853, and two large editions were published, one at Bellary and the other at Bangalore. A like revision of the Old Test. has subsequently been accomplished, and was, according to the report for the year 1860, in the hands of the Canarese missionaries and their people. This edition seemed to have been only tentative, for, in the report for 1866, we read the following account given by the Rev. B. Rice, secretary to the Canarese Revision Committee:

"The printing of the Quarto Reference Bible in Canarese has been completed during the past year, and is now in circulation. This brings to a conclusion the labors of the Revision Committee, who commenced the work twenty years ago. During that period, some who took part in this new translation (for such it really is, and not simply a revision of the previously existing version), have been removed by sickness, death, or other causes; but it is matter for thankfulness that several of the members have been spared to assist in the work from the commencement to the close. It is the work chiefly of the following missionaries: Rev. G. H. Weigel and Rev. Dr. Mögling, of the German mission; Rev. D. Sanderson, of the Wesleyan mission; and the Rev. C. Campbell and Rev. B. Rice, of the London mission. It may be worth while to place on record that the entire New Test., with the books of Psalms, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes, were completed by the brethren collectively in committee, which held repeated sittings for that purpose of two and three months' duration each time, at Mysore, Utakamund, and Bangalore. The historical books of the Old Testament, together with Job, were revised by the Rev. C. Campbell, partly on the basis of the old version, and partly on the basis of a new translation by the Rev. G. H. Weigel. The prophetic books were revised by the Rev. B. Rice, wholly on the basis of the new translation by Mr. Weigel. The whole was circulated for some time in a tentative edition, before a large edition was printed."

According to the report for 1881, there were circulated in the Canarese, up to March 31, 1881, two hundred and ninety-eight thousand portions of Scriptures. See Bible of Every Land, p. 141.

Canaveri, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian prelate, was born at Borgomanero, Sept. 25, 1753, and at eighteen years of age received his doctor's degree in the University of Turin, in which city he joined himself to the Congregation of the Oratory. In 1799 he was made bishop of Bielle, but resigned in 1804, and in 1805 he was appointed bishop of Vercelli, to which the see of Bielle was then united. He died Jan. 13, 1811, leaving some panegyrics, pastoral letters, and a work entitled Notizia Compendioza dei Monasterii della Trappa Fonduti Dopo la Rivoluzione di Francia (Turin, 1704, 8vo). See Biog. Universelle, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict., s. v.

Cancer (the Crab) was the animal which Juno is said to have sent against Hercules, when he contended with the Hydra in the morasses of Lerna, and by which his foot was bitten. The hero, however, killed it, and Juno placed it in the zodiac.

Cancer, Jaime, a Spanish advocate, was born at Balbastro, in Aragon, about 1520, and died at Barcelona about 1592, leaving a valuable work, entitled, Varie Resoluciones Juris Cæsarei, Pontificii et Municipalis Principatus Cataloniae (1594). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict., s. v.

Canda, CHARLES DU, a French ecclesiastical historian, born at St. Omer, lived about 1615. He entered the order of the Premonstrants, and became canon and then prior of the abbey of Dammartin. He left, La Vie de Saint Charles Boromée (St. Omer, 1614; translated from the Italian):—La Vie de Saint Thomas Archevêque de Cantorbéry (ibid. 1615):—La Vie de Saintes Française (translated from the Italian, without date). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Candale (or Candella), FRANÇOIS HUSSATES (or DE FOIX, count of), a French prelate and mathematician, was born in 1502, and died Feb. 5, 1594. He was bishop of Aire, in Gascoigne, and a commander of the royal orders. Being an amateur of mathematical sciences, he established a chair at the University of Bordeaux. His extant writings are, Traduction du Poëmandre d'Hermès Trismégiste:—Traduct. des Œuvres d'Euclide. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Candee, Isaac, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born about 1754. He entered the itinerancy in 1801; became superannuated in 1811; resumed his work in 1824, and continued faithful until his death, Dec. 22, 1828. Mr. Candee was a warm-hearted friend, a sincere Christian, and a serious, devoted, successful minister. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1829, p. 40.

Candee, Isaac Newton, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born at Galway, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1801. He graduated at Union College in 1825, and in 1828 at Princeton Seminary. He was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of Newton, May 12, 1829. He was stated supply at Oxford, N. J., from 1829 to 1834; pastor of the First Church of Belvidere from 1834 to 1840; agent for the Board of Foreign Missions from 1840 to 1849; pastor at Lafayette, Ind., from 1850 to 1855; stated supply at Galesburg, Ill., from 1855 to 1866. From 1866 to 1869 he was engaged in a church agency, and from 1869 to 1874 he was pastor at Richview. He died at Peoria, Ill., June 19, 1874. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 53.

Candela, GIOVANNI DOMINICO, a Sicilian Jesuit, died at Catania in the year 1606, leaving some discourses, and other works, on the subject of virginity.

Candelarius, GOTTFRIED, a German theologian and Carmelite, was prior of the convent of the Carmelites at Aix-la-Chapelle, and died in 1499. His extant writings are, Sermones de Tempore et Sanctis:—Orationes ad Clerum:—Oratio pro Coronatione Regine:—De Conceptione Cœlestissimæ Virginis:—Epistolæ Variæ ad Thritheum et Alios. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Candelis (or Candel), JEAN DE, a French theologian, occupied in 1209 the office of a chancellor of the Church of Paris. In this capacity he had a quarrel with the university as to his prerogatives, which was finally referred to the pope. Innocent III appointed the bishop and the dean of Troyes to examine the claims of the two parties. The report, which was written, may be found in the statute which the prelate, Robert de Courçan, published in 1215. The bishop of Paris, Peter of Nemours, and Candelis, his chancellor, submitted. The university was maintained in full possession of its immunities, under the sole obligation of procuring a license, which, however, was to be granted gratuitously. Candelis died about 1220. See Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Candīda is the reputed name of two early Christian saints: (1) Wife of Artemius, martyr at Rome, commemorated June 6. (2) Virgin, of Rome, commemorated Aug. 29.

Candidāti (from Lat. Candidus, white). The catechumens (q. v.) of the early Christian Church were so called because they were accustomed to appear dressed in white on their admission into the Church by baptism.

Candidiānus is the name of many persons mentioned in early Christian history.

1. A correspondent of Ambrose (Epist. 91), cir. A.D. 390.

2. A bishop who carried a letter to pope Siricius (cir. A.D. 395), and, perhaps, the same with the bearer of a letter from Victorius at Rouen to Paulinus, and to pope Innocent. He may be the same as the brother and fellow-presbyter known to Augustine by the letters of Paulinus (see Augustine, Cur. Mort. 23; Tillemont, xiii, 334).

3. Governor of Cappadocia under Julian, though a pagan, was friendly to Basil and to Gregory Nazianzen, who wrote him a letter (Epist. 194). He may be the general whose daughter, Bassianilla, was eminent for piety at the opening of the 5th century, and the friend to whom, in 404, Chrysostom wrote his letter (Epist. 42, Chrysost. iii, 633).

4. Mentioned by Olympiodorus (Photius, Bibliothec. cod. p. 80) as despatched along with Aspar to put down the usurper John at Ravenna (A.D. 423-425); perhaps the same as No. 110.

5. A deacon, A.D. 431, who carried the letter of Alypius of Constantinople to Cyril of Alexandria (Labbe, Concil. iii, 786).

6. Count of the horse-guards, sent, A.D. 431, by Theodosius II and Valentinian III to keep order at the Council of Ephesus. When, on June 22, sixteen days after Pentecost, the day appointed for the meeting of the council, the fathers grew tired of waiting for John of Antioch, and demanded to begin at once, Candidianus demurred. At last he consented to read the imperial mandate, which the council refused to obey, and drove out Candidianus for expostulating. When the act of deposition of Nestorius was posted up, Candidianus tore it down, sent it to the emperors, forbade the criers to proclaim it, and collected the Nestorian bishops to await the arrival of John of Antioch, and form another council in opposition. See EPHESUS, COUNCIL OF.

7. Bishop of Antioch, in Pisidia, at the Synod of Constantinople, A.D. 449. The acts of this synod he upheld at Ephesus the same year, where he claimed to have been bred in the Catholic faith, and to have been archdeacon in the royal city. Theodoret (Epist. 147, vol. iv, 1109) tells us that on this occasion he was accused of many adulteries and other iniquities. His name is also written Calendio.

8. A lay correspondent of Nilus, in the 5th century, who is informed by the saint why monks fasten the pallium on the left shoulder while men of the world fasten it on the right (Nilus, id., Epist. 245).

9. Friend or kinsman of Sidonius, addressed by him (Epist. 8) from Rome, with jests against his birthplace, Cesena, and his domicile Ravenna, in retaliation for his jests against the wintry regions of Clermont (cir. A.D. 460).

10. A martyr who suffered by fire with Policius and Filotomus, according to Florus, who gives no particulars. He was commemorated Jan. 11 (see Florus, in Bede's Martyrology).

Candido, VINCENTE MARIA, a Sicilian theologian, was born at Syracuse, Feb. 2, 1573. He joined the Dominican order at the Convent of Minerva, at Rome, and was made doctor of theology at the age of nineteen years. He was distinguished for his science and his piety. He was penitentiary of Santa Maria Minora after 1607, which position he held for fourteen years, and was afterwards prior of the Convent of Minerva, then provincial and vicar-general of the Dominicans. Innocent X appointed him master of the sacred palace in 1645, and employed him in important negotiations. He died at Rome, Nov. 7, 1654. He wrote, Illustriores Disquisitiones Morales (Rome, 1637). He also left in manuscript De Primatu Petri:—Sermons for Lent. See Hoefel, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Candīdus is the name of numerous persons in early Christian history, besides the Arian noted in vol. ii.

1. Surnamed THEBÆUS, a martyr, commemorated, according to the Martyrologies of Bede and Usuard, Sept. 22.

There are two others of uncertain date, named simply Candidus, and commemorated as martyrs at Rome in Usuard's Martyrology, under Feb. 2 and Oct. 3 respectively.

2. VESPRONIUS, mentioned by Tertullian (ad Scap. 4), with other examples of humane governors, such as Cincius Severus, Asper, and Pudens, as having resisted the clamors of persecuting mobs. He excused himself from delivering up a certain Christian to death on the plea that it might cause a riot (cir. A.D. 190).

3. The author of a work on the Hexameron, of which mention is made by Eusebius (H. E. v, 27). He is classed by him among orthodox Church writers, and placed under the reign of Severus, A.D. 193–211.

4. A Valentinian, who held a disputation with Origen, about A.D. 228, the result of which was that Origen fell into disgrace. This disputation is not extant, and is only known by the references made to it in the controversy between Jerome (Apologia adv. Rufinum, ii, 512) and Rufinus (De Adulteratione Librorum Originis).

5. Donatist bishop of Villa Regia, who returned to the Church, and was continued in his office (August. Contra Crescon. ii, 10). Tillemont fixes the time at A.D. 348. He was probably deceased when Augustine wrote, A.D. 402, as Cresconius was then Catholic bishop of Villa Regia.

6. A bishop of the Anomœan party, who was consecrated, together with Arrianus, by Aëtius and Eunomius at Constantinople, A.D. 363, to superintend, the one the churches of Lydia, and the other those of Ionia. This ordination displeased the Eunomians, who, headed by Theodosius, appealed to Eudoxius. He supported them in their opposition to the newly appointed prelates. Candidus and Arrianus used their influence with Jovian, their kinsman, against Athanasius, but ineffectually.

7. Archimandrite, to whom, in A.D. 449 (or 450), Theodoret wrote (Epist. 128), telling him to get coadjutors against heretics, heathens, and Jews.

8. ISAURUS, an orthodox Christian historian, in the reign of Anastasius, A.D. 491–513, was a native of Isauria Tracheia, and by profession a notary. Photius (Codex, p. 79) informs us that he wrote a history of his own times, from the accession of Leo the Thracian, in 457, to the death of Zeno the Isaurian, in 491. He commends Candidus as a zealous maintainer of the faith as set forth at Chalcedon, and an opponent of all innovators. This history is lost, with the exception of the few extracts given by Photius, and a small fragment in Suidas. These are printed in the Corpus Hist. Byzant. (ed. Labbe), i, 164 sq.

9. Bishop of Sergiopolis, A.D. 544, who died before 554.

10. One of the more distinguished (nobiliores) of the forty soldiers martyred at Sebaste, in Armenia Minor, in the time of king Licinius, under the præses Agricolaus. Bede and Usuard, in their Martyrologies, both mention him, but give the days respectively March 9 and 11.

11. Bishop of Civita Vecchia, who was directed, A.D. 592, not to deprive a man of his pay because of sickness; and was allowed, in 596, to ordain some monks of monasteries in his diocese to serve as presbyters under him.

12. A presbyter sent by Gregory the Great into Gaul, A.D. 595, with letters to queen Brunchilda and king Chilbert, charged with the administration of the little patrimony of St. Peter there. He was commended, along with St. Augustine, to Pelagius of Tours and Serenus of Marseilles. In June, 597, he was sent to redeem four Christian captives whom a Jew held in slavery at Narbonne. He had, in 593, been "defender of the Church" in Rome. In 601 we find him seeking to excuse bishop Desiderius for teaching grammar (Epist. 54, lib. xi).

13. An Episcopus Dulcimensis, or Fulginiensis, at the third Roman council under Gregory, July, 596.

14. Gregory's successor, as abbot of the monastery of St. Andrew, was warned, A.D. 598, not further to molest Maurentius, brother and heir of a deceased monk in his monastery, as the suit between them had been settled once by the pope in the brother's favor. In February, 601, he was sent by Marinianus to Gregory for relics.

15. Wizo (Witto, Witso, or Wiso), a presbyter and disciple of Alcuin, in whose writings his name appears for about ten years, ending A.D. 802. He was a resident of the monastery of St. Martin of Tours. He is first mentioned as bringing to his master accounts of king Charles, about 793. In 800 he is the bearer of Alcuin's work, A dversus Felicem, to Charles; and in 801, just after the great coronation, he brought good news from Rome and the imperial court. In the same year, on the emperor's return, he had the honor to convey his master's congratulations. This was followed, 802, by his establishment at court. Candidus is frequently mentioned in the epistles of Alcuin, 793–802, and always in language of fatherly regard. According to Leland, Candidus was an alumnus of Lindisfarne, under Higebald, and was sent by him to France to finish his studies under Alcuin; and in due time returned home. Pitsius (Illust. Angl. Script. i, 828) adds that Candidus went to the continent because of the destruction of the Lindisfarne library by the Danes, in 793.

16. Surnamed BRAUN, a monk of the abbey of Fulda, was born near the close of the 8th century, and educated at Fulda, where he embraced a monastic life under the rule of abbot Bangulph, by whom he was sent to France to complete his studies under Clemens Scotus. On his return he was advanced to the priesthood. He endured the maladministration of abbot Ratgar, 802-817; was taken into the confidence of his successor, St. Eigil; and, by his successor, Raban (822), was placed at the head of the conventual schools. By the latter's advice he undertook his literary works, the principal of which is The Life of St. Eigil (2 vols., one in prose, the other in hexameter); The Life of Abbot Bangulph (not known to exist); and, probably, Opusculum de Passione Domini and Responsio ad Monachum.

Candidus (Blancart), Alexander, a Belgian theologian and Carmelite, was born in Gaul, and lived in the middle of the 16th century. He was made a licentiate in theology at Cologne, and afterwards became chaplain of George D'Egmont, bishop of Utrecht, to whom he dedicated a Flemish version of the Bible (Cologne, 1547), which is highly esteemed. He also wrote, Judicium Joannis Calvinii de Sanctorum Reliquiis, etc.:—Oratio de Retributione Justorum Statim a Morte (1551). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Candidus, Pantaleon, a Protestant theologian, was born at Ips, in Lower Austria, Oct. 7, 1540. He studied at Wittenberg, where he became intimately acquainted with Melancthon. In 1565 Candidus was called as teacher at the Latin school in Zweibrücken, and in 1571 he was made pastor and general superintendent. The Church at Zweibrücken had accepted the Augsburg Confession and the "Wittenberger Konkordie" of 1536. The Church discipline of the duke Wolfgang, in the preparation of which Melancthon's advice was followed, was of a mild Lutheran type. But, after Melancthon's death, Wolfgang became a defender of Lutheranism, and was very severe against Philippists and Calvinists. Marbach, in connection with Andrea, prepared, in 1564, a confession, which was to be accepted by all who were already in the ministry, or should be appointed in future. The Zwinglian and Calvinistic doctrine of the Lord's Supper, and the printing and sale of sectarian books, were strictly prohibited. Still, these parties did not succeed in ridding themselves of the Melancthon-Calvinistic elements. Wolfgang died in 1569, and his son, John I, left everything as he found it. In 1574 the edicts against Zwinglians and Calvinists were renewed, and many preachers were dismissed. Their places were filled by strict Lutherans, who had now their own way. A turning-point came in 1580, when duke John accepted the Reformed confession, and Calvinism was everywhere adopted as the religion of the people. Candidus, formerly suspected, was now the trustworthy adviser of the duke, and greatly promoted the cause of his Church. He died Feb. 3, 1608. See Butters, Pantaleon Candidus, ein Lebensbild aus dem zweiten Menschenalter der Reformationszeit (Zweibrücken, 1865); Schneider, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v. (B. P.)

Candle-beam is a beam for holding the candles over an altar. On it also were sometimes placed the crucifix, images, and reliquaries. See ROOD-BEAM.

Candlestick, in Ecclesiastical Usage. As a lighted taper was placed in the hand of the newly baptized, baptism was called "Illumination." On Christmas eve so many lights were kindled that it was called the "Vigil of Lights," and the faithful sent presents of lights one to another. An early instance of a perpetual light was that of the firehouse of St. Bridget, at Kildare, which burned unquenched from the 5th century to 1220. It may have been connected with a beacon, and the offerings made for its maintenance in part supported the poor. From the number of burning tapers which were used in churches on Easter eve, St. Gregory Nazianzen calls it the "holy night of illuminations;" while Easter day was called the "Bright Sunday," in allusion to the tapers and white robes carried by the neophytes. Tapers were also used at consecration of churches. See TAPER.

bra, varied in its number of tapers, which were nine at Nevers, twelve at Mans, thirteen at Rheims and Paris, twenty-four at Cambrai and St. Quentin, twenty-five at Evreux, twenty-six at Amiens, and forty-four at Coutances. Calfhill says that in England it was called the "Judas Cross." The "Lady Candle" was the single taper left burning when all the rest, representing the Apostles, had been extinguished one by one. Sir Thomas More says that it symbolized St. Mary standing beneath the cross of Calvary. At Seville, "entre-los-Corros" is a tenebrario of bronze, twenty-five feet in height, which was made in 1562. Herse lights were placed round the bier of the dead, in church, upon a barrow-like structure of iron. These resemble the lights set before the tombs of martyrs in the catacombs.

Candlesticks, in Germany, were often placed upon shrines, and some, of pyramidal shape and of the 15th century, still remain. In Chichester Cathedral, lights, on particular days, were set round four tombs in the Presbytery. Candlesticks of bronze remain at Nuremberg, Mayence, Aix-la-Chapelle, and Leau; at Bruges there are four of copper-gilt in the Jerusalem church, and in the Louvre there are three, with enamel-work of the 12th century.

Candlish, Robert Smith, D.D., an eminent Scottish clergyman, was born in Edinburgh, March 23, 1806. His father died when the son was a few weeks old, and the widow removed to Glasgow. Robert entered the university there in 1818, and, on graduation, passed through the divinity hall (1823-26), teaching privately meanwhile, and at the close accompanying a pupil to Eton. In 1828 he was licensed to preach, and in 1829 began to act as assistant in the parish of St. Andrew's, Glasgow, and in 1831 in the parish of Bonhill, Dumbartonshire. He was presented, in 1834, to the parish of Sprouston, in the Presbytery of Kelso, and in the same year was ordained pastor of St. George's Church, Edinburgh, the wealthiest and most influential Church in Scotland. In 1839 he took part in the General Assembly which resulted in the establishment of the Free Church. In 1843 he preached his first sermon as a free minister, in the Free St. George's Church, which had been hastily erected for him, and had a large part of this old congregation to hear him. This church gave way to a larger and better one on the Lothian road. He was an earnest promoter of Free Church principles, and second only to Chalmers, and was also an active agent in the establishment of the Evangelical Alliance. On the death of Dr. Chalmers he was appointed to the chair of divinity in the Free College, Glasgow. He died in Glasgow, Oct. 19, 1878. He published, A Summary of the Question Respecting the Church of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1841, 8vo):—Narrative, etc. (8vo):—Exposition of the Book of Genesis (ibid. 1852, 2 vols. 12mo):—The Atonement (1860):—Scripture Characters (1850):—The Resurrection Life in the Risen Saviour:—Letters to the Rev. F. B. Elliot:—John Knox, his Times and his Works, a Discourse (1846):—An Examination of Maurice's Theological Essays:—also eleven single Sermons:—a Lecture on Revivals:—The Word of God the Instrument of the Propagation of the Gospel (1843):—Reason and Revelation (1854):—Man's Right to the Sabbath (1856):—Two Great Commandments (1860):—The Fatherhood of God (1865):—and numerous smaller works. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticane, i, 75, 76; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.; The Presbyterian, Oct. 24, 1883; Encyclop. Britannica (9th ed.), s. v.; and Memoirs, by Dr. Wm. Wilson (Edinb. 1880). (W. P. S.)

Candy, WILLIAM T., a Wesleyan Methodist minister, was born at Salisbury, England, Feb. 15, 1814. He was converted at nineteen; entered the ministry in 1834; travelled two years in Wales; attended the theological institution; was sent to St. Domingo; labored in the West India mission for fifteen years; and, on account of prostration of health, was permitted by the British Conference to labor in New Brunswick. His undaunted fidelity during the cholera scourge of 1854 secured him lasting remembrance. During the last eight years of his life he was the subject of wasting illness, the result of the climate, persecutions, etc., of the West Indies. In 1869 he removed to Chicago, Ill., where he died, July 27, 1871. See Minutes of Conferences of Eastern British America, 1872, p. 7.

Cane, Carlo, a reputable Italian painter, was born at Gallarate, near Milan, in 1618, and studied under Melchiorre Gillardini and Morazone. His best works are the fresco paintings of St. Ambrogio and St. Ugo, in the Certosa, at Padua. He died in 1688.

Cane, John Vincent, an English friar of the order of St. Francis, lived principally at London, and died in 1672. He wrote Fiat Lux (1661), in which he endeavored to show that the only remedy for all existing evils was a return to the bosom of an "infallible church." See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Canensio, MICHELE, an Italian theologian, entitled prior graduatum, was bishop of Castro in the 15th century. He wrote a Life of Pope Paul II, which cardinal Querini published (Rome, 1740, 4to). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict., s. v.

Canephōros (Gr. κάνεφον, a basket, and φέρω, to bear), among the ancient Greeks, was the person appointed to carry the apparatus used in sacrificing, in a circular basket. The duty was generally assigned to a virgin, who carried the basket on her head to the altar. In case a private individual offered a sacrifice, this office was performed by his daughter or an unmarried female relative; but in public festivals it was assigned to two virgins of the first Athenian families. A similar custom prevailed in ancient Egypt, and the practice continued in Europe till the 3d century of the Christian era.

Caner, HENRY, D.D., a missionary of the Church of England, was born in 1700, probably at New Haven, Conn., where his father was the architect of the first college edifice erected there, in 1717–18. The son graduated at Yale College in 1724, and began to read prayers in the following year at Fairfield. Having gone to England in 1727 for ordination, he was appointed missionary to Fairfield by the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts. Occasionally he served at Norwalk. He became rector of King's Chapel, Boston, April 11, 1747. During his ministry King's Chapel was rebuilt, in 1749. Mr. Caner was appointed to preach the sermon on the death of George II. The officers of the British army and navy, previous to the war, were accustomed to worship at King's Chapel. In March, 1776, the British troops evacuated Boston, and Dr. Caner went with them, taking the Church records. He went to Halifax, and shortly after sailed for London. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel offered him the choice of any vacant mission, and, in consequence, he was appointed to Bristol, R. I. Here he labored from early in 1777 until the close of the war. He spent his last years in England, and died in Long Ashton about the close of 1792. Among his published works were several important sermons, showing his fine intellectual culture. His manner of address was popular, and he was regarded as one of the most eminent Episcopal clergymen of his day. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 61.

Cañes (or Cannes), FRANCISCO, a Spanish Cordelier and Orientalist, was born at Valencia in 1730. He was sent by the Franciscans as missionary to Damascus, where he applied himself to the study of the Oriental languages for sixteen years. On his return home he was admitted to the Royal Academy of History. He died at Madrid in 1795. He wrote, Grammatica Arabigo-española, etc. (Madrid, 1774):—Diccionario Español-latino-arabigo (ibid. 1787). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caneti, FRANCESCO ANTONIO, an Italian painter, was born at Cremona in 1652, and was a pupil of Natali. He afterwards became a Capuchin friar. Some of his best works are in the church of his order at Como, where he died in 1721.

Canevesi, TIMOTEO, an ascetic Italian preacher and author, of the order of the Minorites, was a native of Milan, and lived in the latter part of the 17th century. He was of an ancient family, and distinguished himself as a preacher in his own and other Italian cities. Having spent some years as missionary at Constantinople, he returned to Milan, where he passed the remainder of his life. He wrote, Due Sermoni del Sagro Chiodo (Milan, 1652):—Lezioni Scritturali Spiegate vel Duomo di Milano, etc. (ibid. 1654); and other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canfield (or Canfeld), Benedict (originally WILLIAM OF FILOH), an English theologian, was born at Canfield, Essex, in 1564. At first a Puritan, he became a Roman Catholic; went to France, and joined the Capuchins of Meudon, near Paris. In 1599 he returned to England, was imprisoned for three years, and then released, at the request of Henry IV of France. He went back to France, where, after taking charge of several convents, he died, in 1610, leaving, Exercices Spirituels (Paris, 1608):—Soliloque (ibid. eod. 12mo):—Le Chevalier Chrétien (ibid. 1609, 12mo). His chief work is Règle de Perfection, first published in English, and translated into Dutch and French (5th French ed., 1698, 12mo). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict., s. v.

Canfield, Ezekiel, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Salisbury, Conn., March 16, 1767. He professed religion in 1791, and in 1794 entered the New York Conference, and continued laborious and faithful until worn out. He died Oct. 16, 1825. Mr. Canfield was modest, affable, constant, ardent, experimental, and practical. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1826, p. 509.

Canfield, Oren K., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Massachusetts. He graduated at New Jersey College in 1835, and at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1838; and was ordained an evangelist by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, Oct. 7, 1840. He labored as a missionary in Liberia for more than a year, and died there, May 7, 1842. See Gen. Cat. of Princeton Theol. Sem. 1881, p. 103.

Canfield, Philo, a Congregational minister, was born at Bridgeport, Conn., Dec. 11, 1816. He graduated at Williams College in 1836, and at Hartford Theological Seminary in 1839. His early ministry was spent in Western New York. From 1844 to 1848 he preached at Perry; from 1848 to 1852 at York. He was ordained in Buffalo, Jan. 12, 1847. In September, 1852, he was installed pastor in Ridgebury, Conn., where he remained until April, 1856. The following year he was at Sheboygan Falls, Wis. In November, 1857, he was installed pastor in Sparta; in 1860 was appointed home missionary in North Pepin; in 1862 served in Menominee; in 1864 preached in Fairbault, Minn.; from 1865 to 1868, in Albert Lea; from 1868 to 1871, in Washington, Ia. After that date he remained in that place without charge until his death, which occurred Feb. 11, 1879. See Cong. Year-book, 1880, p. 14; Hist. Cat. of Theol. Institute of Conn. p. 23.

Canfridus, an English prelate, was the first in the list of Glastonbury monks who were advanced to the episcopate. He died in 782. If we might allow an error of a year in this date, Canfridus could be identified with Eanfrid, bishop of Elmham, who vacated his see not later than 781.

Cangitha was an early English abbess, mother of Eadburga or Bugga.

Cang-y is a Chinese deity, worshipped as the god of the lower heavens, and believed by them to possess the power of life and death. He has the constant attendance of three ministering spirits; the first refreshes the earth, the second rules the sea, and the third presides over births, and is god of war.

Canice (or Canicus). See CAINECHI (8).

Canidès was a hermit in the time of Theodosius the Great, who, as soon as he was baptized, ran away to a little grotto under a waterfall, where he lived seventy-three years, tasting no food but a few herbs. He died, according to Basil's Menology, June 10. — Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Canillac, RAYMOND DE, a French prelate, was born at Canillac, in Gévaudan. He was canon regular of the church of St. Augustine at Maguelonne, and became its provost. He was noted for his knowledge of civil and ecclesiastical law. Pope Clement VI, appreciating his talents, appointed him archbishop of Toulouse in 1345, then cardinal, with the title of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem, in 1350. Innocent VI made him bishop of Palestrina. Canillac died at Avignon, June 30, 1373. He wrote, Recollectorum Liber. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canini, GIOVANNI ANGELO, a reputable Italian historical painter, was born at Rome in 1617, and studied under Domenichino and Barbalunga. He was elected a member of the Academy of St. Luke in 1650. He executed two fine altar-pieces for the church of San Martino di Monti, representing the Martyrdom of St. Stephen and the Martyrdom of St. Bartholomew. He died in 1666. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Caninius, a presbyter, probably at Rome, is mentioned by St. Jerome as sent by him with his letter (74, ed. Vall.) from Bethlehem to Rufinus. — Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Canisius (or Cannius), Hendrik, a Dutch theologian, was born at Bois-le-Duc in 1594. He joined the religious order of the Hermits of St. Augustine, and became successively prior of the convents of Tenremonde, of Tirlemont, and then of Maestricht. He died March 4, 1689. His extant writings are, Carminum Fasciculus:—Manipulus Sacrarum Ordinationum (Louvain, 1661):—Pax et Una Charitas, per easque Chara Unitas (Antwerp, 1685). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canisius, Jacobus, a Dutch theologian and Jesuit, was born at Calcar (duchy of Cleves). He joined early the order of Jesuits, and taught philosophy and modern languages. He died at Ingolstadt, May 27, 1647. His extant writings are, Fons Salutis, seu Primum Omnium Sacramentorum Baptismus (Cologne, 1626):—Meditationes Sacre de Christo et Beatissima Virgine (Münster, 1628):—Ars Artium, seu de Bono Mortis, under the pseudonyme of Christianus Tausasophistus (1630):—Vitæ Sanctorum (translated from the Spanish of P. Ribadeneira, eod.):—Sermons of Father Mastrille (translated from the Italian into Latin, eod.):—Hyperdulia Mariana, a Jeanne Berchmanno Exercitia (Münster, 1636). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canistæ (Kanistrai) are enumerated by Theodoret (Hær. Fab. i, 1) in a list of short-lived heretical sects, the origin of which he ascribes to Simon Magus. The name is mentioned by no other writer; but there is every reason to believe that Theodoret derives it from a passage in Clemens Alex. (Strom. vii, 17), where we find the Caianistæ mentioned, meaning Cinities, but not so understood by Theodoret.

Canister (or Canistrum) is a comparatively recent term for two ecclesiastical vessels:

1. A basket used for holding consecrated bread, or perhaps Eulogia. Comp. ARCA. St. Jerome (Ep. ad Rustic. c. 20), speaking of the practice among Christians in his day of carrying home the consecrated elements, both of bread and wine, uses the expression, "Qui corpus Domini in canistro vimineo et sanguinem portat in vitro;" from which it appears that a wicker basket was used for holding the consecrated bread. This passage is remarkably illustrated by a fresco discovered in the crypt of St. Cornelius by Cavaliere de' Rossi. This represents a fish (the well-known representation of the Redeemer) swimming in the water, bearing on its back a basket having on the top several small loaves, and inside a red object, clearly visible through the wicker-work, which seems to be a small glass flask of wine. This is marked in the engraving by a somewhat darker tint. See ALTAR-BREAD BOX.

2. The disk or tazza placed under a lamp. This sense is frequent in the Liber Pontificalis. For instance, Pope Adrian (772-795) is said to have given to a church twelve silver canistri, weighing thirty-six pounds. Leo III, his successor, gave a silver canister with its chains, weighing fifteen pounds. Gregory IV gave two canistra of nine lights. In the latter case, the lights were probably distributed round the circumference of the tazza.

Canitz, FRIEDRICH RUDOLPH LUDWIG, Baron of, a German pietist and poet, was born in Berlin, Nov. 27, 1654. He studied for the diplomatic career at Leyden and Leipsic, and travelled in England, Holland, Italy, and France. He died at Berlin, Aug. 11, 1699. The friendship of Spener cheered his life, and he was exemplary alike for his statesmanship and piety. He composed some hymns, which were published by J. Ulrich von König in 1727. One of them has been translated into English: Seele du must munter werden, in Lyra Germ. i, 216 ("Come, my soul, awake, 'tis morning"). See Koch, Gesch. d. deutschen Kirchenliedes, iv, 438 sq.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Cann, Joseph A., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Philadelphia, Jan. 16, 1841. He was unusually serious and thoughtful in his early years; experienced conversion at the age of sixteen; became at once a fervent Christian, and in 1866 entered the New Jersey Conference, wherein, with great zeal, genuine fidelity, and large success, he labored until his decease, March 3, 1873. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1873, p. 25.

Canna (in mediæval Lat.) is the long stick, with a taper attached to it, by means of which the high candles in churches are lighted.

Canna, a Welsh saint of the 6th century, from Armoria, was the reputed founder of Llanganna (Llangan) in Glamorganshire, and of Llangan in Carmarthenshire. See Rees, Welsh Saints, p. 222.

Cannabich, Gottfried, a Protestant theologian of Germany, who was born at Sondershausen, April 27, 1745, and died, as general superintendent and member of consistory there, Sept. 23, 1830, is the author of, Kritik aller und neuer Lehren der christl. Kirche (Leipsic, 1799):—Kritik der praktischen christl. Religionslehre (ibid. 1810-13, 3 parts):—Die sämtlichen Evangelien und Episteln auf die jährlichen Sonn-, Fest- und Aposteltage, übersetzt u. mit Anmerkungen begleitet (Sondershausen, 1806):—Predigten über die Sonn- und Festtagsevangelien (Leipsic, 1795-1801, 4 parts):—Neue Predigten (ibid. 1804-5, 2 vols.):—Lehrbuch der christl. Religion (ibid. 1801):—Christliche Schul- und Volksbibel (1801-2, 2 parts). See Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 410, 480; ii, 60, 123, 132, 228, 236, 248, 297. (B. P.)

Cannan, David, D.D., a Scotch clergyman, was born at Shiell in 1776. He was educated at the school of Kells, and at the Edinburgh University; licensed to preach in 1802, presented to the living at Kirriemuir in 1803, transferred to Murroes in 1809, thence to Mains and Strathmartin in 1820; resigned on account of impaired memory in 1848, and died at Edinburgh, July 12, 1854. Dr. Cannan was an accomplished scholar, a learned theologian, a man of sound judgment, sagacity, and integrity. His publications were, On the Poor, and the Duty and Mode of Supporting Them (Edinb. 1845):—An Account of the Parish. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii, 721, 729, 777.

Cannan, Francis, a Scotch clergyman (son of the preceding), was licensed to preach in 1831; presented the same year to the living at Lintrathen, and ordained; resigned in 1855; went with the army to the Crimea as chaplain; and was stationed at Shorncliffe in 1871, after which no further record of him appears. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 756.

Cannan, John, a Free-will Baptist minister, was born in Westmoreland, England, in 1789. At the age of eighteen he became a Christian, and joined the Independents. In 1832 he came to the United States, landing at Boston, where he was employed as a city missionary about one year. He became a member of the Baldwin Place Baptist Church, then under the pastoral charge of Rev. Baron Stow. Soon after he made an engagement to supply the pulpit of Rev. John Newton Brown, in Exeter, N. H., next preached for a time in Vermont, and subsequently removed to the state of New York. He afterwards resided in southern Ohio, and became interested in the theological teachings of Oberlin. He finally joined a Free-will Baptist Church. After preaching about two years, he was laid aside from his public labors, and purchased a farm in Camden, Lorain Co., O., where he died, Aug. 31, 1848. See Morning Star, 1848. (J. C. S.)

Cannan, Thomas, a Scotch clergyman of Galloway, was licensed to preach in 1816; presented to the living of New Spynie in 1818, and ordained; transferred to Carsphairn in 1826, and died Dec. 19, 1832, aged forty-two years. See Fasti Eccles. Scotiæ, i, 707; iii, 173.

Cannatus, Saint, was born at Aix, and retired to the desert. He was afterwards elected bishop of Marseilles, and is supposed to have died there in the 5th century. See Bollandus, Acta Sanctorum, Oct. vii, 25.—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Cannell, John, an English Methodist minister, was born in the Isle of Man in 1807. He was converted at the age of sixteen; commenced his ministry in 1836; labored for six years in his native isle; was then stationed successively on six English circuits; became a supernumerary in 1861; and died at Peel, Isle of Man, Dec. 3, 1862. He was modest but earnest in all he said and did. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1863, p. 12.

Cannera. See CAINER.

Cannetti, Pietro, an Italian Camaldule and poet, was born at Cremona in 1660. He went through the various grades of his order, and finally became its general. He died in 1730, leaving a Dissertation on a poem of Frezzi, bishop of Poligno. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cannibalism is the eating of human flesh by men. This practice has existed from the most ancient times, and has given rise to descriptive terms, such as, Greek, ἀνθρωποφάγος; Latin, anthropophagus; Anglo-Saxon, man-eta; English, man-eater. Since the discovery of the New World, the name of the Caribs of the West India islands, recorded by Columbus under the Latinized forms Canibales or Caribales, has come into popular use as a generic term for man-eaters, cannibals.

Although man is by nature carnivorous as well as frugivorous, and although human flesh is not in itself indigestible, mankind in general have looked with horror on those individuals and tribes who have been addicted to cannibalism. Simple association of thoughts causes the remains of dead kinsmen or friends to be treated with respect and tenderness, as may be seen from the conduct of some of the rudest races. Moreover, association attaches the horror of death to anything connected with the dead, so that many tribes avoid the mention of a dead man's name, and even abandon his hut and destroy the furniture he has used. Finally, the religious doctrine that the soul outlives the body has evidently led survivors to propitiate the honored and dreaded spirit by respectful disposal of the corpse. The following causes seem to have led to the disgusting practice of cannibalism under peculiar circumstances:

1. Famine.—The records of shipwrecks and sieges prove that hunger will sometimes overcome the horror of cannibalism among men of the higher nations, and it is not surprising that savages, from their improvident habits, should, in severe climates, be often driven to this extremity. For example, the natives of Tierra del Fuego, when starving in winter, would kill and devour the oldest woman of the party, in preference to their dogs, which they alleged were useful in securing game. See Fitzroy, Voyage of H. M. Ships Adventure and Beagle, ii, 183; Salgado, Memorie dell' Australia, p. 240; Waitz, Anthropologie der Nurvölker, vi, 749; Bancroft, Native Races of the Pacific States, i, 120; Back, Expedition to Great Fish River, p. 227; Ellis, Polynesian Researches, i, 359; Martin, Mariner's Tonga Islands, i, 116.

2. Fury or Bravado.—Among the North American Indians the eating of the flesh of their slain enemies is defended as satisfying both hunger and revenge. See Schoolcraft, Indian Tribes, iii, 242; Hennepin, ii, 159;

Müller, Amerikanische Urreligionen, p. 145. The same practice, with a similar design, has been prevalent in Polynesia. See Ellis, i, 309; Waitz, vi, 158; Turner, Polynesia, p. 194.

3. Morbid Affection.—Cases of the dead being devoured by relatives and friends (especially children by parents), from a sentiment of affection, are recorded among low savage tribes. See Spix and Martius, Reise in Brasilien, ii, 692; Angas, Savage Life in Australia, etc., i, 73; Howitt, Impressions of Australia, p. 134; Herodotus, iv, 26, who describes the funeral feasts of the Issedones of Central Asia, where the relatives ate the body of the deceased with other meat, the skull being set in gold and preserved; these were sacred rites performed in honor of the dead.

4. Magic.—There is a wide-spread idea belonging to primitive savage magic that the qualities of any animal eaten pass into the eater. This motive naturally leads to cannibalism, especially in war, where the conqueror eats part of the slain enemy for the purpose of making himself brave. This idea is found among the natives of Australia, and in New Zealand; among the North American Indians, whose warriors would devour the flesh of a brave enemy, and particularly the heart as the seat of courage; also in Ashantee. An English merchant in Shanghai, during the Taeping siege, met his servant carrying the heart of a rebel, which he was taking home to eat to make him brave. See Macgillivray, Voyage of Rattlesnake, i, 152; ii, 6; Keating, Long's Expedition, i, 102; Wilson, Western Africa, p. 168; Tylor, Early History of Mankind, p. 133; Eyre, Central Australia, ii, 259, 329.

5. Religion.—Cannibalism is deeply ingrained in savage and barbaric religions, whose gods are so often looked upon as delighting in human flesh and blood. The flesh of sacrificed human victims has even served to provide cannibal feasts. The interpretation of these practices is either that the bodies of the victims are vicariously consumed by the worshippers, or that the gods themselves feed on the spirits of the slain men, while their bodies are left to the priests and people. Thus, in Fiji, "of the great offerings of food, native belief apportioned merely the soul thereof to the gods, who are described as being enormous eaters; the substance is consumed by the worshippers. Cannibalism is a part of the Fijian religion, and the gods are represented as delighting in human flesh" (Williams, Fiji and the Fijians, i, 231). In Mexico the cannibalism which prevailed was distinctly religious in its origin and professed purpose. See Prescott, Conquest of Mexico; Bancroft, vol. ii; Waitz, vol. iv. On the sacrificial character of this practice in Africa see Lander, Records, ii, 250; Hutchinson, Ten Years Among the Ethiopians, p. 62.

6. Habit.—In many instances the practice of cannibalism did not stop with the performance of the religious rite. In some of the above examples the practice must have become acceptable to the people for its own sake. Among conspicuous cannibal races may be mentioned the semi-civilized Battas of Sumatra, whose original instigation to eating their enemies may have been warlike ferocity, but who are described as treating human flesh as a delicacy, and devouring not only war-captives, but criminals, slaves, and, according to one story, their aged kinsfolk. See Junghub, Batta-Länder; Marsden, History of Sumatra, p. 390; Wuttke, Geschichte des Heidenthums, i, 172. Cannibalism assumes its most repulsive form where human flesh is made an ordinary article of food like other meat. This state of things is not only mentioned in descriptions of West Africa, where human flesh was even sold in the market, but still continues among the Monbuttu of Central Africa, whose wars with neighboring tribes are carried on for the purpose of obtaining human flesh, the bodies of the slain being dried for transport, while the living prisoners are driven off like cattle. See Schweinfurth, Heart of Africa; Pigafetta, Regnum Congo. For the effect of such cannibalism on the population see Gerland, Aussterben Naturvölker, p. 61. From the best evidence attainable, it is thought that prehistoric savages were in this respect like those of modern times, neither free from cannibalism nor universally practicing it.—Encyclop. Britannica (9th ed.), s. v.

Cannon, Edward, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Princess Anne County, Va., in 1784. He joined the Church in 1803, and in 1807 was admitted into the Virginia Conference, wherein he continued effective until 1822, when he became superannuated. He died Aug. 11, 1833. Mr. Cannon possessed an active, vigorous mind, was studious, popular, and extensively useful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1835, p. 347.

Cannon, John, a Reformed Presbyterian minister, was born at Dungiven, County Derry, Ireland, Nov. 19, 1784. In 1788 the family came to America, and settled in Pennsylvania. After studying some time in a private way, he entered Jefferson College (then at Cannonsburg, Pa.), where he graduated in 1810. In 1811 he commenced a private course in theology, and was licensed in 1815. In due time he accepted a call from a congregation in Greensburg (Pa.) and vicinity, and in 1816 was ordained and set apart as the minister of that congregation. At a meeting of the Synod in 1821 he was appointed to visit the Church in South Carolina, to aid in settling certain difficulties which had arisen. He remained pastor at Greensburg until Feb. 2, 1835, when he died. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, IX, v, 68.

Cano, Alonzo (surnamed el-Racionero), an eminent Spanish architect, painter, and sculptor, called "the Michael Angelo of Spain," was born at Granada, March 19, 1601. He was the son of Miguel Cano, an eminent architect, who educated him. He was eight months with Francisco Pacheco, a painter. His works are to be found in all the principal churches and convents of Cordova, Madrid, Granada, Seville, etc. There is a celebrated picture by him, representing a subject from the life of St. Isodoro, in the Church of Santa Maria, at Madrid. As a sculptor, he executed several fine works, particularly a marble group of The Madonna and Child, in the great church at Lebrija, and two colossal statues of St. Peter and St. Paul. As an architect, he made several additions to the palaces; and public gates and triumphal arches were erected from his designs. He died Oct. 5, 1665. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cano, Alphonso del, a Spanish Jesuit, was born in Andalusia in 1580. After having received holy orders and the degree of doctor of divinity, he joined his order in 1606. He lectured on philosophy at Segovia, on theology at Compostella, Valladolid, and Salamanca, with great success. Twice he acted as provincial of Castile, and visitor at Toledo. He died at Salamanca, May 10, 1643. See Jücher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Antonii, Bibliotheca Hispanica, s. v. (B. P.)

Cano, Melchior. See CANUS.

Canobio, EVANGELISTA, an Italian theologian, was born at Milan. He was a Capuchin friar, and became one of the most able canonists of his time. He was appointed, in 1564, general of his order. He took a distinguished part in the Council of Trent in 1542. He died at Perugia in 1595, leaving Consulta Varii in Jure Canonico (Milan, 1591):—Annotationes in Libros Decretalium, etc. See Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canôbus (or Canopus), in Egyptian mythology, was the original name of a city, near one of the mouths of the Nile, which was therefore called the Canobian mouth. A certain Canobus was also spoken of, who came as pilot with Menelaus to Egypt, and in memory of whom the Spartans named the city Canobus. He was associated with Menuthis, his wife, and both are said to have been divinely worshipped ten miles from the city.

The name Canopus was also given to a kind of jug, with a short foot, wide body, narrow neck, and a head thereon, which was used to filter the water of the Nile, and represented the god Canobus. In later times it was related that the ship of Osiris was the same as that which the Greeks called Argo, and that its pilot Cano-bus had been placed among the stars. Strabo says: "There is a temple of Serapis here (at Canopus), which is visited with such godly fear that even the most celebrated men show respect for it, often sleeping in this temple in order to find out for themselves and others the future." This temple of Serapis was that of Canobus, who was a symbol of fruitfulness.

Canobus was really the funeral god Amset, one of the four infernal deities who had charge of the viscera of the dead.

Canoc (or Conoc, also Mochonoc, the syllable Mo being added, according to Colgan, for "the sake of honor and extraordinary respect"), an Irish saint, was born at Brecknock, in Wales, but was the son of Brecan, an Irish prince, who had settled at Brecknock. Canoc flourished about A.D. 492, and founded monasteries both in Ireland and Wales, his chief foundation having been Gallen, in Queen's County. Colgan gives his life (Acta Sanctorum, 311 sq.), under Feb. 11, but according to others his feast is celebrated Feb. 13, where Mart. Doneg. has Conan; and Nov. 18, where the same martyrology has Mochonoc.

Canon (from κανών, or canna, a straight reed used for ruling lines), in ecclesiastical usage, is (1) A rule (Gal. vi, 6) ordained by the Fathers; a constitution of the Church. (2) The creed, as the criterion for distinguishing a Christian; the "rule of faith" of Tertullian, Irenæus, and Jerome. (3) A clerk who observes the apostles' rule, or fellowship (Acts ii, 42); one borne on the list, or canon of a cathedral or collegiate church, as the term is used by the councils of Nice and Antioch, and bound to observe its statutes or canons, and the rule of a good and honest life. Hence, in later times, when the names of benefactors were inserted in the rolls or canons of numberless communities, the popes confined the term canonization to those whom they admitted to the title of saint. The word is one of rank and precedence, and should be prefixed in addressing a prebendary. Canons are primarii among all others of the clergy of the city or diocese. The name is attributed to pope Pelagius or Gregory, and was certainly common in the reign of Charlemagne; in the 6th century it designated all clergy on the Church register affording a perfect example of liturgical obedience, and receiving a canonical portion—a regular annual pension—out of its revenues. This list is called Album by Sidonius Apollinarius; Matricula by the Council of Nice; and by Augustine the Table of Clerks.

CANON OF THE LITURGY is that portion of the liturgy which contains the form of consecration, and which in the Roman and most other rites is fixed and invariable. It is also called Actio, and the title Infra Actionem (infra being used for intra) is not uncommonly placed over the prayer Communicantes, in ancient MSS. Pope Vigilius (Epist. ad Profuturum) and Gregory the Great (Epist. vii, 64) call the canon Prece, or Prece Canonica, as being the prayer by pre-eminence. It is also called Secreta and Secretum Missæ, from being said in a low voice. Tertullian appears to use the word Benedictio to designate that portion of the eucharistic service which included consecration.

1. Early Notices of this Portion of the Liturgy.—Justin Martyr gives an account of this portion of the service (Apol. i, c. 65). In Irenæus are several passages which contain liturgical indications (Haeres. iv, 18, § 4, p. 251, etc.). Tertullian's works contain many eucharistic allusions, as do also those of Cyprian (Epist. 63, c. 17; 62, c. 5, etc.), Origen (Contra Celsum, lib. 8, p. 399), Cyril of Jerusalem (Catech. Mystag. v), Basil (De Spiritu Sancto, c. 27), Chrysostom (on 2 Cor. Hom. 18, etc.), and Augustine (Ad Infant. de Sacramentis, p. 227).

2. The Canon in Existing Liturgies.—In the extant liturgies we find the canon existing in all cases of nearly the same elements, variously arranged. We have, in nearly all canons, after the Sanctus, commemoration of the Lord's life and of the institution, oblation, prayer for living and dead, leading on to the Lord's Prayer, with Embolismus. In the eastern liturgies always, sometimes in the Gallican and Mozarabic masses, but not in the Roman or Ambrosian, we have an epiclesis, or prayer for the descent of the Holy Spirit on the elements. The canon is generally understood to exclude the Sanctus, while the Anaphora includes both the Sursum Corda and the Sanctus. The table on the next page shows the principal differences of arrangement. See LITURGY.

CANON, IN MUSIC. 1. The peculiar form of musical composition called by this name was unknown to the ancients, the earliest example extant being of the 13th century, we believe.

2. The accepted values of the several notes constituting the musical scale, expressed philosophically. Among the Greeks, followed throughout by Latin writers on music, there were two somewhat conflicting schools, the Aristoxeneans and the Pythagoreans. Pythagoras having discovered the simple ratios of $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{2}{3}$, $\frac{3}{4}$, $\frac{4}{5}$, for the octave, the fifth, the fourth, and the tone (major), which last is the difference between the fourth and fifth, his disciples maintained that all sounds should be defined by determinate ratios, while Aristoxenus discarded this idea altogether, and maintained that the tetrachord, or fourth, should be divided into intervals, the values of which were to be determined by the ear only. This is probably the germ of the dispute which has lasted to the present day respecting the temperament of instruments with fixed tones; and as the true measure of an interval is a logarithm, it was, of course, impossible to reconcile completely these two opinions.

Ptolemy examined the matter, and established the truth of the Pythagorean views: Euclid seems to have endeavored to combine them, that is, if the two treatises attributed to him, the Introductio Harmonica and the Sectio Canonis, are both genuine. The latter of these is usually considered genuine, and it is purely Pythagorean and rigidly exact; while the former, which is certainly Aristoxenean, and perhaps written for popular use, is considered more doubtful.

The canon of the scale, then, is the system of ratios into which a resonant string is to be divided so as to produce all the notes which are assumed; or, which is the same thing, the relative lengths of strings for these notes which are to be fixed in an instrument and stretched with the same tension.

The Aristoxenean system, from the Introductio Harmonica, supposes a tone to be divided into twelve equal parts, and the tetrachord therefore into thirty.

Euclid also gives the divisions of the string (which he calls also the canon) according to the diatonic system.

3. Ambrose decreed the use of the diatonic genus alone in church music; and it is probable that the chromatic and enharmonic genera soon fell into general desuetude, or only existed as curiosities for the learned.

The Jews are believed to have used a canon proceeding by thirds of tones, thus giving eighteen notes in the octave. It is stated that the Pythagorean canon has been developed into an Arabic scale of seventeen sounds.

CANON OF ODES is applied to a part of the office of the Greek Church, sung to a musical tone, for the most part at Lauds, and which corresponds to the hymns of the Western Church. A canon is usually divided into nine odes, each ode consisting of a variable number of stanzas or troparia, in a rhythmical syllabic measure, prosody being abandoned except in three cases. The canon is headed by an iambic, or occasionally a hexameter line containing an allusion to the festival or the contents of the canon, or a play upon the saint's name, which forms an acrostic to which the initial letters of each troparion correspond. This acrostical form is thought, with probability, to be derived from Jewish practice. The nine odes have generally some reference to the corresponding odes at Lauds, especially the seventh, eighth, and ninth. In practice, the second ode of a canon is always omitted, except in Lent. The reason given is, that the second of the odes at Lauds (the song of Moses, Deut. xxxii), which is assigned to Tuesday, is more a denunciation against Israel than a direct act of praise to God, and is on that account omitted except in Lent. Hence the second ode of a canon, which partakes of the same character, is also omitted except on week-days in Lent. It is not said on Saturday in Lent. The tone to which the canon is sung is given at the beginning, and each ode is followed by one or more troparia, under different names. After the sixth ode the Synaxarion, or the commemorations which belong to the day, are read. Among the principal composers of canons were John of Damascus, Joseph of the Studium, Cosmas, Theophanes, and Sophronius of Jerusalem. As an example of canons may be mentioned "the Great Canon," the composition of St. Andrew, archbishop of Crete. The word canon is applied in the Armenian rite to a section of the psalter, which in that rite is divided into eight sections called canons.

Canon is the name of a Japanese god, who, as represented in their temples, presided over the waters and the fish. His votaries exhibited him with four arms, and the lower part of his body swallowed by a large sea-monster; his head crowned with flowers; holding in one hand a sceptre, in another a flower, a ring in the third, and having the fourth closed, with the arm extended. Over against him stood the figure of an humble penitent, one half of whose body was concealed within a shell. The temple was adorned with arrows and all sorts of warlike instruments.

Canon (Lat. Canonicus), JOHN (sometimes called Marbes), an English Franciscan monk of the 14th century, studied some time at Oxford, from which he removed to Paris. He there became a pupil of Duns Scotus, whom he always imitated. He afterwards returned to Oxford, and there taught theology until his death, about 1340. He was particularly learned in the Aristotelian philosophy, and in civil and canon law. His published works are, In Aristotelis Physica Lib. viii (1481), and some other treatises. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Canonarcha was (1) an ecclesiastical officer of the Church of Constantinople, below the order of anagnostes, or reader. (2) The title of an officer in some monasteries, who called the brethren together.

Canonical Age. See AGE, CANONICAL.

Canonical Letters (called also Letters Dimissory) were granted in the early Christian Church to the country clergy who wished to remove from one diocese to another. The Council of Antioch forbade country presbyters granting such letters, but the privilege was not taken from the chorepiscopi. Such letters might be granted or refused at the will of the bishop, but no clergyman was allowed to remove from his own church or diocese without canonical letters from his own bishop.

Canonical Life. See CANONS REGULAR.

Canonical Pensions were annuities granted in the ancient Christian Church to those who had spent the greater part of their lives in the service of the Church, and desired to be disburdened of their office on account of age and infirmity. It was granted out of the revenues of the Church by authority of the synod.

Canonicals is a term for the dress prescribed by the canons to be worn by the clergy, and in actual use in Fielding's time. In 1766 the Connoisseur alludes to the appearance in the streets of the doctor's scarf, pudding-sleeve gown, starched bands, and feather topgrizzle. George Herbert, when ordained priest, laid aside his sword, which he had worn as a deacon, and adopted a canonical coat.

Canonici is a name applied to that portion of the clergy who occupy an intermediate position between the monks and the secular clerks. As living together under a rule of their own, they were often regarded popularly as a species of monks; while, inasmuch as their rule was less strict, and their seclusion from the world less complete, they were sometimes, from a monastic point of view, classed even with the laity, as distinguished from those who were "religious." The canonici did not fully assume this quasi-monastic character till the 8th century.

The canonici were at first the clergy and other officials attached to the church, and were so called either as bound by canons, or more probably as enrolled on the list of ecclesiastical officers.

Some bishops, even before the 5th century—for instance, Eusebius of Vercellæ, Ambrose of Milan, the great Augustine, and Martin of Tours—set an example of monastic austerity to the clergy domiciled with them which became widely popular. Gelasius I, at the close of the 5th century, founded an establishment of "canonici regulares" at Rome, in the Lateran. References to such a practice occur in the canons of the second and third councils of Toledo (16th century), and in the writings of Gregory of Tours. In the third Council of Orleans, A.D. 588, the canonici are forbidden secular business. The college in which the canons resided, or rather the church to which the college was attached, is styled "canonica" in a charter in 724.

But Chrodegang, in the latter part of the 8th century, was virtually the founder of the canonici. By enforcing strict obedience to the rule and the superior, he tightened the authority of the bishop over the clergy of the cathedral. His canonici were, like monks, to reside in the cloister, to have a common dormitory and refectory, but were allowed a life interest in private property, which, however, reverted to the Church after their death. Thus the discipline of the cloister was rendered more palatable to the clergy; while a broad line of demarcation was drawn between them and monks. They were not to wear the monk's cowl. The essential difference between a cathedral with its canonici and an abbey-church with its monks has been well expressed thus: the canonici existed for the services of the cathedral, but the abbey-church for the spiritual wants of the recluses happening to settle there. Chrodegang's institution was eagerly adopted by Charlemagne in his reformation of ecclesiastical abuses; and it was evidently his intention to use these colleges of canons for educational purposes.

The rule of Chrodegang was short-lived, being too severe to be generally accepted by the clergy, especially in England. Even where it had been at first in vogue, the rule of Chrodegang was soon relaxed. The canonici became, first, a community dwelling together under the headship of the bishop, but not of necessity under the same roof with him; next, an "acephalous" community; and, gradually, instead of representing the clergy of the diocese, they developed into a distinct, and, sometimes, antagonistic body. As their wealth and influence increased, they claimed a share in the government of the diocese.

Canonry is the office held by a canon of the Church of England (q. v.). It includes special prerogative and an ecclesiastical benefice; the spiritual right of reception as a brother, a stall in choir, a voice in chapter, and receiving a prebend or canonical portion annexed to it out of the Church revenues, in consideration of ecclesiastical duties performed in it. Every canonry has, of necessity, a prebend, and every prebend, of necessity, a canonry, belonging to it. By the Act 3d and 4th Vict., the canonries are reduced to 134. See PREBEND.

Canons, Book of, was a set of rules formed for the government of the Scottish Church, by order of Charles I, and designed to establish episcopacy and subvert the Presbyterian constitution of the Church. In 1634 it was agreed that such a book and a liturgy should be framed in Scotland, and submitted to Laud, Juxon, and Wren for their revision and approval. In April of the following year the Scottish prelates met at Edinburgh, and brought the Book of Canons as near to perfection as possible, after which they forwarded it to Laud, who revised and amended it. It was then confirmed under the great seal, by letters patent bearing date May 23, 1635. Dr. Hetherington says (Hist. of the Church of Scotland, i, 275), "The canons contained in this book were subversive of the whole constitution of the Church of Scotland. The first decrees excommunication against all who should deny the king's supremacy in ecclesiastical affairs; the next pronounces the same penalty against all who should dare to say that the worship contained in the Book of Common Prayer (a book not yet published, nor even written) was superstitious or contrary to the Scriptures. The same penalty was decreed against all who should assert that the prelatric form of Church government was unscriptural. Every minister was enjoined to adhere to the forms prescribed in the liturgy, on pain of deposition; which liturgy, as before stated, was not yet in existence. It was decreed, also, that no General Assembly should be called, but by the king; that no ecclesiastical business should even be discussed, except in the prelatric courts; that no private meetings, which were termed conventicles, and included presbyteries and kirk-sessions, should be held by the ministers for expounding the Scriptures; and that on no occasion, in public, should a minister pour out the fulness of his heart to God in extemporary prayer. Many minute arrangements were also decreed respecting the ceremonial parts of worship, as fons for baptism, communion altars, ornaments in church, modes of dispensing the communion elements, the vestments of the clerical order, and all such other idle mummeries as the busy brain of Laud could devise, or the fantastic fooleries of Rome suggest." The utmost excitement prevailed throughout the country when the character of the Book of Canons became known. Though episcopacy had been established in Scotland for thirty years, the publication of this book, instead of reconciling the people to that mode of ecclesiastical government, only tended to increase their antipathy to it. See Stevenson, Hist. of the Church of Scotland, p. 159-164; Neal, Hist. of the Puritans, ii, 277 sq.

CANONS OF EUSEBIUS are ten tables, composed by Eusebius for the comparative study of the Gospels, indicating by numbers the parallel passages of the Evangelists and those peculiar to each. See EUSEBIUS.

CANONS, HONORARY, are canons exempted from observing the hours. Sovereign princes and nobles were occasionally regarded as honorary canons of cathedrals; as the emperor, at Strasburg, Liege, Bamberg, Ratisbon, Cologne, Spiers, Utrecht, Aix-la-Chapelle, St. Peter's and St. John Lateran, Rome; the king of France, at Poitiers, Chalons, Sens, Anjou, Tours, and as warden of St. Quentin and abbot of St. Hilary; the king of Spain, at Burgos, Toledo, and Leon; and the queen of England, as first curial of St. David's. The prerogative was due to the unction of the sovereign at coronation. The dukes of Bourges and Burgundy had stalls at Lyons; the count D'Astorga at Toledo; the duke of Brabant at Utrecht; the count De Chasteluz at Autun; and the counts of Anjou at Tours. The princes of Mecklenburg held four prebends at Strasburg. The twenty extravagantes at Toledo assisted only on certain anniversaries. In cathedrals of the new foundation twenty-four honorary canons, so called by a blunder, may be appointed by the bishop, pursuant to a recent act of parliament; they may be called upon to take duty in church, but have no vote in chapter. In foreign cathedrals they are called supernumerary, fictitious, or improper canons, not being regarded as of the body. There are three classes in foreign churches: (1) Expectants, canonici in herbâ, with right of succession to the next vacancy. (2) Honorary, canonici in aere, merely titulars, without succession, but having a stall if the chapter concede it. (3) Supernumeraries, by-canons, added by a new foundation. The honorary canon is not bound to residence, can retain a living requiring continuous residence, and is not to be called canon, but always honorary canon.

CANONS, MINOR (also called vicars), are clergymen in England attached to a cathedral under the dean and chapter. During the period from the Conquest to the Reformation, each canon was bound to maintain a vicar skilled in music, to supply his place when absent, in the ministrations of the Church. Before the Reformation they were enjoined to keep perpetual residence, and never to be absent without leave from the dean. In 1835 power was given by the ecclesiastical commissioners, with the sanction of an order in council, to reduce the number of minor canons; in no case more than six, nor less than two; each to have an income of £150; each may hold one benefice, but within six miles of the cathedral.

CANONS SECULAR are those of cathedral and collegiate foundations, who mixed more or less with the world, and ministered the offices of religion to the laity. The title first appears in 1059, when it was used by pope Nicholas in the Council of Rome; but the existence of such canons in England, who had separate houses, may be traced back three centuries earlier. Such are the canons of cathedrals of the old foundation, and collegiate churches. Their oldest title was in Germany: senior, retained in the ancien of some Rhenish cathedrals; or brother, then canon and lord; and lastly capitular, as being members of the chapter. As Christianity spread, the number of the clergy augmented, and the bishop chose from them some of the most learned to live in common with him in the episcopium, or bishop's house, as his assistants and advisers. In time similar colleges were founded in other places, where the clergy lived in a building called the canonica, minster, or cloister, and performed religious worship, receiving food and clothes from the bishop: they were termed canons, and the bishop's vicarius was called prior, provost, or dean. From this ancient arrangement of common habitation and revenues, the custom survives in some parts of the collation to canonries by the joint consent of the bishop and chapter. A single trace remains in England, at Chichester, where the dean and chapter have six stalls in their patronage. Prebends at length were instituted, by a division of the common fund; and although the canons lived apart in their separate houses, yet, from their aggregation in one close, their daily presence in choir and union in chapter, they were supposed still to dwell together. After the Reformation the vicars were required to occupy their college and halls, and the last trace of the common life has been but recently lost. In the 8th century the councils of Aix and Verne, and in the 9th century those of Tours (813), Meaux (845), and Pont-sur-Yonne (876), required clerks to maintain the canonical life in a cloister near the cathedral, with a common refectory and dormitory, observing the teaching of the Scriptures and the Fathers under the bishop, as if he were their abbot. In Germany the canons were called dom-herren, and in Italy dom(ini), the masters of the cathedral; as, at Lincoln, the dignitaries were known as masters of the fabric; at Liege they were called trefonciars (terre fundarii), lords of the soil; at Pisa, ordinarii, by special privilege of Nicholas II, owing to their jurisdiction as ordinaries over the inferior ministers; at Constantinople, decumans; at Cologne and Lyons, counts; and at Besançon, Compostella, and Seville, cardinals; at Evreux, barons. Sometimes, from their right of electing the bishop and their president, they were known as electors; and as being graduates, and in recognition of their rank, domini, or lords. Every canon is a prebendary—a canon as borne on the church list, and a prebendary as holding a prebend or revenue. In cathedrals of the new foundation, residentiaries, by the new act, are no longer called prebendaries, but simply canons. In the old foundations all are canons and prebendaries, residentiary, stagiarri, stationarii, nati; or non-residentiary; the latter, at Lichfield, were called exterior, or extraneous. In the foreign cathedrals were three classes: (1) capitulars, perpetuals, simple or ordinary; numeral, or major canons in actual possession of stalls; (2) the German domicellares or domicelli, the chanoines bas-formiers of Angers, Sens, and Rouen; by-canons, minor canons, or lordlings, in distinction from the majores domini, or dom-herren; expectants of vacancies; honorary, or supernumeraries, elected by the bishop and chapter, who augmented the efficiency of the choir and received small payments, but ranked after the vicars or beneficiaries; and (3) canons elect, not yet installed. Every canon in England and France gave a cope to the fabric; in Italy, the Peninsula, and Germany they paid a stipulated sum. Canons had the right of wearing mitres at Lisbon, Pisa, Besançon, Puy, Rodez, Brionde, Solsona, Messina, Salerno, Naples, Lyons, and Lucca; these were plain white, like those of abbots, as a sign of exemption from the jurisdiction of the ordinary, and probably a corrupt use of the end of the almuce. Some canonries are attached to archdeaconries or livings, like St. Margaret and St. John, Westminster, 1840; and some to university offices, as those of Christ Church to the professors of divinity, 1605, and Hebrew, 1630; of Worcester to the Margaret professor, 1627, now exchanged for a stall at Christ-church, 1860; of Rochester to the provost of Oriel; of Gloucester to the master of Pembroke College, Oxford; and of Norwich to the master of St. Catherine's Hall, Cambridge, by queen Anne. The principal of Jesus College, Oxford, had formerly a stall at St. David's. By a recent act the professors of Greek and Hebrew at Cambridge have stalls at Ely, and the occupants of the chairs of pastoral theology and ecclesiastical history at Christ-church. James I confiscated a stall at Salisbury to endow a readership at Oxford. The professors of Greek and divinity hold stalls at Durham. At Lisieux the bishop was earl of the city, and the canons exercised the criminal and civil jurisdiction; on the vigil of the feast of St. Ursinus, two, habited in surplices, crossed with bandleers of flowers, and holding nasegays, rode to every gate, preceded by mace-bearers, chaplains, and halberdiers in helmet and cuirass, and demanded the city keys; they then posted their own guard, and received all the fees and tolls, giving to each of their brethren a dole of wine and bread.

Canōpus. See CANOBUS.

Canopy, in Gothic architecture an ornamented projection over doors, windows, etc.; a covering over niches, tombs, etc. Canopies are chiefly used in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, although they are not uncommon in the Early English, and are occasionally found over the heads of figures, etc., in late Norman work.

Early English canopies over niches and figures are generally simple in their forms, often only trefoil or cinquefoil arches, bowing forwards, and surmounted by a plain pediment, as on the west front of the cathedral at Wells; the canopies over tombs are sometimes of great beauty and delicacy, and highly enriched, as that over the tomb of archbishop Gray in York Minster.

In the Decorated style, the canopies are often extremely elaborate, and are so various in their forms that it is impossible to particularize them; some of the more simple of those over figures, niches, etc., consist of cinquefoiled or trefoiled arches, frequently ogees, bowing forwards, and surmounted with crockets and finials; some are like very steep pediments with crockets and finials on them; others are formed of a series of small feathered arches, projecting from the wall on a polygonal plan, with pinnacles between and subordinate canopies over them, supporting a superstructure somewhat resembling a small turret or a small crocketed spire; of this description of canopy good specimens are to be seen at the sides and over the head of the effigy of queen Philippa in Westminster Abbey. The canopies over tombs in this style are often of great beauty; some consist of bold and well-proportioned arches with fine pediments over them, which are frequently crocketed, with buttresses and pinnacles at the angles; many tombs of this style, when made in a wall, have an ogee arch over them, forming a kind of canopy with hanging tracery.

In the Perpendicular style, the canopies are more varied than in the Decorated, but in general character many of them are nearly alike in both styles; the high, pointed form is not to be met with in Perpendicular work; a very usual kind of canopy over niches, etc., is a projection on a polygonal plan, often three sides of an octagon, with a series of feathered arches at the bottom, and terminating at the top either with a battlement, a row of Tudor flowers, or a series of open carved work.

The canopies of tombs are frequently of the most gorgeous description, enriched with a profusion of the most minute ornament, which is sometimes so crowded together as to create an appearance of great confusion. Most of our cathedrals and large churches will furnish examples of canopies of this style. They are sometimes called Testers (q. v.).

Canossa, PAULUS. See PAULUS Gloucester Cathedral, c. 1430.

Canova, ANTONIO, one of the most celebrated sculptors of modern times, was born in the village of Possagno, near Treviso, Nov. 1, 1757. He lost his father when three years old, but the family had long followed the vocation of stone-carvers, and the youth had cultivated an artistic taste; and after some preliminary training he was sent by the Venetian government to complete his studies in Rome; for which purpose he was granted a pension of three hundred ducats per annum for three years. This judicious liberality was the indirect cause of Canova's settling in Rome, and his studies there eventually in a great measure contributed to the revival of the arts in the 19th century. His first work of note was the group of Theseus and the Minotaur; this was succeeded by the great monuments to popes Clement XIII and XIV, and Pius VI, which raised the reputation of Canova above that of all his contemporaries; the monument of Clement XIII is that in St. Peter's, of which the celebrated reposing lions form a part. Canova's works are extremely numerous, and are singularly graceful, combining nature with classic beauty and proportion; his extraordinary ability, and perhaps industry also, are well displayed in the noble collection of casts after his works, preserved together in the academy at Venice, among which Hercules, in the tunic of Deianira, hurling Lichas into the sea from the rock, is a most imposing group. Some of his best works are preserved in the Vatican, as the Boxers, and many others; his celebrated Venus is in the Pitti Palace at Florence; The Three Graces are in England; at Apsley House is a colossal statue of Napoleon. Canova died at Venice, Oct. 12, 1822, and a magnificent design which he had made for a public monument to Titian was, with slight alterations, adapted, and in 1827 executed by some of his pupils in commemoration of his own memory; it is in the church of the Frari. A painting of the Descent from the Cross, which he executed for the church of his native village about 1800, shows how eminent he might have become in this branch of art. Canova was in every sense a most successful artist; his reputation is world-wide; he amassed great wealth, and was created marquis of Ischia by the pope. There is a portrait of him by Sir Thomas Lawrence. See Missirini, Vita di Antonio Canova (1824); also the Life of Canova, by Cignorara (1823), Roscini (1825), and D'Este (1864); Canova's Works, by Moses, etc.

Canpendu, BERNARD DE, a French bishop, was elected to this office at Carcassonne in 1267, and spent his time in the care of his diocese and in separating the ecclesiastical and temporal interests. He died in January, 1278. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cantrisius (or Cantrensius) was an officer of the Church of Constantinople, whose duty it was to look after the pontifical vestments of the patriarch; to assist him to habit himself; to hold the censer at mass, or the veil of the chalice; and to sprinkle the blessed water upon the people, while the hymn of the Holy Trinity was sung.

Cant (from cantus, singing), in an ecclesiastical sense, denotes properly the whining or nasal tone common with many persons in their religious exercises, akin to what has been called "the clerical tone" in the pulpit. The Quakers were once proverbial for this peculiarity, amounting to a decided "sing-song" utterance, and it is said, not without a measure of truth, that the denomination of a clergyman may very generally be distinguished by his intonation. In a wider sense the word cant has come to designate an affectation of piety by outward demonstration, and this is a fault into which Christians are very liable to fall. Set phrases are often used by them, and stereotyped expressions, especially in prayer, without any definite meaning or propriety. All this savors of hypocrisy, and is sure to degenerate into formalism. The best prevention is an earnest spirit of sincere devotion in the fear of God, and a resolute watchfulness and criticism of one's self in public utterances. Elocution itself is not a safeguard against such mannerisms, and a theatrical air in a minister is only another form of cant. Whatever is assumed for effect in religion, without being natural and spontaneous, may be classed under this head.

Cant (and Canted), a term in common use among carpenters to express the cutting off the angle of a square. Any part of a building on a polygonal plan is also said to be canted, as a canted window, or oriel, etc.

Canted Square.

Cant, Alexander, A.M., a Scotch minister, graduated at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1636; was licensed to preach in 1639; admitted to the living of Banchory-Ternan before 1646; became a member of the Commission of Assembly in 1648, and one of the commissioners for visiting the University of Aberdeen in 1649; joined the Protestors in 1651; was deprived on the establishment of episcopacy at the Restoration, and charged with "seditious carriage" in 1662, and died before 1681. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 521, 522.

Cant, Andrew (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, father of the foregoing and of the following, was regent of King's College, Aberdeen; was admitted to the living at Alford in 1617; nominated for a living at Edinburgh in 1620; resigned after October, 1629, and settled at Pitsligo in 1633, having been tutor in the family of Forbes. He tried to get up supplications to the privy council against the service book of 1637, which led to his being called "an apostle of the Covenant;" went to Aberdeen with two celebrated ministers in furtherance of that object; and was a member of the assembly which met at Glasgow on that business. He was transferred to Newbattle in 1638, instituted in 1639, and transferred to Aberdeen in 1641. He was a member of the Commissions of Assembly from 1642 to 1649, inclusive, and had his expenses paid by parliament in consideration of his "great pains and travel, his fidelity and care, and for the payment of his losses." He was elected moderator of the General Assembly in 1650, joined the Protestors in 1651, demitted his charge in 1660, and died April 30, 1663, aged seventy-eight years. He was the most active partisan of the Covenant in the north of Scotland, and had powerful influence with the nobles who adhered to it. It is held by some that from this zealous minister the term "cant" has arisen, signifying the whining tone of a preacher, or a pretension to piety or goodness which is not felt. This is confirmed by an essay in the Spectator of Addison. His publications were, Titles of our Blessed Saviour:—Sermon preached in the Greyfriars Church (Edinb. 1638);—Two Sermons on Renewing the Covenant. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 293; iii, 463, 464, 546, 635.

Cant, Andrew (2), a Scotch clergyman, was promoted from regent at Marischal College, Aberdeen; called to Newbattle in 1657, but declined; admitted to the living at Liberton in 1659; and transferred to Trinity College Church, Edinburgh, in 1673. In 1674 a complaint was made to the privy council that "his carriage and expressions were insolent," and the bishop was ordered by the king to remove him back to Liberton; he was reproved and removed to the High Church, Edinburgh, in 1675, holding in conjunction the principalship of the university, elected thereto by the town council. He died Dec. 4, 1685. He was an eminent and solid preacher. He published three works in Latin. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 27, 32, 115.

Cant, Andrew (3), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1668; was licensed to preach in 1670; called to the living at South Leith in 1671, and ordained. He was absent in England in 1676; had a dispute and quarrel with his colleague, when blows were given, and repentance and reconciliation followed. He was transferred to Trinity College Church, Edinburgh, in 1679, and deprived by the Convention of Estates, in 1689, for not disowning James II, and not acknowledging William and Mary. He was consecrated a bishop of the Nonjurant Church in 1722, and died April 21, 1730, aged eighty years. He published two Sermons on the anniversary of the martyrdom of Charles I (1703, 1715). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 32, 106.

Cant, John, a Scotch clergyman, was admitted minister at Kells in 1659; deprived by the privy council in 1662; accused in 1663 "of still laboring to keep the hearts of the people from the present government in Church and State." The judgment was delayed, and he was excused by the council in July; but was fined in July, 1673, for not observing the anniversary of the king's Restoration. He confessed to the charge, and was summoned as a rebel in 1684, but was liberated in 1685 on giving a bond to live peaceably and not preach. He demitted his pastorate in May, 1689, and though he was restored to his living at Kells, he did not take advantage of the restoration; but as he was in indigent circumstances, each member of the synod gave him the sum of thirty shillings. He died before May 29, 1706. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 715.

Cantabrarii, literally, bearers of the cantabrum, or cruciform standard of the later Roman emperors, in military or religious processions, occurs in the Act. Theodos. xiv, 7, 2, as applied to a guild of such persons, and has no direct connection with ecclesiastical antiquity. Bingham, however (xvi, 5, 6), cites the passage in its bearing upon the mention of centurions by the council in Trullo (c. 61) as connected with divination; and hence it appears in the index to his work as the name of "a sort of conjurors." The cantabrum itself is mentioned by Minucius Felix (Octav. c. 27) and Tertullian (Apol. c. 16), as an instance of the unconscious honor paid by the heathens to the figure of the cross.

Cantagallina, REMIGIO, an Italian designer and engraver, was born at Florence in 1582 (others say 1556), and studied engraving under Giulio Parigi. He also had the credit of being the instructor of Callot and Della Bella. He died in 1630. His principal religious work is The Immaculate Conception, after a painting by Callot. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cantalicio (or Cantalycius), GIOVANNI BATISTA (called Valentino), an Italian prelate and poet, was born at Cantalice, Abruzzo. He received his name from the city of his birth, and his surname from Caesar Borgia, bishop of Valencia, by means of whose power he obtained, in 1503, the bishopric of Penna and Altri, and assisted at the general Council of Lateran in 1512.

He died in 1514, leaving Epigrammata (Venice, 1493). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cantaliver.

Cantaliver, a kind of bracket, whether of stone, wood, or iron, used to support eaves, cornices, balconies, etc., usually of considerable projection.

Cantarini, Isaac Vita, a rabbi of Padua, who died in 1720, is the author of מִצְוֵי צֶדֶק, The Time of the Final Redemption (Amsterdam, 1710):—מִצְוֵי צֶדֶק, i. e. The Fear of Isaac, or a History of the Persecution of the Jews at Padua, August 10, 1684 (ibid. 1685):—מִצְוֵי צֶדֶק, a Refutation of the Charge Brought against the Jews of Killing Infants, written against Geuse's De Victima Humana, published with Wulfer's Theriaca Judaica (Nürnberg, 1681). See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 141. (B. P.)

Cantarini, Simone (also called Simone da Pesaro), an eminent Italian painter and engraver, was born at Oropezza, near Pesaro, in 1612, and studied first under Pandolfi, and afterwards under C. Ridolfi. He died at Venice in 1648. The following are some of his principal etchings: Adam and Eve Eating the Forbidden Fruit; The Repose in Egypt; The Virgin Mary, with a Glory and the Infant Jesus; St. John the Baptist in the Wilderness, holding his Cross and a Cup. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Cantel, PIERRE JOSEPH, a French Jesuit, was born at Ils (Normandy), Nov. 1, 1645, and died Dec. 6, 1684, at the Jesuits' College at Paris, of an illness brought on by excessive study. He wrote, Metropolitanarum Urbium Historiæ Civilis et Ecclesiasticæ: Tomus Primus, (Paris, 1684, 4to):—De Vocibus quæ ad Ecclesiæ Administ. Pertinent:—De Pallio et Cruce Archiepisc.:—De Vicariis et Legatis Rom. Pont.:—De Synodis:—De Ratione et Subscribendis et Sedendis in Synodis:—De Electione Rom. Pont.:—De Cardinalibus, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canteleu, NICOLAS, a French hagiographer of the Benedictine order, was born at Saint-Valéry-sur-Somme, Picardy. He entered that order at Vendôme in 1649, and was sent to Saint-Germain-des-Près, where he became sacristan, and after distinguishing himself by his piety, died, June 29, 1662, leaving, Insinuationes Divinæ Pietatis, seu Vita et Revelationes S. Gertrudis Virginis et Ebbatisæ ord. S. Bened. (Paris, 1662, a posthumous work). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cantella, a French martyr, was a schoolmistress in Paris, who was burned in 1533, because she was opposed to mass. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, iv, 896.

Canterbury, COUNCILS OF (Concilium Cantuariense). Of these there were several.

I. Held about 608, by St. Austin, in order to confirm the foundation of a monastery which he was about to build near Canterbury, to be dedicated to Peter and Paul.

II. Held in 969, by Dunstan, archbishop of Canterbury, Edgar, the king, being present, who, advocating the celibacy of the secular clergy, spoke with warmth of their negligent and dissolute conduct at that time. At the end of this celebrated speech of king Edgar, a plain hint is given of the violent measures then in contemplation by that monarch and the archbishop. See Wilkins, Concil. i, 246.

III. Held in 991, in which those of the clergy of the cathedral who refused to become monks were turned out, and monks appointed in their places, to whom also great privileges and possessions were granted. See Spelman, Conc. Angl.

IV. Held Nov. 1, 1439, by Henry Chichely, archbishop of Canterbury. A constitution was made for augmenting vicarages. It declares that there were in the province of Canterbury many vicarages belonging to rich churches, too poor to afford a livelihood to their vicars, who were unable to afford the necessary expense of prosecuting a suit before the ordinary for the augmentation of their portion. It then orders that proceedings in such cases shall therefore be summary, and conducted in a plain manner, and that ordinaries shall admit such vicars to prosecute such causes "in forma pauperum," and shall take care to assign them such portions as shall be suitable to the revenues of their several churches. See Johnson, Ecc. Canons, A.D. 1439; Labbe, Concil. xiii, 1282; Wilkins, Concil. iii, 535.

V. Held in 1554, by cardinal Pole, in which, for the sake of peace, the alienation of Church property, made in the preceding reigns, was sanctioned. See Wilkins, Concil. iii, 101.

Cantianilla. See CANTIANUS.

Cantiānus, CONCILIIUM. See KENT, COUNCIL OF.

Cantiānus, Saint, an early prince and martyr, was born at Rome, and beheaded at Aquileia. He suffered execution with Cantius, his elder brother; Cantianilla, his sister; and Protus, their Christian preceptor, A.D. 304. Although they were of the illustrious family of the Anicians, and relatives of the emperor Carinus, these three young persons had been educated in the Christian faith. In order to flee from the persecutions of Diocletian and Maximian, they sold what they possessed at Rome, distributing its price among the poor, and went to Aquileia. There they continued to practice their religion, encouraging the imprisoned Christians to suffer for their faith. Information against them having been given to the emperor, they were arrested as they were about to hide themselves, at a short distance from Aquileia, near the tomb of Chrysogones, their friend, who had suffered martyrdom shortly before. Their heads were cut off on the spot. A priest, Zoilus, buried their bodies close by that of Chrysogones. Afterwards their remains were removed to Aquileia, but Milan, Bergamo, and other cities of Lombardy, Germany, and France, pretend likewise to be in possession of the bodies of these saints. Their festival is May 31, the traditional day of their death. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Canticles is the liturgical name for the Te Deum, Benedictus, Benedictus, Magnificat, and Nunc Dimittis. The songs of Moses, Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, and Isaiah are specimens of Biblical canticles; hymns inspired at the moment on a special occasion. After the 5th century canticles were added to psalmody. The Benedictus is mentioned by Amalarus in 820, and by St. Benedict, nearly three centuries before, as the canticle from the Gospel. Te Deum was sung at matins every Sunday before the Gospel-lectern, by the rules of St. Benedict and St. Cæsarius of Arles, c. 507. The Magnificat occurs in the office of Lauds in the latter rule, and in the office of the Eastern Church; in the Capalla, GIOVANNI MARIA, a Dominican of Saluzzo, lived in the 16th century, and taught sacred literature at Faenza and Bologna, and was made inquisitor-general at Cremona. He died Nov. 2, 1596, leaving, Scintilla della Fiamma Innossa, etc.:—Arca Salutis Humana, being a Commentary on the Passion of our Lord (Venice, 1606, fol.):—De Cæna (ibid. 1604). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Capalli, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian theologian of the second half of the 17th century, was dean of Arezzo, and wrote Ricamo dell' Abito Monacale (Venice, 1680). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capalti, FRANCESCO, an Italian composer, born at Fossombrone (in the Roman States), lived in the latter part of the 18th century. He was chapel-master of the cathedral of Narni, and published, Il Contrappuntista pratico, Ossiano Dimostrazioni fatte Sopra l'Esperienza (Terni, 1788). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capax was a bishop at the second council of Rome, A.D. 344.

Capece, Angelo, an Italian theologian of the order of Theatines, who lived at the beginning of the 18th century, wrote, Discorsi Sugli Recitati in Diverse Chiese (Rome, 1711). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capece (Lat. Capicius), Marco Antonio, an Italian theologian, was born at Naples in 1569. He was of a patrician family, entered the order of Jesuits, and devoted himself to preaching, and after that to instruction, but would not accept the bishopric of Nicotero, which was offered to him. He died at Naples, Nov. 18, 1640, leaving A Funeral Oration on Queen Margaret of Austria. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capece-Latro, GIUSEPPE, a Neapolitan archbishop and publicist, was born Sept. 23, 1744. He obtained when quite young the archbishopric of Taranto, which gives to the titular the rank and privileges of a primate of the kingdom. These distinctions did not prevent him, however, defending the principles of an enlightened philosophy, and fighting against the old ideas, the superstition and hierarchical pretensions of the papal see, yet all this without neglecting his duties as a Roman Catholic priest. During the reign of Joseph Bonaparte at Naples, in 1806, Capece-Latro was minister of the interior, and continued to direct this department under Joachim Murat in the most distinguished manner. After the fall of that king the prelate lost his archbishopric, retired altogether from public affairs, and made of his house a place of reunion for all persons distinguished for their rank and knowledge. Capece died Nov. 2, 1836. His last writing is remarkable for its style; it is the Elogio di Frederigo II, re di Prussia (Berlin, 1832). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capedunūla was the vessel in which the sacred fire of Vesta was preserved.

Capeets, in Finnish mythology, were goblins, spirits of the air, who were possessed of great power, and even had battles with the moon (eclipses), out of which the latter came only with great difficulty. There were various kinds of these Capeets, who all had their special duties. Sorcerers often made use of them in order to injure persons whom they hated.

Capefigue, JEAN BAPTISTE HONORÉ RAIMOND, a French historian and publicist, who was born at Marseilles in 1802, and died in 1873, is best known as the author of, Histoire Philosophique des Juifs (Brussels, 1834):—Histoire de la Réforme, de la Ligne et du Règne de Henri IV (ibid. 1834-35, 8 vols.). He also wrote, History of Philip Augustus (1831, 4 vols.):—The First Four Centuries of the Christian Church (1850, 3 vols.):—The Church in the Middle Ages (1852, 2 vols.):—The Church in the Last Four Centuries (1854, 4 vols.). Capel, Daniel, an English clergyman, son of Richard, was ejected from his living in Gloucestershire, and, after practicing medicine, died at Stroud in 1679.

Capel, Richard, an English divine, was born in Gloucester in 1586, educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and in 1609 was made fellow. He was presented by Stephens with the rectory of Eastington, in his native county, where he wrote his excellent book on Temptations, in which he set out to prove that there is no temptation to which a man is subject but what might be suggested by his own corruption, without any suggestion from Satan. When the reading of the Book of Sports on the Lord's Day was pressed upon him, he refused to comply, and willingly resigned his see, preaching afterwards gratuitously to neighboring congregations. He died Sept. 21, 1656. See Fuller, Worthies of England (ed. Nuttall), i, 563; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Capelain. See CAPELLANUS.

Capell, DANIEL S., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in North Carolina, Dec. 15, 1801. He received a careful religious training; emigrated with his parents to Kentucky in 1816; and, after having been local preacher for several years, in 1830 entered the Kentucky Conference. In 1844 he moved to Missouri and joined the St. Louis Conference, wherein he labored until within a short time of his death, which occurred on his way to California, June 10, 1852. Mr. Capell was more than an ordinary preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1852, p. 379.

Capella (or De Capilla), Andres, a Spanish prelate, was a native of Valencia, and first entered the order of Jesuits, but in 1569 left it and became a Carmelite. He was made bishop of Urgel, in Catalonia, in 1587, and died Sept. 22, 1610, leaving a Latin Commentary on Jeremiah, and Reflections for the Sundays of the Year, and Festivals, etc., in Spanish.—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Capella, Cæcilius, is mentioned by Tertullian (Ad Scap. 3) as one among other instances of governors who, in their last moments, had painful memories of the persecutions they had instituted.

Capella (or Cappelli), Marco Antonio, an Italian Franciscan, was born at Este, in Lombardy, about the middle of the 16th century, and taught theology at Udine, Anagni, and Venice. He wrote against the interdict of Paul V, in 1606, on the famous Venice question, but afterwards he entirely retracted his position. He died in September, 1625. He also wrote, Contra Præsumtum Ecclesiasticum Regis Angliæ Jacobi (Bologna, 1610, 4to; Cologne, 1611, 8vo):—Disputationes de Summo Pontificatu B. Petri et de Successione Episcoporum Romani in Eundem Pontificatum (ibid. 1621):—De Appellationibus Eccl. Africanæ ad Romanam Sedem (Rome and Paris, 1622, 8vo; and at Rome in 1722, together with the Life of Capella, written by Bontoni). See Biog. Universelle, vii, 81; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Capellani, ANTONIO, a Venetian engraver, was born about 1730, and studied under Wagner. In 1760 he engraved the principal part of the portraits in Bottari's edition of Vasari. The following are some of his prints: The Marriage of St. Catherine; The Repose in Egypt; Adam and Eve driven from Paradise.

Capelli, Giovanni Maria, abbot, an Italian canon and composer, was born at Parma. In 1690 he was appointed canon of the cathedral of his native city, and afterwards was chosen composer at the court of the grand-duke Ranuco II. He wrote a great deal for the theatre. He died at Parma in 1728. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capelli, Marco Antonio. See CAPELLA.

Capellino, Giovanni Domenico, a Genoese painter, was born in the year 1580, and studied under Paggi. His best works are The Death of St. Francis, in San Niccolo, at Genoa, and his St. Francesca Romana, in San Stefano. He died in the year 1651.

Capels, William G., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was a member of the Missouri Conference. For more than twenty years his words and manner charmed, moved, and convinced the thousands who listened to his wonderful preaching. He died from the effects of a wound received in his own house, from a shell fired during the battle of Glasgow, Mo., in 1864. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1865, p. 542.

Capernaum. The arguments on the site of this important place in New-Test. history are thus given afresh in Bäderer's Syria, p. 373 sq.:

"It has been a subject of much dispute where the ancient Capernaum is to be sought. At Capernaum there was a custom-house and a garrison. Doubtless, therefore, it was situated close to the frontier of the tetrarchy of Philip; and in this respect it corresponds with Khân Minyeh. This inference might be drawn from the direction of the Roman roads across the hills, leading into the tetrarchy, except for the probability that there was also a frequented road from the mouth of the [upper] Jordan, skirting the [west] shore of the lake, in which case the frontier-town would be farther north. After a victorious engagement in the plain of Batkha, Josephus, who was injured by a fall from his horse, caused himself to be carried to Capernaum, which was probably the nearest place, and therefore not Khân Minyeh. When Christ crossed the lake from Capernaum to the opposite shore (Mark vi, 32 sq.), the crowd ran round the north end of the lake to meet him, and a glance at the map shows that Tell Hûm is more likely to have been the starting-point than Khân Minyeh. Again, when Mark informs us that the disciples took ship to the plain of Gennesaret (vi, 45, 53), and John that they sailed to Capernaum (vi, 24), we are hardly justified in inferring that Capernaum lay in the plain of Gennesaret."

Major Wilson argues in a similar manner in favor of Tell Hûm (in Plumptre's Bible Educator, iii, 184 sq.).

Lieut. Conder well sums up the evidence thus (Tent-work in Palestine, ii, 182 sq.):

"The various scholars and explorers who have written since Robinson are divided into two parties, one placing Capernaum at the ruins near Khân Minyeh, the other selecting the large site at Tell Hûm. The places are only two and a half miles apart, but modern disputants are not content with such wide limits. There is a point which strikes one as curious in the controversy. In all the arguments usually brought forward, no reference is made to the information which can be deduced from Jewish sources dating later than Bible times. To this information I would call attention."

"Identification, properly so called, is impossible when the old name is lost; but in the case of Capernaum traces of the name may perhaps be recovered still. It is generally granted that the Talmudic Caphar Nahum, or 'Village of Nahum,' was probably identical with the New-Test. Capernaum, and it is on this supposition that the only philological claim of Tell Hûm is based; but the loss implied of an important radical at the commencement of the name Hûm, if it be supposed to be a corruption of Nahum, is a change of which we have scarcely any instance; moreover, Hûm in Hebrew means 'black,' and still retains its original signification in Arabic. Tell Hûm was so named, no doubt, from the black basalt which covers the site. If we are to seek for an ancient corresponding title, I would suggest Caphar Ahim, a town mentioned in the Talmud with Chorazin, and famous for its wheat, as being probably the ancient name of the ruined site at Tell Hûm. Even if this town were standing in the time of Christ, there seems no more reason why its name should be mentioned in the Gospels than that Taricheæ or Sepphoris should be so noticed, or that Chorazin should be mentioned by Josephus when speaking of the same district."

"An investigation of the name Minyeh is more satisfactory. In Hebrew it is derived from a root meaning 'lot,' or 'chance.' In Aramaic it has an identical meaning, and the Talmud often mentions the Minal, or 'Diviners,' under which title were included not only every kind of sorcerer and enchanter, but also the early Jewish converts to Christianity. Now this word Minal is intimately connected with Capernaum. In the Talmud there is a curious passage (quoted in Buxtorf's Rabbinic Lexicon) where 'sinners' are defined as 'sons of Caphar Nahum,' and these Huta (or sinners), we find from another passage, were none other than the Minal. It is evident that the Jews looked on Capernaum as the headquarters of the Christians, whom they contemptuously styled 'sorcerers,' and the importance thus attached by them to that town, as a Christian centre, is in accordance with the expression in the Gospel, where Capernaum is called our Lord's 'own city' (Matt. ix, 1). The Talmudic doctors speak, then, of Capernaum as the city of Minal, and as such it continued to be regarded by the Jews down to the 14th century. In A.D. 1334 Isaac Chelo travelled from Tiberias to Caphar Anan (Kefr 'Anan), presumably by the direct road passing near the 'Round Fountain.' He was shown on his way the ruins of Caphar Nahum, and in them the tomb of Nahum, and he remarks incidentally as to the place, 'here formerly dwelt the Minal.' It is evident that he cannot be supposed, without twisting the narrative, to refer to any place so far from his route as is Tell Hâm. The site at Minyeh would have been within a mile and a half of his road, and the name is apparently connected with Capernaum by his valuable note about the Minal. The same connection is traced in A.D. 1616, when Quaresimus speaks of Capernaum as shown at a place called Minyeh, and thus we are able to trace back an apparently unbroken Jewish tradition connecting Capernaum with the 'Village of the Minal,' and with the ruined site of Minyeh.

"In addition to the Jewish tradition connecting Minyeh with Capernaum, there is a second indication which favors that identification. Josephus speaks of the fountain which watered the plain of Gennesaret, and which was called Capharnahum. It contained a fish named Coracinus, which was also found in the Nile. There are two springs to which this account has been supposed to apply, the one two and a half miles south of Minyeh, the other scarcely three quarters of a mile east of the same site. The first irrigates a great part of the plain of Gennesaret; the Coracinus has been found in it, and the waters are clear and fresh: this is called 'Ain-el-Madowershi, 'the round spring.' The second is called 'Ain Tabghah, and Dr. Tristram points out that the water being warm, brackish, and muddy, is unfit for the Coracinus, which has never as yet been found in it. 'Ain Tabghah is not in the plain of Gennesaret. It is a spring surrounded by an octagonal reservoir, which was built up to its present height by one of the sons of the famous Dhahr-el-'Amr in the last century, and the water is thus dammed up to about fifty-two feet above the lake. An aqueduct, of masonry, apparently modern, leads from the level of the reservoir to the cliff at Minyeh, where is a rock-cut channel three feet deep and broad, resembling more the great rock-cutting of the Roman road at Abila than any of the rock-cut aqueducts of the country. The water was conducted through this channel to the neighborhood of the Khân, or just to the edge of the plain of Gennesaret. It is important to notice that the spring can only have watered the neighborhood of Minyeh after the reservoir had been built, and that it was probably always unfitted for the presence of the Coracinus. As 'Ain Tabghah is not in the plain of Gennesaret, and as it does not irrigate that plain —the modern aqueduct being apparently constructed to supply some mills near Minyeh—it seems impossible to identify this spring with that mentioned by Josephus as the abode of the Coracinus. And even if the Tabghah spring were that of Capharnahum, the case for Tell Hâm is not thereby strengthened, the distance from the spring to that ruin (nearly two miles) being double that from the spring to Minyeh—scarcely three quarters of a mile.

"In favor of the Minyeh site we have then Jewish tradition, and the existence of a spring fulfilling the description of Josephus: but it must not be denied that in favor of Tell Hâm we have a Christian tradition from the 4th century downwards. Jerome places Capernaum two miles from Chorazin. If, as seems almost certain, by the latter place he means the ruin of Kerázeh, the measurement is exactly that to Tell Hâm. The account of Theodorus (A.D. 532) is more explicit, and seems, indeed, almost conclusive as to the site of his Capernaum. Two miles from Magdala he places the Seven Fountains, where the miracle of feeding the five thousand was traditionally held to have taken place; these, as will presently appear, were probably close to Minyeh; and two miles from the fountains was Capernaum, whence it was six miles to Bethsaida, on the road to Banias. These measurements seem to point to Tell Hâm as the 6th-century Capernaum. Antoninus Martyr (A.D. 600) speaks of the great basilica in Capernaum, which it is only natural to identify with the synagogue of Tell Hâm, which seems probably (by comparison with those at Meirûn) to be the work of Simeon Bar Jochai, the Cabalist, who lived about A.D. 120. Arculphus (A.D. 700) visited the fountain where the five thousand were fed, and from the hill near it he saw Capernaum at no great distance, on a narrow tract between the lake and the northern hills. His account thus agrees with that of Theodorus, though in itself so indefinite, that it has been brought as evidence in favor of both the sites advocated for Capernaum. Sewall (A.D. 1108) proceeded along the shore for six miles, going north-east from Tiberias, to the mountain where the five thousand were fed, then called Mensa, or 'table,' which had a church of St. Peter at its foot. It is evident, from the measurements, that this hill was in the neighborhood of Minyeh, where Theodorus also seems to place the scene of the miracle, as above noticed. John of Würzburg (about A.D. 1100) speaks of the mountain called Mensa, with a fountain a mile distant, and Capernaum two miles away. Fretellus (A.D. 1150) is yet more explicit. Capernaum, he says, is at the head of the lake, two miles from the descent of the mountain, and apparently three from the fountain where the five thousand were fed, which fountain would probably be 'Ain-et-Tin, a large source, west of Minyeh, and not far from the hill which Sæwulf points out as being the Mensa. The whole of this topography is summed up by Marino Sanuto, whose valuable chart of Palestine shows us the position of the various traditional sites of the 14th century. On this chart the Mensa is shown in a position which is unmistakable. The valleys which run down to the plain of Gennesaret are drawn with some fidelity, and the Mensa is placed north of them; at the border of the lake Bethesda is shown, about in the position of Minyeh, and Capernaum near the site of Tell Hûm; in the latter press the account is equally clear, Capernaum being placed near the north-east corner of the lake, and Bethsaida just where the lake begins to curve round southward.

Khau Minyeh. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

"Christian tradition points, then, to Tell Hûm as being Capernaum, but Jewish hatred has preserved the Jewish site under the opprobrious epithet of Minyeh; the question is simply whether—setting aside the important testimony of Josephus—Jewish or Christian tradition is to be accepted."

After repeated consideration, and especially since a personal examination of the localities, we are inclined to locate Capernaum at Khau Minyeh, and Bethsaida at Tell Hûm.

Caperolans, a congregation of monks in Italy, in the 16th century, who derived their name from Pietro Caperole, their founder. The monasteries of this order are found at Brescia, Bergamo, and Cremona.

Caperole, PIETRO, a Venetian theologian, of the order of Observantists, gained great celebrity by his preaching. In 1472 he caused the withdrawal of several convents, and formed a new order called Caperolans. Although pope Sixtus IV did not favor this, nevertheless, in 1480, he accorded to him the convent of Velletri. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capers, Samuel Wragg, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Georgetown, S. C., March 5, 1797. He received a classical education at Lodebar Academy, Sumter District; entered upon the study of law, but was converted, licensed to preach, and, in 1828, admitted into the South Carolina Conference. In 1854 failing health obliged him to superannuate, and he retired to Camden, where he died, June 22, 1855. Mr. Capers was strong physically and mentally, a powerful speaker, a generous friend, and an excellent pastor. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1855, p. 628.

Capers, Thomas H., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Sumter District, S. C., March 27, 1811. He was son of the Rev. Gabriel Capers, and nephew of bishop William Capers; joined the Church early in life, and, at the age of nineteen, entered the Georgia Conference. In 1839 he was transferred to the Alabama Conference. He was eminently successful in winning souls; but pecuniary embarrassment compelled him in 1846 to locate, and devote himself to the practice of medicine, and to teaching; in which former vocation he continued until 1864, when he was admitted into the Florida Conference. He died at his post, Oct. 15, 1866. Mr. Capers was a minister of rare ability. His pulpit efforts were earnest, practical, forcible, and his pastoral work a great success. He was wise, sympathetic, energetic. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1866, p. 31.

Capes, GEORGE, an English Baptist minister, was born in 1776. He united with the Little Prescott Street Church, London, in 1797, being baptized by the celebrated Abraham Worth. He entered the ministry in 1808, and became pastor of the Church in Gamlingay, Cambridgeshire, and afterwards in Loughborough, Leicestershire, from 1816 to 1826. His third and last settlement was in Farrington, Berkshire, where he died, May 29, 1835. See (Lond.) Baptist Hand-book, 1836, p. 17. (J. C. S.)

Capet, JEAN, a French theologian and canon, was born at Lille. He received the degree of doctor at Louvain, where he taught philosophy. He died in his native city, May 12, 1599. He wrote, De Vera Christi Ecclesia, deque Ecclesie et Scripturæ Autoritate (Douay, 1584);—De Hæresi et Modo Coercendi Hæreticos (Antwerp, 1591). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capgrave (or Catgrave), JOHN, an English theologian, was an Augustine monk of Canterbury, and afterwards a doctor at Oxford, and provincial of his order. He was an intimate friend and the confessor of Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, and flourished about 1450. He died, according to some accounts, in 1464; according to Pits and others, in 1484. He wrote a Catalogus seu Legendæ Sanctorum Angliæ (Lond. 1516, fol., and printed in English by the celebrated Caxton in 1483). He also left a Commentary on the Holy Scriptures, of which the part relating to Genesis is preserved in the library of Oriel College, Oxford; and that on the Acts in the library of Balliol. Bale gives a full catalogue of his writings (Cent. viii, cap. i). See Landon, Ecclesiastical Dictionary, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Capicerius (or Capitarius, French, chef-cier), an ecclesiastical officer. Some think he had the care of the cera, or tapers, and derived his name a capitendæ cera. Others make him the same as the primicerius, so called from being the first name inscribed on the -cera (or tablet of the church). Martene explains capicerius to be the monk or nun who had charge of the capitulum or presbytery, or of the sacred ornaments and furniture of the church.

Capilupi, YPPOLITO, an Italian prelate and poet, was born at Mantua in 1512. He was appointed bishop of Pavo in 1560, and afterwards legate of Venice. Some of his Elogies are found in the Délices des Poètes Italiens, vol. i. He died in 1580. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capiscol (i. e. Caput Scholæ), a precentor. The title is thus explained: Gregory the Great established at Rome schools of ecclesiastical singing, and in allusion to these, the pontifical speaks of the clerks who accompany the bishop and aid him in his sacred functions, as the "Schola." Thus the term school came to be applied not only to the place where the choristers learned singing, but also to the choir, chanters, etc. Hence the capiscol, in a cathedral, was the chief or head of the school of chanters.

Capisucchi, Giovanni Antonio, an Italian prelate, was born in Rome Oct. 21, 1615. Pope Paul III appointed him canon of the Vatican and auditor of the Rota. In 1555 Paul IV made him cardinal, and afterwards inquisitor and bishop of Lodi. Under Pius V Capisucchi became prefect of the papal palace, governor of Gualdo, and apostolic legate. He died at Rome, Jan. 27, 1569, leaving Constitutions, which he prepared for a synod held at Lodi. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Capisucchi, Paolo, an Italian prelate, was born at Rome in 1479. Pope Clement VII appointed him canon of the Vatican, then referendary of both signatures, auditor of the Rota, bishop of Nicastro, and vicar-general. In 1528 the case of Henry VIII, king of England, who was seeking to obtain a divorce from Catherine of Aragon, was committed to the care of Capisucchi, who espoused the cause of Catherine, claiming that Henry VIII had, by his conduct, laid himself open to censure. Pope Paul III employed Capisucchi advantageously in several important negotiations, especially during the troubles of Perugia and Avignon. Capisucchi succeeded in establishing peace and the papal authority. Paul III, in recognition of this, appointed him vice-legat of Umbria. He died at Rome, Aug. 6, 1539. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capisucchi, Raimondo Camillo, an Italian ecclesiastic and theologian, was born at Rome in 1616. He was the son of Paolo Capisucchi, and marquis of Puy Catin. At the age of fourteen years, on June 8, 1630, he entered the Dominican order, and afterwards became professor of philosophy and theology. Innocent X made him secretary of the Index, member of the board of examination of bishops, and in 1654 master of the sacred palace. On Sept. 1, 1681, Innocent XI appointed him to the cardinalship. He died at Rome, April 12, 1691, leaving Controversiæ Theologicæ, Scholasticæ, Morales, ad Mentem Divi Thomæ Resolutæ (Rome, 1670, 1677): —Censura, seu Votum de Cultu Sanctorum Veteris Testamenti: —De Gradu Virtutum in Sonetis Canonisandis Requisito: —Vita Jesu Christi. Capital (or Cap), the head of a column, pilaster, etc. In classical architecture, the orders have each their respective capitals, which differ considerably from one another, but their characteristics are easily distinguished; there are, however, considerable differences to be found in a few of the ancient examples, as in the Corinthian orders of the temple of Vesta at Tivoli, and of the Choragic monument of Lysicrates at Athens; there are also a few capitals totally unlike those of any of the five orders, as in the Temple of the Winds, at Athens. In Norman and Gothic architecture they are endlessly diversified.

A very common form for plain Norman capitals, especially on small shafts, is one called the cushion capital, resembling a bowl with the sides truncated, so as to reduce the upper part to a square; there is also another form which is extremely frequent, very much like this, but with the under part of the bowl cut into round mouldings which stop upon the top of the necking; these round mouldings are sometimes ornamented, but are often plain; this kind of capital continued in use till quite the end of the period. At a later period the capitals are ornamented with conventional foliage, which gradually approaches to the succeeding style. In the early part of the period also they were generally of rather short proportions, but they afterwards became frequently more elongated, and the foliage and other decorations were made of a much lighter character, approximating to the Early English.

Easton, Hants, c.

Early English capitals are not so much diversified as Norman, although there are many varieties; they are very frequently entirely devoid of carving, and consist of suites of plain mouldings, generally not very numerous, which are deeply undercut so as to produce fine bold shadows, and there is usually a considerable plain space, or bell, between the upper mouldings and the necking; occasionally a series of the toothed ornament, or some similar enrichment, is used between the mouldings; when foliage is introduced it is placed upon the bell of the capital, and, for the most part, but few, if any, mouldings, beyond the abacus and necking, are used with it; the leaves have generally stiff stems; but almost always stand out very boldly, so as to produce a striking and beautiful effect, and they are generally well worked, and often so much undercut that the stalks and more prominent parts are entirely detached. The character of the foliage varies, but by far the most common, and that which belongs peculiarly to this style, consists of a trefoil, the two lower lobes of which (and sometimes all three) are worked with a high prominence or swelling in the centre, which casts a considerable shadow; the middle lobe is frequently much larger than the others, with the main fibre deeply channelled in it. Occasionally animals are mixed with the foliage, but they are usually a sign that the work is late. Some of the richest specimens of thirteenth-century foliage are to be found in the presbytery of Lincoln Cathedral.

In the Decorated style, the capitals very often consist of plain mouldings either with or without ball-flowers or other flowers worked upon the bell, though they are frequently carved with very rich and beautiful foliage; the mouldings usually consist of rounds, ogees, and hollows, and are not so deeply undercut as in the Early English style; the foliage is very different from Early English work, and of a much broader character, many of the leaves being representations of those of particular plants and trees, as the oak, ivy, white-thorn, vine, etc., which are often worked so truly to nature as to lead to the supposition that the carver used real leaves for his pattern; they are also in general extremely well arranged, and without the stiffness to be found in the Early English foliage.

Hampton Poyle, c. 1320.

Perpendicular capitals are usually plain, though in large and ornamented buildings they are not unfrequently enriched with foliage, especially early in the style, when the shafts are circular; it is very common for the necking only, or for the necking, the bell, and the first moulding above it, to follow the same form, the upper mouldings being changed into an octagon; ogees, beads, and hollows are the prevailing mouldings; much of the foliage bears considerable resemblance to the Decorated, but it is stiffer and not so well combined, and the leaves in general are of less natural forms and frequently square; towards the latter part of the style there is often a main stalk continued uninterruptedly in a waved line, with the leaves arranged alternately on opposite sides. See ABACUS.

Capitāni are Christian martyrs commemorated early in November in the calendar of Carthage.

Capitein, JACQUES ÉLISÉE JEAN, a negro convert, a Protestant theologian and missionary, was born upon the coast of Guinea. At the age of seven or eight years he was purchased, upon the banks of the St. Andrew's, by the captain of a Dutch vessel, Arnold Steenhard, who in turn gave him up to a trader of Elmina, James Van Goeh, who gave him the name Capitein, and brought him to the Hague, where he was baptized and instructed in the elements of the ancient and Shemitic languages by Miss Roscam. Early in 1738 Capitein went to the University of Leyden, where he studied theology. After taking his degree he was appointed, in 1742, pastor at Elmina in Africa. After his departure for the coast of Guinea, in the same year, not much was known of him, though some asserted that he had returned to his early idolatrous religion. Among his writings are an elegy on Manger, his master, in Latin verse, translated into French by Gregory, in the Littérature des Nègres:—De Vocatione Ethnorum (Leyden, 1738):—Dissertation Politico-theologica de Servitute Libertatis Christianæ non Contraria (ibid. 1742, translated into Dutch by Jerome of Brillhelin, and containing the portrait of the author):—Uitgewrochte Predikatiën (Amsterdam, eod.). The portrait of Capitein, by Reynolds, is found in Blumenbach's Manual of Natural History. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capitelli, BERNARDINO, a painter and engraver of Siena, was born in 1589, studied under A. Casolani, and R. Manetti, and died in 1639. Little is known of him as a painter, but as an engraver he executed a number of works, among which are the following: The Marriage of St. Catherine; The Repose in Egypt; The Life of St. Bernard of Siena; St. Anthony of Padua, and his Miracles. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capitilavium (Head-washing) is a name for Palm Sunday in France and Spain, because the heads of the Competentes, who were to receive chrism after baptism, were then washed. In 813 the practice was abolished by the Council of Mayence. At Milan the feet of the candidates were washed. See ABLUTION OF THE HEAD.

Capito is the name of several persons in early Christian history :

1. The twenty-fifth bishop of Jerusalem, whose death is placed by Eusebius (Chronicon) in the consulship of Maternus and Bradua, A.D. 185.

2. A Donatist bishop, who joined in presenting a request against Cæcilian, A.D. 313, claiming that the question at issue should be tried in Gaul, which had been free from the temptation that caused the dispute. He was present, accordingly, at Treves, April 28, 315.

3. Bishop in Sicily, present at the Council of Nice.

4. Father of the presbyter Athanasius, named, perhaps, to distinguish his son from the great bishop whose persecutions he shared.

5. An African bishop at the Council of Sardica, A.D. 347.

6, 7. In the Menology of Basil, on Dec. 22, we read of a Capito, sent as bishop to Cherso on the death of Ætherius, and who by a miracle converted the people. On comparing the entry on July 8, we find that Cherso means the Crimea, to which an earlier Capito had been sent, in the time of the Diocletian persecution, and was martyred.

8. A robber who became a hermit, and supported himself in a cave four miles from Antinopolis in Egypt. When Palladius saw him, between A.D. 410 and 420, he had lived there fifty years without entering the city.

Capito, an Italian prelate and geographer, was born at Narni. He entered the order of the Servites, and became archbishop of Avignon. He died in 1576, leaving, Explanations of Certain Passages of the Old and New Test. (Venice, 1579; Cologne, 1581). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capitolina, Saint, was a martyr of Cappadocia, who was first cast into prison, and is said to have been beheaded on Oct. 27, and her servant, Eroteis, on the 28th. The Menologies put their martyrdom under Diocletian, but the MS. Acts under Licinius.

Capitolini was a name of reproach applied by the Novatians to the Catholics, because the latter resolved, in their synods, to receive into communion again, upon their sincere repentance, such as had offered sacrifice in the capitol. See Bingham, Christ. Antiq. bk. i, c. 3.

Capitolinian Plays, in Roman mythology, were solemn scenes enacted in honor of Jupiter, and in memory of the deliverance of Rome by means of the geese of the capitol, when the latter was stormed by Brennus.

Capitolinus is the name of several persons in early Church history :

1. Deputy of Thrace under Julian, who put St. Æmilian to death.

2. Martyr in Nicomedia with bishop Quintilian, celebrated March 8.

3. Martyr in Antioch with Zenobius, Emerita, Italica, Jovian, and Julian, commemorated Aug. 24.

4. Martyr at Rome with Eulalia, commemorated Dec. 11.

Capitolium is a word applied by Latin writers chiefly to certain temples. The first was a small temple, supposed to have been built by Numa, and dedicated to Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva, situated on the Esquiline, near the spot which was afterwards the circus of Flora. It did not receive the name Capitolium until after the foundation of the second one here mentioned, from which it was then distinguished as Capitolium vetus. The second was the Temple of Jupiter Optimus Maximus, on the Mons Tarpeius, so called from a human head being discovered in digging the foundations. This temple was begun by Tarquinius Priscus, continued by Servius Tullius, and finished by Tarquinius Superbus. It was thrice burned to the ground, and thrice rebuilt, the third time by Domitian. The Capitolium contained three temples within the same peri-style, or three cells parallel with each other, the partition walls of which were common and all under the same roof. In the centre was the seat of Jupiter Optimus Maximus, while that of Minerva was on the right, and that of Juno upon the left. Capitolium is sometimes put for the whole mount on which the temple stood, and is also used to distinguish the chief temples in other cities besides Rome.

Capitŭla is the name of a prayer in the Mozarabic breviary, immediately preceding the Lord's prayer. It changes with the day and office, varying much in length, but having no special characteristics to distinguish it from other Mozarabic prayers.

Capitulant is a knight, canon, or monk having a voice in the chapter.

Capitŭlum (or Capitulārē) is (1) Properly a summary or heading, under which many particulars are arranged. (2) Hence, in the plural, codes of law, ecclesiastical or civil, digested under chapters or capita. (3) The word came also to mean the "chapter" itself, of which it is properly the heading; as, e. g. the capitula or short lessons for particular days. (4) From this last-mentioned usage, coupled with the practice of reading a capitulum, or chapter of the rule or of the Scriptures, to the assembled canons or monks, these came to be called, in a body, the capitulum, or chapter. (5) The "little chapter" said at all the canonical hours excepting matins, after the Psalms. It consists of one or two verses of Scripture, usually taken from the Epistles, often from the Prophets, and occasionally from other parts; and is recited by the officiating priest, standing. (6) An anthem in the Ambrosian rite said at lauds after the Psalms and before the antiphon, varying with the day.

Caples, JACOB T., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Jeromesville, O., Sept. 8, 1825. He was converted at the age of fifteen, and educated at Norwalk Seminary. In 1845 he received license to exhort, and in the following year entered the North Ohio Conference, in which he served zealously until his death, July 25, 1860. Mr. Caples was gentle, obliging, and unassuming; as a preacher, grave, able, and eloquent. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1860, p. 322.

Capnomancy (from καπνός, smoke, and μαντεία, divination) is a species of divination employed by the ancient heathen in their sacrifices. If the smoke was thin and light, and went straight upwards, the omen was favorable; but if the smoke was thick and dark, and rested like a cloud over the fire, the omen was unfavorable.

Capocchi, Alessandro, an Italian monk, of the family of the following, was born at Florence, Oct. 14, 1515. At the age of twelve he entered the Dominican order, and made great progress in the Oriental languages. He died at Florence, Oct. 8, 1581. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capocchi (or Capoccius), Reniero, an Italian theologian and poet, was a native of Viterbo. He belonged to the order of Cistercians. Pope Innocent IV made him cardinal. He died in May, 1258, leaving some Latin hymns, among them, Calorum Candor, and Plange Turba Paupercola. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capodiferro, GIAN FRANCESCO, an Italian artist, was a native of Bergamo, and probably the pupil or rival of Fra Damiana of the same place. He was often employed in decorating churches in his native and other cities, and was aided by his brother Pietro and his son Tinino. He died about 1533. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capolongo, ANTONIO, a Neapolitan painter, lived about the year 1480, and studied under Della Lama. There is a handsome altar-piece by him in San Diego, at Naples, representing The Conception, with Saints. In San Niccolò is a picture by him of The Virgin and Infant, with a glory of angels, and several saints.

Capon, JOHN, an English prelate, was bishop of Salisbury in 1547, having been transferred to that see from Bangor. He was a time-serving tool of Henry VIII, and afterwards sat in judgment upon Hooper and other martyrs.

Caponsacchi (Pantaneti), PIETRO, an Italian theologian and miscellaneous author, was a native of Arezzo, and lived in 1575. His writings are more remarkable for their singularity than for their orthodoxy. Some of them are, In Johannis Apostoli Apocalypsim Observatio (Florence, 1572, 1586), dedicated to Selim II, emperor of Turkey:—De Justitia et Juris Auditione (ibid. 1575). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caporella, PIETRO PAOLO, an Italian prelate and theologian, entered the order of Conventual Minorites in 1530, and taught ethics at Naples. In 1552 he was appointed bishop of Cortona, and died in 1556. He wrote, De Operibus Misericordiae, et de Purgatorio:—Quæstiones de Matrimonio Regni Angliæ, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capp, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan minister, was a native of Methwold, Norfolk. Converted when fourteen, he united with the ministry in 1834, and died on his last station, Shrewsbury, July 12, 1862. His sermons were clear, correct in doctrine, vivid in illustration, and were sometimes illuminated by passages of impassioned eloquence. He loved specially the Puritan divines. He was frank and cheerful. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1862, p. 33.

Cappa is a Latin term for (1) a cape or tippet; (2) a hood to a cape or tippet, fastened to the back of the same, so that the hood may be drawn over the head as a protection against the weather; (3) a cope, i. e. a choir and processional vestment. See COPPE.

CAPPA CHORALIS is a choral cope; i. e. a cope of rich material, such as velvet, silk, satin, or cloth-of-gold, richly embroidered, and used in the solemn services of the choir or sanctuary. The figure in the accompanying woodcut is from the brass of abbot Beauforest, circa A.D. 1508, at Dorchester Church, Oxford. He is represented vested in cassock, surplice, amess (almutium), the two furled ends of which hang down in front, and choral cope. He also bears the pastoral staff (but with the crook turned outwards); and a label, with a pious prayer inscribed on it, is placed over his head.

Cappa Choralis.

CAPPA MAGNA is a rich flowing cloak or covering of silk, in some respects resembling the cope, worn by bishops and other dignitaries on state occasions. For bishops, the color of it is purple; for cardinals, scarlet. Its use has been abandoned in the Church of England, though the archbishops still sometimes assume a cope with a train borne by pages.

CAPPA MINOR is a small cape or tippet covering the shoulder. These capes or tippets are commonly worn abroad over the surplice, and are regarded as a necessary part of the choir habit. They were anciently worn in the English Church, and are still ordered by the seventy-fourth of the canons of 1603. The incongruous and absurd mode of wearing mutilated hoods and tippets, hanging round the neck by a ribbon and falling down the back, is a modern innovation, dating from the 17th century.

CAPPA PLUVIALIS is a cope to be worn out of doors in processions, funerals, etc., usually of a coarser material than that worn in choir (cappa choralis), and intended to protect the wearer from the weather.

Cappe, NEWCOME, an English Socinian minister, was born in Leeds, Feb. 23, 1733, and educated at the academies of Dr. Aiken and Dr. Doddridge, and at the University of Glasgow. He returned to Leeds in 1755, and, within a short time after, was chosen co-pastor, and the following year sole pastor, of the dissenting congregation at St. Saviourgate, York, where he remained forty years. He died Dec. 24, 1800, leaving several single sermons, A Selection of Psalms for Social Worship:—Remarks in Vindication of Dr. Priestley, in Answer to the Monthly Reviewers; and other works. See Chalmers, Biog. Dict. s. v.; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Cappel, GUILLAUME, a professor and dean of the faculty of theology at Paris. He was rector of the university when, in 1491, Innocent VIII laid an imposition upon it of a tithe; against which Guillaume Cappel wrote a folio forbidding all members and agents to obey the order of the pope. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cappel, LOUIS (surnamed de Moniambert), a French theologian, was born at Paris, Jan. 15, 1534. He was the uncle of Jacques Cappell (q. v.). At the age of twenty-two he went to Bordeaux with the view of studying jurisprudence. Here he became acquainted with members of the Reformed Church, which he joined. After his return to Paris, his relatives tried to persuade him to resume his pursuit of jurisprudence; but he continued the study of theology, which he had commenced at Bordeaux, and remained true to the Reformed Church. His co-religionists decided to petition the king to issue a decree, allowing the Reformed the free exercise of their religion, and Cappel was asked to plead their case. He succeeded, and the petition being granted, Cappel was appointed preacher at Meaux. Being obliged, on account of the troublesome times, to give up his pastorate, he went to Geneva, and thence to Sedan. In 1569 he accepted a call to Amsterdam, but he soon returned to Sedan. His next pastorate at Clermont was only of short duration. The massacre on St. Bartholomew's day obliged him again to take refuge at Sedan. The French Reformed sent him to Germany, to enlist the assistance of the Protestant princes in their behalf. After he had returned from this mission, prince William of Orange called him to Leyden as professor of theology, and in February, 1575, he delivered his inaugural address at the opening of the university. In the following year he returned to France; and, after having acted as field-chaplain of the Reformed soldiers, he returned to Sedan, where he died, as preacher and theological professor, Jan. 6, 1586. His inaugural address is printed in Meursius's Athenæ Batavæ. See Bertheau, in Herzog's Real-Encyclop. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Cappella, SIMONE, a Neapolitan painter, was born in 1591, and studied at Rome under Annibale Caracci. He painted sacred subjects with great success, and his pictures are quite numerous at his native place. He died in 1641.

Cappellānus (Fr. Capelain), CLAUDIUS, a French theologian, was born in the province of Maine, and lived in 1607. He became a member of the Sorbonne and doctor of theology. He was well versed in the Hebrew language, and claimed that the Greek text has been often perverted by the unfaithfulness or ignorance of the rabbins, citing in support of this opinion numerous passages from the ancient rabbinical works which differ from those of the modern Hebrew Bibles. He published, Mare Rabbinicum Infidum (Paris, 1607, 1693). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cappelli, Francesco (called Caccianemici), an Italian painter, was born at Sassuolo, in the duchy of Modena, and flourished from 1535 to 1586. He studied under Correggio, and resided chiefly at Bologna. There is a picture by him, representing The Virgin with Saints, in the church of San Sebastiano, at Sassuolo. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cappelli, Marco Antonio. See CAPELLA.

Cappellus, JOHANNES, a Calvinistic theologian whose nationality is not exactly known, lived in the middle of the 17th century. He wrote, Ἐπικρίσις de Ultimo Christi Paschate, etc. (Amsterdam, 1644). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cappenberg, ADOLPH, a Roman Catholic theologian of Germany, was born in 1808 at Münster. Having studied theology there, as well as at Bonn and Tübingen, he received holy orders in 1832; was made doctor of theology in 1834, at Munich, and was appointed in the same year professor of church history and ecclesiastical law at the clerical seminary in Posen. In 1844 he was appointed theological professor at Münster, and he died there, Nov. 20, 1880. He wrote, Origenis de Trinitate Doctrina (Münster, 1888):—De Fidei et Scientiæ Christ. Ratione Mutua (ibid. 1844):—Utrum Hussii Doctrina Fuerit Hæretica? (ibid. 1834). (B. P.)

Capper, Mary, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born at Birmingham in 1755. Her parents were members of the Established Church, and educated her with great care. She joined the Society of Friends in her twenty-eighth year. In 1794 she received a certificate as a minister, in which capacity she labored effectually for thirty years, visiting different parts of England and Wales. She was simple and unassuming in her manner, yet her appeals were earnest and pathetic. She died at Birmingham, June 23, 1845. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1846, p. 8.

Capper, Samuel, an English minister of the Society of Friends, was born in 1782, in London. Until his conversion, in his twelfth year, he was a very unpromising child. He became a minister in 1813. He travelled through many parts of the country, holding meetings in the groves and under sheds, that "the poor might receive the Gospel." He died in Bristol, Aug. 29, 1852. See (Lond.) Annual Monitor, 1853, p. 65.

Cappidus, a Frieslander, a genealogist and theologian, who lived about 920, was surnamed Stauriensis, from the place of his birth—Stavoren. He wrote the lives of saints Lebuin, Otger, Plechelm, and Odolph, as well as the genealogy of the sovereigns of Friesland. His MSS. were destroyed in the fire which consumed the library of Stavoren. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cappillātus CATELLUS was a Christian at Rome, A.D. 303.

Cappochi (Lat. Capocienus), Niccolo, an Italian prelate, completed his studies at Perugia, and was very able in canonical law. He went to Avignon, where pope Clement VI appointed him cardinal in 1350. In 1356 he was sent to France with cardinal Talleyrand de Perigord, to effect a reconciliation between king John of France and Edward III of England, but was unsuccessful. Cappochi was again at Avignon at the consecration of Urban V, in 1362, and followed that pope to Rome. About this time he founded a college at Perugia, a monastery at Monte Murcino for the congregation of the Olivetans, and some other institutions. He died at Montefiascone, July 26, 1368. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cappochi, Pietro, an Italian prelate, was made cardinal in 1244 by pope Innocent IV, whom he accompanied the following year to the Council of Lyons. In 1247 he assisted at the Diet of Frankfort, in which William of Holland was named as emperor. After this election Cappochi was commissioned to maintain by arms the pretensions of William, and the interests of the court of Rome in Italy. He acquitted himself ably in this difficult task. On his return to Rome he established the church of Notre Dame de la Place. He died at Rome, May 18, 1259. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capponi, Domenico Giuseppe, an Italian writer and theologian of the Dominican order, lived at Bologna in the early part of the 18th century. He edited, Johannis-Antonii Flamini Epistolæ Familiæres (Bologna, 1744). Flaminio of Imola, one of the best writers of the 15th century, had written in Latin and Italian, in verse and in prose, upon hagiography, grammar, philosophy, literature, etc., and Capponi gives a complete list of his works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capponi, Orazio, an Italian prelate, was born at Florence. He was made bishop of Carpentras in July, 1596, and, at his own expense, rebuilt and embellished the principal edifices of this place. He also formed a mont-de-piété, and made several donations to the hospitals and to the community. Dec. 17, 1597, pope Clement VIII appointed him rector of the province of Venice. Capponi died at Rome, March 29, 1622. He published, Recueil des Ordonnances dans le Comtat Venaissin (Avignon, 1661). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capponi (Della Porreta), Serafino Annibale, an Italian theologian, was born at Bologna in 1536. At the age of sixteen he took the Dominican habit, and first taught metaphysics in his native place, then theology and the sacred Scriptures at Rieti and at Aquila. He was appointed inspector of his order at Ferrara, but left that place in 1581 for Venice. In 1606 he returned to Bologna, and died there, Jan. 2, 1614. He wrote, Scholia super Compendium Theologicæ Veritatis Alberti Magni (Venice, 1588, 1590):—Elucidationes Formales in Summam Sancti Thomæ (ibid. 1588):—Tota Theologia Sancti Thomæ Aquinatis in Compendium Redacta (ibid. 1597):—Veritates Aureæ super Totam Legem Veterem, etc. (ibid. 1590):—Præclarissima Sacrorum Evangeliorum Commentaria (ibid. 1601):—Summa Totius Theologiae D. Thomæ, cum Elucidationibus Formalibus (ibid. 1612). He left in MS. a Commentary on the Psalms, which was printed in 1692 at Bologna. Giovanni Michael published a Life of Serafino Capponi in 1615. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caprais (or Capraïse). See CAPRASIUS.

Capranica, DOMENICO, an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Capranica, near Palestrina, May 31, 1400. He completed his studies at Padua and Bologna, and became one of the most learned men of his time. Pope Martin V employed him in many important matters, gave him the government of Imola, and made him cardinal in 1426, but died without sending to Capranica the cap and ring, emblems of the office; therefore the other cardinals refused to admit him to the conclave.

Capranica addressed to the new pope, Eugenius IV, a solemn protestation, but, instead of obtaining justice, he was even deprived of his titles and revenue. He then addressed the Council of Basle, which restored to him his position. In 1445, being appointed to the government of Perugia, he established order and security there. Nicholas V became his friend; and for his services to Alphonso V, king of Aragon, he was made grand penitentiary. He died Sept. 1, 1458, leaving, Italica Constituenda, ad Alfonsum Regem, in the Hispania Illustrata of Andrew Schott, vol. i:—De Ratione Pontificatus Maximi Administrandi:—De Contemptu Mundi (Florence, 1477; translated into Italian, ibid. ed., and Venice, 1478; also several other editions, in various languages of Europe). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caprano, PIETRO, an Italian prelate and scholar, was born at Rome in 1739. He was made doctor of theology at the Gregorian University, and chosen professor of biblical and ecclesiastical history. Pius VII appointed him prelate of the chamber, and secretary of the commission charged with the correction of the liturgical books of the Eastern Church. Leo XII made him archbishop of Iconium, secretary of the Propaganda, and cardinal, in 1828. Pius VIII appointed him prefect of the Congregation of the Index, which position he held until his death, at Rome, Feb. 24, 1834. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caprara, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, an Italian prelate and statesman, born at Bologna, May 29, 1733, was son of Francesco, count of Montecuccolo, but always bore the name of Caprara, from one of the most celebrated houses of Italy, of which his mother was a descendant. While young he entered the Church. Pope Benedict XIV appointed him vice-legatè of Ravenna, although only about twenty-five years of age. Under Pope Clement XIII, Caprara was, in 1767, sent to Cologne as nuncio. In 1775 Pius VI sent him to Lucerne in the same capacity. In 1785 he received the nunciature of Vienna, where he made himself beloved for his beneficence. He was appointed cardinal in 1792, returned to Rome the following year, and in 1800 became bishop of Iesi. In 1801 he was appointed legatè to the French republic, to secure the adoption of the concordat and the re-establishment of Catholic worship in France; he solemnly declared this accomplished by celebrating mass on Easter day in the church of Notre Dame at Paris, in the presence of the principal authorities, in 1802. He consecrated Napoleon king of Italy, at Milan, in 1805. For nine years he was intimately associated with the French government, and died at Paris, June 21, 1810, blind and infirm, but held in high esteem. He was interred in the church of St. Genevieve, by virtue of an imperial decree. He wrote, Concordat et Recueil des Bulles et Brefs de le Pape Pie VII sur les Affaires de l'Eglise de France (Paris, 1802). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Lichtenberger, Encyclopédie des Sciences Religieuses, s. v.; Winer, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 819.

Caprasius (Fr. Caprais) is the name of several early saints:

1. Martyr at Agen, in Aquitaine, in the time of Diocletian, whose courage under torture made two converts, Primus and Felician; but they were all beheaded, by order of the prefect Dacian, together with St. Faith, Oct. 20 (some say Oct. 6). His life was written by Labenaize (Agen, 1714, 12mo).

2. A monk and presbyter at Lérins, sometimes called abbot of the monastery at Lérins, but it is doubtful if he ever had the charge of that house. Having decided to become a hermit, he went with St. Honoratus and his brother St. Venantius in quest of a place where they might carry out the rule of life they had planned. Before starting they received the tonsure, and then went into Greece and the Peloponnesus. There Venantius died, and the others went to the isle of Lérins, where they founded a monastery and built a church. Capra-sius died about 430, and is commemorated June 1. His relics were left at Lérins. See Acta Sanctorum, June, i, 77; Ceillier, Histoire des Auteurs Sacrés et Ecclésiastiques, viii, 489.

3. A martyr, of whom nothing is known except that he is commemorated in the French Lucensian calendar, as martyred at Castrum Gola, May 25.

There is another doubtful Caprasius mentioned by some authors as prior of Carmel. He is supposed to be the same as No. 1.

Capreole (Lat. Capreolus), JEAN, a French Dominican, was born in Languedoc, and entered the monastery at Rodez. He became professor of theology at Paris in 1409, and died at Rodez, April 6, 1444. On account of his constant defence of the theology of Thomas Aquinas, he acquired the name of "the prince of the Thomists." He wrote, in 1433, a Commentary on the Four Books of the Master of the Sentences (Venice, 1484, 1514, 1519, and 1588); and Defensiones Theologicæ S. Thomæ Aquinatis (ibid. 1483); unless, says Cave, the two works are the same. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capræolus, bishop of Carthage, is known in history in connection with the Council of Ephesus, A.D. 431. Unable to reach the council, because the country was ravaged by the Vandals, he sent a letter in defence of the Catholic doctrine, against Nestorius. This letter was entered upon the acts of the council as from the "most reverend metropolitan," the bishop of Carthage; and is still extant in Greek and Latin. There is also extant another letter by Capreolus on this controversy, in answer to inquiries addressed to him from Spain, by "Vitalis and Constantius, sinners," entitled Epistola de una Christi Veri Dei et Hominis Persona contra recentem Damnatam Hæresin Nestorii. A fragment of the letter which he addressed to Theodosius is extant. Tillemont (xii, 559) supposes Capreolus to have succeeded to the see of Carthage shortly before the death of Augustine, as the letter convoking the council seems to have been addressed to him and to Augustine. He is probably the "priest" in Africa in the time of Aspar, mentioned in the Book of Promises, ascribed to Prosper. The death of Capreolus is generally supposed to have occurred about A.D. 435. His burial was commemorated in the calendar of Carthage between July 21 and 30; the note of the day is lost. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v. For others of the same name, see CAPREOLÆ; CAPRIOLI.

Capreta (or Capretta), GAUDENZIO ERICO, an Italian canonist, was born at Venice, Nov. 22, 1780. He taught theology at Florence, at Pavia, and finally at Parma, and died at the last-named place, Nov. 11, 1806. He wrote, Gustavus III, Suecicæ Rex, etc. (Parma, 1784). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capricorn, a sign of the Zodiac, consisting of twenty-eight stars in the form of a goat. Some say Pan assumed this form when terrified at the giant Typhon, and was transferred by Jupiter to the heavens; while others assert that the constellation was the goat Amalthea, which nourished Jupiter.

Caprini (Lat. Caprinus), GIOVANNI ANTONIO, a Neapolitan theologian and philosopher, was born in Aquila in 1614. He belonged to the society of the Jesuits, and became professor of philosophy and belles-lettres in several houses of his order, as well as rector of various colleges. He published, under the pseudonym of Siderius Leo, the following: Apes Barberinæ Universæ Philosophia:—De Motu Trepidationis Terræ:—Luz Philosophica. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caprioli (Lat. Capreolus), ANDREA, an Italian theologian and canonist, born at Brescia in the beginning of the 16th century, wrote a Treatise on Ecclesiastical Cases (Brescia, 1571). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capron, WILLIAM BANFIELD, a Congregational minister and missionary, was born at Uxbridge, Mass., April 14, 1824. Having pursued a preliminary course at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., he graduated at Yale College in 1846, and became a private tutor at Baltimore, Md., for one year. Afterwards, for six years, he was principal of the Hopkins Grammar-school, in Hartford, Conn. In 1856 he graduated at the Andover Theological Seminary, and on Sept. 3 of that year he was ordained as an evangelist in Uxbridge. Under the auspices of the American Board for Foreign Missions he sailed for India Nov. 24 of the same year, and arrived at Madras, March 6, 1857. For sixteen years he labored in the vicinity of Madura, India. He visited America in 1872, returning to his mission-field in January, 1875; and died in Madura, Oct. 6, 1876. See Cong. Quarterly, 1877, p. 412.

Caprona, ARCANGELO DE, an Italian Franciscan and preacher, was born at Palermo, Sicily. At the age of eighteen he entered a Capuchin convent, in spite of the opposition of his family. He preached with ability in the principal cities of Sicily, and founded, at Trapani, three brotherhoods of his order and a public hospital. He died at Trapani in 1577, leaving Statuta et Documenta pro Confraternitatibus Domus Hospitalis Montis Pietatis et Misericordie in Civitate Drepanensi. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capsa (Capsula, or Capsella) is a name applied to several kinds of receptacles for ecclesiastical use:

(1) The casket used to contain the unconsecrated elements. According to the direction of the Ordo Romanus I, c. 8, two acolytes bear in the procession before the pope, when about to celebrate, "capsas cum sanctis aper-tas."

(2) The vessel in which the reserved eucharist was carried from one place to another. The 17th canon of the Council of Orange enjoins, "cum capsas et calix offerendus est, et admitione Eucharistie consecrandus." Mabillon (Comm. Præv. in Ord. Rom. p. cxxxix) considers this to mean that, together with the capsas containing the sacred vessels and perhaps the eucharist, the chalice was also to be brought to the altar.

(3) A repository or shrine for preserving the relics of saints. In the description of the altar built by St. Benedict at Aniane, we read that an opening was made in the back of it for inserting the "capsas" containing relics of saints (Acta Sanctorum, Feb. ii, 614).

(4) A casket to contain the book of the Gospels. Ado of Venice speaks (Chronicon, A.D. 519) of twenty capsas evangeliorum of gold, richly jewelled.

Capsarium is the room in which the capsas containing relics were placed. Perpetuus of Tours (cir. A.D. 490), in his will, distinguishes a reliquary which he left to a friend from another gilded "theca" which was in his capsarium, and which he left to the Church.

Capsius, HEINRICH, a German Lutheran theologian, was born at Gorden, near Ritzebuttel, in the duchy of Holstein. After having pursued his studies at Wittenberg, he was elected, in 1670, pastor at Burg, where he remained until his death, which occurred May 9, 1706. He wrote, Disputatio de Iona Diaplo Thalassio (Wittenberg, 1659, 1667):—Disputatio de Mystero Verbi (ibid. 1659):—Disp. de Papi-starum Consensu (ibid. 1660). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capsula. See CAPSA.

Capsum is a term for the nave of a church. Gregory of Tours (Hist. Franc. ii, 14) describes a certain church as having thirty-two windows in the sanctuary, twenty in the nave ("in capso").

Captator. A bequest dependent upon the secret will of another was, by the Roman law, termed captatoria institutio, and was forbidden. In a less technical sense, however, the captator answered substantially to our legacy-hunter, and the scandal seems to have been rife in the early Church. A law of Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian (A.D. 370), in the Theodosian code, enacted that clerics or professors of continence were not to frequent the houses of widows and female wards; nor should such persons receive aught from any woman with whom they might become connected under pretext of religion, by any kind of liberality, or by her last will. Every bequest so made was void, and was to be paid into the public exchequer. As respects the clergy, we find, by a law of Valentinian and Marcian (A. D. 455), inserted in Justinian's code, that widows, deaconesses, virgins dedicated to God, nuns, and women bearing any other name of religious honor or dignity, received full liberty to leave, by will or otherwise, any part of their fortune.

Captives, CHRISTIAN REDEMPTION OF. The disasters which fell upon the Roman empire in the 4th and 5th centuries gave a special prominence to this as one of the forms of Christian love. Ambrose was charged by his Arian opponents with sacrilege for having melted down the eucharistic vessels of the church at Milan for this purpose, and defends himself against the charge on the grounds that this was the highest and best use to which he could have applied them (De Offic. ii, 28). Augustine did the same at Hippo (Possidius, Vita, c. 24). Acacius, bishop of Amidas, ransomed as many as seven thousand who had been taken prisoners by the Persians (Socrates, H. E. vii, 21); Deogratias, bishop of Carthage, redeemed the Roman soldiers who had been carried off by Genseric after the capture of Rome (Victor Utic. De Persecut. Vandul. i, in the Bibl. Pat. vii, 591). It is worth noting that the truth that mercy is above sacrifice was formally embodied in ecclesiastical legislation. The code of Justinian (i, tit. 2, De Sacros. Eccles. 21), while forbidding the alienation of church vessels or vestments for any other purpose, distinctly permits them to be pledged or even sold for this or other like works of mercy or necessity.

Capua, COUNCIL OF (Concilium Capuanum). This was held about the year 389, for the purpose of putting an end to the schism which divided the Church at Antioch. The emperor Theodosius granted it at the earnest prayer of the Western Christians. The circumstances of the case were as follows: After the death of Paulinus, Flavianus was, rightly, the sole bishop of Antioch, but Paulinus, before his death, had nominated Evagrius to succeed him, and he, contrary to the express injunction of the canons, was recognized by the party of Paulinus as bishop. None of the acts of the council have come down to us; but Ambrose speaks of it as having been numerously attended by bishops; he also says that the absence of Flavianus was the reason why the affair could not be finally decided in this council. However, in order to preserve the peace of the Church, they granted communion to all the eastern bishops who professed the Catholic faith, and intrusted to Theophilus of Alexandria and the other Egyptian bishops the decision of the differences between Flavianus and Evagrius, because they were biased by no prejudices, and had not joined the communion of either party. Several regulations were also made, one of which forbids to rebaptize or reordain any person; another forbids the translation of bishops. Moreover, in the council, Bonosus, bishop of Macedonia, was condemned, for saying that the blessed Virgin had had children by Joseph after our Lord's birth. See Labbe, Concil. ii, 1039.

Capua, PIETRO DI, an Italian prelate, a native of Amalfi, was made cardinal deacon in 1192 by pope Celestine III, who employed him in three consecutive legations, Naples, Lombardy, and Poland, where he reformed certain abuses. On his return to Italy he was arrested by marauders near Placentia, and obliged to pay a ransom. Innocent III employed him to secure a truce between France and England, and to arrange other important matters. He was also legate of the crusade of 1203. After a short sojourn in the East he returned to Rome, where he died in 1209. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capuānus was a presbyter at the Council of Sinuessa, A.D. 303. See Labbe, Concil. i, 943.

Capuche (or Capouch) is a cap or hood (Fr. capuce) worn by a particular order of Franciscan friars, hence called Capuchins (q. v.). It is secured to the dress, and hangs, usually, down the back.

Capugnano, GIROLAMO GIOVANNI DI, an Italian theologian, a native of Venice, who lived in 1646, left, among other works, Officium Hebdomadæ Sanctæ (Venice, 1636):—Dequo è Ancora di Supere, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Capulla was a white hood, worn by the person to be baptized ("Si propriam capullam propter paupertatem . . . non habeant . . . baptizandus cum capulla cum qua et alius fuerat baptizatus, baptizetur"—Martene, Thes. Anecd. iv, 686 b, 1026 e).

Caput Extōrum was the convex upper portion of the liver, in animals, from the appearance of which, in the victims slain in sacrifice, the ancient Roman soothsayers drew their auguries. If that portion of the liver was unhealthy or wanting, the omen was unfavorable; but if it was healthy and well developed, the omen was favorable. See DIVINATION.

Caput Jejunii is a Latin term for ASH-WEDNESDAY (q. v.).

Caputi, ANTONIO, an Italian biographer of the Capuchin order, a native of Apulia, who lived in the middle of the 17th century, wrote, La Vita del P. Archangelo Scoto Capuccino (Naples, 1650; Bologna, 1656):—La Vita Della S. Febronia Vergine (Venice, 1660). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caputium (1) is a university hood. (2) The hood of a monastic habit. (3) The hood of a cope. (4) The hood of a chasuble. It was the custom of certain religious orders in the Middle Ages to turn the hood of their habit over the back of the chasuble when the latter was assumed. Hence, for convenience sake, a hood was sometimes attached to the back of the chasuble, some examples of which still remain in Germany.

Car (Cart, Chariot, etc.). Herzog (Real-Encyclop. s. v. "Sinnbilder") mentions a sculpture in San Callisto, which contains a chariot without driver, with pole turned backwards, and whips left resting on it. This, as he says, appears evidently intended as a symbol of the accomplished course of a life. In Bottari, tav. clx, two quadrigæ are represented at the base of an arch (covered with paintings of ancient date) in the second cubiculum of the catacomb of St. Priscilla on the Salarian Way. The charioteers carry palms and crowns in their hands, and the horses are decorated with palm-branches, or perhaps plumes; which connects the image of the chariot with St. Paul's figure of the Christian race (1 Cor. ix, 24; 2 Tim. iv, 7). In the catacomb of Prætextatus there is a powerful and striking representation of the chariot of Death, who is taking a dead woman into his car. See HORSE.

Car (or Ker), ANDREW, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1607; was admitted minister at Glenbucket in 1618; transferred to Cabrach in 1633; returned to Glenbucket in 1662, when he was in decrepit old age; and died before Feb. 26, 1663. See Fusti Eccles. Scotiæ, iii, 554.

Carabantes, JOSEF DE, a Spanish theologian, was born in 1628. He was of the Capuchin order, and labored zealously for the spread of Christianity among the savages of America. He died in 1694, leaving, Arts Ad- dicendi atque Docendi Idiomata pro Missionariis:—Lexicon Verborum Indorum:—Practica de Missiones (Leon, 1674; Madrid, 1678):—Prædicas Dominicales (ibid. 1686, 1687). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caracalla was originally a garment peculiar to Gaul, and introduced into Roman use by M. Aurelius Antoninus. Ecclesiastical writers (Bede, Hist. Eccl. lib. i, c. 7) speak of it as worn by clerics, and as corresponding in shape to the Jewish ephod. So says St. Eucherius of Lyons, about the 5th century, referring evidently to the genuine Gallic caracalla, which was a kind of short tunic with sleeves, and furnished with a hood. The caracalla introduced into use by M. Aurelius was, however, lengthened so as to reach nearly to the feet. From the reference to this garment by St. Jerome (Epistle to Fabiola), it is likely that, in common with other garments for outdoor use, it was furnished with a hood.

Caracci (or Carracci), Agostino, an Italian painter and very eminent engraver, the cousin of Lodovico, and the elder brother of Annibale, was born at Bologna, Aug. 16, 1557. He became a pupil successively of Fontana and Passerotti; then visited Rome and studied the works of Correggio and Parmigiano. He afterwards went to Venice, where he distinguished himself as an engraver. He painted his celebrated picture of The Communion of St. Jerome for the Certosa at Bologna, and it is now in the gallery of the Louvre at Paris. He also painted an admirable picture of The Assumption of the Virgin, in the Church of San Salvatore at Bologna. His paintings are very numerous; the following are some of the other noted ones: Jacob Watering the Flocks of Rachel; Eve Giving the Apple to Adam; The Good Samaritan; The Resurrection; The Virgin and Infant Giving the Keys to St. Peter. He died at Parma in 1601 or 1605. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caracci, Annibale, an illustrious Bolognese painter, was born in 1560, and studied under his cousin Lodovico. His principal works are at Rome; they are, The Marriage at Cana, in the chapel of the Farnese palace; The Assumption, in the Madonna del Popolo, and another fine picture representing the body of Christ supported by the Virgin. He died at Rome in 1609. The following are some of his other noted works: The Virgin Suckling the Infant Jesus; The Virgin and Child, with St. John Presenting a Bird; St. Francis, with a Crucifix and a Skull; The Massacre of the Innocents. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caracci, Antonio (called Il Gobbo), an Italian painter, the son of Agostino, was born at Venice in 1583, and studied under his uncle Annibale. One of his best pictures is a frieze in an apartment of the palace of Monte-Cavallo. He painted several frescos, representing The Life of the Virgin and The Passion of Christ, in San Bartolommeo nell' Isola. He died at Rome in 1618.

Caracci, Francesco, a Bolognese painter, the brother of Agostino and Annibale, was born in 1595, and studied under his cousin Lodovico. He attempted to rival that great master, but, failing, left Bologna and went to Rome, where he died in 1622. While at Bologna, he painted St. Roch and the Angel, in the church of San Rocco, and, in Santa Maria Maggiore, The Death of the Virgin, with the Apostles. There are also a few prints by him.

Caracci, Lodovico, an illustrious Bolognese painter, was born in 1555, and was a pupil of P. Fontana. He visited Venice and Florence, studying the works of the best artists. His finest works are at Bologna, and the most important are his fresco paintings in the Palazzi Magonani and Zampieri. There is also a wonderful picture by him in the church of San Domenico, of St. Dominic and St. Francis. He died at Bologna in 1619. He painted, Samson Overcoming the Lion; The Virgin and Infant, with Four Angels; The Holy Family, in which the Virgin is washing linen. See Spooner, Biographical History of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouvelle Biographie Générale, s. v.

Caraccioli, Antonio, an Italian theologian of the 17th century, entered the order of the Theatines, and distinguished himself by numerous works upon ecclesiastical history, among them, Synopsis Veterum Religiosorum Rituum (Rome, 1610; Paris, 1628):—Collectanea Vitæ Pauli, B. Cajetani et Sociorum Vitæ (Cologne, 1612):—Biga Illustrium Controversiarum, etc. (Naples, 1618):—Nomenclator et Propylea in Quatuor Antiquos Chronologos (ibid. 1626). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Caraccioli, Giovanni Antonio, an Italian prelate, was born at Melfi about the beginning of the 16th century. He entered into orders and obtained the abbotship of St. Victor in 1544, which he exchanged in 1551 for the bishopric of Troyes. He showed himself friendly to the Reformation, and openly preached in its favor in 1561; by which he lost the esteem of the Catholics without gaining the Protestants, and was obliged to resign his bishopric, and go to Chateaufort, upon the Loire, where he died in 1569. He wrote, Miroir de la Vraie Religion (Paris, 1544):—a Letter to Cornelius Mais, bishop of Bitonto, to excuse Montgomery in killing Henry II; this letter, dated at Paris, July 14, 1559, is found in the Epistolæ Principum of Ruscelli:—an Epistle, published in 1561, without any indication of place, inserted in the Mémoires of Condé. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Caraccioli, Metello, an Italian Jesuit and preacher, who died at Naples, Dec. 5, 1651, aged seventy-five years, wrote commentaries upon Isaiah, and some other works. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caraccioli (or Caracciolo), Roberto, an Italian theologian (commonly called Robert de Licio, from the city of Lecce, in the kingdom of Naples, where he was born, in 1425), while very young, embraced the religious life among the Observantines of St. Francis, but, finding this rule too severe, entered the Conventuals. He became so celebrated as a preacher that he was called the second St. Paul. He was made bishop of Aquino in 1471, and pope Sixtus IV nominated him to the see of Lecce; but he died at Aquino, May 6, 1495, the investiture not having been effected. His Sermons on Lent and Advent were published (Venice, 1496, 8vo); also, Sermones de Quadr. seu Quadragesimale de Peccatis (Coloniz, 1475, fol.):—Sermones de Tempore ac de Laudibus SS. (Naples, 1489):—Speculum Fidei Christianæ (Venice, 1555):—Tractatus de Immortalitate Animæ (ibid. 1496, 4to):—De Eternâ Beatitudine (ibid. eod. 4to):—De Hominis Formatione (Nuremberg, 1479):—De Incarnatione Christi contra Errores Judæorum, and others. His complete Works were published at Lyons (1508, 3 vols. fol.). See Landon, Eccles. Dict., s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Caracciolo (or Caraccioli), Francesco Maria, an Italian monk, founder of the order of Clerks Regular Minorites, lived at Naples in the 17th century, and was canonized in 1807 by Pius VII. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caracciolo (or Caraccioli), Giovanni Battista (called Battistello), a Neapolitan painter, was born about 1580, and studied under F. Imperato, and afterwards under Caravaggio. He also studied the works of Annibale Caracci at Rome. On returning to Naples he painted several pictures for the churches and public edifices of that city. He died in 1641. The best of his works are, St. Cecilia, in the church of Santa Maria; St. Antonio, in San Niccolo; St. Carlo, in Santa Agnello; The Death of the Virgin and The Assumption, in Santa Anna di Lombardi. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caracciolo (or Caraccioli), Marino (or Martino), an Italian prelate, was born in 1469. At a very early age he came into the house of cardinal Ascanius Sforza of Milan, and took holy orders. In 1515 he attended the fifth Lateran synod as orator of the duke of Milan. Pope Leo X appointed him apostolic prothonotary, and finally took him entirely into his service. In 1519, Caracciolo went as papal legate to Germany, to congratulate the newly elected emperor, Charles V, at the same time urging upon the latter to make the papal measures against Luther more effective. He was also present at the coronation of Charles V at Aix-la-Chapelle (1520), and at the diet of Worms (1521). Caracciolo soon gained the confidence of the emperor, into whose service he now entered. In 1535, pope Paul III made him cardinal-deacon. When the duke of Milan died, the emperor intrusted the government of the duchy to Caracciolo. This prelate died at Milan, Jan. 28, 1538. See Victorelli, Addit. ad Vitæ et Res Gestas Rom. Pontif. (Romæ, 1630); Weiss, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v. (B. P.)

Caracciolo, Niccolo Misquino (or Moschino), inquisitor-general of Sicily, who died at Rome in 1389, was cardinal and legate a latere at Perugia after 1378. His main efforts were to heal the schism brought about by the election of Robert of Geneva against Urban VI, and he wrote, for this purpose, De Vera Canonica Electione Urbani VI. He also wrote, Summa de Penitentia:—Tractatus de Incarnatione Verbi. See Kaulen, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Caradoc, Saint, Priest, and Hermit, was a Welshman of Brecknockshire, who held an honorable post at the court of Rhesus, a Welsh prince. Falling into disgrace with the king, he withdrew to a solitude, was ordained priest, and then retired with some companions to the island of Ayr. The bishop of St. David's sent him to the monastery of St. Hismael, in Ross, or Pembroke-shire; and, when Henry I of England conquered those parts, St. Caradoc and his fellow monks suffered bitter persecution. He died on Low Sunday, April 13, 1124, and was buried in the cathedral of St. David's. See Butler, April 13.

Caraffa, Antonio, an Italian theologian, born at Naples in 1538, was a distant relative of pope Paul IV, who caused him to be educated under William Sirlet. Upon the death of that pontiff he shared the disgrace of his family, and, stripped of all his titles, fled to Padua, where he gave himself up to study. Pius V recalled him to Rome, and in 1586 made him cardinal; and, shortly afterwards, head of the congregation established for the correction of the text of the Bible. He became, under Gregory XIII, apostolical librarian, and died Jan. 12, 1591, leaving a Catena Veterum Patrum in Omnia S. Scripturæ Cantica (Cologne, 1572, 8vo). He also edited the Greek text of the Sept., given with the Notes and Scholia of Morinus (Rome, 1587, fol.); the Letters or Decretals of the Popes, from St. Clement to Gregory VII (8 vols.); and an edition of the Vulgate (Rome, 1588). See Biog. Univ. vii, 107; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Caraffa, Carlo (1), an Italian ecclesiastic, was born at Naples in 1561. At the age of sixteen he entered the order of the Jesuits, but was compelled by ill-health, at the end of five years, to leave it, and took to the profession of arms, which, after some years, he forsook. He then devoted himself to works of piety, making the Hospital of Incurables the chief scene of his labors; here he established a congregation under the rule of St. Francis. Lastly, he founded the Congregation of Pious Laborers (q. v.). He died at Naples, Sept. 8, 1633. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caraffa, Carlo (2), prince of La Roccella, an Italian theologian, became bishop of Aversa (1616), apostolic nuncio, and then legate in Germany, under Urban VIII. He died in 1644, leaving a book entitled Commentaria de Germania Sacra Restaurata (Cologne, 1639). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caraffa, Vincente, an Italian theologian, brother of Carlo (1), was born at Naples in May, 1585. He became a Jesuit at sixteen years of age, and in 1645 was made general of his order. He died at Rome, June 8, 1649, leaving Theologia Mystica, etc. (Cologne, 1660, 9 parts, in 2 vols.). His Life was written by Dan. Bartoli (Rome, 1651). See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Toppi, Bibliotheca Napoletana; Alegambe, Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu; Wiener, Handbuch der theol. Lit. i, 502. (B. P.)

Caraglio (Lat. Curalius), GIOVANNI GIACOMO, an eminent Italian designer and engraver, was born at Verona or Parma about 1500, and studied at Rome under M. A. Raimondi. He flourished as an engraver on copper from 1526 to 1551, and died at Parma in 1571. His principal works are, The Virgin and Infant, under an orange-tree; The Marriage of the Virgin; The Holy Family. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.

Caran, Bishop and Confessor, was a saint belonging to the east of Scotland, and may have been the Corinnu (or Corindus) who, according to Annals of Tighernach, died among the Picts, A.D. 669. He was honored at Premecht (or Premay), Aberdeenshire, and at Fetteresso, Kincardineshire; and must not be confounded with any of the seventeen Ciarins of the Irish calendar. He is commemorated Dec. 23.

Carantocus. See CAIRNECH (3).

Carate, GIROLAMO DI, an Italian canon of the regular clerks of the order of the Oblates of St. Ambrose and of St. Borromeo, lived, probably at Milan, in the first part of the 17th century. He was professor of theology and of canon law, and afterwards apostolic protonotary. He left, Tirole delle Opere Esteriori, etc. (Milan, 1609);—De Juribus Parochialis (ibid. 1625). His other works, which are very numerous, are only in MS. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caraunus (a corruption of Ceraunus), a boy-martyr at Rome, to whom Fulbert of Chartres writes a hymn, punning on the name and the word "carus." Usuard, who calls him Charaunus, and commemorates him May 28, says that he was beheaded at Chartres. His legend in the Breviarium Carnotense makes him a deacon and evangelist of that place, murdered on his way to evangelize Paris, A.D. 98. This is, probably, mere romance. See Migne, Patrol. cxli, 349; Acta Sanctorum, May, vi, 740.

Caravaggio, Michael Angelo. See ANGELO, MICHAEL CARAVAGGIO.

Caravaggio, Polidoro Caldara da, an eminent Milanese painter, was born at Caravaggio in 1495, and was instructed by Raphael, who selected him to paint the friezes of his works in the Vatican. He appears to have revived the perfection of ancient art. He executed at Rome two subjects from the life of Mary Magdalene. Caravaggio was in the full tide of success when he was compelled to flee to Naples, in consequence of the sacking of Rome by the Spaniards in 1527. He painted at Naples two pictures of St. Peter and St. Paul, in the church of Santa Maria della Grazia, and at Messina a celebrated picture of Christ Bearing the Cross. He was murdered by his servant, for his money, in 1543. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caravoglia, BARTOLOMMEO, a Piedmontese painter, flourished about 1673, and probably studied under Guercino. His best production is The Lord's Supper, in the church of Corpus Domini, at Turin.

Carayon, AUGUSTE, a French historian and Jesuit, was born March 31, 1813, and died May 15, 1874, at Poitiers. He published, Documents Inédits Concernant la Compagnie de Jésus (Poitiers, 1863-75, 18 vols.);—Bibliographie Historique de la Compagnie de Jésus (1864);—Premières Missions des Jésuites au Canada (1864);—Bannissement des Jésuites de la Louisiane (1865). (B. P.)

Carbach, GEORG WOLFGANG, a learned German theologian, was born at Nuremberg, Aug. 23, 1658. After 1679 he completed his studies, both literary and theological, at the University of Altdorf, and became pastor at Nuremberg. He died March 7, 1727, at the last-named place, leaving, Disputatio de Palmariis (Altdorf, 1680);—De Invocationis Cultu (ibid. 1685; and in Joannis Fabricii Majoris Prælectiones Theologicae, p. 627-646). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carbajal (or Caravajal), LUIS, an eminent Spanish painter, was born at Toledo in the year 1534, and studied under Villoldo. He painted, for the Escorial, several subjects from the life of the Virgin; also the altar-piece of the Infermeria, representing The Nativity. There are several of his pictures in the churches of Madrid and Toledo. He died after 1618.

Carbeas. See PAULICIANS.

Carben, VICTOR VON, a German convert from Judaism, was born in 1423. He was at first rabbi of the Jewish community of Cologne, but embraced Christianity in 1472, abandoning his wife and children, who refused to forsake the religion of their ancestors. The archbishop of Cologne, Hermann, proclaimed this conversion loudly, inscribing upon the outer gates of the city the words, "Victor olim Judæus." Carben was afterwards made priest, and combated, in various writings, the tenets of his earlier years. He died at Cologne, Feb. 2, 1515, leaving, Judaorum Errores et Mores (Cologne, 1509; Paris, 1511; also in German);—Propugnaculum Fidei Christianæ (without date; also in German, at Strasburg, 1519, 1550). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 142; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.; Wolf, Bibl. Hebr. i, 355; iii, 238; iv, 268 sq.; Kalkar, Israel und die Kirche, p. 89; Basnage, Hist. of the Jews (Taylor's transl.), p. 730; Adams, Hist. of the Jews, ii, 46 sq.; Grätz, Geschichte der Juden, ix, 77 sq. (B. P.)

Carbo, LUIGI DI COSTACCIARO, an Italian theologian, flourished about the year 1580, as professor of theology at Perugia and Venice. He wrote an Introduction to Theology, in six books; an abridgment of the Theology of St. Thomas (Cologne, 1608, etc.).

Carbold, ALFRED, an English Congregational minister, was born at Ipswich, May 7, 1821. He was trained for missionary work at Bedford, and was there ordained and sent out to Guzerat, Western India, Aug. 7, 1850, where he labored from village to village for ten years. From 1861 to 1870 he labored at Madras, and then returned to England, where he remained two years for the benefit of his health. After two and a half more years' earnest work in India he again returned to England, and died there, Sept. 28, 1877. In disposition Mr. Carbold was reserved, yet he was greatly loved and revered. He was sound in judgment and fearless in doing what he thought was right. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 310.

Carbonari (Lat. carbonarii, i. e. charcoal-men) are a modern politico-religious sect in Italy, somewhat resembling the Freemasons in their practices, and professing to derive their first principles from the Scriptures. They meet in secret societies, and observe certain mystical rites and signs. In 1820 the pope issued a bull of great length against the Carbonari, threatening excommunication against all who became members of the organization. Such secret societies, however, notwithstanding the anathema of the pope, are still in active operation in various parts of Italy.

Carboncino, GIOVANNI, a Venetian painter, was a knight, and studied under Matteo Ponzone. He executed many works in Venice, some of which are in the churches of that city. Two of his best are St. Angelo, at the Carmini, and a Dead Christ, at San Antonio. He flourished in the latter part of the 17th and former part of the 18th centuries.

Carbone, FRANCESCO, an Italian controversialist, who lived in the latter half of the 17th century, published the Disputatio cum Judeis of Contardus Iguetus, under the title, Flagellum Judæorum super Judaicam Perfidiâ, Prophetarum Jaculis Labefactum (Venice, 1672, 1677). The Piahe del Ebraismo, without place or date, is also credited to him. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carbonel, HUGUES, a French theologian of the order of Minorite Brothers Observantines, lived in the early half of the 17th century. He wrote, Discours sur le Mauvais Riche (Paris, 1616):—Sermons sur les Évangiles et le Carême (ibid. 1620). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carboni, FRANCESCO, a Bolognese painter, studied under Tiarini. In San Martino, at Bologna, is The Crucifixion, with St. Teresa and other figures, by him; in San Paolo, The Entombment. He died in 1635.

Carbonnet (de la Mothe), JEANNE DE, an Ursuline nun of the 17th century, at Bourg-en-Bresse (department of Ain), left memoirs of many pious women of her order, taken from the chronicles of the Ursulines and other sources (Bourg, 1684-90, 4 vols. 4to). This work contains the lives of seven hundred and fifty of these nuns, and thirty benefactors of the order, but is not considered trustworthy, because of its lack of critical exactness, dates, etc. See Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carca, SAMUEL (called Ibn-Seneh, i. e. "son of a bush"), a Jewish rabbi of Castile, flourished about 1360-80. It is related, in the book Juchasin, that, at the reading of a nuptial contract in the synagogue, he publicly protested against its being dated from the creation, and contended philosophically for the eternal existence of the world. This argument, though not novel as an Aristotelian speculation, yet, when propounded in open congregation, so alarmed the more orthodox party that, during the tumult which followed, R. Isaac Campanton cried out, "Why is the bush (alluding to his name) not burned?" The assembly then dragged the so-called blasphemer before the judges, who condemned him to be burned alive as an atheist. Three of his writings remain, Sacred Purification, סהרר הקדש:—The Fountain of Life, סם מקיר חיים, a super-commentary to Aben-Ezra's commentary on the Pentateuch:—Perfection of Beauty, מכלל יופי, a philosophical elucidation on Hagadoth and Midrashim. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 142; De Rossi, Dizionario Storico (Germ. transl.), p. 287 sq.; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, viii, 27 sq.; Finn, Sephardim, p. 388. (B. P.)

Carcadius was bishop of Maxula, a province of Africa, at the Synod of Carthage, Feb. 1, A.D. 484, and was afterwards banished to Corsica.

Carcaménos was one of the twelve "maternal" angels in the system of Justinus (q. v.).

Carcano (or Charcano). MICHELE, of Milan, was a monk of the order of Friars Minorite Observantines, celebrated as a preacher, who died in 1485 or 1490. He left, Sermonarium de Commendatione Vitæ et Reprobatione Vitiæ (Milan, 1495, 4to):—Quadragesimale de Fide et de Articulis Fidei, MS.:—Quadragesimale sive Sermonarium (Venice, 1476); and other books of sermons and discourses.

Carcat, AUGUSTIN, the younger, a French ascetic writer and hagiographer, a native of Berry, was provincial of the order of Reformed Augustines. He died in 1655, leaving, Vie de Saint Fare (Paris, 1629):—L'Excellence de l'Oraison Dominicale (Poitiers, 1651). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carchedonius, a priest or bishop of Subana, was rebuked and afterwards excused by Augustine. Epp. 62 (241), 63 (240).—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Biog. s. v.

Card, HENRY, D.D., an English divine, was born in 1779, and died in 1844. He published some theological treatises (1820-25). See Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Card, HENRY S., a Baptist minister, was born at Nelson, Madison Co., N. Y., Jan. 4, 1816. He was licensed to preach by the Erieville Baptist Church in 1840. Having pursued his theological studies at Hamilton College for two years, he became pastor of the Church in Clear Creek, Chautauqua Co., where he remained about three years, and afterwards was pastor of the Church in Hinsdale for eight years. His other pastorates were in Freedom, Watkins, and Lodi. He died in Watkins, July 23, 1873. See (N. Y.) Examiner and Chronicle. (J. C. S.)

Cardaillac, JEAN, a French theologian, was born in the early part of the 14th century. He belonged to the noble family of Quercy, which furnished to the Church so many illustrious prelates, among others, William of Cardaillac, bishop of Cahors, in 1209. After having taught law in Toulouse, Jean Cardaillac became bishop of Orense in 1351, and of Braga in 1360. He was held in prison by Peter the Cruel from 1367 to 1369, but was appointed by pope Gregory XI patriarch of Alexandria and administrator of the Church of Rodez in 1371, and in 1378 perpetual administrator of the archbishopric of Toulouse. He died Oct. 7, 1390, leaving several books, preserved in the library of the Dominicans of Toulouse, among others, sermons for the Sabbaths and festivals of the year, various treatises on synodal conferences and the sacred orders, and a Funerel Oration on the death of pope Clement VI: also one on that of Urban V, etc. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardamus, a slave of Paulinus, addicted to buffoonery and drinking, was sent to Amandus, under whose influence he reformed and became an ecclesiastic (Paulin. Epp. 17, 18, 24, 25).

Card-cloth (or Care-cloth) is a long piece of rich Indian silk, held over a bride and bridegroom at their marriage, during the Middle Ages. This rite obtains in Ireland, in the Tyrol, and in parts of Spain still.

Carden. The churches of Kilmalie, now Golspie, and of Loth, in Sutherlandshire, were dedicated to one St. Carden, and the annual fair was St. Carden's: but the person thus honored seems to have been of only local note.

Carden, BYRON SPEED, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Kentucky. He was converted in early life, and in 1849 entered the Arkansas Conference, where he labored until 1854, when he was transferred to the Texas Conference. He died Jan. 16, 1862. Mr. Carden was a good and acceptable preacher. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1862, p. 413.

Cardenas, Bartolomé de, a Spanish painter of Portuguese origin, was born in 1547, and studied under Sanchez Coello, at Madrid. He painted the principal part of the cloister of the convent of Nuestra Señora

d' Atocha, at Madrid; he also painted for the churches of Valladolid in the latter part of his life. He died in 1606. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardenas, Bernardino de, a Spanish prelate, born at Chuquisaca, in Bolivia; became a Franciscan, and was appointed, in 1643, bishop of Assumption, in Paraguay. He had violent disputes with the Jesuits, whom he suspected of a design to withdraw the country from the king of Spain, and his example animated other prelates, especially Palafox, to resist the Jesuits. In 1666 he was removed to the see of Santa-Cruz de la Sierra, where he shortly after died. He wrote, Manual y Relacion de las Cosas de Piru (Madrid, 1634, 4to); and Historia Indiana et Indigenarum. An account of the persecution which he underwent from the Jesuits was published at Madrid, in 1768, 4to. See Biog. Univ. vii, 124; Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.

Cardenas, Juan de, a Spanish Jesuit, was born at Seville in 1613, and joined his order at the age of fourteen. On account of his great learning he was invested with the highest offices of his order. He died June 6, 1684, leaving Crisis Theologica sive Disputationes Selectæ ex Theologia Morali (Lugd. 1670). See Gury, Compend. Theol. Mor. Annot. Ant. Ballerini II, n. 444, ed. 1880, p. 312 sq.; Hurter, Nomenclator, ii, 231 sq.; Müllendorff, in Wetzler u. Welte's Kirchen-Lexikon, s. v. (B. P.)

Carder, J. Dixon, D.D., a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Richfield, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1803. He graduated at Geneva, afterwards Hobart College, and became tutor in that institution; was ordained deacon in 1830, and priest in 1832; while a deacon he took charge of the mission at Ithaca, N. Y., and organized parishes in Candor, Richford, Elmira, and Danby. He became rector, in 1834, of St. John's Church, Fort Hamilton, and soon after was elected local secretary of the Domestic Board of Missions, holding that position for seven years. After travelling in Europe three years, he again became rector of Fort Hamilton. He assumed the rectorship of St. Peter's, Milford, Conn., May 1, 1848, but resigned March 7, 1861, to become the secretary and general agent of the Committee for Domestic Missions. He died at Milford, Aug. 18, 1866. See Amer. Quar. Church Rev. Oct. 1866, p. 487.

Carder, William R., an English martyr, a weaver in Tenterden, Kent, was burned there in 1511 because he would not conform in all points to the doctrines of the Romish Church. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, v, 647, 648.

Cardi, Lodovico (or LUIGI, called Civoli or Cigoli), an eminent Florentine painter and architect, was born at the castle of Cigoli, in Tuscany, in 1559, and educated under Allori, and afterwards under Santo di Titi. He studied carefully the works of M. Angelo, Pontormo, and A. del Sarto. After making the tour of Lombardy he returned to Florence, and was received into the academy; his picture of reception was Cain Slaying Abel. The duke sent him to Rome, where he was employed to paint for the Vatican Peter Healing the Lame Man at the Gate of the Temple. The other principal works of this artist are, St. Jerome, in San Giovanni de Fiorentini, at Rome; The Stoning of Stephen, in the convent of Monte Domini, at Florence. In the Florentine gallery is a fine picture of Mary Magdalene; also his celebrated Ecce Homo. He died at Rome in 1613. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardim, Antonio Francisco, a Portuguese Jesuit, was born in 1595 (some say 1615), in the little borough of Vianna, in Alentejo, early went to the missions in the extreme East, and died at Macao, April 30, 1659. He wrote, Relação da Viagem do Galeão San-Lourenço, e sua perdição nos Baixos de Morincalle (Lisbon, 1651). There was also published under his name, Relação da Gloriosa Morte de Quatro Embaixadores Portuguezes (ibid. 1643). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardim, Fernam, a Portuguese Jesuit, was born in the 16th century. He early went to Bahia to assist in the first missions of Brazil, but was on the point of retiring in 1583. Being, however, a man of high culture, he was called to the office of rector of the college of Rio de Janeiro, and afterwards became provincial of his order, which position he held in 1609. He is found mingling in the political and religious affairs of Bahia down to 1618. M. Adolfo de Varnhagen published a valuable work of this missionary traveller, Narrativa Epistolar de Una Viagem e Missao Jesuitica, etc. (Lisbon, 1847). This work is written in charming style, and gives the details carefully. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardinal is a term given to certain clerical officers in a cathedral or collegiate church. Such still exist at St. Paul's Cathedral, London, at Compostella, and in other continental churches. See CARDINAL ALTAR.

Cardinal Altar means the high or principal altar; and from their attendance upon it two minor canons in some churches were called the senior and junior cardinals. Their duties were to take charge of the choir, to present defaulters to the dean on Fridays, to act as rectors of the choir, to administer the sacraments, enjoin penances, hear confessions, bury the dead, and receive oblations.

Cardisco, MARCO (called il Calabrese), a reputable painter of Calabria, flourished from 1508 to 1542, and probably studied under P. da Caravaggio. There is a picture by him, in the church of San Agostino at Naples, representing that saint disputing with heretics. He also painted several other pictures, among which is a Dead Christ, with two laterals of St. Peter and St. Paul, in the chapel of the church of San Pietro ad Aram, at Naples. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cardmaker, JOHN, an English martyr, was prebendary of the church of Wells. He was apprehended in queen Mary's time, and put in prison in the Fleet, king Edward's laws being yet in force. He was examined and persuaded to recant, but again returned to his faith, and was a constant confessor and worthy martyr of Christ. He answered many of the articles brought against him by letter, most learnedly and substantially. He was burned, with some others, May 30, 1555. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, vii, 77.

Cardona, JUAN BAUTISTA, a Spanish antiquarian and theologian of the 16th century, was born at Valencia. He was canon of the cathedral there, and was named by Gregory XIII member of the commission charged with correcting the text of the fathers' writings. He had already restored from the MSS. more than eight hundred lectures of Leo the Great and of St. Hilary, when he died prematurely, in 1589. He had been bishop of Perpignan, of Vich, of Tortosa, and, for two years, commissary of the inquisition. He wrote, Oratio de Sancto Stephano, a discourse delivered before the pope in 1575:—De Expurgendis Hæreticorum Propriis Nominibus, dedicated to Gregory XIII (Rome, 1576):—De Regia Sancti Laurentii Bibliotheca Libellum. This book—containing also de Bibliothecis, extracted from Fulvius Ursinus; de Vaticana, a collection of the papers of Onuphrius Pavinus; and de Diptychis Commentariolum—was published at Tarragona in 1587. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cardoso, Isaac (originally Fernando), brother of Abraham, a Jewish physician of Spain, was born in 1615. He practiced medicine at Valencia and Madrid. While professing Christianity he bore the name of Fernando. After having openly professed Judaism, at Venice, he took the name of "Isaac" and retired to Verona, where he died at 61. Of his works we mention, De los Excelencias de los Hebreos, on the prerogatives of the Israelites (Amsterdam, 1679):—Philosophia Libera (Verona, 1673):

The first of these works consists of ten chapters, in which the author expatiates on the privileges of the Jewish people, and refutes the calumnious charges commonly alleged against them. These privileges are, (1) the divine election; (2) the seal of circumcision; (3) the Sabbath; (4) the sacred law; (5) the gift of prophecy; (6) the Holy Land; (7) the revelation of the one God; (8) national unity; (9) divers virtuous characteristics; (10) separation. The calumnies refuted relate to (1) false worship; (2) impurity; (3) blood-shedding; (4) vindictiveness against Christians; (5) proselyte-making; (6) disloyalty; (7) profligacy; (8) corrupting the text of the Holy Scriptures; (9) destruction of images; (10) murder of children. The first part has an emblematic vignette of a hand scattering flowers from the skies, with the motto, "He who disperses will gather:" and the second, another, of a rose surrounded by thistles, with the motto, "Though they curse, I will bless."

Cardoso, Jorge, a celebrated Portuguese hagiographer, was born Dec. 31, 1606. He studied at first under the direction of Francisco de Macedo, and, having devoted himself to the ministerial life, he was ordained priest July 4, 1632. Some time after that he obtained a simple benefice, and was thus enabled to devote himself to literature. He travelled though the Peninsula in search of ecclesiastical traditions and local legends, which he embodied in his extensive work on the lives of Portuguese saints, entitled Agiologio Lusitano dos Santos e Varios Ilustres em Virtude do Reino de Portugal e Suas Conquistas (Lisbon, 1651-57). The court of Madrid, recognizing the merit of his undertaking, made him a considerable present while he stayed in Spain; also a canonicate was offered to him, which he would not accept without the consent of the king of Portugal. Cardoso died Oct. 3, 1669. Among his other works there is a MS. entitled Santuarios de Portugal. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardoso, Miguel (later Abraham), a Jewish physician and writer of Spain, was born about 1630. Being a descendant of the Maranos, or New Christians, in the Portuguese city Celorico, he studied medicine with his older brother Fernando. While the latter was given to his studies, Miguel spent his time in the dolce far niente, sat under the balconies of ladies, and amused them with his songs. He quitted Spain, probably with his brother, went to Venice, and there both of them openly professed Judaism. Abraham Michael Cardoso, as he was now called, practiced medicine at Leghorn, but did not meet with success. When the bey of Tripolis was in search of a physician, the duke of Tuscany recommended Cardoso. But Cardoso having become a student of the Cabala and an adherent of the pseudo-Messiah Sabbatai Zebi (q. v.), he only saw visions and spoke of dreams, and, instead of attending to his profession, he preached and wrote in behalf of the pseudo-Messiah. In the end, Cardoso was driven from Tripolis, and died in 1706. He wrote, וזה אלי, a Cabalistic apology of Sabbataism:—וכוח כללי, also in favor of Sabbataism:—בקר לזכרהם, against the opponents of the Cabala, etc. See Fürst, Bibl. Jud. i, 142; Grätz, Gesch. d. Juden, x, 253 sq.; Jost, Gesch. d. Juden, u. s. Sekten, iii, 158, 174. (B. P.)

Carducci (Span. Carducho), Bartolommeo, an eminent Italian painter, was born at Florence in 1561. He studied under Frederigo Zuccherò, whom he assisted on the work of the great cupola at Florence; and, while quite young, he painted two pictures for the church of the Jesuits, representing The Annunciation and The Nativity. The work which, above all others, established his reputation in Spain, is The Descent from the Cross, in the church of San Felipe, at Madrid. He died there in 1610. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carducci, Vincenzo, a Florentine painter, the brother of Bartolommeo, was born in 1568, and was instructed by his brother. He completed the work begun by the latter for Philip III of Spain, adopting, instead of The Life of Charles V, The History of Achilles as the subject; and was made king's painter during the reign of that monarch, and also of Philip IV, by whom he was employed in many important works. He painted The Incarnation, in the convent of l'Encarnacion at Madrid; St. Antonio and The Angel's Warning to Joseph, in the convent del Rosario; and St. John Preaching, in the refectory of the Franciscans. He wrote a book on painting, printed at Madrid in 1633. He died in 1638. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Cardwell, Edward, D.D., a learned English divine and ecclesiastical historian, was born at Blackburn, in Lancashire, in 1787. He studied at Oxford University, became a fellow of Brasenose College in 1809, and a university examiner in 1814. He was appointed Camden professor of history in 1826, and succeeded Dr. Whately as principal of St. Alban's Hall in 1831. He filled several prominent offices in the university, and was also private secretary to three successive chancellors. He died at Oxford, in May, 1863. Among his numerous works are an edition of Aristotle's Ethics, with notes:—Lectures on the Coinage of the Greeks and Romans (Oxford, 1832):—a students' edition of the Greek Testament:—a critical edition of the History of the Jewish War, by Josephus:—The Two Books of Common Prayer Compared (1838):—A History of Conferences and other Proceedings Connected with the Revision of the Book of Common Prayer (ibid. 1840, 1849):—Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England, from 1546 to 1716 (ibid. 1844):—Synodalia (ibid. 1842):—Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum. See Encyclop. Brit. s. v.

Care, Thomas, A.M., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., July 10, 1832. He was converted in 1857, while a student at Dickinson College, and in 1859 entered the East Baltimore Conference. In 1862-63 he was professor of natural science in Dickinson Seminary, Williamsport. He labored in the ministry as health permitted, with great zeal and fidelity, until his death, March 18, 1864. As a pastor, Mr. Care was solicitous and indefatigable; as a preacher, impressive, substantial, argumentative; as a friend, modest, frank, cheerful; as a Christian, exemplary. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1865, p. 12.

Careless, John, an English martyr, a weaver of Coventry, was cast into a filthy prison, where he remained two years. He was to be put to death by burning, for his faith in the Christian religion, but died in prison two days before the time fixed for his execution, and was buried in the fields, in a dunghill, in 1556. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 163.

Carello, Girolamo, an Italian theologian of the order of the Franciscans, was a native of Schio, in the vicinity of Vicenza, and lived in the latter part of the 17th century. He was lecturer on theology and controller of his order, and wrote, Dottrina di Sacri Riti, etc. (Venice, 1668). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carellus, a martyr with Primulus at Caesarea, in Cappadocia, is commemorated May 29. See also CARELL.

Carëna (= Quadragesima) is a forty days' fast, imposed by a bishop upon clergy or laity, or by an abbot upon monks. A MS. Penitential, quoted by Du Cange, speaks of fasting on bread and water, "quod in communi sermone carina vocatur."—Smith, Dict. of Christ. Antig. s. v.

Carentius (or Corentinus), in early Christian history, was, (1) bishop of Cornouailles, Brittany; commemorated May 1. (2) Saint, bishop, and confessor, mentioned in the Auctaria to Usuard, Patrolog. Lat. cxxiii, May 18. It is uncertain whether or not he is the same with St. Corentinus. He is commemorated May 18.

Carentocus. See CAIRNECH (3).

Carera (Lat. Carrerius, or Caprerius), ALESSANDRO, a jurisconsult of Padua, was born in 1543, and died Aug. 20, 1626, leaving, among several treatises, one De Potestate Pontif. Rom. (Padua, 1599); and another De Somnus, etc. (ibid. 1575).—Landon, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Jöcher, Allgemeines Gelehrten-Lexikon, s. v.

Carey, Alice and Phœbe. See CARY.

Carey, Arthur, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born near London, England, June 26, 1822. When he was eight years of age his family removed to New York city. In 1836 he joined the sophomore class of Columbia College, and graduated in 1839. In October of that year he entered the General Theological Seminary, N. Y., and graduated in 1842. He was admitted to the order of deacon, July 2, 1843. His ordination proceeded, however, under protest, as two of his examiners declared their conviction that he held views radically at variance with Protestantism. The ordination was subsequently the source of earnest debate, and called forth a large number of pamphlets. In September of the same year he was invited to become assistant pastor of the Church of the Annunciation, New York city, which he subsequently accepted. In December he was attacked by a violent fever; when he had somewhat recovered, he embarked with his father for Cuba, March 23, 1844, but died on shipboard, near Havana, April 4, following. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, v, 799.

Carey, Charles Stokes, an English Congregational minister, was born in London, Sept. 17, 1828. He was religiously disposed from childhood, joined the Church in 1845, entered Hackney College in 1849 to prepare for the ministry, and was ordained at Basingbourne in 1853, where he remained three years. He afterwards preached successively at Harwich, Bungay, and Leytonstone, and died at the last-named place, June 8, 1875. Mr. Carey was an able, forcible, fluent, and thoroughly evangelical preacher. His sermons were well thought out, his extensive reading and retentive memory gave him much facility and illustration, and he always preached without notes. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1876, p. 322.

Carey, Eustace, an English Baptist, nephew of the Rev. Dr. William Carey, was born at Paulerspury, Northamptonshire, March 22, 1791, and baptized by Dr. Ryland. He studied at Bristol College, and, having offered himself for service in Baptist missions, was ordained in January, 1814, after which he sailed to India, and, with two others, founded the Calcutta mission as distinguished from the Serampore mission. His health failing, he returned to England in 1825, and was employed as the travelling agent of the Baptist Missionary Society. His chief literary work is the Life of his uncle, Dr. Carey. He died in London, July 19, 1855.

Carey, Joel, a German Reformed minister, was born June 1, 1814. His name first occurs in the minutes of the synod of Ohio as a licentiate of the Maumee classis. He was ordained in 1848, and labored as a missionary in Napoleon, O., up to the time of his death, Sept. 21, 1849. See Harbaugh, Fathers of the Germ. Ref. Church, iv, 494.

Carey, John, an Irish Methodist preacher, was born at Faughart, near Dundalk, in 1784. He was converted at fifteen, joined the Methodists, entered the ministry of the Irish Conference in 1809, and for forty-five years labored as a preacher of the Gospel with acceptance and success, when failing health led him to become a supernumerary in 1854. He continued to toil as he had strength, and died at Drogheda, March 2, 1874. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1874, p. 27.

Carey, Robert E., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born at Lagrange, Franklin Co., Ala., February, 1846. He joined the Church in 1864, and in 1865 united with the Montgomery Conference. From that time to the close of his life, April 14, 1872, he filled the various appointments assigned him with zeal, efficiency, and success. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1872, p. 689.

Carey, Samuel, a Unitarian minister, was born at Newburyport, Mass., Nov. 24, 1785. He graduated at Harvard College in 1804, studied divinity at Cambridge for three years, and was invited to preach on probation in King's Chapel, Boston, in November, 1808. He afterwards received a call, and, having accepted, was ordained and installed Jan. 1, 1809. Here he labored for six years, and died in 1815. He published a number of Discourses. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, viii, 424.

Carey, Walker, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in the Cherokee Nation, May, 1814. He was brought up in absolute ignorance, becoming a full-grown man without knowing how to read a word in any language, or understanding anything about Christianity. At the age of twenty-five, through the instrumentality of a fellow-Cherokee, he was brought to Christ. He was immediately employed by missionaries as an interpreter. His power in the pulpit was soon felt, and he was licensed to preach, and in 1846 received into the Indian Mission Conference. By close application he soon learned to read the Bible, and in a few years became an able minister of the Gospel. He travelled nearly all the circuits in the Cherokee Nation, and some of them several times. He died March 15, 1869. Mr. Carey was earnest and laborious, social and influential, deeply pious and very successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1869, p. 375.

Carfrae, PATRICK, D.D., a Scotch clergyman of Carniehaugh, was licensed to preach in 1765, presented to the living at Morham in 1766, and transferred to Dunbar in 1795. He resigned in 1820, retired to Bow-erhouses, and died there, March 4, 1822, aged eighty years. He was known as one of the most eloquent and accomplished preachers of his day, and in his later years, because he took to reading his sermons, he was designated "Paper Pate." His publications were, A Letter to Scotia's Bard, which elicited a reply (Burns, Works, vol. ii) :—Account of Morham. See Fasti Eccles. Scotice, i, 341, 369-70.

Cargill, David, A.M., an English Wesleyan missionary, was converted under the Methodist ministry while pursuing his studies at the University of Aberdeen. In 1832 he was sent as a missionary to the Friendly Islands. In 1835 he and Mr. Cross commenced the Christianization of the Fiji cannibals of Lagumba. After a visit to England, Cargill was re-appointed to the Friendly group with a special view to employing his learning for the translation of the Scriptures into the native tongue. Expectations were blasted, however, by his sudden death, at Vavao, April 24, 1843, only five months after his brave coadjutor, Cross, had laid down his weary life on a neighboring island. Cargill wrote a Life of his wife, Margaret, with Notices of the Progress of Christianity in Tonga and Fiji (Lond. 1853, 12mo). See Minutes of the British Conference, 1844; Newcombe, Cyclop. of Miss. 1854, p. 721; Missions in Tonga and Fiji, etc. See CROSS, WILLIAM.

Cargill, James Harvey, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born at Jackson, Susquehanna Co., Pa., in May, 1828. He was converted in 1839, began exhorting at the age of nineteen, graduated at Wyoming Seminary, and in 1852 was admitted into the Wyoming Conference, wherein he labored with distinguished ability and large success till his sudden death, July 4, 1855. Mr. Cargill was a young man of great promise in the ministry. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1855, p. 579.

Cargill, Thomas, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1610, was admitted to the living at Caterline in 1623, continued in November, 1662, and died before Sept. 4, 1678. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, iii, 877.

Cargillites is a name sometimes given to the Covenanters (q. v.) of Scotland, from Mr. Donald Cargill, one of their leading ministers.

Cariani, GIOVANNI, an Italian historical and portrait painter of great merit, was born at Bergamo, according to some authorities about 1510, but there are pictures by him dated 1514 and 1519. In the church of San Gottardo at Bergamo is his celebrated painting representing the Virgin and Infant in the Clouds. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Cariatto. See CHARIATHO.

Caribert. See CHARIBERT.

Carilefus (Calais, or Calès), was born of noble parents in the territory of Auvergne, and entered a monastery at Misy, then under St. Maximinus. Not long after he went into retirement at Le Mans, and still later, obtaining from Childebert some land, he built thereon the monastery of St. Calais du Désert. He probably lived between 517 and 542. His remains were removed in 1171 and 1653. His day is July 21.

There is a Carilefus, a presbyter of Aninsula, in Gaul, commemorated in Usuard's Martyrology on July 1.

Carlippus, an early Christian martyr, is commemorated in Usuard's Martyrology on April 28.

Carillo, Alfonso (1), a Spanish prelate, was born at Cuenca in the latter part of the 14th century. He was made cardinal in 1409 by the antipope Benedict XIII, and confirmed by pope Martin V in 1418, and by him sent as legate to Bologna. The Council of Basle afterwards appointed him legate to Avignon; but pope Eugenius IV had already sent the cardinal of Foix, and therefore Carillo was obliged to return to Basle. He died there, March 14, 1434. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carillo (D'Acunha), Don Alfonso (2), a Spanish prelate, nephew of the foregoing, was born in Portugal in 1410. He accompanied his uncle to Basle, and on his return was appointed bishop of Sigüenza, in 1446 archbishop of Toledo, and afterwards minister of state by Henry IV. This last position gave him a political influence which he used against the king of Castile, his patron. He ever sought to gratify personal ambition, rather than the good of his country. He was at last frustrated in his schemes, and spent his remaining days in a monastery which he had founded at Alcalá de Henares. He died July 1, 1482. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Rose, Gen. Biog. Dict. s. v.

Carinus, LUCIUS (or Leucius Charinus), is named as the author of the Gnostic or Munichæan Acts, which bore, according to Photius (Bibl. p. 114), the title τῶν ἀποστόλων περίοδοι, and contained the Acts of Peter, John, Andrew, Thomas, and Paul. See ACTS OF THE APOSTLES (Apocryphal).

Cario, an Egyptian of the 4th century, left his wife and two children in order to retire to a hermitage at Scete. His story, in which his son Zacharias prominently figures, may be seen in Cotelier (Ecl. Gr. Mon. i, 444, 516; see also Tillemont, Mém. x, 76).

Carisio, ANTONIO, an Italian hagiographer and founder of an order, was a native of Cuggione, in the district of Milan, and lived in the middle of the 17th century. He was curate of Milan, where he founded a congregation of monks for the aid of the sick. He wrote, I Capelli della bella Penitente Riveriti (Milan, 1649);—Ritratto di Gesù, etc. (ibid. 1671);—Esercizj sopra i Dolori di Gesù Cristo (ibid. 1672). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carisius, with Callistus, is commemorated as a martyr at Corinth in the old Roman martyrology on April 16.

Caritables, LES, are the priests-titular of a benefice entitled Caritas, who twice a day served the church of St. Stephen, in the city of Corbie and diocese of Amiens. This benefice seems to have originated in the charity and pious gifts of the abbots, monks, and citizens of Corbie, and others; and from this, its charitable foundation, and the alms which were distributed by the priests who held it, it seems to have derived its name. The Caritas began to be established about 1048, when the number of "Caritables" was forty; but in 1248 it was reduced to twenty. The benefice was in the gift of the abbot of Corbie, and the clergy who held it were for the most part curates of the city, canons of Fouilloy, or others of the neighboring clergy. The chief of them was called præpositus, or provost.

Caritan of Druimlara is commemorated as an Irish saint in the martyrologies on March 7, and Colgan (Acta Sanctorum, p. 510) gives an account of his life by identifying him with St. Cruthnechan. As Dr. Reeves (Adamnan, p. 191 n.) says, however, "the connection of the two names extends no further than their initials."

Caritas (Charity), with her virgin sisters, Faith and Hope, and their mother, Wisdom, seem to have been real martyrs. Sophia, Pistis, Elpis, and Agape are said to have been mother and daughters who suffered in September, and whose relics were transferred to the church of St. Silvester. On the other hand, Sapientia, Spes, Fides, and Caritas are said by Ado to have suffered Aug. 1, and were buried on the Appian Way, in the crypt of St. Cecilia. The menology gives the ages of Faith, Hope, and Love as twelve, ten, and nine.

Caritōsus was bishop at the councils of Sinuessa, A.D. 803, and Rome, A.D. 324.

Carkettill, Patrick, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1596, had the living at Soutra in 1599, was transferred to Stenton the same year, promoted to Humber in 1602, and died between April 6, 1616, and Feb. 20, 1617. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 280, 336-7.

Carkettill, William, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1603. He was licensed to preach in 1605, although the Presbytery considered him too young and inexperienced; but he was admitted to the living at Stenton in 1606, and continued in 1608. There is no further record of him. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 383.

Carl, DANIEL, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in New York, May 6, 1800. He removed with his parents to Franklin, Tenn., in early childhood, experienced religion at the age of twelve, went to Texas in 1837 and engaged in school-teaching, and in 1839 entered the Mississippi Conference. On the formation of the Texas Conference he became a member of it, and as long as health permitted labored in its active ranks with zeal and fidelity. Although his life was spent largely on the Western frontier, he maintained a genial, unassuming ministerial character. He died Aug. 16, 1865. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1865, p. 585.

Carlerius. See CHARLIER.

Carles, LANCELOT DE, a French prelate, was born at Bordeaux in the beginning of the 16th century. He was appointed bishop of Riez on his return from Rome, where Henry II had sent him, and he was intimately connected with the chancellor of the hospital, Ronsard, and with Joachim of Bellay. He died at Paris about 1570, leaving Épître Contenant le Procès Criminel fait à l'Encontre de la Reine Boullan d'Angleterre (Lyons, 1545):—Paraphrase en Vers Français de l'Éclésiaste de Salomon (1561):—a translation of Homer's Odyssey is also attributed to him. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carleton, GEORGE J., a Baptist minister, was born in Boston in 1812. He studied for a time at Amherst College, and also at Brown University, but did not graduate. He was ordained pastor of the Church in Andover, Mass., and subsequently labored at Wilmington, Del., and Arlington, Mass. For ten years he was chaplain of the Massachusetts State Prison. He died at his residence in Newton Centre, Mass., Feb. 17, 1884. See The Watchman, Feb. 21, 1884. (J. C. S.)

Carley, Jesse, an English Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Burwash, Sussex, in June, 1801. He was converted at the age of sixteen, and two years afterwards began his labors as a local preacher in London, where he remained several years. Subsequently he emigrated to New York, and two years after his arrival entered the New York Conference, in 1832. He died Nov. 1, 1837. Mr. Carley was humble, prudent, and simple in his manner. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1838, p. 578.

Carley, Robert, a Protestant Episcopal clergyman of the diocese of Texas; entered the ministry while a resident of Missouri, in 1870; and in the following year became officiating minister of St. Andrew's Church, Seguin, Tex. He died Aug. 5, 1872. See Prot. Episc. Almanac, 1873, p. 133.

Carli, Denis, an Italian Capuchin missionary, was a native of Placentia. He was sent, in 1667, by the Propaganda to Africa, with Michael Angelo Guattini de' Reggion, and fourteen other Capuchins. On their arrival at Guinea they were appointed to the provinces of Bamba, Congo, and Danda. They baptized three thousand children, and made a good number of converts among the adults. Guattini, overcome by the effects of the climate and fatigue, perished; but Carli, after recovering from a severe illness, returned to Europe. On reaching Bologna, he wrote a history of their journey and labors, entitled, Il Mio Transportato in Venezia (Reggio, 1672; Bologna, 1674; Bassano, 1687). This was republished under another title, translated and published in French, English, and German. Carli died about 1680. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carli, Giovanni, an Italian theologian, was born at Florence in 1425. He joined the Dominican order, and died Feb. 1, 1505. His works, for the most part, are unpublished; among those published are, Vita B. F. Joannis Dominici Florentini, S. R. E. Cardinalis (in the Acta Sanctorum, vol. ii):—Vita F. Angeli Acciajoli Florentini, Patriæ suæ Episcopi. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carlile, STEPHEN, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Arkansas about 1818. He professed religion in 1837; soon became class-leader and exhorter; received license to preach in 1839, and was admitted into the Arkansas Conference, in which he served until his death, April 14, 1860. Mr. Carlile filled, with credit to himself and honor to the Church, many of the most important appointments in this conference. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1860, p. 283.

Carlill, THOMAS, an English Wesleyan minister, entered the itinerancy in 1762, after having been local preacher for ten years. In 1798 he became a supernumerary, and died in August, 1801. His sermons were XI.—26 sometimes characterized by an exuberance of wit. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1802.

Carling-Sunday is an English term for the fifth Sunday in Lent, or Passion Sunday, so called because a certain sort of peas, termed "Carles," were made into cakes and eaten on that day. A rhyming couplet, designating the Sundays in Lent, after the first, is still commonly quoted in certain parts of England. The abbreviated words in it refer to portions of the old services of the Church:

"Tid, Mid, and Misera, Carling, Palm, and Pasch-egg day."

Carlisle, Hugh, a Presbyterian minister, was probably a native of Ireland, and was admitted into the New Castle Presbytery, Penn., before September, 1735. At this time Newton and Plumstead, in Bucks Co., secured his services, and he joined the Philadelphia Presbytery in 1736. He was sent in November of that year to supply Amwell and Bethlehem, in Penn. In 1738 he went into the bounds of Lewes Presbytery, Del., and was still a member in 1742; later his name is not seen. See Webster, Hist. of the Presb. Church in America.

Carlisle, John, an Irish Wesleyan minister, was born near Lisburn, March 17, 1800. He was reared by Presbyterian parents, but converted under the Methodist preaching, and joined the Primitive Wesleyan Methodist Society. He was for some time a local preacher, and entered the conference in 1832. In this relation he continued for fifty years. He retired from the active work in 1874, but continued to do what he could for the Master until his death, in Belfast, June 26, 1882. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1882, p. 41.

Carlisle, Simon, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born Jan. 15, 1773. He was converted in 1789; and in 1790 entered the Tennessee Conference. In 1794 he was dropped on a doubtful charge of improper conduct, which disgrace he sustained with uncommon Christian patience and fortitude for several years. In 1804 he removed to the banks of the Cumberland river, where he maintained an unblemished character, and labored in the capacity of a local preacher for thirty years. In 1834 he again entered the itinerant ranks, and served the Church zealously until his death, Nov. 24, 1839. See Minutes of Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church South, 1840, p. 56.

Carlisle, Thomas, an English Congregational minister, was born at Priesthill, County Down, Ireland, Aug. 4, 1838. He joined the Methodist New Connection at the age of fourteen, and in his nineteenth year was called into the regular ministry. After laboring three years, he was allowed, at his own request, a classical and theological course at London, under the tuition of the Rev. William Cooke, D.D. Leaving London, he labored successively at Liverpool, Bolton, and Guernsey. Preferring a settled pastorate to the itinerancy, Mr. Carlisle offered his services to the Congregationalist body, and in 1869 became pastor of the Church at Plaistow. Here his fervent and eloquent ministry, his amiable disposition, and diligence in pastoral duties was rapidly advancing the Church and extending his influence, when he died, June 22, 1870. Mr. Carlisle had a naturally fertile mind, which became well furnished and disciplined by study. His ministry was fervent and eloquent; crowds were attracted by his preaching. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1871, p. 307.

Carlock, Jacob G., a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, was born in Overton, Tenn., Sept. 30, 1821. He was blessed with pious parents, and from boyhood maintained an irreproachable character. As a minister he was energetic and faithful in all of his labors, which were within the bounds of the Sparta Presbytery. He died at Livingston, Tenn., Oct. 19, 1860. See Wilson, Presb. Hist. Almanac, 1862, p. 284.

Carlock, Moses, a Baptist minister, was born in Wilson County, Tenn., Sept. 5, 1828. He united with the Church at the age of twenty; was licensed in April, 1854, and ordained soon afterwards. He was pastor of the churches of Big Creek, Mt. Tabor, Union, and Bethany, Tenn., and died near Dongola, Union Co., Ill., Feb. 25, 1874. He was much esteemed by his brethren as a Christian and an earnest laborer. See Minutes of Illinois Anniversaries, 1874, p. 12. (J. C. S.)

Carloman was the brother of king Pepin, and son of Charles Martel. On the death of his father he succeeded to the government of Austrasia, Thuringia, Bavaria, and the country of the Alemanni, or Germans. In 742 he assembled a council at some place (name unknown) in Germany, founded the celebrated monastery of Fulda, endowed other religious houses, and finally resigned his kingdom, and became a monk in a convent which he had built in honor of St. Silvester, on Mount Soracte, near Rome. Thence he went to Monte Cassino, where he obtained no higher office than that of assistant cook. He was sent into France, by his abbot, on business, and died at Vienne in 755. He is by some esteemed as a saint (Baillet, Aug. 17). See London, Eccles. Dict. s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carlioni, Carlo, a Milanese painter, was born near Como in 1686, and was instructed by Giulio Quaglio. He died in 1775. Little is known of him as a painter, but he executed the following engravings, mostly original: The Conception of the Virgin; The Holy Family, with St. John Kissing the Foot of Jesus; The Death of a Saint.

Carlioni, Giovanni Andrea (1), a reputable Genoese painter, was born in 1590, and studied under Sorri and Passignani at Florence, where he became an able fresco-painter. He assisted his brother in the great fresco work in the Cathedral of the Guastato, at Genoa, and was invited to Rome to paint the ceiling of the Church of the Theatines, which he did not live to finish. He died in 1630. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carlioni, Giovanni Andrea (2), a Genoese painter, the son of Giovanni Battista, was born in 1639, and studied with his father a few years, after which he went to Venice and remained some time, and then returned to Genoa. Some of his pictures are at Rome, in the different churches. His earlier ones are at Perugia, and The Life of St. Feliciano is in the church of that saint at Foligno. He died in 1697. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carlioni, Giovanni Battista, an eminent Genoese painter, was born in 1594, and studied under Passignani. He executed several great works at Genoa, in connection with his brother, the principal of which were the fresco paintings in the three naves of the Cathedral of the Guastato. In the principal nave are: The Adoration of the Magi; The Entrance of Christ into Jerusalem; The Resurrection; The Ascension; The Descent of the Holy Ghost; and The Assumption. For the same church he also painted The Presentation in the Temple, and Christ Preaching to the Pharisees. He died in 1680. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carlton, Cyrus A., a Baptist minister, was born at Sangerville, Me., about 1836. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1856, and at the Newton Theological Institution in 1860. He was ordained, Oct. 31, 1860, pastor of the Church in Limerick, where he remained about two years. He then removed to New Gloucester, where he had charge of the Church one year, and next was called to Buckfield. Here he remained from 1864 to 1867, and then removed to Foxboro, Mass., where his ministry was terminated by death, Dec. 26, 1868. See Newton General Catalogue, p. 47.

Carlton, Thomas, D.D., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Londonderry, N. H., July 26, 1808. He removed with his parents to Niagara County, N. Y., while a child, and there spent his youth in earnest toil on a farm. He was converted early in life; received very meagre educational advantages; became class-leader in 1827, exhorter in 1828, and in 1829 entered the Genesee Conference. His record indicates a service of thirteen years in regular pastoral work, seven years in the presiding eldership, and twenty years as book agent in the Book Concern in New York. In 1873 he became superannuated, and died April 17, 1874. Dr. Carlton was thoroughly devoted to the Church. As a minister he excelled in tact, in ability to win and move and direct human hearts; as a friend he was gentle, generous, and faithful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1874, p. 123; Simpson, Cyclop. of Methodism, s. v.

Carlton, William, an English Wesleyan minister, was born at Sutton-in-the-Forest, Yorkshire. His parents, who were members of the Established Church, trained him piously, and, when fifteen, he began to attend the old Methodist chapel in York, walking every Sunday from Sutton to that city (eight miles), to attend class. He entered the ministry in 1808; was a faithful and useful preacher; retired to Hull in 1842; removed to York in 1845; and died Dec. 10, 1855. In his early ministry he almost totally lost his hearing by crossing the Derbyshire hills during a great snow-storm. See Minutes of the British Conference, 1856.

Carlyle, Alexander, D.D., a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born in 1722. He entered the University of Edinburgh at the age of fourteen, and that of Glasgow in 1743, where he graduated in 1745. He visited Leyden; and in 1746 returned to his native land and entered the ministry at Cockburnspath, whence in 1748 he was transferred to Inveresk. He attended the theatre, revised the tragedy of Douglas, and was present when it was first acted, in 1756. For that indiscretion the synod and presbytery declared their high displeasure. In 1760 he was recommended to preach before the lord high commissioner and General Assembly, but was opposed, though agreed to without a vote; the only case on record where objection was taken to the preacher selected by the committee. He became almoner to the king in 1762, resigning in 1785, when chosen a dean of the chapel royal. He was elected moderator of the General Assembly in 1770, and in 1789 was nominated as principal clerk to the assembly, but, although having most votes, rejected. He died Aug. 25, 1805. In consequence of his exertions, chiefly, the government relieved the clergy from the house and window tax. He was instrumental in preserving Collins's Ode on the Superstitions of the Highlands. He was a tall, handsome man, with long, gray hair. He published, An Argument to Prove that the Tragedy of Douglas ought to be Burned by the Hangman (1757):—Four single Sermons:—An Autobiography (1760):—The Prologue to Herminius and Esparia (1754); and other works. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 287, 288; Christian Observer, 1861, p. 245.

Carlyle, David, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1850. He was converted in 1875; licensed to preach in the Moravian Church in 1877, and sailed to America as a missionary; but not finding the work as he expected, he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, and, joining the South Kansas Conference in March, 1879, was stationed on Lyons Circuit. He rallied the people about him, built a parsonage, and was progressing finely with his work when he was smitten with malarial fever, and in three weeks died. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1880, p. 55.

Carlyle, John, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree from the Edinburgh University in 1697; was called to the living at Dalton in 1702, and ordained in 1703; continued in 1710, and afterwards resigned his charge. He was curator to James Carlyle, merchant, Glasgow, in 1729 and 1730, after which time no record of him is found. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 645.

Carlyle, Joseph Dacre, an English divine, was born June 4, 1758. Of the earlier part of his life we have no record. At the time of his decease he was vicar of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, chancellor of Carlisle, professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, and chaplain to the bishop of Durham. Mr. Carlyle was a man of eminent abilities and learning, greatly esteemed and respected. He died April 12, 1804. See (Lond.) Christian Observer, 1804, p. 256; Allibone, Dict. of Brit. and Amer. Authors, s. v.

Carlyle, William, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, descended from the Bridekirk family, took his degree at Edinburgh University in 1715. He was tutor to the sons of Mr. Hay, and afterwards chaplain in the family of lord Elibank; appointed minister at Cummertrees in 1720, and ordained; translated to Lochmaben in 1724; but the admission was set aside by the General Assembly, and he was transferred to Prestonpans the same year. He died March 8, 1765, aged seventy-five years. He was a highly popular preacher, orthodox and pious, but had a great relish for amusement. He published a sermon preached at the opening of the synod in 1748. See Fasti Eccles. Scotticana, i, 352, 353, 615.

Carna (or Carna), in ancient pagan mythology, was the goddess who presided over the vital parts, and gave health and vigor. Some claim that she was the wife of Janus. The Greeks sacrificed to her on June 1, with pottage of beans, meal, and bacon. She is also called Dea Cardinis, or The Goddess of the Hinge, because, says Ovid, by her influence she opens what is shut, and shuts what is open.

Carmagnole, André, a French monk, was born at Cognito, March 9, 1619. He entered the order of the Oratory at Aix, Jan. 27, 1637, and taught belles-lettres at Marseilles and at Beaune. He was ordained priest March 19, 1643, and became superior of the Oratory of Beaune in 1649; shortly afterwards he was elected theological of the chapter and superior of the hospital. He filled these offices for twenty years with much zeal and piety, and in 1669 was appointed governor of the Oratory of Rouen. Finally he became superior-general of the convent of St. Honoré at Paris, and died Dec. 5, 1688, leaving Recueil des Statuts Constitutifs de l'Ordre de l'Oratoire (Paris, 1684). See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carman, Thomas, an English martyr, was one of three burned at Norwich, May 19, 1558, for their truthful testimony. See Fox, Acts and Monuments, viii, 462.

Carmathians were a heretical sect of Mohammedans, named from their founder Carmath (so called from being born at Hamadan-Carmath, a village near Cufah), a man of austere life, who flourished about the close of the 9th century. He inculcated the duty of praying fifty times a day, and his followers were obliged to neglect their worldly vocations and give themselves almost exclusively to a life of devotion. They were not bound by the creed and ceremonies of the Mussulmans, and professed that the angels were the guides of all their actions. He enforced upon his followers an inviolable secrecy as to the doctrines which he taught. They paid great respect to the Imam, or chief of their sect, laying aside one fifth of their substance for his benefit, and holding the strange doctrine that fidelity to him was denoted by that command which forbids fornication. They increased rapidly at first, through the zeal and sanctity of their founder, who chose from among his most zealous followers twelve apostles, who were to exercise special authority over the others. He was soon pursued by the caliph, and imprisoned, but finally escaped. The sect flourished for a time, but, in the absence of their leader, it dwindled away, and is no longer in existence. See D'Herbelot, Bibliothèque Orientale, s. v.; Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Carmel of Judah. We extract some additional particulars respecting this place from Robinson's Researches, ii, 197 sq.:

"The principal ruins are on the level area to the west, and consist of fragments of walls, massive foundations, and heaps of hewn stones. The castle is a curious structure; it occupies a little eminence in the centre of the town; its form is quadrangular, sixty-two feet by forty feet, and thirty feet high. The external wall is evidently ancient; and has on the northern and western sides a sloping bulwark, like the citadel in Jerusalem. It seems to have had a subterranean communication with the round tower adjacent. One of the ruined churches, about a quarter of a mile south of the castle, measures one hundred and fifty-six feet in length by about fifty feet in breadth. On the east was a chapel with a portico, while attached to it on the west was a large building, probably the episcopal residence. On the south is a square reservoir sunk in the rock. Most of the stones of the ruins were only rough hewn, or else have been worn away by time. In the western part are the remains of a smaller church, surrounded by those of very many houses. Here also is an open passage leading down into a cavern, apparently natural. A somewhat similar but artificial cave, about twenty feet square, is seen just east of the castle. The bottom of the amphitheatre is a beautiful grassplot. The water for the pool is brought by an underground channel, first to a small basin in the rocks, and then five or six rods further to the reservoir. There is no running water in the valley."

Ruins of Kurmul. (From a Photograph by the Editor.)

CARMEL, MONASTERY OF. We give a fuller description of this, one of the chief conventual establishments of Palestine, from Conder, Tent Work, ii, 173 sq.:

"Carmel has been a sacred mountain from the time of its earliest appearance in history. Elijah himself 'repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down' (1 Kings xviii, 30), from which we infer that a sacred place, or Makom, had existed on the summit of the mountain at an earlier period, though, according to the Talmud, such high places became forever unlawful after the building of the Temple at Jerusalem. From Tacitus we learn that Vespasian visited a place on Carmel, sacred to the deity of the mountain, but without either statue or altar, and even now the Druses hold the site at El-Mah-rakah in reverence as a sacred place.

"In the early Christian period the memory of Elijah consecrated Carmel, and it became a favorite resort of hermits, to whom, in A.D. 412, John, the forty-second bishop of Jerusalem, gave a rule of life. In 1185, after Jerusalem had been taken by the Crusaders, a church rose over the sacred grotto of Elijah, and in 1209 a monastery of St. Margaret or St. Brocardus was built in a steep gorge south of the promontory. We visited from Haifa its ruins, with a cave containing sedilia for the monks and an upper open story, a spring with sedilia beside it, and below, at the opening of the valley, a second spring, and a garden of fruit trees, pomegranates, apricots, and figs. The lower spring was called after Elijah, Monastery of Mount Carmel.

and the title still remains in the corrupted form El-Haiyeh ('the snake'), applied to the stream from it. A tradition exists that Elijah turned the fruits of the garden to stone, and the huge geodes in the white chalk of the valley are shown as the petrified fruit. This monastery was sacked by the Saracens in 1238, the monks were massacred and thrown into a rock-cut tank by the lower spring, and hence the place is still called 'the Valley of Martyrs.' In 1245 St. Simon Stock, a Kentish man, became general of the Carmelites. He is said to have received from the Virgin the scapular or distinctive tabard worn by the monks of this order; for sixteen years he lived in a cave on Carmel, and was visited by St. Louis during his stay in Palestine. The monastery of St. Bertoldo was built round this cave, and its ruins are still shown on the slope north-west of the present building, under the lighthouse, near the chapel containing the cave of Simon Stock. In 1291, however, the Saracens fell upon the monks while chanting the 'Salve Regina,' and massacred them all.

The history of the two subsequent monasteries gives a good example of that energy and persistence which once formed the main characteristics of the Church of Rome. In 1620 the order of Carmelites was extinct in Palestine, when a certain father Prospero, of the monastery of Biscaglia, near Genoa, was ordered by his general to proceed with his monks to Persia—probably he was found to be a dangerous man at home, for his history bears witness to his ambitious and energetic character. He got no farther than Carmel, where he left his companions and returned to Rome to obtain leave from the Propaganda to establish a missionary hospice on the mountain. In a second journey he obtained from the pope the title of prior for himself and his successors, and, in 1631, he bought the land round the Grotto of Elijah, where the present monastery stands, and round the cave called 'School of the Prophets' (now El-Khudr) at the foot of the promontory. He erected chapels in both places, but a Moslem dervish succeeded in establishing himself at the latter place, and in 1635 the Moslems took it by force and made it a mosque. Quarrels and persecutions followed; in 1653 robbers stripped father Prospero and tied him to a tree. Soon after he died, and was buried in the upper chapel. In 1761 the famous Diah el-'Amr had already made himself lord of Acre and king of Galilee; he despoiled the monastery, and in 1767 ordered its destruction, on the plea that it was in a dangerous position, on the slope of the hill. In 1775 he was beheaded at Acre, and his son 'Aly in revenge massacred all the monks.

"In 1799 the sick of Napoleon's army were sheltered in the monastery, but, on his retreat, they were all killed by the Moslems. A pyramid in the front garden of the monastery marks the grave where their bones were afterwards laid by the monks. In 1821, by order of the pacha of Acre, the monastery was destroyed, and the new monks arriving from Europe saw it in flames on the hill-top. Warned by the natives not to land, they returned to Europe, but three of them came back in 1825—Fra Giambattista of Frascati, Fra Matteo of Philippopolis, and Fra Giusto of Naples. They built the present monastery from a design by the first named, and so strong has it been made, with high walls and an apse which affords flank protection on the east (where also, as being more exposed, there is a ditch), that the monks need scarcely fear further massacres. In 1830 other monks arrived. In 1872 He Matteo died, in extreme old age, the last survivor of three founders.

"Situate at the end of the ridge, five hundred feet above the sea, reached by a steep ascent of steps, and guarded by a carefully constructed entrance to the courtyard and by savage dogs, the old monastery stands facing the fresh breeze, and surrounded by vineyards and gardens, among which small chapels are dedicated to the Virgin, to St. John Baptist, and to St. Theresa, patroness of the barefooted, or Reformed Carmelites. The huge pile, square and lofty, with a dome to its chapel, and a broad, flat roof, looks more like a castle than a house of devotion. Seventeen monks inhabit it, but there is room for thirty, and beds are provided for twenty-eight guests besides. The monastery owns three hundred goats and twenty oxen, the monks dry tobacco for snuff, and make a scent called 'Eau de Carme,' from the flowers of the mountain. They are supposed only to eat meat when ill, but it is said that if a deer is shot, some of the brethren are at once placed on the sick-bed: fish they may eat, and they include under this category anything staying longer in the water than on land—as, for instance, wild-duck and other sea-fowl. Living in the monastery for six weeks, I found the monks to be good-natured and fond of gossip, but fully convinced that in England the sun was never seen, and that the people all lived on potatoes and cold meat.

The chapel of the monastery is octagonal, and under the high-altar is a cave five yards long and three yards broad, with an altar of rock dedicated to Elijah. Lighting two tapers, the old lay brother drew back a curtain and showed us the statue of the Madonna del Carmine over the high-altar, well modelled in wood, life-size, and robed in white satin, with the infant on her right arm, and in her left hand some of the little square black charms so often worn round the neck in Italy. The statue was made in Genoa early in this century. The niche is surrounded with silver lamps offered by pilgrims. Tradition says that in the 'little cloud' over the sea Elijah beheld the future Virgin Mother typified. It is remarkable, however, that the native Christians prefer to offer vows to the old wooden statue of Elijah on a side altar. It is covered with chains, bracelets, and anklets presented by peasants. A gold Austrian coin, worth five Napoleons, is hung round its neck, with a filigree silver cross presented by an English convert. There is nothing remarkable in the chapel, which is gaudily painted in modern Italian style. Over a side altar, to the south, the heart of the count of Craon lies entombed, having been brought to the monastery in 1864.

"Carmel is remarkable for the profusion of its flowers. In November we found on its sides the cytisus, crocus, narcissus, the pink cistus, and large camomile daisies, the colocasias, and the hawthorn in bud. The Judas tree I have also twice found in remote parts, and in spring, wild tulips, the dark red anemone, like a poppy, the beautiful pink phlox, the cyclamen, little purple stocks, large marigolds, wild geranium, and saxifrage, with rock roses of three kinds, pink, yellow, and white. Butterflies also flourish: orange-tips, sulphurs, the great swallow-tail (Machaon), and a transparent species something like the Apollo, apparently peculiar to the mountain, are the commonest."

CARMEL, MOUNT. The prominence of this range both in the geography of Palestine and the history of the Bible, justifies a few additional particulars, which we gather from Conder, Tent Work, i, 168 sq.

"Carmel is best described as a triangular block of mountains, the apex being the promontory on which the Carmelite monastery stands. The watershed runs south-east from this point for twelve miles, to the Mahrakah or 'place of burning,' a peak visible from Jaffa in fine weather, south of which lies Wady el-Milh, and above that valley a large volcanic outbreak near the apparent centre of upheaval of the Carmel ridge. Another centre also exists farther west, near Ikzim. The highest part of the mountain is 1740 feet above the sea at the Druse village of 'Esfa. The peak of Mahrakah is only 167 feet high, and the promontory by the monastery 500, but the slope of the shed is gradual. Long spurs run out westward from this ridge and fill up the triangle, their western extremities having steep slopes above a narrow plain along the sea-coast. In the valleys among them are two fine springs, and others smaller. The north-eastern declivity of the ridge is extremely steep, and fine cliffs occur in places. At the foot of the mountain are numerous springs feeding the Kishon, which runs beneath, gradually diverging northwards. The little town of Haifa nestles under the promontory, by which it is sheltered from the south-west wind, its bay forming the best harbor on the coast. On the north side of the bay is St. Jean d'Acre, twelve miles along the curve of the shore from Haifa. On the narrow plain between Carmel and the sea there are also many places of interest. Sycamon, Gebao of Horemeu, Calamon, Elijah's Fountain, the Crusading Capernaum, and the strong and beautiful Château Pelerin, with its little advanced port of Le Detroit. On Carmel itself is a ruined synagogue, and on the south of the range, beneath the inland cliffs, are the fine springs feeding the Crocodile river.

"Carmel, 'the place of thickets,' was at one time cultivated, as shown by the rock wine-presses among its copses. In 1837 it had many villages on its slopes, but these were ruthlessly destroyed by Ibrahim Pacha, and only two now remain—Esda, on the main ridge, Ed-Dalieh, on a high spur; both are inhabited by the mountain-loving Druses, and are remarkable for their race of fine, handsome men and beautiful women, some with flaxen, curly hair and blue eyes. The whole mountain is covered thickly with brushwood, mastic, hawthorn, the spurge laurel, and, on the top, dwarf pines; the luxuriance of the vegetation, rolling down the valleys between the steep gray and rusty cliffs like a dark cataract, attests the richness of the red soil, and the fine mountain air makes Carmel the healthiest district in Palestine. Among the thickets game abounds—the Nimr or hunting leopard, wild pigs, gazelles, and fallow deer; partridges and other birds are seen continually in riding about the mountain. To this known fauna we were able to make an important addition. From natives of Haifa we learned that a kind of deer called Yahmur was to be found on Carmel, and, offering a reward, we procured from some of the Arab charcoal-burners a specimen, which resembled the English roebuck." (See cut on p. 806.)

Carmel (Notre-Dame-du-mont), ORDER OF. This was a military order of knights hospitallers, founded by Henry IV of France. The knights were required to be one hundred French gentlemen, who in time of war were placed close to the royal person. Their collar was a tawny ribbon, from which was suspended a cross of gold, engraved with a figure of the blessed Virgin rayonnée; the cloak was ornamented with the same cross. The order was sanctioned by pope Paul V, and was united to that of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem in 1608.

Carmelli, MICHELE ANGELO (originally Zeno), a Greek and Hebrew scholar of Italy, of the order of the Minor Friars of St. Francis, was born at Citadella, in the territory of Vicenza, Sept. 27, 1706. He studied first under the direction of the secular priests, and afterwards pursued theology and philosophy at Verona, Padua, Rome, and Udine. In 1744 he was appointed professor of Oriental languages at the University of Padua, and member of the Academy dei Ricovrati. In the latter part of his life he was made commissioned visitor of his order for the province of Rome. He died at Padua, Dec. 15, 1766, leaving many historical and other works, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carmélus, in Phœnician mythology, was a deity worshipped on Mount Carmel, without a temple or a statue. He, however, had an altar and a celebrated oracle there, whose priests first prophesied the universal rule of Vespasian, from an inspection of the intestines of animals.

Carmont, DAVID, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, son of a schoolmaster, was himself schoolmaster at Kincardine in 1789, afterwards at Skye, and recommended for the mission at Reay and Halkirk. He became assistant minister at Croy; was elected to the charge at the Gaelic chapel in Glasgow in 1810, and ordained; but resigned the charge in 1822, and removed to Rosskeen. He had a new church built in 1832; joined the Free Secession in 1843; and died May 26, 1856, aged eighty-three years. He was a ready and humorous speaker in Church courts. His son James was minister of the Free Church, Comrie. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 323; iii, 34.

Carmenta, in Roman mythology, was originally the same as Camena (q. v.). She had a temple at the foot of the Capitoline Hill, and altars near the Carmentalian door. In the later endeavor of the Romans to mingle their own mythology with that of the Greeks, Carmenta was affirmed to be a certain nymph from Arcadia, who journeyed with her son Evander to Italy.

Carmentalia, in Roman mythology, was the festival celebrated in honor of Carmenta (q. v.) on Jan. 11 and 15, at which the goddess was proclaimed as Anlevorta and Posttrorta; names which related to her gift of seeing the past and the future.

Carmichael, Alexander, A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister at Markinch), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1860; was licensed to preach in 1864, and admitted minister at Pettinain the same year. He was deposed for adopting views antagonistic to episcopacy, in 1867, and joined the Presbyterians; was cited before the privy council in 1872; went to London, and founded in London Wall one of the earliest congregations of Scottish Presbyterians in that city. He died in July, 1877, aged about thirty-eight years. Shortly afterwards appeared a small work of his, entitled, Sin in Believers. See Wilson, Dissenting Churches, ii, 463, 464; Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 331, 332.

Carmichael, David, a Scotch clergyman, was licensed to preach in 1744; became for a time preacher at Norristown Chapel of Ease; was presented to the living at Pettinain in 1760, and ordained in 1761. He died April 4, 1779. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 332.

Carmichael, Frederick (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, was presented to the living at Kennoway in 1627. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1638, was transferred to Markinch in 1640, and confirmed in 1641; a member of the Commissions of Assemblies, 1643 to 1645, 1647 to 1649; also on the commission for visiting the University of St. Andrews in 1648, and a member of the assembly in 1650. He died May 3, 1667, aged about seventy years, leaving his sons John and Alexander in the ministry. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 540, 553.

Carmichael, Frederick (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Glasgow University in 1725, where his father was professor of moral philosophy. He taught the humanity class there during the illness of professor Rope, 1726-28. On the death of his father, in 1729, he was supported as candidate for his chair. He was licensed to preach in 1733; appointed to the living at Monimail in 1736; ordained in 1737; transferred to Inveresk in 1741; promoted to New Greyfriars Church, Edinburgh, in 1747; and died Oct. 17, 1751, aged forty-two years. He published Christian Zeal, a sermon (1753); and a volume of Sermons on Several Important Subjects (eod.). See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 70, 287; ii, 503.

Carmichael, George, a Scotch prelate, was of the family of that name, in Lanarkshire, and was elected bishop of Glasgow in 1483, and consecrated in the same year. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 253.

Carmichael, George Oliver, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in Lumberland, Sullivan Co., N. Y., Oct. 31, 1833. He was converted at the age of seventeen; received license to preach in 1856; in 1857 was admitted into the New Jersey Conference, and, on being appointed to Swartswood, was from that time a member of the Newark Conference. Though his early educational advantages were very limited, he became an able and acceptable preacher, from his lifelong studious habits. He died March 3, 1872. Mr. Carmichael was a man of sterling qualities of mind and heart, methodical, skilful, faithful, devoted, and successful. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1872, p. 35.

Carmichael, Gershom (1), a Scotch Presbyterian minister, was born at Glasgow in 1682, and was educated at the university there. He became pastor at Monimail, and afterwards professor of moral philosophy in the university of Glasgow, where he died in 1738, leaving some notes on Puffendorf's De Officio Hominis.

Carmichael, Gershom (2), a Scotch clergyman (son of the foregoing), was called to the living at Monimail in 1741; ordained in 1742; transferred to Dundee in 1751; and died Nov. 6, 1761, aged sixty years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 503; iii, 693.

Carmichael, Ichabod B., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in 1823. He was converted in 1834; served the Church some time as class-leader and exhorter; and, after spending several years in preparing himself better for the ministry, he entered the New Jersey Conference. He labored with wondrous zeal and fidelity until his death, Jan. 11, 1858. Mr. Carmichael was energetic beyond his strength, sustained an unquestioned piety, and lived an exemplary life. See Minutes of Annual Conferences, 1858, p. 52.

Carmichael, James (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1564, and later was master of the grammar-school there. He entered upon the living at Haddington in 1570, officiating as schoolmaster in 1572; but the town council in 1574 separated the two offices. He took an active part in the business of the kirk. In 1574 he had also Bolton, Elstanefuird, and St. Martin's kirk in charge. He was appointed by the assembly the same year one of four to prepare the acts of the kirk for more general use, and one of the editors to oversee the printing. In 1577 the assembly appointed him one of five to revise the Second Book of Discipline. He was presented by the king to the vicarage of Haddington in 1581, but was compelled to flee into England in 1584, having been friendly to those who had taken Stirling Castle by surprise. He was a member of twelve general assemblies in fourteen years. There is no further record of him. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 311, 312.

Carmichael, James (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister at Haddington), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1606; was presented by the king to the vicarage of Athelstaneford and that of St. Martin, in 1613; admitted in 1614; instituted in 1630; continued in January, 1664, being aged and infirm. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 319.

Carmichael, James (3), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in July, 1612; was presented by the king to the living at Cleish in 1634; but resigned it in October, 1649, "being sensible of his weakness for the ministry." See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 582.

Carmichael, John (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1584; and was admitted to the living at Newburn in 1595. He was a member of the general assemblies in 1597, 1600, 1601, and 1602; and was appointed in 1600 a visitor of Ross-shire, and in 1601 to wait upon lord Home. He was transferred in 1603 to Kilonquhar, and was one of those who counselled with the six ministers previous to trial, in 1606, and one who signed the protest to Parliament against the introduction of episcopacy; for which he was summoned to London, and placed under guard with the archbishop of York in 1607; but obtained leave to return on condition of keeping himself quiet, not preaching, nor attending synod or presbytery. He took part in a conference at Falkland in 1609; was released from his confinement in 1614, and in 1616 was offered the degree of D.D., which he declined. He was a member of the assemblies of 1608 and 1618, and opposed the articles adopted at the latter. He was on the royal commission in 1619 for visiting the colleges at Aberdeen, and was charged before the High Commission with disobeying the acts of the Perth Assembly. He was nominated to fill a vacant charge in Edinburgh in 1620, and died there in June, 1622, aged about fifty-eight years. He firmly resisted all the innovations proposed by the king, and was a man godly, learned, and zealous in the cause of right and truth. His son Frederick was minister at Markinch. He published Two Letters to James Melvill. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, ii, 436, 451.

Carmichael, John (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Glasgow University in 1639; was minister at Kirkconnel after 1641, and had also the charge of Sanguhar, but was ejected on the re-establishment of episcopacy, in 1662. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 679.

Carmichael, John (3), A.M., a Scotch clergyman (son of the minister of Markinch), took his degree at the University of St. Andrews in 1650; was elected bursar the same year; ordained in May, 1661, as minister of Thursby, in England; presented by the king to the living at Traquair the same year; instituted and admitted in 1662; deposed in 1665 for declining episcopacy, when he joined the Presbyterians, and had his share of suffering. He died at Pittieddie, in Fife, aged about thirty-six years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 257.

Carmichael, John (4), a Presbyterian minister, was born at Tarbert, in Argyllshire, Scotland, Oct. 17, 1728. He was educated at the College of New Jersey; studied theology at Princeton; and was licensed to preach by the New Brunswick Presbytery, May 8, 1760. Some time during the same year he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at the Forks of Brandywine, Chester County, Pa. This connection was terminated by his death, Nov. 15, 1785. Mr. Carmichael took the side of his adopted country; and in 1775 preached a sermon to the militia of Lancaster County, Pa., in which he maintained the lawfulness of self-defence. This sermon was published, and soon a second edition was called for. So effectually did he succeed in instilling into the minds of the people his own patriotic spirit, that, whenever they were called into service, it is said that not one hesitated. He was a man of an eminently devout and Christian spirit, and indefatigable in his labors as a minister. See Sprague, Annals of the Amer. Pulpit, iii, 228; Alexander, Princeton Coll. of the 18th Cent.

Carmichael, Patrick, A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1597: was admitted minister at Soutra in 1599; transferred to Aberdeen, Fife, in 1602, and to Oxnam in 1610; and died before Sept. 16, 1623. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 280, 509; ii, 574, 575.

Carmichael, William (1), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1659; became schoolmaster at Colinton; was licensed to preach in 1663; became minister at Wamphray in 1664; was transferred to Athelstaneford in 1665; deprived for refusing the test in 1681; received again into the communion and made minister at Makerston in 1689; resigned in 1715, being incapable of ministerial duty, through age and infirmity; and died in 1718, aged seventy-eight years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 319, 463, 664.

Carmichael, William (2), A.M., a Scotch clergyman, took his degree at the Edinburgh University in 1688; held a bursary of philosophy at the Glasgow University in 1690; was called and admitted minister at Symington in 1692, and ordained; and died before May 11, 1699, aged about thirty-one years. See Fasti Eccles. Scoticanæ, i, 231.

Carmichael, William (3), a prelate of Ireland, was the second son of the second earl of Hyndford. In 1742 he was appointed archdeacon of Bucks, and, Jan. 5, 1753, was consecrated bishop of Clonfert and Kilmacdnagh. In 1756 he preached, before the House of Lords, the anniversary sermon on king Charles's martyrdom. In 1758 he was translated to the sees of Leighlin and Ferns, and in the same year to that of Meath. In June, 1765, he was transferred from Meath to the see of Dublin. He died Dec. 15, 1765. See D'Alton, Memoirs of the Aps. of Dublin, p. 342.

Carmichael, William Millar, D.D., an Episcopalian minister, was born in Albany, N. Y., June 28, 1804. He received his preparatory education at Plainfield, Mass., graduated from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1826, entered Princeton Seminary, and graduated in 1829. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Albany, April 22, 1829; served as a missionary at Clinton, N. J., 1829-30; and as stated supply to the Reformed Dutch Church at Waterford, N. Y., from May to December, 1830, when he united with the Protestant Episcopal Church, and was licensed as lay reader in 1831. In May of that year he went to Europe, returned in December following, was called to the rectorship of Christ Church at Rye, and ordained deacon Jan. 13, 1832, and priest April 10. In 1834 he became rector of St. George's Church, Hempstead, L. I., where he continued until Oct. 1, 1843; then he became rector of St. Thomas's Hall, Flushing, and remained one year. He was rector at Watertown, N. Y., from Jan. 5, 1845, until Oct. 1, 1847; at Meadville, Pa., from the last date until Nov. 30, 1852; at Christ Church, Richmond, Va., from Oct. 1, 1855, until July, 1856; at Pilatka, Fla., as missionary and rector, from Oct. 28, 1856, until Aug. 1, 1857; at Milledgeville, Ga., as missionary and rector, from Nov. 1, 1857, until Aug. 1, 1858; at Hempstead, L. I., occasionally acting as assistant rector of Trinity Church, Rockaway, until April 1, 1873. He died at Jamaica, L. I., June 14, 1881. See Neurolog. Report of Princeton Theological Seminary, 1882, p. 16.

Carmony, ELIAKIM, a French rabbi and Orientalist, was born in 1805. He was a Jewish pastor at Brussels, and the Asiatic Society of Paris included him among its members. Among his numerous writings are, Ode Hébraïque et Française en l'Honneur de Philippe I (Metz, 1830):—Biographie edes Israélites Anciens et Modernes:—Contes Chaldéens. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.; Fürst, Bibl. Jud., i, 144.

Carmon, JAKOB, a German juriconsult and canon, was born at Rostock, March 2, 1677. He was descended from an aristocratic family, which had made itself famous in England under Henry VIII. He studied theology in his native town, but afterwards studied law at the universities of Wittenberg and Jena. After his return to Rostock, in 1706, he was appointed archivist and secretary of the academy, and procurator of the Protestant consistory. In 1712 he occupied the chair of elocution and of belles-lettres, and in 1718 he became professor of the Pandects. He died at his native city, July 25, 1743, leaving many historical treatises, for which see Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carmona, DON EMANUEL SALVADOR, an eminent Spanish engraver, was born at Madrid about 1740, and instructed in the school of Charles Dupuis. In 1761 he was received into the academy at Paris. He died at Madrid in 1807. The following are his principal plates: The Virgin and Infant; The Angels Appearing to Magdalene; St. John Baptist in the Desert. See Spooner, *Biog. Carnēi (Lat. caro, flesh) was an opprobrious name applied by the Origenians (q. v.) to the early Christians, because they maintained the doctrine that the bodies of men, after the resurrection, should be composed of flesh and bones, as they are now, only altered in quality.

Carneiro (da Sylva), Joaquim, a Portuguese engraver and writer, was born at Oporto in 1727. He went to Brazil at the age of twelve, and became a pupil of João Gomez, at Rio de Janeiro. He not only studied art, but also became a skilful musician, and made himself acquainted with literature. He went to Lisbon in 1756, and in the following year visited Rome to study its masterpieces. An order of Don Francisco d'Almeida called back all Portuguese who were staying in that city, but Carneiro went to Florence to perfect himself there in his art. In 1769 he was placed at the head of an engraving school attached to the royal printing-house at Lisbon. Some time after that he was a teacher of design in the royal college. He died at Lisbon in 1818. He left a great number of engravings, among which are, The Child Jesus carried by Saint Joseph; The Annunciation of the Virgin Mary, etc. He also translated several useful books from the French into the Portuguese language, such as, Les Elements de Géométrie de Clairant (Lisbon, 1772):—and the Traité Théorique des Caractères Typographiques (1802). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carneiro, Melchior, a Portuguese missionary, was descended from a noble family of Coimbra. He had already gained some reputation as a scholar in his native place, when the Jesuits drew him into their ranks, in 1543. He was soon after made first rector of the college established by the congregation at Coimbra. Ignatius de Loyola having called him to Rome, he was appointed by pope Julius III bishop of Nice and coadjutor of the patriarch of Ethiopia. In 1555 he went to Goa; but his attempts to convert the Jews of Cochín were not more successful than were those for the conversion of the Christians of St. Thomas, upon the coast of Malabar. In 1567 he was appointed bishop of China and Japan, which office he held until his death, Aug. 19, 1583. He wrote, Duas Cartas Sobre a Missão. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carnell, Simon P., a Lutheran missionary, studied for some time in the theological seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., and immediately offered himself for the African work. He arrived at Monrovia March 14, 1869, and for a little more than a year labored successfully, when he was seized with a sudden attack of fever, and died May 4, 1870. See Lutheran Quarterly, ix, 457.

Carnin, Claude de, a French canon and theologian of the early part of the 17th century, was curate of St. Peter's at Douay, and wrote, Traité de la Force des Loix Humaines (Douay, 1608):—Defense de la Police Ecclesiastique et Civile (Anvers, 1620; Douay, 1621):—La République Naturelle et Intérieure des Âmes, etc. See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carniprivium (or Carnisprivium) is a name said by Macer to be applied to Quinquagesima Sunday, as being the last day on which it was permitted to eat flesh, the Lent fast anciently commencing on the following day, as, he says, is still customary with the Orientals and with some religious orders in Europe. In the calendar of the Greek Church, however, the corresponding term, Apocreas, designates Sexagesima Sunday.

Carnoli, Luigi (known also under the pseudonyms of Virgilio Nolarci and Giulio Laranci), an Italian biographer, was born at Bologna in 1618. He became a Jesuit, and for six years taught grammar and rhetoric, and for eight years philosophy and theology. He died at the city of his birth in 1693, leaving Vita Venerabilis Hieronymi Taurrellii (Forligno, 1652):—Della Virtù d'Ignazio di Loyola (Bologna, 1658):—Vita d'Ignazio di Loyola (Venice, 1680):—Oratio in Erectione Academicæ Accensorum Mantuæ (Bologna, 1655). See Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Carnoth (or Crennach), John de, a Scotch prelate, was bishop of the see of Brechin in 1485. The same year he accompanied princess Margaret, daughter of king James I of Scotland, into France, to attend her marriage with Louis XI, then dauphin of that kingdom. In 1450 he, with others, was sent on an embassy to England. He is mentioned as living April 18, 1451. See Keith, Scottish Bishops, p. 163.

Carson, David Thompson, an English Congregational minister, was born at Cummertrees, Dumfries, Sept. 5, 1796. He was converted early in life and joined the Independent Church in Carlisle. In 1817 he entered as student at Blackburn, and in 1820 became pastor of Fishergate Church, Preston. Here he was secretary of the executive of the Lancashire Congregational Union, and was one of the founders of the Lancashire Ministerial Provident Society. After thirty-four years' labor in Preston he removed to Halesworth, Suffolk, where he remained till 1864, when failing health compelled him to resign. He returned to Preston and there remained until his death, May 28, 1877. Mr. Carson was a man of strong convictions, and a lover of Puritan theology, which he preached in a terse and vigorous style. See (Lond.) Cong. Year-book, 1878, p. 309.

Carnuli (or Carnulo), Simone da, a Genoese painter and Franciscan monk, painted several pictures for the church of San Francisco, at Voltri, two of which are The Last Supper and The Preaching of St. Anthony, dated 1519. See Spooner, Biog. Hist. of the Fine Arts, s. v.; Hoefler, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caro, Francisco, a Spanish painter, was born at Seville in 1627. He learned the first principles of his art from his father, Francisco Lopez, and then went to Madrid to study at the school of Alfonso Cano. He made rapid progress, and in 1658 was charged with the entire decoration of the chapel of Sant-Isidoro, in the church of St. Andrew. His most remarkable painting is The Jubilee, for the convent of San Francisco at Segovia.

via. He died in 1667. See Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, s. v.

Caro (DE TORRES), Don Francisco, a Spanish priest and traveller, was born at Seville, and lived in the early part of the 17th century. He belonged to the order of Sant-Yago, and traversed successively the Netherlands and the West Indies. He wrote, Relacion de los Servicios del Don Alonso do Sotomayor, etc.:—also Historia de los Ordones de Sant-Yago, Calatrava y Alcántara (Madrid, 1629, fol.). See Hoefer, *Nouv. Biog.
